The Hillsdale
1776 Curriculum
Welcome

The first question is, why study civics? As the classical authors teach us, living under laws is natural for human beings. After all, we can think in different ways than other creatures, and we can talk. Whatever we can think, we can say. That makes a natural closeness among us, and the political community is an expression of that closeness. For that reason alone, civics is one of those subjects that the educated person must know.

The second reason is that politics is important. Great harm is done by bad laws, and great good by good laws. We are citizens. We have an obligation to our fellow citizens and an interest for ourselves to make the laws as good as they can be.
The third reason is that the United States of America, our country, is a remarkable place. In 2026, we will reach the 250th anniversary of the founding of our nation. By any reckoning, this is a significant milestone. Our nation has grown from a few people huddled in a strange land along the eastern seaboard to a huge nation that spans the continent. Through the vast changes that have come upon the world and the United States in these centuries, the nation has been governed under a written Constitution, long the oldest surviving in human history. Under the principles of the Declaration of Independence, that Constitution provides for a government operating under the authority of the governed. This achievement is unprecedented.

The nation suffers deep divisions, divisions especially about the meaning and the goodness of that founding. Because that founding begins in the Declaration of Independence, which states that human equality is grounded in the nature of things, in the “laws of nature and of nature’s God,” a controversy about the founding is a controversy about our understanding of ourselves and nature and therefore of everything. This is a serious matter.

It is a happy thing that this controversy has so much to do with history. History is complete and cannot be changed. To the extent one can find out about it, he is finding a truth that will abide. Also, controversies about history, like controversies about everything, can only be resolved by looking at the facts. The historical facts are available for us to see.

The facts of the American Revolution are in some ways complex, although we assert that they are wonderful. Also, they are simple. The United States begins on a certain day, July 4, 1776, with a statement of the meaning of the nation and its purposes. One begins with that. And he proceeds in the same way, by studying the record of the American Revolution and later American history in order to see what it is.

This curriculum is a work of education. Education is important to each citizen and to the nation as a whole. The seeds from which a nation’s future grows are planted and nourished in the education and formation of its citizens. Our nation’s founders knew this and articulated it in the Northwest Ordinance of 1787, which states: “Religion, morality, and knowledge being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, schools and the means of education shall ever be encouraged.” The ordinance is unequivocal that without appropriate education the government cannot be good and the people cannot be happy. These two are intertwined with one another and stand upon a foundation of good education.

This curriculum is the work of teachers rather than officials or bureaucrats; it is informed by experience in the classroom as well as long and loving study of the history and principles of our country; and it seeks to cultivate in students the knowledge and virtue necessary to live good lives as citizens. It is an expression of the work of Hillsdale College since its founding in 1844, located in the very Northwest Territory established by the Northwest Ordinance. For the last 177 years, through civil war, depression, pandemic, and world war, Hillsdale College has remained committed to its founding principles. Admitting from its inception all students “irrespective of nation, race, and sex,” Hillsdale has studied and taught, and also fought, for the blessings of liberty championed in the American founding. This curriculum is an invitation to students, parents, and schools to join us in the work upon which the nation itself depends: to educate a people for liberty.

Dr. Larry P. Arnn
President, Hillsdale College
Table of Contents

ABOUT
Hillsdale College and K-12 Education........................................p. 8

CONTENT
Engaging an Inheritance..................................................................p. 13

PEDAGOGY
Sharing a Love..............................................................................p. 23

SEQUENCE
For the American Student.................................................................p. 27

STRUCTURE
Clarity and Simplicity....................................................................p. 38

USE
The Freedom to Teach......................................................................p. 40

SUCCESS
What Is Needed..............................................................................p. 47

GRATITUDE
Real Teachers, Real Classrooms, Real Students.........................p. 53

PRINCIPLES
Dear Teacher..................................................................................p. 54
Hillsdale College and K-12 Education

Located in rural southern Michigan, Hillsdale College was founded in 1844 with the purpose of providing its students “sound learning” of the kind necessary to preserve the “blessings of civil and religious liberty.” In the words of its modern mission statement, it “considers itself a trustee of our Western philosophical and theological inheritance tracing to Athens and Jerusalem, a heritage finding its clearest expression in the American experiment of self-government under law.”

Outreach efforts of the College include the Barney Charter School Initiative; the Allan P. Kirby, Jr. Center for Constitutional Studies and Citizenship in Washington, D.C.; the Center for Constructive Alternatives, one of the largest college lecture series in America; the Ludwig von Mises Lectures in free market economics; the Hoogland Center for Teacher Excellence; National Leadership Seminars in major cities nationwide; and Imprimis, a monthly speech digest with a circulation over 6.2 million.

The College’s educational mission rests upon two principles: academic excellence and institutional independence. The College is nationally known for its large and rigorous core curriculum, including a one-semester course on the U.S. Constitution, and for its principled refusal to accept federal or state taxpayer subsidies for any of its operations.

Hillsdale College K-12 Education

Hillsdale College has, since 1844, offered to its students an education in the liberal arts and sciences. But the College’s founders laid down a second purpose, one to which a liberal education naturally lends itself. They recognized that “civil and religious liberty” depended on “the diffusion of sound learning.” The College is committed to educating the country’s young people to be good, thoughtful human beings and responsible American citizens.

Hillsdale College K-12 Education brings the College’s founding mission to any K-12 American student. The College shares with students and teachers an education modeled on Hillsdale’s undergraduate course of study adapted appropriately for K-12 students. Hillsdale College K-12 Education promotes the founding of Hillsdale Classical Schools, and excellence in their teaching and operations, so that American students may be educated in the liberal arts and sciences and receive instruction in the principles of moral character and civic virtue.
The Hillsdale 1776 Curriculum

The Hillsdale 1776 Curriculum is a complete collection of lesson plans for teaching American history, civics, and government to K-12 students. Students who study using this curriculum learn about American history from the colonies through the Civil War at four different times during their K-12 years, each time increasing in depth. The curriculum also includes American history since the Civil War and American government and civics for both middle and high school students.

The curriculum is drawn from the actual evidence of the past, mostly documentary, which is our sole way of knowing what has gone before. It stays as close to that evidence as possible. As the student grows and learns, he is increasingly placed in direct contact with this evidence.

The curriculum provides teachers with guidance—not dictates—about how to plan and teach a given topic in American history or civics. This guidance includes Hillsdale College-vetted books, online courses, and other resource recommendations; lists of content topics, stories to tell, and questions to ask of students; “Keys to the Lesson” that clarify important points for teachers to keep in mind; student-ready primary sources; and sample assignments, activities, and assessments.

The introduction outlines how content was chosen, the pedagogical principles appropriate for teaching the curriculum, how teachers might use the curriculum when they plan lessons, what is necessary for the successful adoption of the curriculum and the restoration of American K-12 education, and the principles underlying the curriculum’s approach to history and civics education.

The curriculum is the product of Hillsdale College professors and some of the very best K-12 teachers, both past and present, derived from and created for real classrooms with real students taught by real teachers.

Civil War Monument by Lorado Taft, Hillsdale College
Engaging an Inheritance

In history and civics classes, American students should have one aim above all: to understand what they have received, i.e., their inheritance as Americans. To understand clearly, students and teacher alike must adopt a stance of humility. And this humility is fostered by the recognition on the part of the student that the world in which we live, with all its benefits and also its faults, is not of our own creation. This is the beginning of American history and civic education.

From this starting point, the field of discovery in history and civics is, if not endless, then impossible to explore completely in any number of lifetimes. Principles must therefore be discerned and applied to determine where to begin, on what to focus, and in which order. The need to choose and choose carefully is all the more pressing within the limits of thirteen years of formal education.

This curriculum rejects many fashionable ways to make decisions about what students should learn. Such trends include basing what students learn on political ideology and activism; corporate interests for preferred kinds of consumers and workers; the interests of higher education, standardized testing, and textbook corporations; and the color of one’s skin. As to this final criterion, to base the content of a civics curriculum on such a standard is to resurrect and reinforce in students that they ought to judge, value, and treat people differently based on traits that a person does not control instead of on what he or she believes, says, or does. To teach students to so discriminate undermines the inherent dignity of each person and the equality found in each person’s equal possession of natural rights.

In defense of both the student and the historical figures she studies, this curriculum rejects all of these demands for deciding what students should encounter.
Instead, The Hillsdale 1776 Curriculum determines what students should learn in history and civics based on the answers to a single question: What ideas, words, and deeds have most significantly formed the world into which students were born? Studying the answers to this question provides students the fullest understanding of the world in which they will live their lives.

Of course, this question is not easy to answer. But this curriculum insists and does its utmost to abide by an honest commitment to the truth as it is, not as what some might want it to be. Rather than predetermining what we hope to find—and cherry-picking, obscuring, or even fabricating “facts” to fit our preconceived notions—this curriculum begins with searching for what actually happened and the contemporaneously stated reasons for why it happened.

So, what has most significantly shaped the world into which students were born? From where has their inheritance come?

First, the past. Much of what has immediately affected the student has happened since her birth: family, upbringing, and sometimes local current events. But students are already familiar with these influences, and it is not the place of the school to belittle the student by assuming her only interests or capacities for learning depend on what she already lives with on a daily basis. Nor is it the place of the school to draft the student into the civic work or outright political activism of adults. The world of the student was formed before she was born, and it is in history that she may search for understanding of his world.

Second, that which is most proximate. As a child’s life is shaped first by her parents, her home, her relatives, and her neighborhood, so has the student’s broader world been shaped most by figures within her own country’s past. This curriculum therefore brings students into encounters with American history and American civics, with due regard for the influences of figures from the world and particularly from the cradles of Western Civilization in the Middle East, Northern Africa, and Europe—figures who informed the very first Americans.

Third, individual persons. Ideas, words, and actions do not exist in a vacuum. They do not have a mind of their own. And history is not some fatalistic force compelling people to act a certain way, as Karl Marx claimed. The past, and therefore the present world of the student, is the creation of certain individual Americans who have had an outsized impact on the world the student has inherited. Moreover, these individual people are just like the student. They may look different or have come from a different background and have lived in a different time and place, but their desire to find what they thought was good in order to be happy, their high ideals, and their fallibility were all the same as those of the student. For all people at all times share the same human nature. This curriculum thus asks students to exercise the same imaginations that allow them to sympathize with talking animals and mythical demigods. These imaginations bring students into encounters with certain past American figures—not only on the basis of the extraordinary impact that these individuals have had on the student’s present world but also because in learning about them, students learn about themselves.

The Hillsdale 1776 Curriculum determines what students encounter based on what has shaped their world the most. As a result, students will have presented before their minds the following content, which may rightly be regarded as their birthright, their inheritance.

Persons

Because history and civics are composed of the actual thoughts, words, and actions of unique individuals, the study of individuals is of paramount importance in the curriculum. The curriculum is a person-driven encounter for students. Biographies lie at the heart of the content, and students focus on individuals and individual actions rather than studying merely groups of people or social factors. Students study any given individual insofar as knowledge of him or her reveals the nature of human beings, helps students to understand circumstances that are foreign to them, or explains the cause of historical events and changes that were of extraordinary impact in forming the students’ world.

Primary Sources

What makes human beings human, distinct from animals, is our capacity for reason: to have thoughts and formulate ideas, and then to share those ideas through speech, both oral and written. The principal content of the curriculum, therefore, is primary sources, curated for the appropriate grade level. Primary sources capture the inner workings of past Americans, revealing their thoughts and desires, their virtues and vices. Although supplemental discoveries by historians and research are necessary and helpful, they often involve more conjecture than is warranted. It is the primary sources that are our chief evidence about the past and the origins of the student’s world. Within history and civics, documents, speeches, private correspondence, firsthand accounts, and the like reveal to students the interplay between human thoughts and events and lend insights into the ideas on which America was founded.

Geography and Places

Students learn about space. Each student has a physical existence. She occupies a certain part of physical space that no other person occupies. Students need to learn how to make sense of their places in the physical world. In American history, students must see how the fact that we are embodied beings living in a particular physical space has formed the thoughts and actions of historical figures and themselves.
Events and Dates

Knowledge of time includes gaining a general sense of temporal existence and of where their own lives and ages fit relative to the lives of those who have come before them. It also includes learning by heart certain dates of events or spans of time. Learning dates by heart should not be drudgery, but purposefully employed as guideposts for students in piecing together the chronological relationship between historical causes and their effects.

Terms and Topics

Typical curricula often require students to know the definitions of things. To reduce learning to the mere memorization of definitions and facts saps the wonder from history and civics and allows for easy manipulation of students. Instead, teachers should think in terms of topics—themes, events, and ideas ranging from the abstract to the particular; they should contemplate the full diversity of realities that had arisen in the lives of figures living and thinking and acting in a certain time and place. This curriculum does not reduce history and civics to memorizing definitions but instead drives students to engage terms and topics—and to question them. Above all, students seek to understand these terms and topics, their relations to the figures who also engaged with them in their own times, and to ask what they mean and what they show us about human beings and their country.

To Know by Heart

America’s founding and history is one of the best documented in the history of humankind. American students have before them an array of the truest of statements posited in beautiful words that have informed and inspired Americans for more than two centuries. In light of this unique opportunity, the curriculum nourishes the privileged capacity of childhood: the ready ability to learn and know things by heart. Students bring from this curriculum not only knowledge and skills, but also words and poetry and songs to carry in their hearts for the rest of their lives.

Stories for the American Heart

The word history means story, and in studying history, students learn from a thoughtful retelling of what happened. American history is full of more than four centuries of stories, some of which are the stuff of illustrative legend, while others are documented in detail. These stories—of individual Americans, events, heroic exploits, tragic turns of events, letters, firsthand accounts, etc.—capture the attention of the student, draw him into the historical scene, bring people of the past alive, and paint within the student’s moral imagination vivid images and examples of human conduct. Cumulatively, students gain a kind of seeing that can guide their understanding of history and their own conduct as human beings and American citizens.
Questions for the American Mind

Beyond initial sensory perception and physical experience, a student’s understanding deepens when the mind grapples with reality, brings what is known to bear on what is new and unknown, and attempts to see how they fit together and how they do not. The chief means for fitting the intellect of the student to the reality of the world—to the truth—is through questions that challenge the student to reorient and apply herself to reality. But not all questions are the same. The first questions are matters of simple facts: the who, the what, the when, the where. These give the student knowledge. But true learning, real education, seeks something deeper, more full and complete and meaningful. To achieve understanding and practice in the virtue of wisdom, students must be asked the all-important question that has motivated all inquiry through all time: Why? This curriculum offers teachers a collection of possible questions that put the mind into action, pushing students into the more fertile territory of why something is the case and how they know something to be true. The asking of and grappling with thousands of such question for the student through this curriculum engenders in her a more complete understanding of her country and of herself.

Images

Like the stained-glass windows of great medieval buildings, images tell a story. With today’s technology, the student can encounter magnificent works of art, facsimiles, maps, and photographs daily in class. Each image may reinforce a historical figure or episode or become a jumping-off point for an entire lesson. Innumerable observations may be made and questions asked of the image, driving the class with the natural inquiry the student possesses, and providing a vivid lens into America through the decades.

This is what students who are taught this curriculum encounter. This is their inheritance.
What does a guest see upon entering a history and civics classroom?

The guest first notices walls alive with the past, with facsimiles, maps, portraits and paintings from American history. He sees the students with a pencil and paper and perhaps the text of a document or historical account upon their desks. And he sees their gaze moving from their desktops to a projected image or map, and finally and most consistently, to the teacher herself.

In a word, our guest sees harmony. It will look different based on grade level and school, on teacher and students. But sound history and civics classrooms will embrace an ordering and arranging of parts, just as the members of a symphony orchestra or athletic team move in complement to one another toward a common end, led by a director or captain or coach.

And what does our guest hear? He hears the teacher speaking, telling a story and asking questions about it.

First, with variations in voice and tone, with movement, with a hint of acting, she is telling a story. She uses descriptive words and her own careful study and imaginations of historical people and scenes to paint pictures in her students’ minds. She is conscious of her goal to transport students to the time and place they are studying, to bring the figures and scenes alive for her students. She sets the stage by describing the geography, landscape, and climate in which events will take place. She introduces individual figures by describing their backgrounds, sometimes including details and anecdotes from their childhoods, proceeding to physical descriptions and the telling qualities or shortcomings of their characters and temperaments, especially those that are relevant to the events to come. She introduces the hopes and thoughts of these characters, and she draws out the circumstances in which they act. Quotations are read aloud, and images of scenes, maps, and the figures are projected for reference and student observation. The true story of history proceeds apace in the present tense, and the underlying drama that has lodged the historical moment in the enduring memory of a nation breaks through, arriving at a crescendo of action in an event and leading gloriously or malignantly to its consequences for subsequent events, for today, and for the student. This is the first kind of speech our guest hears.

Atlanta Classical Academy

The teacher’s second kind of speech repeatedly punctuates this kind of story and moves it along through questions to her students. Questions of who, what, when, and where, but more often and more importantly, questions of why and how: “Why does he do this? Why does she think that? Why does this happen? How did this come about? What will he, she, or they do, and why do you think that?” Question upon question, lending suspense and drawing students into the telling of the story with their answers and thoughts and wrestling with what really happened, and with the final questions of “Why?” and the all-important “What does this mean?” “What does this show us about America, about human beings, about ourselves?”

These questions are not rhetorical, and the class is therefore not a mere lecture. Instead, students seek to answer the questions throughout the class period, raising their hands, offering answers and reasons, engaging one another with respect. The result is a dynamic exchange of thoughts and reasoning, moving the class forward, and involving teacher, students, and historical figures all in the same story and conversation.

While civics class may have less of the story element, our guest will also observe in both history and civics the words of the past speaking directly to the students through primary sources. In history, students read or the teacher reads aloud portions of the foundational and most influential documents in American history, gleaning direct insights into the minds of American figures, and linking the episodes presented via story. In civics, the close and careful reading of the primary sources fills the minutes to their fullest. Students frequently learn to know by heart portions of these works. And in both history and civics, lively, civil conversations are held among all the students and the teacher as the class revolves around the text in search of what it is saying. And then, students attempt to answer the questions once more: “Is it true?” “Why?” and “What does it mean?”

And what is the goal of it all? What is the goal of each lesson and unit?

Knowledge, surely, and understanding and images to furnish the moral imagination. And wise and virtuous citizens who will engage in and fulfill their civic responsibilities. But above all and as with all learning, the goal is the experience of encountering and discovering something that the student had not known before, something that has changed what he knows of reality, that pulls him to desire and dare to learn more, that pierces him with a fearful joy: wonder, the source of all learning and of wisdom itself.

For at the heart of history and civic education, as with any subject of study, is a sharing of love. The teacher loves both her content, which she deeply seeks to know, and her students. In loving each, she desires what is good for both content and students. For the sake of each, she brings content and students together through a moment of wonder, that students might know and then love what they study.

In the case of American history and civics, such a sharing of love in teaching offers students the wonder, opportunity, and capacity to honor and preserve what is good in their country, while condemning and correcting its flaws, for the good of America and their fellow Americans.

Such a knowledge and love is the very highest meaning of patriotism.
For the American Student

The Hillsdale 1776 Curriculum asks simply, in light of the vastness of reality and the limits of human existence, “What do American students in particular need and, most importantly, deserve to encounter and consider in their K-12 civic education?” The answer is first knowledge and understanding of American history and of the American republic as governed by the Constitution and morally grounded in the Declaration of Independence. The teachers who contributed to this curriculum are mindful of and experienced in the great and important changes in student development between grade levels, yet are also deferential to the circumstances and autonomy of local communities. This curriculum thus organizes the teaching of American history and civics into grade-level bands to provide the greatest usefulness as well as breadth for adjustment by states, districts, schools, teachers, and parents.
There are four grade level bands: Kindergarten through 2nd grade, 3rd through 5th grade, middle school, and high school. A school may use the units for any of the grades within a grade band. The curriculum has attempted to address the differences in student ability, but ultimately schools and teachers, given the students they have in their charge, must determine the appropriate adjustments for their situations.

This curriculum outlines simply what is most essential, and far more details of comparably less historical influence can and will be taught in relationship with these topics based on each teacher’s own study of the recommended resources.

Regarding integrating civics with other subjects, civics should play its role in history as well as in the other subjects, but it should not take over any given subject. Rather, civics topics should arise where naturally appropriate instead of reducing literature, science, mathematics, etc., to mere components of politics or, worse, political activism.

This curriculum respects the inherent dignity of both the student and historical figures. It does not whitewash or rewrite. It also does not ignore “warts,” if those “warts”—as with America’s noblest moments—are significant enough to fit the time restraints of K-12 schooling. It does not claim to be immune to conversation or disagreement, or to be “the last word.” But it does argue that this content is true, and that it is what American students should learn first.

Paying greater attention to injustices may in fact be warranted. But to force all of history through this myopic lens not only misses the whole picture but is no better than the histories such an approach claims to correct.

There is no reason to ignore the bad and emphasize the good, or vice versa: both deserve to be taught as they were and students deserve to know the entire truth.

Lastly, this curriculum only very carefully takes the stance of “consider the times,” for this phrase can easily give the impression that truth and morality (good and evil) are merely relative to one’s viewpoint or time period. “To consider the times” in which historical figures lived is not to excuse moral injustices or to justify relativism, but it requires us to understand the circumstances at the time and weigh them against principles that transcend time. It is recognizing the reality of history and honestly assessing how figures at the time acted within their circumstances in light of the truth.

The sequence is outlined on the following pages:
Elementary School

Kindergarten–2nd Grade

American History
- UNIT 1: The British Colonies of North America
- UNIT 2: The American Founding
- UNIT 3: The Early Republic
- UNIT 4: The American Civil War

3rd–5th Grade

American History
- UNIT 1: The British Colonies of North America
- UNIT 2: The American Founding
- UNIT 3: The Early Republic
- UNIT 4: The American Civil War

Middle School

6th–8th Grade

American History
- UNIT 1: The British Colonies of North America
- UNIT 2: The American Founding
- UNIT 3: The Early Republic
- UNIT 4: The American Civil War
- UNIT 5: The Turn of the Century
- UNIT 6: The Interwar Years and World War II
- UNIT 7: Post-War America
- UNIT 8: Recent American History

American Civics
- UNIT 1: The Declaration of Independence
- UNIT 2: The United States Constitution
- UNIT 3: Politics and Policy
- UNIT 4: Challenging and Defending America’s Principles

High School

9th–12th Grade

American History
- UNIT 1: The British Colonies of North America
- UNIT 2: The American Founding
- UNIT 3: The Early Republic
- UNIT 4: The American Civil War
- UNIT 5: The Turn of the Century
- UNIT 6: The Interwar Years and World War II
- UNIT 7: Post-War America
- UNIT 8: Recent American History

American Government and Politics
- UNIT 1: The Principles of America
- UNIT 2: A Constitution of Principles
- UNIT 3: Governing in the Constitution
- UNIT 4: Equality in America
- UNIT 5: Progressivism and the State
- UNIT 6: Institutions and Policy
- UNIT 7: Politics in Practice
- UNIT 8: Late 20th Century Government and Politics

OPTIONAL CIVICS ACTIVITIES
- Fostering Civic Responsibility
Clarity and Simplicity

Great teachers often have a natural gift for teaching others, but The Hillsdale 1776 Curriculum supposes that any American who loves to learn, loves students, possesses a determined work ethic, and is open to improvement can become a high-quality teacher. Regardless of experience and abilities, every teacher deserves guidance that is clear, simple, and helpful, and such order and ease on the part of the teacher’s materials will translate into clear lessons for students.

The form of this curriculum, therefore, follows these principles of its intended function. It strives to demystify teaching from the cumbersome lingo, administrative complexities, and “bells-and-whistles” busyness associated with many curricula. We hope and trust that teachers will find this layout clear and refreshing.

Two facets to this structure are worthy of special note.

Keys to the Lesson

This curriculum does not tell the teacher exactly what he or she needs to teach or tell students. To dictate such content robs teachers of the joy of learning, robs students of the vibrancy of being taught by teachers who have genuinely studied their content, and disrespects the intellect and capacity of teachers to learn and teach according to their own pursuits of truth. What this curriculum offers instead are recommended resources and approaches that teachers may learn from but also engage with and question as they seek what is true.

The Keys to the Lesson include an initial recommendation on how to approach teaching the lesson in general, followed by a series of bullet-point suggestions on specific content areas, topics, and parts of the lesson. These suggestions usually highlight points of emphasis, ways to approach certain texts or topics, and clarifications for accuracy of instruction. The order of these suggestions is generally the order in which the lesson may be best taught. As the name denotes, these statements are considered the keys to teaching the lesson with accuracy, effectiveness, and with a mind toward cultivating student engagement, class conversation, and meaningful, enduring understanding. They are meant to be guideposts for teachers to consider, not exclusive requirements to be followed blindly.

Primary Sources

Primary source handouts with applicable guiding reading questions (where a primary source is meant to be given as a preparatory assignment) accompany each unit. Each primary source includes information on its author, its date, and its location, and a very straightforward explanation of how it came to be. The goal of this information is to help bring the author and document alive for students by calling to mind the very real person who created it and the circumstances in which it was drafted. The text of each source has line numbers for ease of reference during in-class conversations, ample spacing between lines for annotations, and a wider right-hand margin for notetaking during reading or a seminar conversation. The number, length, and use of primary sources vary by grade level, but reading aloud short portions of primary sources is an important part of instruction in even the youngest grades. Teachers should adapt the scope of the primary sources to fit the abilities of their students and the actual content taught in class.
The best and most sincere teachers understand teaching to be a vocation. Love for content and students draws them to such a challenging, demanding, and high-stakes career. Often this calling was first awakened when the teacher was herself a student. She experienced the wonder that her own teachers had cultivated through their instruction. The sense of great responsibility for the formation of a child called to her. It is not uncommon for a teacher to say that the reason she teaches is because of a teacher or professor she had as a student. How disappointing and tragic, then, that many teachers rarely get to focus on the art of teaching.

What are teachers doing instead? The list seems to grow by the school year: almost endless administrative paperwork, mostly tied to ever-evolving state and federal reporting requirements or test preparation; unnecessarily bureaucratic expectations for lesson plans; ever-changing and ever-increasing complexity in new technology, curricula, and pedagogical methods; student discipline policies that neither correct nor form student behavior and character, leaving teachers to manage a kind of chaos in some schools; and constant “box-checking” for teacher certification requirements and maintenance.

And when teachers are able, from time to time, to escape these burdens and actually arrive at teaching, they are handed what is little more than a script from which to read, dictating to them exactly what to say, how to say it, and what to do next by this kind of instruction manual. Some skill-based subjects may be well conducted in this manner, but history and civics are not.

While other efforts will be necessary to address many of the above infringements on actually teaching, The Hillsdale 1776 Curriculum attempts to restore and defend teachers’ freedom to teach in at least this final respect. Although it outlines content that students should probably encounter, vets resources, and offers some considerations for teachers, it defers entirely to the knowledge, creative ingenuity, and love of each teacher to plan out and present lessons. Sound, tried and true pedagogical principles—framed by genuine love of a subject—should shape lesson planning and teaching” (see “Pedagogy: Sharing a Love”). This curriculum empowers the teacher to rediscover that original love of learning and that original sense of wonder and care for students that led her to become a teacher. Each lesson taught using this curriculum should be unique to the teacher and students of a particular classroom at a particular school.

The curriculum is designed to empower teachers with the freedom to teach. What we wish to offer, then, are a handful of suggestions on how teachers might consider using The Hillsdale 1776 Curriculum, whether their school has officially adopted the curriculum or they use it to supplement and enhance their existing lessons.

Planning the Lesson

1. Teachers review the Teacher Preparation Resources, including Hillsdale-vetted texts and Online Courses lectures.

2. Teachers then write out their lesson notes.

   For History Classes, teachers write and craft their lesson plans as much as possible as a narrative—a good story, and a true one. Taking on the mindset of a film director can be helpful in this process, asking, “What words must I use and in what order must I present things to bring the figures and scenes alive for my students?” Reflecting on the student and teacher resources, teachers may ask other questions, such as: What background information should I pull in? What should I dwell upon in detail, and what may I summarize? What will students want to know more about? What can I anticipate them asking? What do I want to know more about? What specific stories will I tell? Which questions will I ask? When? Where should I build suspense? At what actions or scenes or choices do I wish students to wonder? What images will I show and when? How might a specific class period conclude? After the teacher’s notes have been drafted, teachers may review the Core Content, Stories, Questions, and Keys to the Lesson sections of the curriculum lesson to see if anything has been missed. If so, they determine the best way and places to incorporate this content, these questions, and these considerations.

---

For Civics Classes, teachers review the Terms and Topic, Questions, and Keys to the Lesson outlined in the curriculum lesson. With these in mind, they read through the primary sources and craft a lesson plan that mainly uses the reading and discussion of primary sources to drive the lesson. Most lessons can be conducted as a full or partial seminar conversation.

3. Teachers determine what Preparatory and Post-Lesson Assignments and Activities may be warranted.

4. Teachers decide what images and stories to share with students.

Presenting the Lesson

1. Teachers begin with review.

2. Teachers become storytellers and/or let the primary source tell its story. Like a good movie, play, or book, teachers employ storytelling practices and variations in tone, voice, and pacing. They acquire the disposition of an actor or performer without reducing class to a reenactment. A certain gravitas, seriousness, and drama should come through. For teachers who have studied their content and care for it, such wonder and sincerity will naturally animate their presentation and they arrange for moments in which students may experience wonder. If class is composed mainly of a primary source, teachers read and discuss the text with the same principles in mind, seeking to understand the speaker on his or her own terms first.

3. Teachers ask an abundance of questions. They help students remain engaged, grow in understanding, and enter into the history or primary source by having students help tell the story through their answers to questions. Questions of fact will of course arise, but teachers focus especially on asking questions of “How,” “Why,” and “Why do you think that?” Class is not a lecture but rather a dynamic, teacher-led conversation among all the students, turning around the topic at hand in pursuit of truth.

Refining Understanding

1. Teachers assess students. Tests are a somewhat useful but imperfect tool to measure a certain kind of learning. But perhaps the more important and more overlooked use of quality tests is the opportunity they afford students to reflect, review, and more accurately understand what they have learned. The great value of tests in this curriculum, therefore, is how they can help students to reflect and understand by studying for the test. Each included study guide is based on a refined version of the lesson outline. Students should personally review their notes, along with reviewing as a class, to re-engage with what they have learned. In this sense, the study guide is a true guide to studying. It is meant to lead students back through what they learned through their notes. Students should grow in familiarity with the unit’s stories and ideas and how they are connected; they should be able to recount episodes and answer the deeper questions. This type of study and review is an excellent opportunity for students to synthesize the various parts of what they have learned, to see how it all fits together, and to adjust their understanding of reality accordingly. The test, then, is merely an opportunity for students to demonstrate this growth in knowledge and understanding.

2. Teachers allow students the time to reflect, think, and write. After a unit test, teachers use the writing assignments to provide students with the space and time to consider a question that strikes at the heart of the entire unit. Students may have some time in class to work on their response and be instructed in good writing, but some writing may be completed independently, at least for older students. With the broad topic having been reviewed and tested, students should benefit from the freedom to engage one final time with the topic in a way that applies their intellect to form a deeper, long-lasting understanding.

Two Insights

First, teachers ought to make each lesson their own. The structure, recommendations, and resources provided in this curriculum are meant to be a trustworthy starting point and guide but should by no means be restrictive. They are meant to offer a sense of order within which teachers rediscover the freedom and joy of teaching.

Second, this curriculum eschews a number of relatively novel curriculum and pedagogical trends. We are well familiar with these practices, often theorized in academia and promulgated through preparation programs and bureaucratic agencies. Should a practice not appear in this curriculum, it is not necessarily ineffective or wrong (though we believe some are), and this curriculum can be taught with many different pedagogical approaches employed in modern classrooms but not listed here.
We believe, however, that the methods recommended in this curriculum are the best and most consistent means of raising students in enduring knowledge and understanding while cultivating strong critical thinking skills. We have made these determinations over time, through careful thought and classroom experience, and have opted for what has been tried and true for decades, centuries, and even millennia: tried, because they have formed the civilization we have inherited, and true, because they accord with the way the world is, the way people are, and the way people come to know the world.
What Is Needed

It is common in education policy to release a new program, curriculum, or initiative, followed with directives on what needs to be done to make them succeed. Here we, too, outline what is necessary, but our recommendation is very different. It is not more money, more government action and control, or more hoops to jump through. Instead, what is needed for civic education to succeed in America is freedom and prudence.

Freedom

In education, the United States must restore the freedom to make decisions to those who are closest to the communities most directly affected by them.

Decision authority on what curriculum is used, how to teach, how to assess, and what schools to attend should be reclaimed from Washington, the Department of Education, state bureaucracies, and teaching colleges and departments. The power to make such choices should be repossessed by state legislators, local school districts, and school boards, all of whom are accountable to voters, and to the administration and teachers of each school, who are accountable to parents when they elect to enroll their students at the school.

The preparation of teachers should be reclaimed from costly and time-consuming university system and certification agencies. The process for forming high-quality teachers should be repossessed by local school districts and schools, where new hires can earn a living while being mentored and coached by the best veteran teachers, who are themselves compensated for their support. This is how teachers learn to be great teachers: by observing and being observed by the great teachers before them.
The creation of lesson plans should be reclaimed from corporate textbook publishers and state and federal mandates. This process should be repossessed by teachers, as this curriculum permits, in order to restore the freedom to teach with passion and ingenuity by empowered teachers.

State standards should be specific on the foundational content and skills students should share, particularly as content pertains to the principles and history of our common heritage, but state standards should otherwise allow flexibility for schools and teachers. National standards and civics funding tied to such standards, moreover, violate the principle of federalism and allow one position to crowd out the insights and sovereignty of local citizens, parents, and teachers. Federal policymakers and states operating under the guise of collaborative federalism should not force national civics standards and funding into states, districts, and local schools.

While it may be fitting to require high school students to pass the 2020 Civics Test used to naturalize immigrants as new U.S. citizens, accountability in history and civics does not require another standardized test. Instead, states should simply require that schools and school districts publish on their websites outlines of the specific lessons they teach students in history and civics. Parents can read for themselves if fundamental knowledge about America is being taught and if it is being taught accurately. And for recourse they can elect new school board members or else vote with their feet and move their students to a different school. Many of the assignments included in this curriculum are aimed at including parents in the education of their children, or at least making sure they are not barred from knowing what their children are being taught.

Just as federal standards and assessments are not the solution, federal money is not the solution for improving civics and history education. In fact, each of the above-mentioned restorations of freedom will save money, not increase expenses, for schools, teachers, and taxpaying citizens.

What is needed is greater freedom of time.

Teachers need time to learn more—not merely about how to teach but especially about what to teach, i.e., about their subject matter. Teachers need to drink deeply from great histories, from free online courses such as what Hillsdale College offers, and have time to plan dynamic lessons rather than be encumbered by administrative paperwork.

And students need time—time in the day to learn and engage with and think about history and civics. The most meaningful change that state policymakers and schools can make in this regard is to defend and even expand the amount of time allotted for American history and civics instruction each school day. But this instruction should be devoted to engagement with content, not merely time-filling activities or action civics in which students become the pawns of adults who push political ideology.

---

Prudence

For any of the above to happen, prudence must rule in the hearts and minds of those who are in positions of power to make them realities. This prudence requires a clear-sightedness for the principles of America and of civic education, and a humility to seek out their application to specific circumstances. It requires courage and discretion to shift control over education from powerful and centralized interests and back to local schools, individual teachers, and the voting citizens of a community. It requires a care for the well-being of students, a respect for their inherent dignity and rational yet impressionable hearts and minds, which deserve the often beautiful but sometimes ugly truth of American history. And it requires an American’s love for his or her country, a love that can see and appreciate the good in America, recognize the bad, and strive always to preserve what is good and condemn what is not—all for the sake of the truths on which America was founded, in honor of those who sacrificed and died to defend them, and for the good of present and future generations of young Americans.
The Hillsdale 1776 Curriculum

GRATITUDE

Jacksonville Classical Academy

Real Teachers, Real Classrooms, Real Students

The Hillsdale 1776 Curriculum is a reflection of Hillsdale College’s K-12 Program Guide, which serves as the basis of instruction in Hillsdale-affiliated schools. The K-12 Program Guide itself reflects parts of the education of which college students partake on Hillsdale’s campus. The specific materials in this curriculum, however, are the creation of the very best K-12 teachers, at Hillsdale classical schools, both past and present.
Dear Teacher,

As you know, teaching is one of the most important professions in human history. As an institution whose purpose it is to teach, we at Hillsdale College are acutely aware of what it takes to teach and to teach well, especially today. We thank you for taking up this charge in general and this curriculum in particular. We hope and trust that it will serve you and your students in the ways that you and they most deserve.

The pursuit of truth is an unapologetic pursuit. For those who strive for honesty, it cannot be otherwise. As such, you the teacher should be aware of the truths which Hillsdale College holds to be accessible to human reason, proven through the ages, and true of all people and all times. This curriculum is based on these truths. They are as follows.

- That truth is objective, according to the first law of logic, the law of contradiction: that something cannot both be and not be at the same time in the same way. The first object of the human mind and the first end of education is this objective truth about the world.

- That the good is that at which all actions, however misguided or distorted, aim. The good shows us how we ought to act, which we call right moral conduct.

- That human nature is good but also limited, flawed, and prone to do what is wrong.

- That while an individual may conduct himself and form his character to align with what is good over his lifetime, human nature itself does not fundamentally change or progress.

- That because this is the nature of human beings, and human beings make up government, government will always be capable of tyranny and mismanagement.

- That individuals should be judged based on their specific actions tending toward a certain character instead of their label, group identity, sex, religion, or skin color.

- That civic knowledge, personal virtue, patriotism, respect for the rule of law, and civil free speech are absolutely necessary for young students to learn for a free and self-governing society to persevere.

- That the more important thing in American history is that which has endured rather than that which has passed, that is, America’s founding principles which have outlasted and extinguished from law various forms of evil, such as slavery, racism, and other violations of the equal protection of natural rights.

- That although the United States of America is by no means perfect, it is unprecedented in the annals of human history for the extraordinary degrees of freedom, peace, and prosperity available to its people and to those who immigrate to her shores.

- That these unprecedented benefits are the result of its founding ideas and of those who have bravely sacrificed to prove these principles true—the principles that all men are created equal in their human dignity and possession of certain natural rights, that government exists solely to protect these rights and to promote the public good, and that people ought to govern themselves and respect the rights of one another.

- That for these reasons, America is an exceptionally good country.

With these principles in mind, dive into your subject. Learn it, wonder at it, love it, and teach so your students will, too.

Dr. Kathleen O’Toole

Assistant Provost for K-12 Education
Hillsdale College
KINDERGARTEN-2ND GRADE

American History

4 units | 20-30-minute classes

OVERVIEW

Unit 1 | The British Colonies of North America

LESSON 1  The Lands, Waters, and Peoples of America

LESSON 2  1492–1630  Exploration and Settlement

LESSON 3  1630–1732  The Colonies in Profile

LESSON 4  1607–1763  Major Events in the Colonies

Unit 2 | The American Founding

LESSON 1  1763–1776  Self–Government or Tyranny

LESSON 2  1776  The Declaration of Independence

LESSON 3  1776–1783  The War of Independence

LESSON 4  1783–1789  The United States Constitution

Unit 3 | The Early Republic

Coming Soon!
Unit 4 | The American Civil War

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Lesson</th>
<th>Time Period</th>
<th>Topic</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Lesson 1</td>
<td>1848–1854</td>
<td>The Expansion of Slavery</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lesson 2</td>
<td>1854–1861</td>
<td>Toward Civil War</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lesson 3</td>
<td>1861–1865</td>
<td>The Civil War</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lesson 4</td>
<td>1865–1877</td>
<td>Reconstruction</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
UNIT 1
The British Colonies of North America
1492–1763

UNIT PREVIEW

Structure

LESSON 1  The Lands, Waters, and Peoples of America  4–5 classes  p. 7
LESSON 2  1492–1630  Exploration and Settlement  9–10 classes  p. 11
LESSON 3  1630–1732  The Colonies in Profile  9–10 classes  p. 17
LESSON 4  1607–1763  Major Events in the Colonies  9–10 classes  p. 23
APPENDIX  Talk about History, Review Sheet, Test, Writing Assignment  p. 27

Why Teach the British Colonies of North America?

Christopher Columbus’s discovery of what was then termed “The New World” is one of the most consequential events in all of recorded history. It was as if another half of Earth was being opened to the peoples of Europe, Africa, and Asia, and the changes that followed this momentous discovery were immense. Students should be especially aware of the profound effects of the initial contact of European explorers with the indigenous peoples of North America. They should understand the ways of life characteristic of Native American tribes, the exploits of European explorers and settlers, and the triumphs and tragedies that defined the relationships between settlers and natives. Students should also learn about the manner in which the British colonies of North America were established, since those first settlements would be the seedbed of our country. The unique American heritage began here, on these coasts, among scattered settlements of men. and women pursuing economic independence or religious freedom, leaving behind their familiar lives to seek liberty and opportunity at what to them was the edge of the world. With the promise of freedom at these far reaches also came untold hardships and daily dangers. The American story begins with those few who braved these risks for the freedom to pursue what all human beings desire to attain: happiness.

Enduring Ideas from This Unit

1. America’s varied and wondrous geography has played a crucial role in many of America’s successes.
2. The discovery, exploration, and settlement of the Western Hemisphere was one of the most consequential series of events in human history.
3. The contact between indigenous North American and European civilizations resulted in both benefits and afflictions for natives and colonists alike.
4. The British colonies of North America were unique, and their circumstances gradually shaped the character of the colonists into something unprecedented: the American.
5. The freedom afforded to the American colonists resulted in a degree of successful self-government unknown to the rest of the world in 1763.

What Teachers Should Consider

Imagine two more continents, an eighth and a ninth, with different terrain, untouched resources, seemingly limitless lands, and complete openness to any sort of political regime. This is the vision teachers might consider adopting in preparing students to learn American history. In other words, one can adopt an outlook similar to that of the people who began the first chapter in the story of America. Such an outlook will help students to see the origins of America as something that was not at all inevitable.

In the same way the explorers, settlers, and indigenous Native Americans keenly fixed their attention on the contours of the North American landscape, so should students of American history at the outset of their studies. Learning about American geography sets the stage on which Americans of every generation would act out their lives.

Europeans’ exploration and settlement of the Western Hemisphere is an extraordinary era in terms of historical impact, but it also contains engaging stories of intrepid discoverers and of the conditions they found and helped to shape. It is important to find the proper balance in conveying the story of that era. Students ought to step into the lives of these explorers and settlers and understand not only their motivations for undertaking such hazardous trips and ways of living but also their experiences on the Atlantic and on the fringes of an unknown continent. They should also think carefully and honestly about the interactions between Native Americans, explorers, and settlers. They will encounter a mixed picture. At times, they will see cooperation, care, and mutual respect; at other times they will see all the duplicity and injustice that human nature is capable of. They will see these traits exhibited by all parties at various moments and in different circumstances.
Teachers should also focus on making clear the differences between England’s North American colonies and those of other emerging New World empires, such as Spain, France, and Portugal. They should bring out what was unique among the English settlers, from the form of their colonies’ settlements to the social and economic ventures of the colonists themselves, as well as their varied relationships to the mother country. Each English colony may be taught separately, each offering a distinct social and economic profile, while a final lesson may be devoted to studying the major events and movements in shared colonial American history. Together, students should come to see that an unplanned experiment was unfolding in the British colonies of North America: one that was shaping a unique society and citizenry, one that would be equipped for great accomplishments in the coming centuries.

How Teachers Can Learn More

TEXTS

Land of Hope, Wilfred McClay

ONLINE COURSES | Online.Hillsdale.edu

The Great American Story
American Heritage

Lesson Planning Resources

TEACHER RESOURCES

Land of Hope Young Reader's Edition, Volume 1, Wilfred McClay
The Geography of the United States, Core Knowledge
The Story of the Thirteen Colonies and the Great Republic, H.A. Guerber
Colonial Times, Anne Goudvis and Stephanie Harvey
The Landing of the Pilgrims, James Daugherty
The American Revolution and Constitution, Anne Goudvis and Stephanie Harvey

TRADE BOOKS

Maps and Globes, Jack Knowlton
Aboard the Santa Maria, Kate Mikoley
Exploration & Conquest, Betsy Maestro
James Towne, Marcia Sewall
Roanoke, Jane Yolen
Aboard the Mayflower, Theresa Emminizer
Sailing on the Mayflower, Caryn Jenner
The Thanksgiving Story, Alice Dalgliesh
The Pilgrims’ First Thanksgiving, Ann McGovern
The New Americans, Betsy Maestro
If You Lived in Colonial Times, Ann McGovern
If You Lived in Williamsburg in Colonial Days, Barbara Brenner
Three Young Pilgrims, Cheryl Harness
Meet George Washington, Joan Heilbroner
Ben Franklin of Old Philadelphia, Margaret Cousins
Heroes of the Revolution, David Adler
LESSON PLANS,
ACTIVITIES AND ASSIGNMENTS,
AND FORMATIVE QUIZZES
Lesson 1—The Lands, Waters, and Peoples of America

LESSON OBJECTIVE

Students learn about the geography of what would become the United States of America and its Native American and immigrant-descended inhabitants.

TEACHER PREPARATION

Create a note outline based on the following:

Teacher Texts
Land of Hope Young Reader’s Edition, Volume 1 Pages xiii-xv, 1-3
The Geography of the United States

Trade Books
Maps and Globes

Online.Hillsdale.edu
The Great American Story Lectures 1 and 2
American Heritage Lecture 1

CORE CONTENT IN THIS LESSON

Topographic Geography
Atlantic Ocean
Appalachian Mountains
Gulf of Mexico
Mississippi River
Great Lakes

Political Geography
Virginia
Massachusetts
New Hampshire
Maryland
Connecticut
Rhode Island
Delaware
North Carolina

Great Plains
Rocky Mountains
Pacific Ocean
Bering Strait

South Carolina
New Jersey
New York
Pennsylvania
Georgia
Washington, District of Columbia
Terms and Topics
- glaciers
- land bridge
- natural resources
- climate
- Mayas

- Aztecs
- Inca
- cities
- towns
- countryside

Images
- Maps
- Famous or exemplar landscapes, landmarks, bodies of water in America
- Illustrations of indigenous peoples, civilizations, and life
- Photographs of Aztec, Maya, and Inca ruins

Story for the American Heart

- Christopher Columbus’s crew on their voyage and sighting land

Questions for the American Mind

- What kinds of landforms and bodies of water can you find in America?
- Why is the American landscape a good place for people to live?
- Where did the indigenous peoples of North and South America come from? How did they get here?
- How did different groups of Native Americans live?
- What are some ways in which Native Americans and Europeans lived differently?

Keys to the Lesson

Every story has a setting, and the true story of history is no different. To tell and to teach this story effectively requires first introducing students to the stage on which Americans would act. Thus, American history should begin with a study of American geography. The lesson should transport students to the different places of America, not through an online virtual map but through the use of their own imaginations. Geography instruction is an excellent way to awaken and exercise the imaginations of students, priming them for all the other journeys which studying history will ask their minds to undertake. Every history lesson will involve a similar setting of the stage in the students’ imaginations, and this lesson establishes that precedent. Of course, the lesson also gives students the “lay of the land” for the entire study of American history, beginning with an immersive trip through the country’s magnificent and diverse landscape. This geography lesson can be full of simple questions about what students observe, training them in the skill of careful discernment of detail. At the end of the lesson, the class may return to the virgin topography of the United States and place the various indigenous civilizations on it, learning the smattering of their history that has survived, and then return to the Atlantic and to the Spanish caravels and carracks just over the eastern horizon.

Teachers might best plan and teach The Lands, Waters, and Peoples of America with emphasis on the following approaches:
- Introduce students to maps and globes, depending on the grade level and prior familiarity. Map skill topics may include teaching how to distinguish between a map and a globe; identifying and explaining a map of the classroom; distinguishing oceans, lakes, rivers, and mountains on a map; identifying cardinal directions on a map or globe; locating the North and South Poles; using different symbols on a map; and making references between locations on a map.

- Begin by telling a story that will encourage students to use their imaginations and set the precedent for the way class will normally be taught. The story of Christopher Columbus’s crew sighting land is an excellent example. The story may be picked up when Columbus’s three ships are already en route. Paint the scene. Provide descriptions of the ship. Help students get a sense of what sailing was like in those days, and the dangers it involved. Draw out the sounds and smells onboard the ships. Introduce the kind of men on board, the letters and instructions they had with them, and what they may have been thinking from moment to moment. Talk about their captain: his appearance, thoughts, and comportment. Share the story of how recently the crew had nearly mutinied against him, and how he quelled their fears. Describe the sudden appearance of a large flock of birds the previous day. Finally, bring students to the very early morning of October 12, 1492, after the view from the ship’s rail had not changed for weeks, when the call came from the masts, “La tierra!” Land!

- Introduce landmarks, bodies of water, and other physical characteristics, moving from east to west. The items listed under “Topographic Geography” follow in roughly this order. The goal is to make sure students are aware of these landmarks in order to develop an appreciation for the beauty and diversity of their country’s landscape.

- Call upon students’ imaginations by describing the settings of what you introduce with vivid language that engages all their senses. Place them in particular climates with the correct weather depending on the season and discuss the kinds of natural resources and economic activity to which each area is conducive. Record all this information with the class on a map projected on the board. As the class proceeds from coast to coast, label the map together using different symbols and drawings. Ask plenty of questions in the process. For review, project images of key areas discussed on the map and have students try to identify what is being projected.

- Emphasize with students the tremendous advantages America’s land offers to human flourishing. America had excellent and untouched soils for cultivation, temperature and rainfall averages were ideal, and timber was plentiful. Native plants and animals suitable for human consumption were abundant, while imported livestock thrived. The virgin forests provided all the fuel needed for fires, heating, and cooking, as well as for building. Waterways were plentiful and mostly navigable; their importance cannot be overstated, and students should appreciate that the colonial-era Atlantic world imagined the world primarily in terms of water flow, especially in North America. Most of the country had mild winters with long, warm growing seasons and few areas subject to drought. As for security from foreign powers, the United States would have two massive oceans separating it from most of the rest of the world.

- After covering topography, transition to a map of the colonies, proceeding in the order in which the first thirteen states were settled as colonies. The colonies and their major cities and features should be discussed, while details on the remaining states may be reserved for later grades. Review the topography, weather, climate, and seasons in the process.

- Return to the topographical map and place the indigenous tribes onto the map of North America and into the environments in which the various tribes lived. The diversity of tribes is astounding, and highlighting several communities, particularly on the eastern seaboard, will put students in the right historical context and assist with teaching the events in subsequent lessons.
• Explain how America is and always has been a land of immigrants. Even those who would be considered the indigenous or "native" peoples of both North and South America likely migrated from northeast Asia. Settlements and even great cities of Central and South America emerged in following years as migration resulted in people spreading over the land of the Western Hemisphere.

• Show the range of different Western Hemisphere civilizations through the millennia prior to Christopher Columbus, including their ways of life, customs, and beliefs. In conjunction with state and local history, explore the history and traditions of historical Native Americans from the school's locality or state.

• Conclude this first lesson by reminding students that to Columbus, his crew, and the peoples of Europe, Africa, and Asia in 1492 (and for millennia before), none of this was known to them, and discovering the entirety of the New World would take hundreds of years, even after Columbus's voyages.

STRENGTHENING UNDERSTANDING: POST-LESSON ASSIGNMENTS

Assignment 1: Have students and parents complete a “Talk about History” assignment in which parents ask their child a series of questions about what they learned in history from a given lesson. Parents record the answers and the student returns to school (provided in appendix).

Assignment 2: Have students draw and color a landform of their choice in America. Have students present briefly in class what they drew and why they depicted it the way they did.

Assignment 3: Have students draw a map of their classroom or house. Have students present briefly in class what they drew and why they depicted it the way they did.
Lesson 2—Exploration and Settlement

1492–1630

9–10 classes

LESSON OBJECTIVE

Students learn about the European exploration of North America and the first English settlement efforts at Roanoke, Jamestown, Plymouth, and Massachusetts Bay.

TEACHER PREPARATION

Create a note outline based on the following:

Teacher Texts
- The Story of the Thirteen Colonies and the Great Republic  Pages 11–44, 56–57
- The Landing of the Pilgrims

Trade Books
- Aboard the Santa Maria  Exploration & Conquest
- Roanoke
- James Towne  Aboard the Mayflower
- Sailing on the Mayflower  The Thanksgiving Story
- The Pilgrims’ First Thanksgiving

Online.Hillsdale.edu
- The Great American Story  Lecture 2
- American Heritage  Lecture 2

CORE CONTENT IN THIS LESSON

Geography & Places
- Genoa
- Spain
- San Salvador
- “The New World”
- La Florida
- St. Augustine
- England
- Virginia
- Roanoke
- Jamestown
- Plymouth
- Massachusetts Bay
- Boston
Persons
Leif Erikson
Ferdinand and Isabella
Christopher Columbus
John Smith
Pocahontas

John Rolfe
William Bradford
Massasoit
John Winthrop

Terms and Topics
Niña, Pinta, and Santa María Pilgrims
Taino Mayflower
“Indians” religious freedom conquistadors Mayflower Compact government
smallpox rule of law
Virginia Company self-government
“Starving Time” Wampanoag

Timeline
1492 Columbus lands on San Salvador Island

4th Thursday in November Thanksgiving Day

Images
Historical figures and events
Caravel and carrack
Maps of Columbus’s voyages and other exploration
Dress of Native Americans, explorers, and settlers
Illustrated map of Jamestown
Mayflower
Mayflower Compact facsimile
First Thanksgiving

Stories for the American Heart

- Christopher Columbus’s account of making landfall
- The Lost Colony of Roanoke
- The “Starving Time” at Jamestown
- Pocahontas, John Smith, and John Rolfe
- The voyage of the Mayflower
- Signing of the Mayflower Compact
- The first winter at Plymouth
- Accounts of the First Thanksgiving by Edward Winslow and William Bradford
QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

- Why did Europeans begin exploring the ocean in the 1400s?
- What did Christopher Columbus think would be the fastest way to get to Asia?
- Who were Queen Isabella and King Ferdinand? What did they agree to with Columbus?
- What was dangerous about sailing on the ocean?
- What were the Niña, the Pinta, and the Santa Maria?
- How did Christopher Columbus’s voyages change the world?
- Why did Christopher Columbus mistakenly name the indigenous people of North America?
- Was Christopher Columbus successful? Why or why not?
- Why did settlers want to establish Jamestown?
- What problems did Jamestown’s settlers face?
- What events helped Jamestown to succeed?
- What is “self-government”?
- Why did the Pilgrims want to establish Plymouth?
- What did the Mayflower Compact say?
- Why did the Pilgrims create the Mayflower Compact?
- How did the First Thanksgiving come about? Why?
- Why did John Winthrop say that the settlers at Massachusetts Bay were like “a city upon a hill”?
- Questions from the U.S. Civics Test:
  - Question 73: The colonists came to America for many reasons. Name one.
  - Question 74: Who lived in America before the Europeans arrived?

KEYS TO THE LESSON

Christopher Columbus’s discovery of the New World was one of the signal achievements of the age of exploration. Enterprising commoners who followed in his wake braved the seas and these wild lands for their own fortunes and opportunity. Nearly one hundred years would pass before the English would attempt a permanent settlement in North America and another two decades before they found any success. Yet while Jamestown was founded chiefly on economic motives, the next two decades would see the Plymouth and Massachusetts Bay colonies founded, at least in part, for religious and cultural ends. What was common to all these efforts was the desire for freedom to better their conditions—both the quality of earthly life and the preparation for eternal life. Put differently, they desired the freedom to seek happiness, made available to the common man in ways that had no parallel in the Old World.

Teachers might best plan and teach Exploration and Settlement with emphasis on the following approaches:

- Begin the teaching of American history by helping students gain historical perspective. Using the following reference points, ask them to compare today’s way of life with life in the centuries prior to the 1600s.
  - ability to believe and act on one’s beliefs without fear of arrest or worse
  - ability to speak one’s mind without fear of arrest or worse
  - acquisition of clothing, food, and shelter
  - communication by Internet, text, phones, mail
  - electricity, plumbing, heating, cooling travel by plane, car, boat, horse and buggy, walking

- Offer students some background on the reasons why Europeans began exploring in the first place. Reasons include a newfound daringness in European thought and culture, trade interests in Asia, Muslim control of land routes, newly emerging and competing monarchs, and new maritime technology. Riding these currents, many were inspired to turn to the seas in search of what was beyond, first along the African coast, and then across the Atlantic.

- Relay to students the background to Christopher Columbus. Of important note is the attention he gave to new theories of navigation and the size, but not the shape, of the world. It is a misconception that many people believed the Earth was flat during Columbus’ lifetime. Most educated people since the ancient Greeks believed the world was round. Columbus theorized the world was much smaller than others believed. This led him to surmise that it would be possible to travel to the East Indies by sailing west.

- Of Columbus’s first voyage, help students to imagine what he was doing and what his crew was undertaking as well. It was far from certain that they would find the route Columbus sought, or that they would survive trying. Even then, Columbus was confident of his theories and of his ability.

- Consider Columbus’s role in establishing the first enduring links between the Old and New Worlds, initiating European civilization’s influence on the Western Hemisphere.

- Explore with students the history of interactions between the indigenous peoples of North and South America and European explorers and settlers. Of paramount importance is that teachers do not paint with too broad of a brush. The relationships varied widely. Many interactions and relationships were mutually respectful and cooperative. Others were unjust. Often the relations between the same groups ebbed and flowed between friendship and conflict over time. Ask why misunderstandings, duplicity, and conflict between very different peoples and cultures—and between fallible individuals of all sorts—might arise.

- In addition to conflict, discuss how the indigenous people’s lack of acquired immunity to diseases, notably smallpox, which most Europeans had been conditioned to survive, was a leading contributor to the decline of the Native American population.

- Highlight the later years of Columbus’s life, including his removal as commander in Spanish-claimed territories, his shipwreck and stranding on Jamaica for a year, and Spain’s unwillingness to commission any further expeditions under his command. Columbus died as an abject failure in the eyes of the world and likely in his own eyes, as he never did find a passage to Asia yet also did not understand that what he had discovered was another half of planet Earth.

- Review other explorations between Columbus and the beginning of English settlement efforts in the late 1500s. Study Ponce de Leon’s discovery of Florida and the eventual settlement at St. Augustine, marking the first European presence in the future United States. Trace the paths of various explorers into the future states of America, particularly in Florida and the West. Recount the first English effort to establish a permanent settlement in North America in the colony of Roanoke, which famously disappeared with barely a trace after a brief four-year existence.

- Recount the founding of Jamestown as emblematic of one important motivation for the English to establish a colony: material opportunity for the lower classes. Land ownership by common folk was extremely rare in almost all of Europe, and economic mobility itself was a relatively new and rare phenomenon. The organizers and settlers of Jamestown embodied the enterprising spirit that would come to define emigrants from England to North America, and, for that matter, millions of immigrants throughout America’s history. This degree of opportunity for the ordinary person was unprecedented. It partly explains why so many European commoners left what was familiar and risked the greater likelihood of an earlier death to pursue it. The Jamestown settlers exemplified the idea of pursuing “the American dream.”

- Tell stories about the several periods when Jamestown was on the verge of failing and the many deaths incurred despite its eventual success. Of particular note was Jamestown’s original experiment with a form of communism. This collectivism, plus rampant disease, helped produce a disastrous first year and a half for the fledgling settlement. John Smith’s requirement that settlers earn their bread by their work and his guarantee of private property ownership, along with some much-needed assistance from the local Native Americans, not only saved the settlement but also became quintessentially American traits, both in law and in the character of the people. But even this near disaster paled in comparison to what was known as the “Starving Time,” in which failure was averted only by a return to the rule of law under Lord De La Warr. The turning point for Jamestown was the successful cultivation of tobacco by John Rolfe. While not the gold many settlers had originally envisioned, the crop would both shore up Jamestown’s existence and spread the news among the English and other Europeans that opportunities were present and realizable in English Virginia.

- Show how the founding of Plymouth was emblematic of the other important motivation for Englishmen to establish a colony: religion. In the wake of the Protestant Reformation, the Christian world was divided, with various forms of strife and severe restrictions on religious belief and practice. In England, these divisions were within Protestantism itself, with Puritans wishing to purify the Church of England of remaining Catholic trappings and Separatist Puritans (whom we call Pilgrims) seeking to establish a new, true Church of England. It was this latter group that sought not only the freedom to practice their form of Anglicanism but also to re-found the Church in the New World.

- Spend some time with the Mayflower Compact, signed off the coast of Cape Cod before the settlers went ashore. Emphasize the English tradition of the rule of law and of forms of democratic expression traced back at least to the Magna Carta. Facing a lawless wilderness with families to protect and ex-convicts in their midst, the Pilgrims resorted to that English tradition of self-government under the rule of law—a social contract among themselves—with God as its ultimate judge. Both the Pilgrims at Plymouth in 1620 and the convening of the Virginia House of Burgesses down the coast at Jamestown in 1619, the first two successful English settlements, almost immediately practiced self-government. Self-government under law was therefore present at the very inception of America, a fact that makes America unique.

- Note the terrible first winter the Pilgrims suffered at Plymouth, and how the Wampanoag Indians truly saved those who did survive. The next year, with the help of the Wampanoag, was a tremendous success, which Pilgrims and Native Americans together celebrated, and for which they gave thanks to God in what is considered America’s First Thanksgiving (notwithstanding a similar celebration in Spanish Florida in the previous century). Share accounts of this festive Thanksgiving from Edward Winslow and William Bradford.

- Finally, discuss the founding of Massachusetts Bay Colony and the leadership of its first governor, John Winthrop. Like the Pilgrims, these Puritans were fierce critics of the Church of England. Unlike the Pilgrims, however, the Puritans at Massachusetts Bay sought not to separate from the Church of England but to establish a community that would help purify and correct the Church of England while remaining a part of it. As evident in Winthrop’s “A Modell of Christian Charity,” New England would convert Old England by its example. Together with Jamestown and Plymouth, the English had a beachhead in the New World, and the news spread far and wide across the Atlantic.

STRENGTHENING UNDERSTANDING: POST-LESSON ACTIVITIES AND ASSIGNMENTS

Activity: Find pictures that represent five different scenes from this lesson. Print off enough images for each group of five students to have a set. Give each student in the group a different picture (all groups will have the same five pictures). Have the students arrange the pictures in the order that those events occurred. Once the students have figured out the correct order of events, have students line up in order and go over the order of events as a class. Conclude the activity by asking students how they knew what event the picture was portraying. Ask students how they remembered the order of events/what they did to figure out the correct order. If there are groups that did not figure out the correct order, ask those students questions in order to move them to the correct sequence.

---

Assignment 1: Have students and parents complete a “Talk about History” assignment in which parents ask their child a series of questions about what they learned in history from a given lesson. Parents record the answers and the student returns to school (provided in appendix).

Assignment 2: Have students draw and color a scene of their choice from a pre-Columbian Native American tribe. Have students present briefly in class what they drew, the story behind it, and why they depicted it the way they did.

Assignment 3: Have students draw and color a scene of their choice from Jamestown or Plymouth. Have students present briefly in class what they drew, the story behind it, and why they depicted it the way they did.

FORMATIVE QUIZ 1

Provide students with numbered papers. Using the “Review Sheets” in the Appendix, make statements and ask students if they are True or False. Have them draw ☑️ for “True” or ☐️ for “False” next to each number. Review as a class and talk through what makes each answer correct.
Lesson 3—The Colonies in Profile

1630–1732

9–10 classes

Lesson Objective

Students learn about the thirteen colonies that would become the United States of America, including their foundings and ways of life for colonists.

Teacher Preparation

Create a note outline based on the following:

Student Texts
Selections

Teacher Texts
Land of Hope Young Reader’s Edition, Volume 1
The Story of the Thirteen Colonies and the Great Republic
Colonial Times

Trade Books
The New Americans
If You Lived in Colonial Times
If You Lived in Williamsburg in Colonial Days
Three Young Pilgrims

Online.Hillsdale.edu
The Great American Story
American Heritage

Core Content in This Lesson

Geography & Places
New Hampshire
Maryland
Connecticut
Rhode Island
Delaware
North Carolina
South Carolina
New Jersey
New York
Pennsylvania
Philadelphia
Georgia
New England Colonies
Middle Colonies
Southern Colonies
Persons
- Lord Baltimore
- Roger Williams
- William Penn
- James Oglethorpe

Terms and Topics
- education
- religious freedom
- self-government
- colonial assemblies
- indentured servitude
- chattel slavery
- slave ships
- Middle Passage

Images
- Historical figures and events
- Landscape pictures of geographic places featured in this lesson
- Depictions of indentured servants and then slaves in the colonies

STORIES FOR THE AMERICAN HEART
- Roger Williams’s efforts to establish religious toleration in Rhode Island
- Descriptions of slavery and life on a slave ship
- Stories of African Americans who won their freedom in the colonies
- Accounts of life in the different colonies

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND
- How was lifestyle and work different between the three colonial regions?
- What is religious toleration?
- How did colonists look after themselves?
- What is self-government?
- What activities did the New England colonists rely on to make money?
- What was James Oglethorpe’s plan for Georgia?
- What was daily life like for colonists?
- What was the difference between an indentured servant and a person in slavery?
- In which ways did Native Americans and English colonists work together?
- In which ways did English colonists and Native Americans harm one another?
- What was daily life like for African colonists and African slaves?
- What are the origins of slavery in world history?
- How were Africans first enslaved, before being brought to the Western Hemisphere?
- What was it like to be an African on the Middle Passage and then a slave in the New World?
- Why were there more slaves in the Southern colonies than the Middle Atlantic and New England colonies?
- How would you describe the average colonist?

Questions from the U.S. Civics Test:
- Question 73: The colonists came to America for many reasons. Name one.
- Question 75: What group of people was taken and sold as slaves?
KEYS TO THE LESSON

Teaching the histories of each colony helps students to understand and appreciate the humble origins of the future United States. It is also very revealing. Students can see in the early histories of many colonies the beginnings of traits that would eventually be hallmarks of American society, law, and citizenry.

Teachers might best plan and teach The Colonies in Profile with emphasis on the following approaches:

- Try to teach the colonies in the order in which they were founded (i.e., as listed above in “Geography and Places”). A map may be projected and distributed to students for reference as the lesson proceeds from colony to colony.
- Note the more casual approach the English took to colonization, largely shaped by the monarch and parliamentary politics in England at the time of each colonial settlement. For one, colonization was decentralized, and most of the original colonies were established as private property ventures, often sanctioned by the crown but really in the possession of private individuals through joint-stock companies. These were then populated not with government officials or hired agents but with men of all ranks who were also seeking their own opportunity, freedom, and plot of land. Both of these features accounted for the lack of an overall master plan for colonizing North America and marked important departures from the approaches taken by Spain, Portugal, and France. This lack of a plan would become a problem later when England would seek to centralize the administration of the colonies, largely in an effort to raise revenue and enforce the sovereignty of Parliament.
- Help students to understand the importance of these traits. Not only did the English approach to colonization trend toward greater independence from the monarchy, it also attracted and encouraged individuals and families who were independent-minded and determined. What the settlers did not bring with them from Europe were the legal class distinctions that defined the aristocratic and monarchial nations they left behind. These individuals (except for their British governors) were common people who immigrated to America seeking their freedom and to better their station in life. The rugged individualism, practice of personal independence, work ethic, and ingenuity to succeed would become well-known American characteristics and in some cases would result in the formation of new colonies by separation from an existing colony, as was the case in New England.
- Spend time on what it meant to make a living and survive in the daunting wilderness and how such perseverance shaped the character and mind of the colonists. This would include looking at lifestyles and kinds of work done in the colonies and the type of self-reliance necessary for such lives.
- Consider how strongly matters of religious faith defined colonial culture, largely because so many came to America to escape the religious persecutions or limitations of the Old World. From the Pilgrims and the Puritans to Roman Catholics and Jews, a wide variety of faiths (most of them Christian and many of whom were intolerant of one another in the Old World) permeated colonial settlements, and their adherents increasingly came to respect one another as neighbors. Establishing this religious freedom in law, moreover, was widespread and exceptional compared to the rest of the world.
- Emphasize with students the degree of self-government that the colonists exercised. Include in this discussion the meaning of self-government. In brief, the colonists largely governed their own internal affairs (rule over local matters, including taxation, as opposed to international trade and security) through local legislatures and governance structures chosen by the people. This was partly due to the English tradition of legislative authority and the rule of law, the loose and decentralized pattern of British colonial settlements and rule compared to other empires. Another factor at play here was the great distance between London and the American eastern seaboard, which led to long periods of “benign neglect” of the colonies and the further development of local institutions of self-government. While all of the colonies would eventually become official royal colonies with royal governors, colony-wide legislative bodies were prolific, as were local governments such as townships, counties, and cities. Unlike almost every place in the world at that time and in history, the people were to a large extent ruling themselves.

- Explain to students the several kinds of trade and vocational trades present in the various colonies. Farming was, of course, the main livelihood, but manufacturing, fishing, whaling, shipbuilding, and other trades (particularly in New England) rapidly emerged as key colonial contributions. Trade was principally with England, but the British colonies of North America developed robust trade among one another and with the colonies of other nations as well.

- Share with students the complex patterns of relationship between the colonists and Native Americans. The relationships ran the gamut from friendly to violent, varying widely depending on the tribe involved, with misunderstandings and clashes of cultures and languages. Disagreements abounded over the concepts of communal versus private property. Violent clashes occurred along the edges of the colonial frontier, and cross-frontier retaliations by both sides were not uncommon. Colonists could be caught in conflicts between various Native American tribes, and likewise, Native Americans were often caught in conflicts between European powers. Systematic displacement of Native Americans was usually limited to localities during this period (such as after King Philip’s War in southern New England and through the Indian slave trade on the South Carolina frontier). Displacement over time was primarily due to devastation from disease and gradual, individual settlement westward.

- Mention that a number of colonists criticized some of the ways that colonial governments dealt with Native Americans. These also condemned and sought to remove slavery from their colonies.

- Help students to understand why a full understanding of the human person, of equality, and of justice all make slavery an evil action and practice, violating the principle that all people are equal in their humanity and possession of natural rights. Therefore, no one person may automatically infringe on the humanity or rights of another unless some initial violation of another’s rights has occurred.

- Discuss the history of slavery in world history, from ancient times through the middle ages and in different places, leading up to the Transatlantic Slave Trade. Portugal first began using African slaves on their sugar plantations off the west African coast, manifesting the chattel and race-based aspects of slavery in European colonies. The slave trade gradually made its way to the various colonies established throughout the Western Hemisphere, particularly with the cultivation of sugar cane in the Caribbean.
As mentioned in the previous lesson, the first Africans were brought to Jamestown by an English privateer who had captured a Portuguese slave ship on its way from Africa, likely headed for Portugal’s South American colonies.

Discuss the similarities and differences between slavery and indentured servitude. Indentured servitude was a common way for those who could not afford passage or to establish themselves in the New World to tie themselves to a sponsor for a number of years, offering free labor in exchange for passage across the Atlantic and shelter in the colonies. Oftentimes indentured servitude was little different from slavery in its practice, as shown in transcripts from court cases of indentured servants claiming relief from a cruel master.

Reflect with students on the unique American character that emerged among the free British colonists in North America. The harshness and risk of settling the New World gave them a certain grit and determination, along with an enterprising mind and innovative skill set. The universal demand for trade skills and farming in establishing a new civilization placed the vast majority of colonists within what we would call today the “working class.” In New England especially, colonists’ Protestantism made them widely literate for the sake of reading the Bible, skeptical of human sources of authority, and focused on individual improvement. At the same time, it made them highly idealistic, with many seeking to re-found Christendom. For many colonists, previous persecution granted them a deeper and more passionate sense of justice, of right and wrong. It also made them highly attuned to the politics on which freedom depended. A certain rugged, enterprising, and justice-loving individualism defined the colonists.

STRENGTHENING UNDERSTANDING: POST-LESSON ACTIVITIES AND ASSIGNMENTS

Activity: Provide students with a copy of a map that can also be projected on the board. Review the geographical locations of the colonies. As a class, label each of thirteen colonies. Then color the colonies in three different colors to represent their geographical divisions—New England, Middle, and Southern colonies.

---

Assignment 1: Have students and parents complete a “Talk about History” assignment in which parents ask their child a series of questions about what they learned in history from a given lesson. Parents record the answers and the student returns to school (provided in appendix).

Assignment 2: Have students draw and color a scene involving a historical figure of their choice from colonial America. Have students present briefly in class what they drew, the story behind it, and why they depicted it the way they did.

Assignment 3: Have students draw and color a scene depicting economic activity in one of the colonial regions of their choice. Have students present briefly in class what they drew and why they depicted it the way they did.
FORMATIVE QUIZ 2

Provide students with numbered papers. Using the “Review Sheets” in the Appendix, make statements and ask students if they are True or False. Have them draw ☑ for “True” or ☐ for “False” next to each number. Review as a class and talk through what makes each answer correct.
Lesson 4—Major Events in the Colonies

1607–1763

9–10 classes

LESSON OBJECTIVE

Students learn about the major events and movements in colonial America and further study the ideas and experiences that were shaping the colonists in the 1600s and 1700s.

TEACHER PREPARATION

Create a note outline based on the following:

Teacher Texts

- The Story of the Thirteen Colonies and the Great Republic Pages 47, 59–67
- The American Revolution and Constitution Pages 5–11

Trade Books

- Meet George Washington
- Ben Franklin of Old Philadelphia
- Heroes of the Revolution

Online.Hillsdale.edu

- The Great American Story Lectures 2 and 3
- American Heritage Lectures 2 and 3

CORE CONTENT IN THIS LESSON

Geography & Places

- England
- France
- Appalachian Mountains
- Ohio River Valley
- The Great Lakes
- Canada
- Mississippi River
- Quebec

Persons

- George III
- George Washington
- Benjamin Franklin

Terms and Topics

- King Philip’s War
- Magna Carta
- Glorious Revolution
- representation
- self-government
- The Great Awakening
- French and Indian War
- Iroquois Confederacy
- Albany Congress
- Treaty of Paris
To Know by Heart
Selections from George Washington’s “Rules of Civility & Decent Behavior in Company and Conversation,” such as:
- “Be not apt to relate news if you know not the truth thereof.”
- “Speak not evil of the absent for it is unjust.”

Timeline
1754–63 The French and Indian War

Images
Historical figures and events
Dress of colonists from different periods and places
Uniforms and munitions of soldiers in the various wars
Colonial assembly buildings

Stories for the American Heart
- George Washington and the cherry tree (legend)
- George Washington’s first battles in the Virginia militia, including his survival and Braddock’s death
- Benjamin Franklin’s autobiography

Questions for the American Mind
- What did colonists learn from the Glorious Revolution in England?
- Why was it good that England did not pay the colonists much attention?
- How did colonists take care of themselves without a lot of help from England?
- What was the Great Awakening like?
- How did the Great Awakening help colonists feel like they had more in common?
- Who fought in the French and Indian War? Why did they fight?
- What was George Washington’s childhood like?
- What was the role of George Washington in the French and Indian War?
- What was Benjamin Franklin’s childhood like?
- What was the Albany Plan of Union? What did it show about the unity of the colonies?
- Why did the British win the French and Indian War?
- What did the Treaty of Paris take from France and give to England?
- Questions from the U.S. Civics Test:
  - Question 85: Benjamin Franklin is famous for many things. Name one.
  - Question 86: George Washington is famous for many things. Name one.

Keys to the Lesson
Having learned about life in colonial America, students should then consider the major events that shaped colonial history. These include, of course, events that occurred within the colonies themselves, but also certain ideas and events in Europe that had significant influence on the colonists. Once the lesson enters the eighteenth century, special focus should be placed on the events that created in the colonists a sense of independence from Great Britain and of greater dependence on one another, even as they themselves did not fully recognize or articulate these trends. In general, this lesson should help students see what the colonists and colonies had become before they learn about the American founding.

Teachers might best plan and teach Major Events in the Colonies with emphasis on the following approaches:

- Teach students about wars that occurred in the New World, either between settlers and Native Americans or with colonies of other countries. A lot of detail is not necessary, but students should appreciate that these wars were significant for those who were endangered by them and left largely to their own defenses.
- Offer a brief history of the English Civil War, which involved and influenced some of the main political thought of the colonists, as well as the Glorious Revolution a few decades later. These political developments informed the colonists and drew their careful attention to political considerations.
- Consider with students the view that the colonists enjoyed a relationship with the English government that was neglectful, but also beneficial. They were “neglected” in the sense that they were a month away by sea from England, which meant poor communication and the near impossibility of governing directly. The English also largely overlooked their colonies in North America, sometimes viewing the colonists merely as poor tradesmen, former criminals, religious radicals, and commoners of no noble birth. Compared to England’s Caribbean colonies, they were also far less profitable. England’s preoccupation with rivals Spain and France and her own civil war also left English kings and Parliament with relatively little thought to give the colonies. The mercantilist restrictions on trade, moreover, were seldom fully enforced or even capable of being completely enforced, and the colonies largely traded freely with the world.
- Help students understand why this relationship of neglect was not a disadvantage but actually healthy for the colonists. Overall, the colonists were still protected, especially on the seas, by the English. At the same time, however, they were not regulated or administratively directed beyond the general forms of governance; e.g., a royal governor and a local legislature. The colonists were largely free to take the enterprising, individualist spirit of common English settlers and, forced by necessity, to innovate and work hard to pursue livelihoods and security within their own spheres. Laws, moreover, could not wait for a two- or three-month lapse in communication. Colonists were both permitted and forced by circumstances to practice the elements of English law they had brought with them, including a recognition of certain rights and the limits of authority. The colonists had ample talent and opportunity to govern themselves. This tradition of self-government would allow for many generations of practice in self-rule as a feature of daily life. The colonists, therefore, were both used to and deeply practiced in locally governing themselves, replete with the ideas and habits that this process cultivated.
- Briefly spend time reviewing how the colonists governed themselves, including a discussion of what representation is. In general, representation by election determined the composition of the various colonial assemblies, beginning with the Virginia House of Burgesses. That representative self-government was the norm in the colonies was astonishing compared to the rest of the world and human history and the high degree of participation by the average colonist in local government was widespread.
- Clarify for students that each colony originally did not see itself as part of a shared English colonial political state. Although their own proprietary charters were eventually replaced with royal charters, each colony viewed itself as its own separate entity, only loosely bound to the others by a common mother country and overall shared culture. This view would persist up to the eve of the Revolution.

- Explore with students how the Great Awakening throughout the colonies provided the separate and distinct colonies with something they could hold in common. At the same time, it awakened a passion for right moral conduct and justice that could be attached to any cause.

- Teach students about the French and Indian War. Of special note here is the presence of a young George Washington and the Virginia militia fighting alongside the British regulars. This is a good opportunity to introduce Washington, including his boyhood biography and his exploits in the war, and especially his actions during the attack on General Braddock. The French and Indian War was also important for providing the colonists another shared experience, this time amidst the adversities of war, and for demonstrating increased cooperation and a sense of unity, as evidenced by the Albany Congress. This is also a good place to introduce the architect of the Albany congress and plan, Benjamin Franklin, including teaching about his biography up to this juncture. In addition to fostering advances toward and experiences in united action, the French and Indian War is also of great importance for understanding the circumstances that would lead to the American Revolution.

- Share with students maps showing the transfer of territory to the British Empire through the Treaty of Paris. Discuss with students what this meant for the relative power of Great Britain and France and the new challenges and opportunities inherent in such a sudden change of territory and power.

STRENGTHENING UNDERSTANDING: POST-LESSON ACTIVITIES AND ASSIGNMENTS

Activity: Have students conduct their own colonial assemblies by coming up with ideas on how to take care of themselves in light of the challenges of colonial North America and because England was so far away. Ask questions that help students understand how and why the colonists developed their own forms of self-government.

Assignment 1: Have students and parents complete a “Talk about History” assignment in which parents ask their child a series of questions about what they learned in history from a given lesson. Parents record the answers and the student returns to school (provided in appendix).

Assignment 2: Have students draw a picture of Benjamin Franklin or George Washington depicting an event or characteristic of his childhood or time up until the American Revolution. Have students present briefly in class what they drew, the story behind it, and why they depicted it the way they did.

Assignment 3: Have students illustrate one of George’s Washington’s Rules of Civility of their choosing. For students who are able to write, they should also write the rule that matches the picture. Have students present briefly in class what they drew and how it demonstrates the rule.
APPENDIX

Talk about History

Review Sheet

Test

Writing Assignment
TALK ABOUT HISTORY

Student Name: ___________________________  Due: _____________
Story/Lesson from History: __________________________________________________________

1. Who/what did you learn about in history class today?
   Student Answer: _____________________________________________________________

2. Who were the most important characters in the story?
   Student Answer: _____________________________________________________________

3. Tell me more about one of those characters.
   Student Answer: _____________________________________________________________

4. Tell me about the most exciting/interesting part of the story today.
   Student Answer: _____________________________________________________________

Parent Signature: ___________________________  Date: _________________

TALK ABOUT HISTORY

Student Name: ___________________________  Due: _____________
Story/Lesson from History: __________________________________________________________

1. Who/what did you learn about in history class today?
   Student Answer: _____________________________________________________________

2. Who were the most important characters in the story?
   Student Answer: _____________________________________________________________

3. Tell me more about one of those characters.
   Student Answer: _____________________________________________________________

4. Tell me about the most exciting/interesting part of the story today.
   Student Answer: _____________________________________________________________

Parent Signature: ___________________________  Date: _________________
History Assessment and Review in Grades K–2

REVIEWING AND STUDYING

One-page Review Sheets are included in the following materials. Teachers are encouraged to review items on these sheets with students in the days leading up to an assessment. Between reviewing at the beginning of each class period and this review based on the Review Sheets, students should not need to do any additional studying or review. Review Sheets may be sent home, however, if parents wish to review with their students at home.

ASSESSMENT

The method for assessing students on history in grades K-2 depends on the grade level and student ability.

For students who cannot yet read and write:

- Option 1: Choose several items from the Review Sheet to ask each student orally. This may be done in private with the same questions while students complete another activity, or it may be administered aloud with the entire class, varying questions for each student.

- Option 2: Create a test with images for matching or identifying terms and topics. Read aloud a description or explanation of a Person, Term, Topic, or Story to the whole class and have each student circle or place a number/letter next to the corresponding image on their test. For the Questions, read aloud a statement that would answer the question and ask students if it is True or False. Have them draw ☑ for “True” or ☐ for “False” next to each statement.

For students who can read and write:

Teachers may administer the tests included in the following materials. It is recommended, especially early in a school year, to have each student complete the test individually, but with the class proceeding together from question to question, each being read aloud by the teacher.
Review Sheet — Unit 1 Test

Lesson 2 | Exploration and Settlement
Lesson 3 | The Colonies in Profile
Lesson 4 | Major Events in the Colonies

Test on __________

DATES: When did/does ___________ occur?

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1492</td>
<td>Columbus lands on San Salvador Island</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4th Thursday in November</td>
<td>Thanksgiving Day</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

PERSONS: Tell me who ___________ was and what he/she did.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Person</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Christopher Columbus</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Smith</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pocahontas</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>William Penn</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>George Washington</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Benjamin Franklin</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

TERMS AND TOPICS: Tell me what ___________ is/are/was/were and why we learned about it.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Term/Topic</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>land bridge</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>smallpox</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>natural resources</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>&quot;Starving Time&quot;</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Niña, Pinta, and Santa María</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Taíno</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Middle Passage</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Glorious Revolution</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mayflower Compact</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>self-government</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Great Awakening</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>French and Indian War</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

STORIES FOR THE AMERICAN HEART: Tell me the story of...

- Christopher Columbus’s voyage
- Pocahontas, John Smith, and John Rolfe
- Accounts of the First Thanksgiving
- George Washington and the cherry tree

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND: Tell me...

☐ Why is the American landscape a good place for people to live?
☐ What was dangerous about sailing on the ocean?
☐ What events helped Jamestown to succeed?
☐ What did the Mayflower Compact say?
☐ Why did the Pilgrims create the Mayflower Compact?
☐ What is religious toleration?
☐ How did colonists look after themselves?
☐ What was daily life like for colonists?
☐ In which ways did Native Americans and English colonists work together?
☐ What was daily life like for African colonists and African slaves?
☐ Why were there more slaves in the Southern colonies than the Middle Atlantic and New England colonies?
☐ Why was it good that England did not pay the colonists much attention?
☐ How did the Great Awakening help colonists feel like they had more in common?
☐ What was the role of George Washington in the French and Indian War?
☐ What did the Treaty of Paris take from France and give to England?
The British Colonies of North America — Unit 1 Test

DATES:

1. Circle the year Christopher Columbus came to the Americas.
   A. 1607  B. 1452  C. 1492

2. Circle the year the day that the Thanksgiving holiday takes place.
   A. July 4, 1776  B. 4th Thursday in November  C. Last Day in December

PERSONS: Match the person to who he/she was or what he/she did.

A. Pocahontas  B. William Penn  C. Benjamin Franklin

3. ________ Inventor and writer who tried to unite the colonies during the French and Indian War.

4. ________ Founded Pennsylvania for Quakers and for religious toleration.

5. ________ Convinced her fellow Native Americans to help the Jamestown settlers survive.

TERMS AND TOPICS: Match the term to the correct definition, description, or explanation.

A. Glorious Revolution  C. smallpox  E. Taíno
B. land bridge  D. “Starving Time”

6. ________ How we believe Native Americans first came to the Americas from Asia.

7. ________ The Native Americans whom Christopher Columbus first met.

8. ________ A disease that hurt Native Americans but not European settlers.

9. ________ When many Jamestown colonists died from lack of food and disease.

10. ________ A change in government in England that taught the colonists about the sources of power.
STORIES FOR THE AMERICAN HEART: Tell me the story of the First Thanksgiving.

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

11. Why is the American landscape a good place for people to live?

12. What did the Mayflower Compact say?

13. What was daily life like for African colonists and African slaves?

14. Why was it good that England did not pay the colonists much attention?

15. What was the role of George Washington in the French and Indian War?
Writing Assignment — The British Colonies of North America

Unit 1

Due on ____________

What were some of the lessons we can learn from the stories of the American colonists?
UNIT 2
The American Founding
1763–1789

UNIT PREVIEW

Structure

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>LESSON</th>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Classes</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1</td>
<td>1763–1776</td>
<td>Self-Government or Tyranny</td>
<td>9–10</td>
<td>7</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2</td>
<td>1776</td>
<td>The Declaration of Independence</td>
<td>4–5</td>
<td>12</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3</td>
<td>1776–1783</td>
<td>The War of Independence</td>
<td>9–10</td>
<td>17</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4</td>
<td>1783–1789</td>
<td>The United States Constitution</td>
<td>9–10</td>
<td>22</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

APPENDIX A
Talk about History, Review Sheets, Tests, Writing Assignment
p. 31

APPENDIX B
Primary Sources
p. 47

Why Teach the American Founding

The beginning is the most important part of any endeavor, for a small change at the beginning will result in a very different end. How much truer this is of the most expansive of human endeavors: founding and sustaining a free country. The United States of America has achieved the greatest degree of freedom and prosperity for the greatest proportion of any country’s population in the history of humankind. How is it that the common American’s pursuit of happiness has resulted in such exceptional outcomes over time? This phenomenon compels mindful young Americans to seek to understand how their nation has achieved such results. And America’s youth could find no greater source of understanding than the history of their country’s founding, starting with their forefathers’ ideas, words, and deeds.
Enduring Ideas from this Unit

1. The United States is unprecedented in establishing its existence not on grounds of racial origin nor family privilege but on ideas asserted to be true of all people at all times: namely, on the equal human dignity of each person.
2. America was founded on the view that government should be controlled by the people themselves and limited to the purpose of protecting each person’s natural rights and fostering the common good.
3. Regular, ordinary Americans of everyday means sacrificed their security and very lives to defend these truths about human beings and civic life against a tyranny of the most powerful nation of its day.
4. The United States Constitution’s chief quality is that it allows the people to govern themselves with respect for the dignity of each person while both channeling and restraining the natural ambition of human beings to gain power and recognition.
5. The Constitution is a carefully wrought and considered document, and its original intent and structure should be honored both for the sake of our forebears, to whom we and the world owe our freedom and prosperity, and because the events of the last two hundred years have proven the Constitution’s remarkable achievements time and time again.

What Teachers Should Consider

The United States of America is unprecedented in many ways in the course of human history, but most significantly in the opportunity all its citizens have to pursue unmatched conditions of freedom, security, and prosperity. The country owes its unprecedented success to an unprecedented founding, a beginning forged and canonized in the Declaration of Independence, the War of Independence, and the U.S. Constitution.

And yet, never have so many Americans known so little about this founding. As for love of country, one cannot love (or even consider loving) what one does not know.

The teaching of the American founding is perhaps the most necessary series of lessons a teacher can share with his or her students if those students intend to enjoy the benefits of living in America for the duration of their lives.

With this in mind, a teacher ought to take special care to learn the history and ideas of the American founding. Ambiguity in the teacher’s own understanding, or assumptions derived from anywhere but careful scholarship and a deep reading of America’s founding documents, will leave him or her unprepared to help students understand this history accurately.

The teacher might best open the unit with lessons aimed at understanding why the colonists declared independence in the first place. It was not to avoid paying taxes or about wanting to preserve slavery. (These are misconceptions at best, distortions at worst.) It was to choose—between liberty under self-government and servitude under tyranny. Class may proceed at a brisk pace through the years 1763–1776, touching on the many acts of the British and respective colonial responses to those acts. Spend time on the conflicts and battles; students should chart the gradual shift in public sentiment toward independence.
The Declaration of Independence itself deserves careful study. Such lessons may begin with stories of the writing of the Declaration. Teachers can foster extensive conversations about what it says, what it means, and why it says it. The majority of the conversation should dwell on the ideas found in the first, second, and final paragraphs of the Declaration. Understanding what is meant by those words is pivotal to understanding American history, what makes America an exceptional nation, and the responsibilities every American citizen has.

The American War of Independence should be taught so as to fill the moral imaginations of students with images of the heroic characters and actions of its American participants. Strategy, battles, and the general arc of the war should be taught in detail, punctuated with accounts of the key moments and figures who contributed to America’s ultimate victory. The ideas for which the War of Independence was fought are matched in the American memory only by the stories of those who fought for them.

When teaching the aftermath of the War of Independence up to the Constitutional Convention, teachers should make clear that America’s foray into governing itself entirely independent of Great Britain initially trended toward abject failure. The Articles of Confederation ordered public affairs in a reactionary rather than prudent manner. Students should understand that the Constitutional Convention, in many respects, saved the country from another sort of tyranny: majority tyranny.

Finally, the Constitutional Convention and the Constitution itself should be studied in tandem. Students should consider carefully why the Framers constructed the Constitution as they did while also being introduced to laws and government in general. Students should understand that nothing in the Constitution was haphazardly decided. Given the unprecedented long-term success of the Constitution, students should appreciate that any changes to the Constitution warrant careful and complete understanding of why the Framers crafted it the way they did, as explained in their own words.

How Teachers Can Learn More

Texts

Land of Hope, Wilfred McClay
We Still Hold These Truths, Matthew Spalding

Online Courses | Online.Hillsdale.edu

The Great American Story
Lesson Planning Resources

TEACHER RESOURCES

Land of Hope Young Reader’s Edition, Wilfred McClay
The Story of the Thirteen Colonies and the Great Republic, H.A. Guerber
The American Revolution and Constitution, Anne Goudvis and Stephanie Harvey
The Declaration of Independence, Elizabeth Raum
The United States Constitution, Liz Sonneborn

TRADE BOOKS

Heroes of the Revolution, David Adler
The Boston Tea Party, Russell Freedman
Let It Begin Here!, Dennis Brindell Fradin
A Picture Book of Benjamin Franklin, David Adler
A Picture Book of Paul Revere, David Adler
A Picture Book of Thomas Jefferson, David Adler
The Fourth of July Story, Alice Dalgliesh
The Liberty Bell, Mary Firestone
Let’s Celebrate Independence Day, Barbara DeRubertis
George Washington, Ingri and Edgar Parin d’Aulaire
A Picture Book of George Washington, David Adler
Sam the Minuteman, Nathaniel Benchley
Our Flag, Carl Memling
The Flag We Love, Pam Munoz Ryan
Blue Sky White Stars, Sarvinder Naberhaus
Uncle Sam and Old Glory, Delano and Jean West
We the People, Peter Spier
If You Were There When They Signed the Constitution, Elizabeth Levy
A Picture Book of Alexander Hamilton, David Adler

PRIMARY SOURCES

Declaration of Independence
The United States Constitution
The Bill of Rights
LESSON PLANS,
ACTIVITIES AND ASSIGNMENTS,
AND FORMATIVE QUIZZES
Lesson 1 — Self-Government or Tyranny

LESSON OBJECTIVE

Students learn how new British exertions of authority over the colonists led to the Declaration of Independence.

TEACHER PREPARATION

Create a note outline based on the following:

Teacher Texts
- Land of Hope Young Reader’s Edition
  Chapter 5
- The Story of the Thirteen Colonies and the Great Republic
  Pages 68–80
- The American Revolution and Constitution
  Pages 12–28, 34–50

Trade Books
- Heroes of the Revolution
- The Boston Tea Party
- Let It Begin Here!
- A Picture Book of Benjamin Franklin
- A Picture Book of Paul Revere

Online.Hillsdale.edu
- The Great American Story
  Lecture 3

CORE CONTENT IN THIS LESSON

Geography & Places
- Thirteen Colonies
  Independence Hall
- Boston
  Lexington and Concord
- Philadelphia
  The Old North Church

Persons
- George III
  Samuel Adams
- George Washington
  Benjamin Franklin
- Crispus Attucks
  Thomas Jefferson
- Paul Revere
  Patrick Henry

Terms and Topics
- self-government
  tyranny
- representation
  Proclamation of 1763
- consent
  tax
Sons of Liberty
Boston Massacre
Boston Tea Party
Intolerable Acts
Minutemen
Redcoats
Battles of Lexington & Concord
Siege of Fort Ticonderoga
First Continental Congress
Second Continental Congress
Continental Army
Battle of Bunker Hill
Liberation of Boston

To Know by Heart
“Don’t Tread On Me”
“Paul Revere’s Ride,” Henry Wadsworth Longfellow
“One if by land, two if by sea.”
“The shot heard round the world.”
“No taxation without representation.”
“Give me Liberty or Give me Death” — Patrick Henry

Dates
July 4, 1776 Declaration of Independence signed

Images
Historical figures and events
Revolutionary era flags
Paul Revere’s Engraving of Boston Harbor under occupation
Paul Revere’s Engraving of the Boston Massacre
Independence Hall (exterior and interior)
Battle maps
Uniforms and arms of the Minutemen, the Continental Army soldiers, and the Redcoats

STORIES FOR THE AMERICAN HEART

- Biographies and the roles of George Washington, Benjamin Franklin, Samuel Adams, and Thomas Jefferson up through 1776
- Boston Massacre
- Boston Tea Party
- Paul Revere’s Ride
- Minutemen at the Battles of Lexington and Concord
- Ethan Allen, Henry Knox, and the Green Mountain Boys capturing the guns from Fort Ticonderoga
- John Adams’s nomination of George Washington to command the Continental Army
- Battle of Bunker Hill
- Liberation of Boston
- John Adams’s nomination of Thomas Jefferson to draft the Declaration of Independence
Questions for the American Mind

- Why was it good that the colonists had been allowed so much freedom to govern themselves?
- Why did the British begin to limit what the colonists could do after the French and Indian War?
- What is self-government? How was the colonists’ freedom to govern themselves limited by the British?
- What did the Proclamation Act of 1763 attempt to do? Why?
- What is a tax? What is it used for?
- What did the Sugar Act make the colonists do?
- What things did the Stamp Act tax?
- Why were the colonists upset about new taxes?
- What did the colonists have to do for British soldiers in the colonies?
- What were the two types of patriots? How did they resist the British differently?
- What happened in the Boston Massacre and why?
- What did John Adams do after the Boston Massacre?
- How did the Boston Massacre change the minds of many colonists?
- What happened at the Boston Tea Party and why?
- What were some of the things the British did in response to the Boston Tea Party through the Intolerable Acts?
- What was the First Continental Congress?
- What did the First Continental Congress do?
- How did Parliament and King George respond to colonists requests for agreement?
- Why did the Redcoats not surprise the Americans before Lexington and Concord?
- What happened at the Battle of Lexington and Concord?
- What happened at the Siege of Fort Ticonderoga?
- What happened at the Battle of Bunker Hill?
- What was George Washington like?
- What did Thomas Paine say in his pamphlet Common Sense? Did it change people’s minds?
- What did the Second Continental Congress do?
- Questions from the U.S. Civics Test:
  - Question 77: Name one reason why the Americans declared independence from Britain.
  - Question 85: Benjamin Franklin is famous for many things. Name one.
  - Question 86: George Washington is famous for many things. Name one.

Keys to the Lesson

For more than 150 years, the British colonists of North America rarely quarreled with their countrymen on the other side of the Atlantic. Then in 1763, the British began to claim new control over the colonists. What followed were thirteen years of increased tension and sometimes violent clashes leading to outright war in 1775 and, in 1776, the declaring of independence by the colonists and the formation of a new country separate from British power. This decade and a half gave birth to the nation each American citizen calls home. It is imperative that American students know the people, actions, and stories that led to the founding of their country. The chief aim of teaching these fourteen years, therefore, is to help students to understand the actions by both Great Britain and the colonists that compelled the Americans to such a separation and to found a new, unprecedented kind of country.
Teachers might best plan and teach Self-Government or Tyranny with emphasis on the following approaches:

- Have students consider a few problems the British in North America faced following the French and Indian War (in Europe, the Seven Years’ War), namely, the risk of further conflict (and associated costs) with Native Americans as colonists moved westward, and the money they owed after the late war.
- Show how Great Britain’s attempted solutions to these problems (prohibiting colonial expansion and the sudden enforcement of lax tax laws) marked the first shift in the relationship between Great Britain and the colonists and heralded the end of the period of “salutary neglect,” during which American colonists had grown accustomed to governing themselves.
- Help students see the pattern that this initial shift would grow into: attempts by the British (Parliament and, to a certain extent, King George III) to exert more control, alternating with American resistance to what they argued were infringements on their rights as Englishmen.
- Teach about some of the things the British tried to do through different acts, outlining what they did, why the colonists were upset, and how the colonists reacted.
- Consider with students that self-government, or representative self-government, was at the heart of the issue. Emphasize that this was not merely a nice-sounding phrase. Make clear that this was the question: not merely whether the colonists would have representation in Parliament (it was impractical) nor whether they had to pay taxes, but whether or not people must be controlled by the will of others in government without their free consent. In brief, must people be told what to do by others without having any say?
- Explain how the Americans organized themselves to engage with and resist the British, a capacity born of decades of practice in self-government and a trait of American citizens for subsequent generations. In due course, the Boston Massacre impressed on public opinion the British position’s semblance to tyranny.
- Highlight that it was the Boston Tea Party, however, that brought issues to a head, prompting the British to respond to various actions in Massachusetts with the Intolerable Acts. Help students to consider the ways that these acts were unjust to the colonists by considering what these would have meant for the students and their families.
- Spend time illustrating how specific Founding Fathers marshaled their talents and ideas, eventually leading to declaring independence and forming a new nation by summer 1776.
- Tell the stories of the open armed conflicts at Lexington and Concord, Fort Ticonderoga, and Bunker Hill. Students should learn how these battles bolstered the patriot cause and changed minds in these final two years of British rule. Included in this change is the role played by Thomas Paine’s Common Sense.
- Finally, emphasize how the news in the spring of 1776—that the British had hired German mercenary soldiers to deploy against British-Americans, and were now selectively encouraging slave rebellions in the colonies, while the Continental Congress recommended that the colonies begin forming their own governments—were key factors in moving a majority of the state delegates at the Second Continental Congress to commission a committee to draft a potential declaration of independence.
STRENGTHENING UNDERSTANDING: POST-LESSON ACTIVITIES AND ASSIGNMENTS

Activity 1: Find pictures that represent five different scenes from this lesson. Print off enough images for each group of five students to have a set. Give each student in the group a different picture (all groups will have the same five pictures). Have the students arrange the pictures in the order that those events occurred. Once the students have figured out the correct order of events, have students line up in order and go over the order of events as a class. Conclude the activity by asking students how they knew what event the picture was portraying. Ask students how they remembered the order of events/what they did to figure out the correct order. If there are groups that did not figure out the correct order, ask those students questions in order to move them to the correct sequence.

Activity 2: Conduct a round robin reading of the poem “Paul Revere’s Ride.” Then discuss it with students and begin to have them learn parts of the poem by heart. Plan two days for each student to recite their parts aloud.

---

Assignment 1: Have students and parents complete a “Talk about History” assignment in which parents ask their child a series of questions about what they learned in history from a given lesson. Parents record the answers and the student returns to school (provided in appendix).

Assignment 2: Have students draw and color a scene of their choice from the years between the French and Indian War through the Battle of Bunker Hill. Have students present briefly in class what they drew, the story behind it, and why they depicted it the way they did.

Formative Quiz 1

Provide students with numbered papers. Using the “Review Sheets” in the Appendix, make statements and ask students if they are True or False. Have them draw ☑️ for “True” or ☐️ for “False” next to each number. Review as a class and talk through what makes each answer correct.
Lesson 2 — The Declaration of Independence

LESSON OBJECTIVE

Students learn about the movement in favor of independence and about the drafting and signing of the Declaration of Independence. They also read the Declaration of Independence and have a conversation about its contents and ideas.

TEACHER PREPARATION

Create a note outline based on the following:

Teacher Texts
- The Declaration of Independence
- Land of Hope Young Reader’s Edition
- The Story of the Thirteen Colonies and the Great Republic Pages 81–82

Trade Books
- Heroes of the Revolution
- A Picture Book of Thomas Jefferson
- The Fourth of July Story
- The Liberty Bell
- Let’s Celebrate Independence Day

Online.Hillsdale.edu
- The Great American Story Lecture 3

CORE CONTENT IN THIS LESSON

Geography & Places
- Philadelphia
- Independence Hall

Persons
- Benjamin Franklin
- John Adams
- Thomas Jefferson
- John Hancock

Terms and Topics
- natural rights
- equality
- unalienable
- liberty
- pursuit of happiness
- consent of the governed
- Liberty Bell
Primary Sources
Declaration of Independence

To Know by Heart
“We hold these Truths to be self-evident, that all Men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty, and the Pursuit of Happiness.” — Declaration of Independence

“And for the support of this Declaration, with a firm reliance on the protection of divine Providence, we mutually pledge to each other our Lives, our Fortunes and our sacred Honor.” — Final sentence of the Declaration of Independence

Dates
July 4, 1776 Declaration of Independence signed

Images
Thomas Jefferson, Benjamin Franklin, and John Adams
Independence Hall (exterior and interior)
Photos or facsimiles of original Declaration of Independence
National Archives Building and Rotunda
Jefferson Memorial
Statue of Thomas Jefferson (Hillsdale College campus)

STORIES FOR THE AMERICAN HEART

- The first public reading of the Declaration of Independence at the State House Yard, the tolling of the Liberty Bell, and the removal of the royal coat of arms

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

- What is the Declaration of Independence about?
- Who was the main writer of the Declaration of Independence?
- To whom is the Declaration of Independence speaking?
- What does it mean that “all men are created equal”?
- What is a natural right?
- According to the Declaration of Independence, from where do natural rights come?
- What does “unalienable” mean?
- Is liberty the same thing as doing whatever you want? Why or why not?
- Why do people form government? What is it supposed to do?
- What happens without rules and laws?
- Who controls the government?
- What can people do if the government starts or threatens to hurt them?
- What kinds of things did the Declaration of Independence accuse King George of doing to them?
- Why is it special that America was created based on the words of the Declaration of Independence?
- America is a country that believes in certain ideas. What are these ideas?
On what day do we celebrate our country’s independence, its “birthday”?

Questions from the U.S. Civics Test:
- Question 8: Why is the Declaration of Independence important?
- Question 9: What founding document said the American colonies were free from Britain?
- Question 10: Name two important ideas from the Declaration of Independence and the U.S. Constitution.
- Question 11: The words “Life, Liberty, and the pursuit of Happiness” are in what founding document?
- Question 75: What group of people was taken and sold as slaves?
- Question 77: Name one reason why the Americans declared independence from Britain.
- Question 78: Who wrote the Declaration of Independence?
- Question 79: When was the Declaration of Independence adopted?
- Question 81: There were 13 original states. Name five.
- Question 85: Benjamin Franklin is famous for many things. Name one.
- Question 87: Thomas Jefferson is famous for many things. Name one.
- Question 125: What is Independence Day?
- Question 126: Name three national U.S. holidays.

 KEYS TO THE LESSON **

The Declaration of Independence was not merely a renunciation of dependence on Great Britain. It was, in fact, generative. It created an entity—a nation—that stood on its own, had its own existence, and was independent of other nations. Even today, it offers guiding principles that continue to shape our arguments about the nature and limits of political authority. In brief, the Declaration of Independence created and still defines the United States of America.

Like an organizational mission statement, the Declaration is an indication of the Founders’ intention, a guiding star for our political life, and a benchmark for measuring our public institutions. Americans should consider all questions concerning the public sphere in light of the truths asserted in the Declaration. The Declaration of Independence should be both the beginning and end for students’ understanding of their country, their citizenship, and the benefits and responsibilities of being an American.

The lasting claim of the Declaration is that there are certain truths about all men having unalienable rights. Students should think about the Declaration of Independence as the foundation and even the heart of their country’s existence. While a more extensive study of the Declaration should occur in later grades, including consideration of the thinkers who influenced the Founders, the historical treatment of the American Revolution deserves some conversation on the ideas of the Declaration.

Teachers might best plan and teach the Declaration of Independence with emphasis on the following approaches:

- Help students to see that the Founders intended to speak to them, to posit truths for their consideration and ultimate judgment. “[A] decent respect to the opinions of mankind” means that the Declaration was not merely intended as an argument about the unique situation of the colonists in 1776; the Founders submitted their claims to the judgment of all people in all times because they were asserting truths about all people in all times. This especially includes future Americans and, in this case, American students.

- Read aloud to students and talk about key phrases and words from the Declaration of Independence, especially the first and second paragraphs. Pause frequently to ask students questions about what the words mean.
- Help students to consider that the Founders are making assertions of the existence of objective truth by referencing “the Laws of Nature and of Nature’s God” and by describing the truths as “self-evident.” A “self-evident” truth is not merely a matter of perspective; it can be known and understood by anyone at any time.
- Ask students what the Declaration means by “all men are created equal.” For one thing, “men” means human being not males as opposed to females. Based on the totality of their writings available, the principal authors of the Declaration meant that men and women share equally in human dignity and in possession of natural rights or freedoms that are simply part of being human. A consistent application of equality would make slavery impossible—and the Second Continental Congress could scarcely have missed this point.
- Note that the mere articulation that all men are created equal was revolutionary. Compared to the degree and universality of equality we take for granted today, such a statement and contemporary limits on the principle in practice leave the Founders open to much potential criticism. For example, in general, women, men without land, and African Americans were not able to vote. But the mere fact that most men were able to vote was a significant departure from what was normal in the rest of the world. And even though civil equality was not universal, the statement about inherent and equal dignity of all people was unheard of at the time. Many Founders believed (and the centuries since have proven them correct) that this founding principle would allow for ever greater realizations of equality through history. In brief, were it not for the Founders’ assertion of human equality, albeit imperfectly put into practice, the kind of equality we are used to today likely would never have arisen, or certainly not from American shores.
- Ask students what the Declaration states to be the purpose of government. Students should understand the Declaration’s argument that government is created to secure the natural rights of each person.
- Ask students about the source of a government’s power. The Declaration explains that government power comes from the free consent of the people. Students should also consider the Declaration’s argument that people do not receive their rights from government, nor do they surrender their fundamental rights to it. Instead, the rights to “life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness” are natural—they are inherent in being human—and government is delegated power by the sovereign people to secure their rights and pursue the common good. Rather than surrendering their rights to government, people create government to protect their rights. The Declaration describes these rights as “unalienable,” meaning that they cannot be relinquished or taken away, though they may be forfeited when a person violates the rights of another person, (e.g., the penalty for taking someone else’s life or liberty might be to lose your own life or liberty).
- Help students to understand what is meant by self-government: legitimate government exists to secure rights and derives its “just powers from the consent of the governed,” that is, from the citizen body. The fundamental purpose of government is clear and its powers are limited. As a result, and by design, the people have the liberty to govern themselves in most aspects of their daily lives.
- Read the list of grievances and ask students to connect some of the grievances to historical events they studied in the previous lesson. Then ask students to explain how those events violate the statements made in the first two paragraphs of the Declaration.
- Reserve conversations on the principled claims of the Declaration and the issue of slavery for Lesson 4 on the Constitution.

STRENGTHENING UNDERSTANDING: POST-LESSON ACTIVITIES AND ASSIGNMENTS

Activity 1: Place students in groups of four. Give each student in the group a phrase from the first sentence in the second paragraph of the Declaration of Independence (all groups will have the same four phrases). Have the students arrange the phrases in the correct order. Once the students have figured out the correct order of phrases, have students practice saying the entire second paragraph of the Declaration of Independence within their groups. After some time for practice, recite the entire first sentence of the second paragraph as a class. Conclude the event by asking students the meaning of the following key terms topics: natural rights, equality, unalienable, liberty, and pursuit of happiness (provided in appendix).

Assignment 1: Have students and parents complete a “Talk about History” assignment in which parents ask their child a series of questions about what they learned in history from a given lesson. Parents record the answers and the student returns to school (provided in appendix).

Assignment 2: Have students draw and color a scene of their choice from the Second Continental Congress, the writing of the Declaration of Independence, or the reading of the Declaration and tolling of the Liberty Bell. Have students present briefly in class what they drew, the story behind it, and why they depicted it the way they did.
Lesson 3 — The War of Independence

LESSON OBJECTIVE

Students learn about the major figures, common soldiers, strategy, and specific battles of the American War of Independence.

TEACHER PREPARATION

Create a note outline based on the following:

Teacher Texts
- Land of Hope Young Reader's Edition
- The Story of the Thirteen Colonies and the Great Republic
- The American Revolution and Constitution

Trade Books
- Heroes of the Revolution
- George Washington
- A Picture Book of George Washington
- Sam the Minuteman
- Our Flag
- The Flag We Love
- Blue Sky White Stars
- Uncle Sam and Old Glory

Online.Hillsdale.edu
- The Great American Story

CORE CONTENT IN THIS LESSON

Geography & Places
- Delaware River
- Valley Forge

Persons
- George Washington
- Phillis Wheatley
- John Adams
- Abigail Adams
- Benedict Arnold
- Alexander Hamilton
- Marquis de Lafayette
Terms and Topics

- Patriot/Revolutionary
- Tory/Loyalist
- Continental Army
- volley
- Battle of New York
- mercenary
- Hessians
- Crossing of the Delaware
- Battle of Trenton
- Betsy Ross Flag
- Yankee Doodle
- Battle of Saratoga
- French Treaty of Alliance
- Battle of Yorktown
- Newburgh Conspiracy
- American Cincinnatus

To Know by Heart

- “These are the times that try men’s souls.” — Thomas Paine, The Crisis
- Yankee-Doodle, first stanza
- “Washington,” Nancy Byrd Turner

Dates

- 1776–1783  War of Independence
- July 4, 1776  Declaration of Independence signed
- Christmas, 1776  Battle of Trenton

Images

- Historical figures
- Landscape pictures of geographic places featured in this lesson
- Depictions of figures at various scenes and moments and in battle
- “Washington Crossing the Delaware” painting
- Betsy Ross Flag and other flags
- Maps: overall strategies, specific battles
- Relevant forts
- Reenactment photos
- Washington Monument
- Statue of George Washington (Hillsdale College campus)

Stories for the American Heart

- The fates of the signers of the Declaration of Independence
- David Bushnell’s submarine attack
- Washington’s Crossing of the Delaware
- The American farmers joining the Battle of Saratoga
- Washington encouraging his men at Valley Forge
- Stories of Margaret Corbin, Molly Pitcher, Abigail Adams, and Martha Washington during the war
- Washington on horseback at the Battle of Monmouth
- Washington’s dismissal of the Newburgh Conspiracy
QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

- How did the British respond to the Declaration of Independence?
- What things were helpful to the Americans in the War of Independence?
- What things were helpful to the British in the War of Independence?
- How did the Americans think they could win the war?
- How did the British think they could win the war?
- How did soldiers fight each other?
- What does it mean to love one’s country or to be patriotic?
- What things did George Washington do that helped the Americans?
- Why were the Americans in trouble in the winter of 1776?
- What happened at the crossing of the Delaware River and the Battle of Trenton?
- What happened at the Battle of Saratoga?
- Which country was so impressed by the Americans at the Battle of Saratoga that they decided to help the Americans fight against the British?
- Why were the Americans in trouble in the winter of 1777–78 when they were encamped at Valley Forge?
- How did George Washington inspire his soldiers at Valley Forge?
- Who was Baron von Steuben and how did he help the Continental Army?
- What happened at the Battle of Yorktown?
- Why did the Americans win the War of Independence?
- Why did soldiers want to overthrow the American government?
- How did George Washington convince the soldiers not to overthrow the American government?
- What did the British agree to do in the Treaty of Paris?
- Questions from the U.S. Civics Test:
  - Question 76: What war did the Americans fight to win independence from Britain?
  - Question 80: The American Revolution had many important events. Name one.
  - Question 86: George Washington is famous for many things. Name one.
  - Question 89: Alexander Hamilton is famous for many things. Name one.
  - Question 121: Why does the flag have 13 stripes?
  - Question 122: Why does the flag have 50 stars?
  - Question 124: The Nation’s first motto was “E Pluribus Unum.” What does that mean?

KEYS TO THE LESSON

The American Revolution was truly a “David and Goliath” clash: a fledging strand of remote colonies loosely cooperating as one through a continental, mostly citizen army, fought and won independence from the greatest military power in the world. Students should appreciate this about the war of their forefathers. They should also know key stories of the heroic actions of the leaders and the many common folk in that struggle, understand the strategies employed in general and in specific battles, and consider the key moments and factors that led the Americans to victory.
Teachers might best plan and teach the War of Independence with emphasis on the following approaches:

- Ask students to identify and compare the various advantages and disadvantages of each side at the outset of the war and how these shifted over the years.
- Introduce students to the contemporary style of warfare by using images, maps, and artifacts. This approach will provide a foundation for their subsequent study of battles, help them to understand what happens in battle, and allow them to appreciate the bravery of soldiers fighting on both sides. Be mindful of being too graphic given the age level.
- Help students to empathize with the common Continental Army soldier and perceive the risk facing all the colonists, especially the leaders. Conditions were truly awful at many points in the war. The prospect of imminent defeat and the dire consequences for all involved weighed heavily upon the colonists throughout the war. The leaders—the men we now consider the American Founders—would most certainly have been killed if they were captured or the war was lost. In spite of the risks, they risked everything and sacrificed much for the cause of freedom and self-government. Students should appreciate the great debt we owe them.
- In telling the stories, explain in general each side’s strategy and the battle plans employed in some important battles.
- Focus on the drama of each battle through story. Students should understand how the battles came to be, the key stories and moments from the battles themselves, and the significance of their various outcomes on subsequent events. Employ battle maps as appropriate.
- As with any conflict, draw attention to the key contributions of both leaders and common soldiers in the war. George Washington should be especially considered, not so much in his battle tactics as in his overall strategy for the war and his stirring leadership of his soldiers.
STRENGTHENING UNDERSTANDING: POST-LESSON ACTIVITIES AND ASSIGNMENTS

Activity 1: Find pictures that represent five different scenes from this lesson. Print off enough images for each group of five students to have a set. Give each student in the group a different picture (all groups will have the same five pictures). Have the students arrange the pictures in the order that those events occurred. Once the students have figured out the correct order of events, have students line up in order and go over the order of events as a class. Conclude the activity by asking students how they knew what event the picture was portraying. Ask students how they remembered the order of events/what they did to figure out the correct order. If there are groups that did not figure out the correct order, ask those students questions in order to move them to the correct sequence.

Activity 2: Provide students with copies of a map that can also be projected on the board. Review with students the events of the war and where certain battles take place. As a class, mark on the map on the board and have students do the same on their own maps. Make indications about who won each battle and review with students how the battle went and what its significance was.

Activity 3: Have students draw or color a picture of the original United States flag. Ask them what the colors, stars, and stripes each represent.

Assignment 1: Have students and parents complete a “Talk about History” assignment in which parents ask their child a series of questions about what they learned in history from a given lesson. Parents record the answers and the student returns to school (provided in appendix).

Assignment 2: Have students draw and color a scene of their choice from the War of Independence. Have students present briefly in class what they drew, the story behind it, and why they depicted it the way they did.

FORMATIVE QUIZ 2

Provide students with numbered papers. Using the “Review Sheets” in the Appendix, make statements and ask students if they are True or False. Have them draw ☑️ for “True” or ☐️ for “False” next to each number. Review as a class and talk through what makes each answer correct.
Lesson 4 — The United States Constitution

LESSON OBJECTIVE

Students learn about the drafting of the Constitution, the debates within the Constitutional Convention and its ratification by the states, the political thought undergirding the Constitution, and the basic structure and powers of the federal government.

TEACHER PREPARATION

Create a note outline based on the following:

Teacher Texts

Land of Hope Young Reader’s Edition
Chapters 7 and 8

The Story of the Thirteen Colonies and the Great Republic
Pages 103–108

The United States Constitution

The American Revolution and Constitution

Trade Books

We the People

If You Were There When They Signed the Constitution

A Picture Book of Alexander Hamilton

Online.Hillsdale.edu

The Great American Story
Lectures 4 and 5

CORE CONTENT IN THIS LESSON

Geography & Places

Philadelphia
Independence Hall

Persons

James Madison
Alexander Hamilton
George Washington
Publius

Terms and Topics

government
The Federalist
Shays’ Rebellion
consent of the governed
Constitutional Convention
self-government
Father of the Constitution
faction
Constitution
majority tyranny
representation
 federalism
 limited government
 separation of powers legislative power
 Congress
 President
 executive powers
 Commander-in-Chief

veto power judicial powers
 Supreme Court
 Bill of Rights
 freedom of religion
 freedom of speech
 right to assembly
 right to keep and bear arms

Primary Sources
The United States Constitution
The Bill of Rights

To Know by Heart
Preamble to the U.S. Constitution
“A republic, if you can keep it.” — Benjamin Franklin
“If men were angels, no government would be necessary.” — Federalist 10

Dates
September 17, 1787 Constitutional Convention concludes (Constitution Day)

Images
Paintings of historical figures and events
Depictions of scenes from the Constitutional Convention
Photographs of Independence hall (exterior and interior)
Photos or facsimiles of the original Articles of Confederation, Constitution, Federalist, and Bill of Rights
The Signing of the American Constitution painting, Samuel Knecht
Statue of James Madison (Hillsdale College campus)
National Archives Building and the Rotunda for the Charters of Freedom
Paintings by Barry Faulkner in the Rotunda for the Charters of Freedom

STORIES FOR THE AMERICAN HEART
- Benjamin Franklin’s story about the sun on George Washington’s chair being a sunrise for the country
- Benjamin Franklin’s reply to a woman’s question about what the Constitutional Convention had created: “A republic, if you can keep it,” and what this means

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND
- What roles do rules and laws play in daily life? What are some examples?
- What is government and what is its purpose?
- Why were the Articles of Confederation not able to protect the rights of Americans?
- What was Shays’ Rebellion and why did it worry the founders?
- What is a constitution and what does it do?
- Who was the main thinker behind the Constitution, known as the “Father of the Constitution”?
- How are the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution connected?
- What was The Federalist and what did it try to do?
- Did the founders think the way people are changes over time or that it doesn’t change? (talking about people in general, not necessarily in each person’s own life)
- How did the founders think people tended to be: good, bad, smart, mistaken, a mixture of all of the above?
- Why were the founders worried about people who have power over others?
- Why did the founders believe it was so important to make sure people agreed to rules and laws that government made?
- Why were the founders so worried about people becoming angry with each other and dividing into groups or factions?
- What were the founders so worried that a big group of people would do to a smaller group of people if they disagreed (majority tyranny)?
- Why did the founders believe that having a big country with many different views would help make sure that one group would not makes laws to hurt another group?
- What were some things that the delegates at the Constitutional Convention disagreed about?
- What are ways for groups to make decisions? Which way did the Founders choose?
- How is America’s democratic republic distinct from the form of government in other nations?
- Why did the founders think it was important to make sure that power in the government, or control over others, was divided among different groups instead of all held by one person or group?
- What is federalism and how does it divide power?
- What is the separation of powers and how does it divide power?
- What does the legislative power allow Congress to do?
- What does the executive power allow the President to do?
- What does the judicial power allow the Supreme Court to do?
- How are members of Congress, the President, and the Supreme Court each chosen?
- How does a bill become a law?
- Why does the Constitution make it so hard for it to be changed?
- Did everyone think the Constitution was a good idea? Why not?
- What does the Bill of Rights do and why?
- What is freedom of religion and why is it important?
- What is freedom of speech and why is it important?
- What is the right to assembly and why is it important?
- What is the right to bear arms and why is it important?
- What is due process and why is it important?
- What does each elected or appointed person swear to do for the Constitution?
- Who controls the Constitution?
- How can you be a responsible citizen?
- Questions from the U.S. Civics Test:
  - Question 1: What is the form of government of the United States?
  - Question 2: What is the supreme law of the land?
  - Question 3: Name one thing the U.S. Constitution does.
Question 4: The U.S. Constitution starts with the words “We the People.” What does “We the People” mean?

Question 6: What does the Bill of Rights protect?

Question 10: Name two important ideas from the Declaration of Independence and the U.S. Constitution.

Question 13: What is the rule of law?

Question 14: Many documents influenced the U.S. Constitution. Name one.

Question 82: What founding document was written in 1787?

Question 83: The Federalist Papers supported the passage of the U.S. Constitution. Name one of the writers.

Question 84: Why were the Federalist Papers important?

Question 86: George Washington is famous for many things. Name one.

Question 88: James Madison is famous for many things. Name one.

Question 89: Alexander Hamilton is famous for many things. Name one.

Keys to the Lesson

“It seems to have been reserved to the people of this country, by their conduct and example, to decide the important question, whether societies of men are really capable or not of establishing good government from reflection and choice, or whether they are forever destined to depend for their political constitutions on accident and force.” Thus wrote Alexander Hamilton in the opening paragraph of Federalist 1 in support of the newly proposed United States Constitution. Indeed, it is the Constitution that gives institutional form to the principles of the Declaration of Independence. It is, as Abraham Lincoln would later express it, the “frame of silver” meant to adorn and, most importantly, to protect the “apple of gold” that is the Declaration of Independence and the truths it asserts. The Constitution is the vehicle for the American experiment in self-government.

Study of the Constitution and of the history of its creation shows students how and that human beings are able to govern themselves in freedom, securing the equal protection of rights and the dignity of each person through reflection, deliberation, and choice. This is a significant thing for students to grasp, even if in rudimentary form at the youngest grades, for if a constitution cannot achieve these ends, then force and violence are the only alternatives left to mankind.

Students should understand the main ideas and the very basic parts of the Constitution and the government it established, and know the stories from the Constitutional Convention and the ratification debates.

Teachers might best plan and teach the Constitution with emphasis on the following approaches. While the length of this advice is larger than advice for other lessons, it is owing to the ease with which so many features of the Constitution can be taught incorrectly, with important consequences. Therefore, this advice includes many corrections to common misconceptions that can be quickly addressed in class.

- Outline some problems America faced after the Revolution, such as cancelling debts, different currencies, trade barriers between states, not being able to kick the British out of the west, and Shays’ Rebellion.
Lead students through the process of the Constitutional Convention. Help them see that the Convention was arranged to ensure that all the states were able to speak and be represented. Through stories of the various debates and compromises, explain the difficulty of establishing a government that would satisfy all parties.

- Describe the environment and people of the Constitutional Convention and of the ratification debates.
- Read and talk about certain key phrases from the Constitution with particular attention to the Preamble and the basic structure of government that the Constitution establishes.
- Clarify that the Constitution establishes a republic, not a democracy. In a pure democracy the people make all legislative decisions by direct majority vote; in a republic, the people elect certain individuals to represent their interests in deliberating and voting. The deliberations and voting record of representatives should usually reflect but should also be more refined than that of the entire people voting directly. Sometimes this distinction is described in terms of direct democracy vs. representative democracy. The key point is to highlight our ability to govern ourselves by choosing our neighbors to represent us.
- Explain the importance of the principles of separation of powers and federalism, and why these ideas are central to the Constitution’s safeguards against the corrupting tendency of power. In brief, they divide power so that everyone can hold each other accountable.
- Emphasize that the Framers of the Constitution were chiefly concerned with allowing the will of the majority to rule—thereby guaranteeing the consent of the governed—while still preserving the rights of the minority and thereby securing justice.
- Describe the American Founders’ understanding of human nature. They understood human nature to be fixed and unchanging, good but also flawed and tending toward corrupting power. In response to human nature, government must guard against the opposite dangers of lawlessness and tyranny, accounting for the realities of human nature and rejecting the possibility of utopia. In brief, the Constitution is constructed on a deep and accurate understanding of fixed human nature born of the Founders’ knowledge of history, their own experience, and their prudence.
- Ask about where government power comes from and what it’s used for. Review how the Declaration of Independence claims that government power comes from the free consent of the people. Help students to see how the Constitution tries to make sure the people are in control to protect their rights.
- Teach the very basic makeup and powers of each branch of government and explain why the Founders made them so. Students should understand what each branch is and what its main jobs are.
- If students are capable of handling the brutalities of slavery, the following considerations may be helpful in teaching about slavery during the founding decades:

  - Slavery was one of the few matters of disagreement among the colonial revolutionaries in their otherwise generally united challenge to England. Those who opposed slavery as well as those who favored it agreed about the growing threat of British tyranny.
  - Many of the American Founders, especially those from northern colonies, strongly opposed slavery but nevertheless accepted a temporary compromise on the issue, believing that an independent and united country would provide the best prospect for actually abolishing slavery. Without unity between northern and southern colonies, either the colonists would have lost the war, in which case slavery would simply be continued by Great Britain, or the southern colonies would have formed their own separate country, in which case the North would have no power over the South to abolish slavery. The key for the American Founders, especially those who opposed slavery, would be to continue efforts against slavery as a united country—united around the principles of the Declaration of Independence.

The idea that a country can be founded on a principle—rather than merely on claims of territory, tribe, or military power—is uniquely American. America’s founding principle that “all men are created equal and that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights” was unprecedented. Almost all recognized that the statement of the principles, despite a compromise that allowed for the pre-existing institution’s continuing existence, undermined the legitimacy of slavery.

Though the Constitution did not abolish slavery, it did place more limits on slavery on a national scale than had previously existed. Indeed, adopting the Constitution was one of the first significant moves to restrict slavery anywhere in the world at that time. Moreover, as Frederick Douglass and Abraham Lincoln would later acknowledge, the Constitution placed slavery on the path to extinction.

While it is rare that students in these grades are able to follow the logic of the Three-Fifths Clause, teachers should at least understand it well enough to dispel the commonplace belief that it made slaves only three-fifth human. The clause was not about the humanity of slaves; it was strictly about how much representation slave-owning states would receive in Congress and the Electoral College. The great hypocrisy of the slaveholders was that while they refused to call a slave a human being, they insisted that each slave be counted as a whole person for purposes of representation. In fact, it was the anti-slavery Founders who did not want slaves counted at all in the Constitution for the purposes of representation. The fact that slaves were only counted as three-fifths for the purposes of representation was a disappointment for southern states, as they had demanded they be counted as a whole person. It was a partial victory for northern opponents to slavery, as it would give the slaveholding states less influence in lawmaking than they wished. Additionally, students should understand that in the mind of those opposed to slavery, this compromise was the only politically viable route if they were to secure southern support for the Constitution, without which the country would become disunited, with the South able to perpetuate slavery indefinitely as their own country without northern abolitionists.

The international slave trade was unlimited in the states until the passage of the Constitution, which allowed for it to be outlawed in 1808 (which it was) and for Congress to discourage it by imposing tariffs on the slave trade in the meantime.

Consider with students the significance of the Constitution not using the word “slave” and instead using “person.” Refusing to use the word “slave” avoided giving legal legitimacy to slavery. Even Article IV, Section 2, Clause 3 emphasizes that slavery was legal based on certain state, not federal, laws. The use of the word “person” forced even slaveholders to recognize the humanity of the slave: that he or she was in fact a human person, not property. There would be no federally-recognized “property in man.”

Consider with students the sectional nature of views on slavery during the founding. The majority of northerners and northern founders (e.g., John Adams, Benjamin Franklin, Benjamin Rush, Gouverneur Morris, and John Jay) spoke and wrote extensively on the immorality of slavery and its need to be abolished. Some northern founders, such as John Jay, Alexander Hamilton, and Benjamin Franklin, founded or served in abolitionist societies.

Consider also that even among the southern founders who supported slavery or held slaves, several leading founders expressed regret and fear of divine retribution for slavery in America, such as Thomas Jefferson, James Madison, and George Washington. Some freed their slaves as well, such as George Washington, who by the end of his life freed the slaves in his family estate. And many, like Thomas Jefferson, nevertheless maintained that slaves were men in full possession of the natural rights of all men. Making these observations does not diminish the inhumaneness of slavery or dismiss the wrong of racism by certain colonists or other individual Americans living in other generations.

Note the belief of many Founders, based on the evidence at the time, that slavery was naturally on the way to extinction. Public opinion had steadily grown against it; the principles of the Declaration of Independence and Revolution would continue to be a force toward realizing equality; and the Constitution had further restricted slavery, permitted further restrictions by holding the union together, and kept slavery on its path to extinction.

- Familiarize students with the Bill of Rights, especially the 1st and 2nd Amendments.
- Finally, tell students about the first elections, meetings of the Electoral College, and George Washington’s inauguration in 1789.
- Conclude the unit with some conversations along the following lines:
  - Many have understood the principle of equality as the enduring object or goal of American political life, with each generation seeking further to expand the conditions of political equality. This was the view of many Founders, as well as of Abraham Lincoln, abolitionists like Frederick Douglass, and civil rights leaders like Martin Luther King Jr., who called the Declaration a “promissory note to which every American was to fall heir” in his 1963 “I Have a Dream” speech.
  - The Declaration’s principle of equality—and the persistence and bravery of Americans of all origins to sacrifice and even die insisting that the nation should live up to the principle—has led to unprecedented achievements of human equality and the protection of equal rights.
STRENGTHENING UNDERSTANDING: POST-LESSON ACTIVITIES AND ASSIGNMENTS

Activity 1: Place students in groups of five. Provide each student with a sentence/phrase from either the Declaration of Independence or the U.S. Constitution. Have students determine which sentences/phrases come from the Declaration of Independence and which ones come from the Constitution. Review with students the key terms and topics mentioned in the sentences/phrases such as the following: equality, consent of the governed, self-government, etc. Ask plenty of questions about how the two documents are connected to each other.

Activity 2: Hold a brief mock election to parts of the government. Then pretend to try to pass a law. The key is not to spend a lot of time on the mechanics of the government, but rather to show students how no one person or group of people get to make all of the decisions, how they have to work together on things they agree about most, and how the voters still control what they do.

Assignment 1: Have students and parents complete a “Talk about History” assignment in which parents ask their child a series of questions about what they learned in history from a given lesson. Parents record the answers and the student returns to school (provided in appendix).

Assignment 2: Have students draw and color a picture of their choice that illustrates an example of one of the rights guaranteed in the Bill of Rights in practice. Have students present briefly in class what they drew, the story behind it, and why they depicted it the way they did.
APPENDIX A

Talk about History

Review Sheets

Tests

Writing Assignment
TALK ABOUT HISTORY

Student Name: ___________________________       Due: ____________

Story/Lesson from History: ____________________________________________________________

1. Who/what did you learn about in history class today?
   Student Answer: ________________________________________________________________

2. Who were the most important characters in the story?
   Student Answer: ________________________________________________________________

3. Tell me more about one of those characters.
   Student Answer: ________________________________________________________________

4. Tell me about the most exciting/interesting part of the story today.
   Student Answer: ________________________________________________________________

Parent Signature: ___________________________       Date: ________________

TALK ABOUT HISTORY

Student Name: ___________________________       Due: ____________

Story/Lesson from History: ____________________________________________________________

1. Who/what did you learn about in history class today?
   Student Answer: ________________________________________________________________

2. Who were the most important characters in the story?
   Student Answer: ________________________________________________________________

3. Tell me more about one of those characters.
   Student Answer: ________________________________________________________________

4. Tell me about the most exciting/interesting part of the story today.
   Student Answer: ________________________________________________________________

Parent Signature: ___________________________       Date: ________________
History Assessment and Review in Grades K–2

REVIEWING AND STUDYING

One-page Review Sheets are included in the following materials. Teachers are encouraged to review items on these sheets with students in the days leading up to an assessment. Between reviewing at the beginning of each class period and this review based on the Review Sheets, students should not need to do any additional studying or review. Review Sheets may be sent home, however, if parents wish to review with their students at home.

ASSESSMENT

The method for assessing students on history in grades K-2 depends on the grade level and student ability.

For students who cannot yet read and write:

Option 1: Choose several items from the Review Sheet to ask each student orally. This may be done in private with the same questions while students complete another activity, or it may be administered aloud with the entire class, varying questions for each student.

Option 2: Create a test with images for matching or identifying terms and topics. Read aloud a description or explanation of a Person, Term, Topic, or Story to the whole class and have each student circle or place a number/letter next to the corresponding image on their test. For the Questions, read aloud a statement that would answer the question and ask students if it is True or False. Have them draw 😊 for “True” or 😞 for “False” next to each statement.

For students who can read and write:

Teachers may administer the tests included in the following materials. It is recommended, especially early in a school year, to have each student complete the test individually, but with the class proceeding together from question to question, each being read aloud by the teacher.
Review Sheet — Unit 2, Test 1

Lesson 1 | Self-Government or Tyranny
Lesson 2 | The Declaration of Independence

DATES: When did ________________ occur?
July 4, 1776    Declaration of Independence signed

PERSONS: Tell me who ________________ was and what he/she did.
George III      Patrick Henry     Benjamin Franklin     Thomas Jefferson
George Washington Paul Revere       Thomas Paine

TERMS AND TOPICS: Tell me what ________________ is/are/was/were and why we learned about it.
self-government    Boston Tea Party    Continental Army    equality representation       Intolerable Acts    Common Sense       pursuit of happiness militia              Lexington &        Bunker Hill        Patriot Sons of Liberty      Concord           natural rights      Tory

STORIES FOR THE AMERICAN HEART: Tell me the story of...
▪ George Washington’s childhood
▪ The Boston Tea Party
▪ The Boston Massacre
▪ The Minutemen at the Battles of Lexington and Concord

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND: Tell me...
☐ Why the British began to limit what the colonists could do after the French and Indian War.
☐ What the Proclamation Act of 1763 attempted to do and why.
☐ What a tax is and what it is used for.
☐ Why the colonists were upset about new taxes.
☐ Why John Adams did after the Boston Massacre.
☐ One of the things the British did in response to the Boston Tea Party through the Intolerable Acts.
☐ Why the Redcoats did not surprise the Americans before Lexington and Concord.
☐ What Thomas Paine said in his pamphlet Common Sense and how it changed people’s minds.
☐ What the Second Continental Congress decided to do.
☐ What the Declaration of Independence means when it says, “all men are created equal.”
☐ Where natural rights come from.
☐ If liberty is the same thing as doing whatever you want. Why or why not?
☐ What government is supposed to do.
☐ Who controls the government.
☐ Why it is special that America was created based on the words of the Declaration of Independence.
The American Founding — Test 1

Lesson 1 | Self-Government or Tyranny
Lesson 2 | The Declaration of Independence

DATES: Circle the day the Declaration of Independence was signed.

A. July 4, 1770  B. July 1, 1776  C. July 4, 1776

PERSONS: Match the person to who he/she was or what he/she did.

B. Thomas Jefferson  B. George III  C. Paul Revere

1. ________ The King of England who ruled over the colonists.

2. ________ Warned, “The British Are Coming!” before the Battles of Lexington and Concord.

3. ________ Wrote the Declaration of Independence.

TERMS AND TOPICS: Match the term to the correct definition, description, or explanation.

A. Common Sense  C. equality  E. Patriot
B. Continental Army  D. natural rights  F. self-government

4. ________ The people’s ability to choose those who make laws for them.

5. ________ The colonial army led by General Washington.

6. ________ Thomas Paine’s pamphlet that convinced many colonists to declare independence.

7. ________ Freedoms to do something that people have because they are human beings.

8. ________ That each person is of the same value and should be treated the same.

9. ________ A colonist who fought for America’s independence.
STORIES FOR THE AMERICAN HEART: Tell me the story of the Boston Tea Party.

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

10. Tell me why the British began to limit what the colonists could do after the French and Indian War.

11. Tell me why the colonists were upset about new taxes.

12. Tell me one thing the British did in response to the Boston Tea Party through the Intolerable Acts.

13. Tell me what government is supposed to do, according to the Declaration of Independence.

14. Tell me who controls the government, according to the Declaration of Independence.
Review Sheet — Unit 2, Test 2

Lesson 3 | The War of Independence
Lesson 4 | The Constitution

Test on ______________

DATES: When did ______________ occur?

September 17, 1787 Constitutional Convention concludes (Constitution Day)

PERSONS: Tell me who ______________ was and what he/she did.

George Washington  Marquis de Lafayette  Benjamin Franklin
Benedict Arnold    James Madison      Alexander Hamilton

TERMS AND TOPICS: Tell me what ______________ is/are/was/were and why we learned about it.

Philadelphia  Yankee Doodle  Father of the  President
Patriot      Battle of Saratoga  Constitution  Supreme Court
Tory        Battle of Yorktown  majority tyranny  Bill of Rights
Continental Army  American Cincinnatus  federalism  freedom of religion
Battle of New York  Constitutional  separation of powers  freedom of speech
Betsy Ross Flag  Convention  Congress

STORIES FOR THE AMERICAN HEART: Tell me the story of...

 Washington’s Crossing of the Delaware
 The American farmers joining the Battle of Saratoga
 Washington encouraging his men at Valley Forge
 Benjamin Franklin’s story about the sun on George Washington’s chair being a sunrise for the country

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND: Tell me...

□ How soldiers fought each other in the War of Independence.
□ The country that was so impressed by the Americans at the Battle of Saratoga that they decided to help the Americans fight against the British.
□ How George Washington inspired his soldiers at Valley Forge.
□ Why the Americans won the War of Independence.
□ What a constitution is and what it does.
□ What the founders worried a bigger group would do to a smaller group if they disagreed.
□ Why the founders thought it was important to make sure that power in the government, or control over others, was divided among different groups instead of all held by one person or group.
□ What the legislative power allows Congress to do
□ What freedom of speech is and why it is important.
The American Founding — Test 2

Lesson 3 | The War of Independence
Lesson 4 | The Constitution

DATES: Circle the day the Constitutional Convention concluded, which we call Constitution Day.

A. September 17, 1787  B. April 17, 1787  C. July 4, 1776

PERSONS: Match the person to who he/she was or what he/she did.

A. Benedict Arnold  B. James Madison  C. Alexander Hamilton

1. ________Soldier and assistant to George Washington and proponent of the Constitution.

2. ________Drafted the ideas of the Constitution and is known as the Father of the Constitution.

3. ________Colonial general who abandoned America and joined the British instead.

TERMS AND TOPICS: Match the term to the correct definition, description, or explanation.

A. American Cincinnatus  C. Betsy Ross Flag  E. Constitutional Convention
B. Battle of Yorktown  D. Bill of Rights  F. President

4. ________The first United States banner depicting thirteen stripes and thirteen stars in a circle.

5. ________The final battle of the War of Independence, where the British surrendered.

6. ________The nickname for the humble George Washington, who resigned his command.

7. ________The meeting of Founders to create a new government for the United States.

8. ________Makes sure people follow the laws passed by Congress; commands military in wartime.

9. ________A list of changes to the Constitution that clearly prevent certain government actions.
STORIES FOR THE AMERICAN HEART: Tell me the story of the Washington’s Crossing of the Delaware.

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

10. Tell me the country that was so impressed by the Americans at the Battle of Saratoga that they decided to help the Americans fight against the British.

11. Tell me how George Washington inspired his soldiers at Valley Forge.

12. Tell me what a constitution is and what it does.

13. Why the Founders thought it was important to make sure that power in the government, or control over others, was divided among different groups instead of all held by one person or group.

14. What freedom of speech is and why it is important.
Why it is special that America was created based on the words of the Declaration of Independence, “all men are created equal”?

__________________________________________________________________________________________________

__________________________________________________________________________________________________

__________________________________________________________________________________________________

__________________________________________________________________________________________________

__________________________________________________________________________________________________

__________________________________________________________________________________________________

__________________________________________________________________________________________________

__________________________________________________________________________________________________

__________________________________________________________________________________________________

__________________________________________________________________________________________________

__________________________________________________________________________________________________

__________________________________________________________________________________________________

__________________________________________________________________________________________________
APPENDIX B

Primary Sources

The Second Continental Congress

The American People
The Thirteen United States of America

The Unanimous Declaration

A Declaration

July 4, 1776

Pennsylvania State House | Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

Declaration of Independence

BACKGROUND

The delegates from each colony at the Second Continental Congress announced their votes to form a new country separate from Great Britain in this statement to mankind that expounds both the principles on which this new country would be founded and the reasons they judged themselves justified to separate.

ANNOTATIONS

When in the Course of human events, it becomes necessary for one people to dissolve the political bands which have connected them with another, and to assume among the powers of the earth, the separate and equal station to which the Laws of Nature and of Nature's God entitle them, a decent respect to the opinions of mankind requires that they should declare the causes which impel them to the separation.

We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness.—That to secure these rights, Governments are instituted among Men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed,—That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their Safety and Happiness. Prudence, indeed, will dictate that Governments long established should not be changed for light and transient causes; and accordingly all experience hath shown, that mankind are more disposed to suffer, while evils are sufferable, than to right themselves by abolishing the forms to which they are accustomed. But when a long train of abuses and usurpations, pursuing invariably the same Object evinces a design to reduce them under absolute Despotism, it is their right, it is their duty, to throw off such Government, and to provide new Guards for their future security.—Such has been the patient sufferance of these Colonies; and such is now the necessity which constrains them to alter their former Systems of Government. The history of the present King of Great Britain is a history of repeated injuries and usurpations, all having in direct object the establishment of an absolute Tyranny over these States. To prove this, let Facts be submitted to a candid world.

5

He has refused his Assent to Laws, the most wholesome and necessary for the public good.

10

He has forbidden his Governors to pass Laws of immediate and pressing importance, unless suspended in their operation till his Assent should be obtained; and when so suspended, he has utterly neglected to attend to them.

15

He has refused to pass other Laws for the accommodation of large districts of people, unless those people would relinquish the right of Representation in the Legislature, a right inestimable to them and formidable to tyrants only.

20

He has called together legislative bodies at places unusual, uncomfortable, and distant from the depository of their public Records, for the sole purpose of fatiguing them into compliance with his measures.

25

He has dissolved Representative Houses repeatedly, for opposing with manly firmness his invasions on the rights of the people.

30

He has refused for a long time, after such dissolutions, to cause others to be elected;
whereby the Legislative powers, incapable of Annihilation, have returned to the People at large for their exercise; the State remaining in the mean time exposed to all the dangers of invasion from without, and convulsions within.
He has endeavored to prevent the population of these States; for that purpose obstructing the Laws for Naturalization of Foreigners; refusing to pass others to encourage their migrations hither, and raising the conditions of new Appropriations of Lands.

He has obstructed the Administration of Justice, by refusing his Assent to Laws for establishing Judiciary powers.

He has made Judges dependent on his Will alone, for the tenure of their offices, and the amount and payment of their salaries.

He has erected a multitude of New Offices, and sent hither swarms of Officers to harass our people, and eat out their substance.

He has kept among us, in times of peace, Standing Armies without the Consent of our legislatures.

He has affected to render the Military independent of and superior to the Civil power.

He has combined with others to subject us to a jurisdiction foreign to our constitution, and unacknowledged by our laws; giving his Assent to their Acts of pretended Legislation:

For Quartering large bodies of armed troops among us:

For protecting them, by a mock Trial, from punishment for any Murders which they should commit on the Inhabitants of these States:

For cutting off our Trade with all parts of the world:

For imposing Taxes on us without our Consent:

For depriving us in many cases, of the benefits of Trial by Jury:
For transporting us beyond Seas to be tried for pretended offenses:

For abolishing the free System of English Laws in a neighboring Province, establishing therein an Arbitrary government, and enlarging its Boundaries so as to render it at once an example and fit instrument for introducing the same absolute rule into these Colonies:

For taking away our Charters, abolishing our most valuable Laws, and altering fundamentally the Forms of our Governments:

For suspending our own Legislatures, and declaring themselves invested with power to legislate for us in all cases whatsoever.

He has abdicated Government here, by declaring us out of his Protection and waging War against us.

He has plundered our seas, ravaged our Coasts, burnt our towns, and destroyed the lives of our people.

He is at this time transporting large Armies of foreign Mercenaries to complete the works of death, desolation and tyranny, already begun with circumstances of Cruelty and perfidy scarcely paralleled in the most barbarous ages, and totally unworthy the Head of a civilized nation.

He has constrained our fellow Citizens taken Captive on the high Seas to bear Arms against their Country, to become the executioners of their friends and Brethren, or to fall themselves by their Hands.

He has excited domestic insurrections amongst us, and has endeavored to bring on the inhabitants of our frontiers, the merciless Indian Savages, whose known rule of warfare, is an undistinguished destruction of all ages, sexes and conditions.
In every stage of these Oppressions We have Petitioned for Redress in the most humble terms: Our repeated Petitions have been answered only by repeated injury. A Prince whose character is thus marked by every act which may define a Tyrant, is unfit to be the ruler of a free people.

Nor have We been wanting in attentions to our British brethren. We have warned them from time to time of attempts by their legislature to extend an unwarrantable jurisdiction over us. We have reminded them of the circumstances of our emigration and settlement here. We have appealed to their native justice and magnanimity, and we have conjured them by the ties of our common kindred to disavow these usurpations, which, would inevitably interrupt our connections and correspondence. They too have been deaf to the voice of justice and of consanguinity. We must, therefore, acquiesce in the necessity, which denounces our Separation, and hold them, as we hold the rest of mankind, Enemies in War, in Peace Friends.

We, therefore, the Representatives of the united States of America, in General Congress, Assembled, appealing to the Supreme Judge of the world for the rectitude of our intentions, do, in the Name, and by Authority of the good People of these Colonies, solemnly publish and declare, That these United Colonies are, and of Right ought to be Free and Independent States; that they are Absolved from all Allegiance to the British Crown, and that all political connection between them and the State of Great Britain, is and ought to be totally dissolved; and that as Free and Independent States, they have full Power to levy War, conclude Peace, contract Alliances, establish Commerce, and to do all other Acts and Things which Independent States may of right do. And for the support of this Declaration, with a firm reliance on the protection of divine Providence, we mutually pledge to each other our Lives, our Fortunes and our sacred Honor.

Georgia
Button Gwinnett, Lyman Hall, George Walton
North Carolina
William Hooper, Joseph Hewes, John Penn

South Carolina
5 Edward Rutledge, Thomas Heyward, Jr., Thomas Lynch, Jr., Arthur Middleton

Maryland
Samuel Chase, William Paca, Thomas Stone, Charles Carroll of Carrollton

Virginia

Pennsylvania
15 Robert Morris, Benjamin Rush, Benjamin Franklin, John Morton, George Clymer, James Smith, George Taylor, James Wilson, George Ross

Delaware
20 Caesar Rodney, George Read, Thomas McKean

New York
William Floyd, Philip Livingston, Francis Lewis, Lewis Morris

New Jersey
25 Richard Stockton, John Witherspoon, Francis Hopkinson, John Hart, Abraham Clark

New Hampshire
Josiah Bartlett, William Whipple, Matthew Thornton

Massachusetts
30 John Hancock, Samuel Adams, John Adams, Robert Treat Paine, Elbridge Gerry
Rhode Island
Stephen Hopkins, William Ellery

Connecticut
5 Roger Sherman, Samuel Huntington, William Williams, Oliver Wolcot
THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

The Constitution

LAW

March 4, 1789
United States of America

BACKGROUND

Delegates to the Constitutional Convention drafted and the states ratified this Constitution, forming the second national government for the United States of America.

ANNOTATIONS

Preamble

We the People of the United States, in Order to form a more perfect Union, establish Justice, insure domestic Tranquility, provide for the common defense, promote the general Welfare, and secure the Blessings of Liberty to ourselves and our Posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America.

Article I

Section 1. All legislative Powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives.

Section 2. The House of Representatives shall be composed of Members chosen every second Year by the People of the several States, and the Electors in each State shall have the Qualifications requisite for Electors of the most numerous Branch of the State Legislature.

No person shall be a Representative who shall not have attained to the Age of twenty five Years, and been seven Years a Citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an Inhabitant of that State in which he shall be chosen.

Representatives and direct Taxes shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union, according to their respective Numbers, which shall be determined by adding to the whole Number of free Persons, including those bound to Service for a Term of Years, and excluding Indians not taxed, three fifths of all other Persons. The actual Enumeration shall be made within three Years after the first Meeting of the Congress of the United States, and within every subsequent Term of ten Years, in such Manner as they shall by Law direct. The Number of Representatives shall not exceed one for every thirty Thousand, but each State shall have at Least one Representative; and until such enumeration shall be made, the State of New Hampshire shall be entitled to choose three, Massachusetts eight, Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations one, Connecticut five, New-York six, New Jersey four, Pennsylvania eight, Delaware one, Maryland six, Virginia ten, North Carolina five, South Carolina five, and Georgia three.

When vacancies happen in the Representation from any State, the Executive Authority thereof shall issue Writs of Election to fill such Vacancies.

The House of Representatives shall choose their Speaker and other Officers; and shall have the sole Power of Impeachment.

Section 3. The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the Legislature thereof, for six Years; and each Senator shall have one Vote.

Immediately after they shall be assembled in Consequence of the first Election, they shall be divided as equally as may be into three Classes. The Seats of the Senators of the first Class shall be vacated at the Expiration of the second Year, of the second Class at the Expiration of the fourth Year, and of the third Class at the Expiration of the sixth Year, so that one third may be chosen every second Year; and if Vacancies happen by Resignation, or otherwise, during the Recess of the Legislature of any State, the Executive thereof may make temporary Appointments until the next Meeting of the Legislature, which shall then fill such Vacancies.
No Person shall be a Senator who shall not have attained to the Age of thirty Years, and been nine Years a Citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an Inhabitant of that State for which he shall be chosen.

The Vice President of the United States shall be President of the Senate, but shall have no Vote, unless they be equally divided.

The Senate shall choose their other Officers, and also a President pro tempore, in the Absence of the Vice President, or when he shall exercise the Office of President of the United States.

The Senate shall have the sole Power to try all Impeachments. When sitting for that Purpose, they shall be on Oath or Affirmation. When the President of the United States is tried, the Chief Justice shall preside: And no Person shall be convicted without the Concurrence of two thirds of the Members present.

Judgment in Cases of Impeachment shall not extend further than to removal from Office, and disqualification to hold and enjoy any Office of honor, Trust or Profit under the United States: but the Party convicted shall nevertheless be liable and subject to Indictment, Trial, Judgment and Punishment, according to Law.

Section 4. The Times, Places and Manner of holding Elections for Senators and Representatives, shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by Law make or alter such Regulations, except as to the Places of choosing Senaors.

The Congress shall assemble at least once in every Year, and such Meeting shall be on the first Monday in December, unless they shall by Law appoint a different Day.

Section 5. Each House shall be the Judge of the Elections, Returns and Qualifications of its own Members, and a Majority of each shall constitute a Quorum to do Business; but a smaller Number may adjourn from day to day, and may be authorized to compel the Attendance of absent Members, in such Manner, and under such Penalties as each House may provide.
Each House may determine the Rules of its Proceedings, punish its Members for disorderly Behavior, and, with the Concurrence of two thirds, expel a Member.

Each House shall keep a Journal of its Proceedings, and from time to time publish the same, excepting such Parts as may in their Judgment require Secrecy; and the Yeas and Nays of the Members of either House on any question shall, at the Desire of one fifth of those Present, be entered on the Journal.

Neither House, during the Session of Congress, shall, without the Consent of the other, adjourn for more than three days, nor to any other Place than that in which the two Houses shall be sitting.

Section 6. The Senators and Representatives shall receive a Compensation for their Services, to be ascertained by Law, and paid out of the Treasury of the United States. They shall in all Cases, except Treason, Felony and Breach of the Peace, be privileged from Arrest during their Attendance at the Session of their respective Houses, and in going to and returning from the same; and for any Speech or Debate in either House, they shall not be questioned in any other Place.

No Senator or Representative shall, during the Time for which he was elected, be appointed to any civil Office under the Authority of the United States, which shall have been created, or the Emoluments whereof shall have been encreased during such time; and no Person holding any Office under the United States, shall be a Member of either House during his Continuance in Office.

Section 7. All Bills for raising Revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives; but the Senate may propose or concur with Amendments as on other Bills.

Every Bill which shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate, shall, before it become a Law, be presented to the President of the United States; If he approve he shall sign it, but if not he shall return it, with his Objections to that House in which it shall have originated, who shall enter the Objections at large on their Journal, and proceed to reconsider it. If after such Reconsideration two thirds of that House shall agree to pass the Bill, it shall be sent, together with the Objections, to the other House, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered, and if approved by two thirds of that House, it shall become a Law. But in all such Cases the Votes of both Houses shall be determined by yeas and Nays, and the Names of the Persons voting for and against the Bill shall be entered on the Journal of each House respectively. If any Bill shall not be returned by the President within ten days (Sundays excepted) after it shall have been presented to him, the Same shall be a Law, in like Manner as if he had signed it, unless the Congress by their Adjournment prevent its Return in which Case it shall not be a Law.

Every Order, Resolution, or Vote to which the Concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary (except on a question of Adjournment) shall be presented to the President of the United States; and before the Same shall take Effect, shall be approved by him, or being disapproved by him, shall be repassed by two thirds of the Senate and House of Representatives, according to the Rules and Limitations prescribed in the Case of a Bill.

Section 8. The Congress shall have Power To lay and collect Taxes, Duties, Imposts and Excises, to pay the Debts and provide for the common Defense and general Welfare of the United States; but all Duties, Imposts and Excises shall be uniform throughout the United States;

To borrow Money on the credit of the United States;

To regulate Commerce with foreign Nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian Tribes;

To establish an uniform Rule of Naturalization, and uniform Laws on the subject of Bankruptcies throughout the United States;

To coin Money, regulate the Value thereof, and of foreign Coin, and fix the Standard of Weights and Measures;

To provide for the Punishment of counterfeiting the Securities and current Coin of the United States;

To establish Post Offices and post Roads;
To promote the Progress of Science and useful Arts, by securing for limited Times to Authors and Inventors the exclusive Right to their respective Writings and Discoveries;

To constitute Tribunals inferior to the supreme Court;

To define and punish Piracies and Felonies committed on the high Seas, and Offenses against the Law of Nations;

To declare War, grant Letters of Marque and Reprisal, and make Rules concerning Captures on Land and Water;

To raise and support Armies, but no Appropriation of Money to that Use shall be for a longer Term than two Years;

To provide and maintain a Navy;

To make Rules for the Government and Regulation of the land and naval Forces;

To provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions;

To provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia, and for governing such Part of them as may be employed in the Service of the United States, reserving to the States respectively, the Appointment of the Officers, and the Authority of training the Militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress;

To exercise exclusive Legislation in all Cases whatsoever, over such District (not exceeding ten Miles square) as may, by Cession of particular States, and the Acceptance of Congress, become the Seat of the Government of the United States, and to exercise like Authority over all Places purchased by the Consent of the Legislature of the State in which the Same shall be, for the Erection of Forts, Magazines, Arsenals, dock-Yards, and other needful Buildings;—And

To make all Laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into Execution the foregoing Powers, and all other Powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any Department or Officer thereof.
Section 9. The Migration or Importation of such Persons as any of the States now existing shall think proper to admit, shall not be prohibited by the Congress prior to the Year one thousand eight hundred and eight, but a Tax or duty may be imposed on such Importation, not exceeding ten dollars for each Person.

5 The Privilege of the Writ of Habeas Corpus shall not be suspended, unless when in Cases of Rebellion or Invasion the public Safety may require it.

No Bill of Attainder or ex post facto Law shall be passed.

No Capitation, or other direct, Tax shall be laid, unless in Proportion to the Census or Enumeration herein before directed to be taken.

10 No Tax or Duty shall be laid on Articles exported from any State.

No Preference shall be given by any Regulation of Commerce or Revenue to the Ports of one State over those of another: nor shall Vessels bound to, or from, one State, be obliged to enter, clear, or pay Duties in another.

No Money shall be drawn from the Treasury, but in Consequence of Appropriations made by Law; and a regular Statement and Account of the Receipts and Expenditures of all public Money shall be published from time to time.

No Title of Nobility shall be granted by the United States: And no Person holding any Office of Profit or Trust under them, shall, without the Consent of the Congress, accept of any present, Emolument, Office, or Title, of any kind whatever, from any King, Prince, or foreign State.

20 Section 10. No State shall enter into any Treaty, Alliance, or Confederation; grant Letters of Marque and Reprisal; coin Money; emit Bills of Credit; make any Thing but gold and silver Coin a Tender in Payment of Debts; pass any Bill of Attainder, ex post facto Law, or Law impairing the Obligation of Contracts, or grant any Title of Nobility.

25 No State shall, without the Consent of the Congress, lay any Imposts or Duties on Imports or Exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing its inspection Laws: and the net Produce of all Duties and Imposts, laid by any State on Imports or Exports, shall be for the Use of the Treasury of the United States; and all such Laws shall be subject to the Revision and Control of the Congress.

No State shall, without the Consent of Congress, lay any duty of Tonnage, keep Troops, or Ships of War in time of Peace, enter into any Agreement or Compact with another State, or with a foreign Power, or engage in War, unless actually invaded, or in such imminent Danger as will not admit of delay.

Article II

Section 1. The executive Power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America. He shall hold his Office during the Term of four Years, and, together with the Vice-President chosen for the same Term, be elected as follows:

Each State shall appoint, in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a Number of Electors, equal to the whole Number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress: but no Senator or Representative, or Person holding an Office of Trust or Profit under the United States, shall be appointed an Elector.

The Electors shall meet in their respective States, and vote by Ballot for two Persons, of whom one at least shall not be an Inhabitant of the same State with themselves. And they shall make a List of all the Persons voted for, and of the Number of Votes for each; which List they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the Seat of the Government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate. The President of the Senate shall, in the Presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the Certificates, and the Votes shall then be counted. The Person having the greatest Number of Votes shall be the President, if such Number be a Majority of the whole Number of Electors appointed; and if there be more than one who have such Majority, and have an equal Number of Votes, then the House of Representatives shall immediately choose by Ballot one of them for President; and if no Person have a Majority, then from the five highest on the List the said House shall in like Manner choose the President. But in choosing the President, the Votes shall be taken by States, the Representation from each State having one Vote; a quorum for this Purpose shall consist of a Member or Members from two thirds of the States, and a Majority of all the States shall be necessary to a Choice. In every Case, after the Choice of the President, the Person having the greatest Number of Votes of the Electors shall be the Vice President. But if there should remain two or more who have equal Votes, the Senate shall choose from them by Ballot the Vice President.

The Congress may determine the Time of choosing the Electors, and the Day on which they shall give their Votes; which Day shall be the same throughout the United States.

No Person except a natural born Citizen, or a Citizen of the United States, at the time of the Adoption of this Constitution, shall be eligible to the Office of President; neither shall any Person be eligible to that Office who shall not have attained to the Age of thirty-five Years, and been fourteen Years a Resident within the United States.

In Case of the Removal of the President from Office, or of his Death, Resignation, or Inability to discharge the Powers and Duties of the said Office, the Same shall devolve on the Vice President, and the Congress may by Law provide for the Case of Removal, Death, Resignation or Inability, both of the President and Vice President, declaring what Officer shall then act as President, and such Officer shall act accordingly, until the Disability be removed, or a President shall be elected.

The President shall, at stated Times, receive for his Services, a Compensation, which shall neither be increased nor diminished during the Period for which he shall have been elected, and he shall not receive within that Period any other Emolument from the United States, or any of them.

Before he enter on the Execution of his Office, he shall take the following Oath or Affirmation:—"I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully execute the Office of President of the United States, and will to the best of my Ability, preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States."

Section 2. The President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and of the Militia of the several States, when called into the actual Service of the United States; he may require the Opinion, in writing, of the principal Officer in each of the executive Departments, upon any subject relating to the Duties of their respective Offices, and he shall have Power to grant Reprieves and Pardons for Offenses against the United States, except in Cases of Impeachment.

He shall have Power, by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate, to make Treaties, provided two thirds of the Senators present concur; and he shall nominate, and by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate, shall appoint Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls, Judges of the supreme Court, and all other Officers of the United States, whose Appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by Law: but the Congress may by Law vest the Appointment of such inferior Officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the Courts of Law, or in the Heads of Departments.

The President shall have Power to fill up all Vacancies that may happen during the Recess of the Senate, by granting Commissions which shall expire at the End of their next Session.

Section 3. He shall from time to time give to the Congress Information of the State of the Union, and recommend to their Consideration such Measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient; he may, on extraordinary Occasions, convene both Houses, or either of them, and in Case of Disagreement between them, with Respect to the Time of Adjournment, he may adjourn them to such Time as he shall think proper; he shall receive Ambassadors and other public Ministers; he shall take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed, and shall Commission all the Officers of the United States.

Section 4. The President, Vice President and all civil Officers of the United States, shall be removed from Office on Impeachment for, and Conviction of, Treason, Bribery, or other high Crimes and Misdemeanors.

Article III

Section 1. The judicial Power of the United States, shall be vested in one supreme Court, and in such inferior Courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The Judges, both of the supreme and inferior Courts, shall hold their Offices during good Behavior, and shall, at stated Times, receive for their Services a Compensation, which shall not be diminished during their Continuance in Office.

Section 2. The judicial Power shall extend to all Cases, in Law and Equity, arising under this Constitution, the Laws of the United States, and Treaties made, or which shall be made, under their Authority;—to all Cases affecting Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls;—to all Cases of admiralty and maritime Jurisdiction; —to Controversies to which the United States shall be a Party;—to Controversies between two or more States;—between a State and Citizens of another State;—between Citizens of different States;—between Citizens of the same State claiming Lands under Grants of different States, and between a State, or the Citizens thereof, and foreign States, Citizens or Subjects.

In all Cases affecting Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls, and those in which a State shall be Party, the supreme Court shall have original Jurisdiction. In all the other Cases before mentioned, the supreme Court shall have appellate Jurisdiction, both as to Law and Fact, with such Exceptions, and under such Regulations as the Congress shall make.

The Trial of all Crimes, except in Cases of Impeachment, shall be by Jury; and such Trial shall be held in the State where the said Crimes shall have been committed; but when not committed within any State, the Trial shall be at such Place or Places as the Congress may by Law have directed.

Section 3. Treason against the United States, shall consist only in levying War against them, or in adhering to their Enemies, giving them Aid and Comfort. No Person shall be convicted of Treason unless on the Testimony of two Witnesses to the same overt Act, or on Confession in open Court.

The Congress shall have Power to declare the Punishment of Treason, but no Attainder of Treason shall work Corruption of Blood, or Forfeiture except during the Life of the Person attainted.
Article IV

Section 1. Full Faith and Credit shall be given in each State to the public Acts, Records, and judicial Proceedings of every other State. And the Congress may by general Laws prescribe the Manner in which such Acts, Records and Proceedings shall be proved, and the Effect thereof.

Section 2. The Citizens of each State shall be entitled to all Privileges and Immunities of Citizens in the several States.

A Person charged in any State with Treason, Felony, or other Crime, who shall flee from Justice, and be found in another State, shall on Demand of the executive Authority of the State from which he fled, be delivered up, to be removed to the State having Jurisdiction of the Crime.

No Person held to Service or Labor in one State, under the Laws thereof, escaping into another, shall, in Consequence of any Law or Regulation therein, be discharged from such Service or Labor, but shall be delivered up on Claim of the Party to whom such Service or Labor may be due.

Section 3. New States may be admitted by the Congress into this Union; but no new State shall be formed or erected within the Jurisdiction of any other State; nor any State be formed by the Junction of two or more States, or parts of States, without the Consent of the Legislatures of the States concerned as well as of the Congress.

The Congress shall have Power to dispose of and make all needful Rules and Regulations respecting the Territory or other Property belonging to the United States; and nothing in this Constitution shall be so construed as to Prejudice any Claims of the United States, or of any particular State.

Section 4. The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a Republican Form of Government, and shall protect each of them against Invasion; and on Application of the Legislature, or of the Executive (when the Legislature cannot be convened) against domestic Violence.
Article V

The Congress, whenever two thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose Amendments to this Constitution, or, on the Application of the Legislatures of two thirds of the several States, shall call a Convention for proposing Amendments, which, in either Case, shall be valid to all Intents and Purposes, as Part of this Constitution, when ratified by the Legislatures of three fourths of the several States, or by Conventions in three fourths thereof, as the one or the other Mode of Ratification may be proposed by the Congress; Provided that no Amendment which may be made prior to the Year One thousand eight hundred and eight shall in any Manner affect the first and fourth Clauses in the Ninth Section of the first Article; and that no State, without its Consent, shall be deprived of its equal Suffrage in the Senate.

Article VI

All Debts contracted and Engagements entered into, before the Adoption of this Constitution, shall be as valid against the United States under this Constitution, as under the Confederation.

This Constitution, and the Laws of the United States which shall be made in Pursuance thereof; and all Treaties made, or which shall be made, under the Authority of the United States, shall be the supreme Law of the Land; and the Judges in every State shall be bound thereby, any Thing in the Constitution or Laws of any State to the Contrary notwithstanding.

The Senators and Representatives before mentioned, and the Members of the several State Legislatures, and all executive and judicial Officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by Oath or Affirmation, to support this Constitution; but no religious Test shall ever be required as a Qualification to any Office or public Trust under the United States.
Article VII

The Ratification of the Conventions of nine States, shall be sufficient for the Establishment of this Constitution between the States so ratifying the Same.

Done in Convention by the Unanimous Consent of the States present the Seventeenth Day of September in the Year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and Eighty seven and of the Independence of the United States of America the Twelfth In witness whereof We have hereunto subscribed our Names.

George Washington—
President and deputy from Virginia

Delaware

George Read, Gunning Bedford, Jr., John Dickinson, Richard Bassett, Jacob Broom

Maryland

James McHenry, Daniel of St. Thomas Jenifer, Daniel Carroll

Virginia

John Blair, James Madison, Jr.

North Carolina

William Blount, Richard Dobbs Spaight, Hugh Williamson

South Carolina

John Rutledge, Charles Cotesworth Pinckney, Charles Pinckney, Pierce Butler
Georgia
William Few, Abraham Baldwin

New Hampshire
John Langdon, Nicholas Gilman

Massachusetts
Nathaniel Gorham, Rufus King

Connecticut
William Samuel Johnson, Roger Sherman

New York
Alexander Hamilton

New Jersey
William Livingston, David Brearley, William Paterson, Jonathan Dayton

Pennsylvania
Benjamin Franklin, Thomas Mifflin, Robert Morris, George Clymer, Thomas FitzSimmons, Jared Ingersoll, James Wilson, Gouverneur Morris

Attest William Jackson Secretary
FIRST CONGRESS

Proposed Amendments to the Constitution

JOIN RESOLUTION EXCERPT

September 25, 1789
Federal Hall | City of New-York, New York

Bill of Rights

BACKGROUND

As part of a compromise to secure the ratification of the Constitution, Federalists introduced in the first Congress a Bill of Rights as twelve amendments to the new Constitution. Below are the ten amendments that were ultimately ratified.

ANNOTATIONS

Amendment I

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

Amendment II

A well regulated Militia, being necessary to the security of a free State, the right of the people to keep and bear Arms shall not be infringed.

Amendment III

No Soldier shall, in time of peace be quartered in any house, without the consent of the Owner, nor in time of war, but in a manner to be prescribed by law.

NOTES & QUESTIONS

Amendment IV

The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no Warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by Oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized.

Amendment V

No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the Militia, when in actual service in time of War or public danger; nor shall any person be subject for the same offence to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb; nor shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation.

Amendment VI

In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law, and to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation; to be confronted with the witnesses against him; to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor, and to have the Assistance of Counsel for his defence.

Amendment VII

In Suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved, and no fact tried by a jury, shall be otherwise re-examined in any Court of the United States, than according to the rules of the common law.
Amendment VIII

Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted.

Amendment IX

The enumeration in the Constitution, of certain rights, shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people.

Amendment X

The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.
UNIT 4
The American Civil War

1848–1877

20-30-minute classes | 33-37 classes

UNIT PREVIEW

Structure

LESSON 1 1848–1854  The Expansion of Slavery  9–10 classes  p. 7
LESSON 2 1854–1861  Toward Civil War  7–8 classes  p. 12
LESSON 3 1861–1865  The Civil War  9–10 classes  p. 16
LESSON 4 1865–1877  Reconstruction  4–5 classes  p. 22
APPENDIX A  Talk about History, Review Sheets, Tests, Writing Assignment  p. 27
APPENDIX B  Primary Source  p. 43

Why Teach the American Civil War

“Four score and seven years ago our fathers brought forth on this continent, a new nation, conceived in Liberty, and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal. Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that nation, or any nation so conceived and so dedicated, can long endure.”

These famous opening lines from President Abraham Lincoln at Gettysburg express why the Civil War was fought. Whether America, founded in liberty and equality, could long endure depended on whether the nation’s original contradiction, slavery, could be abolished while still preserving the country’s existence as a union. American students must know how the ideas at the heart of their country were undermined by slavery; but they must also learn how heroic Americans committed to America’s founding ideas made great sacrifices and sometimes gave their lives, so that these ideas of liberty and equality might prevail over the dehumanizing tyranny of slavery. And students must learn that, like those in Lincoln’s audience, it is up to each American to oppose tyranny and dehumanization to ensure that “government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth.”

Enduring Ideas from this Unit

1. That slavery was the original contradiction in America, and that slavery is immoral, unjust, dehumanizing, and in violation of the inherent dignity and equal possession of natural rights of each person, as are any ways in which one person or group of people is favored over another due to the color of their skin.

2. That at its heart, the Civil War was fought over the issue of slavery: first, whether slavery would expand in America; next, whether it would be permitted at all; and last, whether the half of the country that opposed slavery would let the country be divided and the injustice to continue elsewhere, instead of fighting to preserve a union that would guarantee liberty and abolish slavery.

3. That President Abraham Lincoln exemplified American statesmanship as he piloted the nation toward fulfillment of its founding ideas, ended the barbarous and tyrannical institution of slavery, and nevertheless abided by the rule of law in doing so.

4. That the period of Reconstruction following the Civil War witnessed a realization of civil rights for freedmen, producing greater degrees of justice and equality that would nevertheless be challenged both during Reconstruction and in following decades.

What Teachers Should Consider

The American Civil War is one of the most important events in American history if only for its attempt to prove, with the blood of hundreds of thousands of Americans, that a people may freely govern themselves and organize themselves to preserve the liberty and equal natural rights of all.

Many students may not know that America was founded on these ideas. Fewer, perhaps, know that America even succeeded in proving these ideas true, striving to live up to them for twenty years, before such progress was eclipsed after Reconstruction. Although subsequent decades would manifest different kinds of failures to guarantee the equal protection of natural rights in certain parts of the country, the Civil War demonstrated that some statesmen and a considerable portion of Americans were committed to carrying out America’s founding promise to the point of bloodshed.

Teachers will greatly benefit from studying not only the war itself but also the thoughts, words, and deeds of the statesman who conducted the war for the Union: President Abraham Lincoln. Lincoln’s ideas and speeches, and his political actions, should constitute for students a model of prudence, both in the public arena and in their own lives. His understanding of the issue of slavery, not merely in the abstract but as it existed in America, can teach students much about their country and its history.
This unit should begin, therefore, with an understanding of slavery as it was found in America in 1848. The teacher should especially emphasize the changes in the status and practice of slavery since the founding in 1776. The teacher should also emphasize changes in legal and public opinion toward the institution since the Constitution went into effect in 1789. In brief, both had entrenched slavery instead of keeping it on the gradual path to extinction, where the founding generation had arguably placed it.

Abraham Lincoln saw these legal and public opinion shifts most clearly, and he saw that such changes struck directly at the ideas on which America was founded. In brief, his entire public career as well as the founding of the Republican Party were devoted to checking this change, to returning slavery to the path of extinction, and to fulfilling the founding ideas of constitutional self-government. Lincoln’s arguments to these ends dominate the crescendo leading to war in spring of 1861. At its heart, this is what the Civil War was about.

The teacher will be able to enrich his or her students by cultivating their imaginations with the events, battles, and images of the Civil War, the bloodiest conflict in which Americans have ever been involved. Strategy, battles, and the general history of the war should be taught in detail. The teacher should learn and share accounts and images of the important moments and figures who contributed to Union victory in 1865. Meanwhile, Lincoln’s careful yet effective maneuverings—both to preserve the Union and to seize the constitutional opportunity afforded him to emancipate the slaves—should be followed in detail.

The unit best concludes with a study of the period known as Reconstruction. Perhaps never in history was so much hoped for, achieved, and mismanaged in so short a period of time with respect to liberty and equality under the law. Students should learn to appreciate both the sacrifices of the Civil War and its immediate achievements during Reconstruction. Nevertheless, students should also learn about the emergence of different kinds of injustice, especially for African Americans living in the former rebel states: injustices that would be perpetuated for a century.

How Teachers Can Learn More

TEXTS

Land of Hope, Wilfred McClay

ONLINE COURSES | Online.Hillsdale.edu

The Great American Story
Lesson Planning Resources

TEACHER RESOURCES

Land of Hope Young Reader’s Edition, Wilfred McClay
The Story of the Thirteen Colonies and the Great Republic, H.A. Guerber
The Civil War and Reconstruction, Anne Goudvis and Stephanie Harvey
Fields of Fury, James McPherson

TRADE BOOKS

The Listeners, Gloria Whelan
Follow the Drinking Gourd, Jeanette Winter
A Picture Book of Harriet Tubman, David Adler
A Picture Book of Frederick Douglass, David Adler
The Last Brother, Trinka Hakes Noble
Abraham Lincoln, Ingri and Edgar Parin d’Aulaire
A Picture Book of Abraham Lincoln, David Adler
The Gettysburg Address, Michael McCurdy
The Lincoln Memorial, Mary Firestone

PRIMARY SOURCES

Gettysburg Address, Abraham Lincoln
LESSON PLANS, ACTIVITIES AND ASSIGNMENTS, AND FORMATIVE QUIZZES
Lesson 1 — The Expansion of Slavery

LESSON OBJECTIVE

Students learn how the defenders of slavery began to assert that slavery was a “positive good” that ought to be expanded throughout the country instead of an existing evil that should be contained and kept on the path to extinction, and about the efforts of abolitionists to resist slavery.

TEACHER PREPARATION

Create a note outline based on the following:

Teacher Texts
- Land of Hope Young Reader’s Edition
- The Story of the Thirteen Colonies and the Great Republic
- The Civil War and Reconstruction

Trade Books
- The Listeners
- Follow the Drinking Gourd
- A Picture Book of Harriet Tubman
- A Picture Book of Frederick Douglass

Online.Hillsdale.edu
- The Great American Story
- Civil Rights in American History

CORE CONTENT IN THIS LESSON

Geography & Places
- California
- Kansas-Nebraska Territory

Persons
- Frederick Douglass
- Harriet Beecher Stowe
- Harriet Tubman
- Abraham Lincoln
- Stephen Douglas
Terms and Topics

King Cotton
antebellum
Gold Rush
secession
abolitionism

Narrative of the Life of Frederick Douglass
Uncle Tom’s Cabin
Underground Railroad
popular sovereignty

To Know by Heart

“Knowledge makes a man unfit to be a slave.” — Frederick Douglass
“Frederick Douglass” — Robert Hayden
"So you’re the little woman who wrote the book that started this great war.” — Abraham Lincoln to Harriet Beecher Stowe upon their meeting

Dates

1849  California Gold Rush

Images

Historical figures and events
Grade-level appropriate depictions of the life of slaves and the horrors of slavery
Maps of the free versus slave-state breakdown when changes occur
Pictures of first-edition copies of Narrative of the Life of Frederick Douglass and Uncle Tom’s Cabin
Statue of Frederick Douglass (on the Hillsdale College campus)

Stories for the American Heart

- Biographies and the roles of Frederick Douglass, Harriet Tubman, and Abraham Lincoln prior to the Civil War
- Childhood biography of Abraham Lincoln
- Grade-level appropriate scenes from Narrative of the Life of Frederick Douglass and Uncle Tom’s Cabin
- Actions of Harriet Tubman and the Underground Railroad

Questions for the American Mind

- Even though many wanted to abolish slavery, why did many leading Founders think that permitting slavery and keeping the Americans united would be the only way eventually to get rid of slavery?
- How did the Founders restrict slavery at the founding more than it had ever been before?
- How can we judge the actions of some Founders who expressed their belief that slavery was wrong but did not free their slaves in their lifetimes?
- Why did the Founders expect that slavery would eventually die out on its own?
- What invention after the Founding made cotton more valuable and actually increased slavery, which ruined the Founders’ guess that slavery would end on its own?
- What was life like for slaves in the Southern states?
- Who was Frederick Douglass and what did he do?
- How did Frederick Douglass show that slavery was evil?
- Who were the abolitionists? What kinds of things did they do to try to end slavery?
- Who was Harriet Tubman and what did she do?
- Who was Harriet Beecher Stowe and what did her book, Uncle Tom’s Cabin, do?
- How did the Underground Railroad work?
- What did Northerners and Southerners argue about whenever a new state was going to be made?
- Why did slave states want to expand the number of slave states in the western territories?
- Was Abraham Lincoln for or against slavery? Why?
- What was the idea of “popular sovereignty”?
- Why did Abraham Lincoln believe “popular sovereignty” was wrong?
- Question from the U.S. Civics Test:
  - Question 75: What group of people was taken and sold as slaves?

Keys to the Lesson

The status of slavery in 1848 was markedly different than it was when the Founders crafted the Constitution in 1787. The gradual decline in the profitability of slavery, evident during the founding, was forecast to continue—but this trend reversed direction upon the invention of the cotton gin in 1793. From then on, the demand for slave labor in the Southern states rapidly compounded. But the free population in the South was vastly outstripped by the burgeoning population of the North. If nothing changed, demographics and geography would eventually give Americans living in the North the power to limit slavery through law and perhaps even abolish it entirely through a constitutional amendment. Slaveholders in the South needed to change this trajectory by expanding slavery westward into the territories. Students need to understand that to justify such expansion, slavery advocates in the South had to change the opinion of Northerners: either to believe slavery to be morally good or, at the very least, to view slavery as merely a matter of the will of the majority, what Stephen Douglas called “popular sovereignty.” Moral relativism, the idea that there is no “right” or “wrong” besides what the majority of people want, and a belief in unfettered democracy through the vote of the majority were the slaveholders’ pillars in arguing to preserve slavery. Students should understand that Abraham Lincoln favored government “of the people, by the people, and for the people” but also saw how just letting a vote of the majority decide whether slavery was good or evil violated equality, freedom, and human dignity. Lincoln went about waging an oratorical war in defense of objective standards of truth and justice, of good and evil. Students should also learn how abolitionists, of both African and European descent, continued to publicize the horrors of slavery for Americans in Northern states far removed from witnessing slavery firsthand. Abolitionists also shepherded escaped slaves to freedom in the Northern states and Canada.

Teachers might best plan and teach the Expansion of Slavery with emphasis on the following approaches:

- Review with students the status of slavery over the initial decades of the country’s history. At the founding, slavery was generally either openly condemned by those in the North or defended by those in the South. Its toleration by northern delegates and others who were opposed to slavery at the time of the founding was for the sake of a unity that even many abolitionists believed was the only eventual path toward abolition. The Declaration of Independence established the country on principles of equality that could and would be cited to demand the end of slavery, the Northwest Ordinance had prohibited the expansion of slavery, the Constitution refused to give legal standing to the institution, and many states had restricted or abolished slavery outright. Lastly, many leading Founders, including those who held slaves, believed that the profitability of slavery was gradually but decisively waning and that slavery would die out on its own in a relatively short period of time. The invention of the cotton gin in 1793 by Eli Whitney, however, greatly increased the profitability of slavery and reignited slaveholders' interest in perpetuating and expanding slavery.

- Help students to imagine and understand the dehumanizing and brutal tyranny of slavery, emphasizing that the sheer fact that some people owned other human beings is and always will be morally reprehensible. Moreover, as Frederick Douglass argued, slavery actually dehumanized the master as well as the slave. Treat of this subject mindful of the degree of detail appropriate for the grade level.
- Demonstrate for students how the growth in population in the North compared to the South would eventually allow Northern states to restrict slavery further and perhaps even abolish it with a constitutional amendment. Slaveholders recognized that they had to expand the number of slave states if they were to prohibit such actions by Northerners.
- Show students how slavery actually weakened the South as a whole while supporting the lifestyle of the elite few. For all other Southerners, slavery lowered the value and wages of labor by non-slaves, limited innovation, and thwarted economic development in the South. The Civil War would reveal the weakness of the position in which Southerners’ insistence on slavery had placed them. A simple comparison of the Northern to the Southern economy, development, and society before and during the Civil War illustrates the case.
- Teach students how the slavery issue nearly resulted in civil war over the question of expanding slavery into the territories acquired from Mexico after the Mexican-American War, brought to a head when California, after a population surge during the California Gold Rush, applied to become a state without slavery. California’s lone admission as a free state would have increased Northern power in Congress and the Electoral College against Southern states on the issue of slavery.
- Explain how the Compromise of 1850 may have avoided war in the short term, but it only deepened and delayed the divisions tearing at the country over the next ten years. Focus especially on the effects of the Fugitive Slave Law, which compelled Northerners to assist in capturing escaped slaves and encouraged the practice of abducting free African Americans living in the North and forcing them into slavery.
- Teach students about the various parts of the abolitionist movement and its major figures. Students should learn that there was great diversity among abolitionists, especially in their underlying views about America’s governing principles and the best way to abolish slavery. For instance, William Lloyd Garrison actually agreed with the slaveholder reading of the Constitution while Frederick Douglass moved from this view to that of Abraham Lincoln that the Constitution was pro-freedom. One might read aloud with students some portions of Douglass’s Narrative of the Life of Frederick Douglas and discuss Harriet Beecher Stowe’s Uncle Tom’s Cabin, important works in making Northerners, most of whom had never seen slavery in practice, aware of its moral evil. Other abolitionists, such as Harriet Tubman and those running the Underground Railroad, heroically worked to lead escaped slaves to freedom. In general, most abolitionists appealed to the principles of equality stated in the Declaration of Independence in justifying their cause.
- Tell students the childhood and political biography of Abraham Lincoln, to show how he rose from poverty and obscurity to become arguably America’s greatest president.
- Help students understand the idea of popular sovereignty, that right and wrong amount to the mere will of the majority opinion, and how the Kansas-Nebraska Act and Stephen Douglas embraced this solution to the slavery question.
- Explain why Abraham Lincoln believed just letting the majority decide on slavery was dangerous. Students should understand that Lincoln saw slavery to be, above all, a moral question of right and wrong, of good and evil, that every American should care about. Lincoln also believed that leaving slavery to the vote of the majority was opposed to the ideas of the Declaration of Independence. In brief, students should understand that Lincoln believed America in the 1850s was allowing slavery to expand while the founding had tried to make sure slavery was on the path to being ended, and that the ideas of America were against slavery.

STRENGTHENING UNDERSTANDING: POST-LESSON ACTIVITIES AND ASSIGNMENTS

Activity 1: Assign each student a state from the time period. Work through the history, adding states accordingly. Show how the balance of power was trending in the north’s favor and why the south found it politically necessary to expand slavery in order to protect slavery.

Activity 2: Have a mock election on an issue as simple as whether students in three rows should get extra recess time at the expense of the students in two rows. Of course, the result will be majority tyranny. Have students consider whether the majority is always right or if the majority should be able to do whatever it wants just because it is the majority. Help students understand that this was what popular sovereignty was arguing about slavery, except that slavery was one of the worst forms of majority tyranny.

Assignment 1: Have students and parents complete a “Talk about History” assignment in which parents ask their child a series of questions about what they learned in history from a given lesson. Parents record the answers and the student returns to school (provided in appendix).

Assignment 2: Have students draw and color a scene of their choice from the biographies of Frederick Douglass, Harriet Tubman, or Abraham Lincoln. Have students present briefly what they drew, the story behind it, and why they depicted it the way they did.

FORMATIVE QUIZ 1

Provide students with numbered papers. Using the “Review Sheets” in the Appendix, make statements and ask students if they are True or False. Have them draw 😊 for “True” or 😞 for “False” next to each number. Review as a class and talk through what makes each answer correct.
Lesson 2 — Toward Civil War

1854–1861

7-8 classes

LESSON OBJECTIVE

Students learn how Abraham Lincoln and the new Republican Party’s opposition to the expansion of slavery led Southern states to secede from the Union, resulting in civil war.

TEACHER PREPARATION

Create a note outline based on the following:

Teacher Texts

Land of Hope Young Reader’s Edition
Chapter 20

The Story of the Thirteen Colonies and the Great Republic
Pages 160–169

The Civil War and Reconstruction
Pages 67–78

Trade Book

Abraham Lincoln
A Picture Book of Abraham Lincoln

Online.Hillsdale.edu

The Great American Story
Lecture 9

Civil Rights in American History
Lecture 3

CORE CONTENT IN THIS LESSON

Geography & Places

Kansas-Nebraska Territory
Fort Sumter

Persons

Abraham Lincoln
Frederick Douglass
Stephen Douglas
John Brown

Terms and Topics

Bleeding Kansas
“a house divided”
popular sovereignty
Democratic Party
Republican Party
Lincoln-Douglas Debates
“don’t care”
majority tyranny

To Know by Heart

“A house divided against itself cannot stand.” — Abraham Lincoln, paraphrasing from the words of Jesus of Nazareth in the Bible
Dates
April 12, 1861   Attack on Fort Sumter

Images
Historical figures and events
Depictions of the Lincoln-Douglas Debates
Campaign materials
Fort Sumter

STORIES FOR THE AMERICAN HEART
- What the Lincoln-Douglas Debates were like
- The young girl who suggested to Abraham Lincoln that he grow a beard
- The first shots fired on Fort Sumter

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND
- What was Bleeding Kansas like and why did it happen?
- What kind of person was Abraham Lincoln?
- What was Abraham Lincoln’s childhood like?
- How did Abraham Lincoln learn?
- Why did people create the Republican Party?
- Why did Abraham Lincoln worry that the Dred Scott v. Sandford decision would allow slavery anywhere in the country?
- Did Abraham Lincoln believe the founders created a country to protect slavery or to end slavery? Why did he think this?
- Why did Abraham Lincoln believe it was necessary to say that slavery was evil?
- Why did Abraham Lincoln say it was wrong to “not care” about whether people vote for slavery or not?
- What did Abraham Lincoln mean when he said that “a house divided against itself cannot stand?”
- How did Abraham Lincoln end up winning the 1860 election?
- What did Southern states do after Abraham Lincoln was elected?
- What did Abraham Lincoln mean when he wrote that the Declaration of Independence was like a golden apple and that the Constitution was a picture frame of silver?
- What did Abraham Lincoln do after he was elected but before Fort Sumter was attacked?
- What happened at Fort Sumter and how did Abraham Lincoln respond?
- What was the reason, at first, why the North fought the Civil War?
- How was slavery the real reason the Civil War was fought?
- Question from the U.S. Civics Test:
  - Question 94: Abraham Lincoln is famous for many things. Name one.
KEYS TO THE LESSON

The passage of the Kansas-Nebraska Act in 1854 sparked the little-known Abraham Lincoln to redouble his efforts to engage in the growing national debate over slavery in America. He saw a tremendous threat in the argument put forward by the bill’s sponsor, Stephen Douglas, that slavery was not a moral question but rather one that should simply be decided by the will of the majority. From 1854 to the outbreak of the Civil War in 1861, Lincoln would combat the idea that the morality of slavery was to be determined merely by majority opinion. Students should come to see this arc to Lincoln’s words and deeds. They should understand how he took up and articulated the heart of the matter regarding the morality of slavery and that slavery struck at America’s founding idea that all men are created equal. Roger Taney’s majority opinion in Dred Scott v. Sandford interpreted the Constitution to legitimize slavery, and Lincoln argued against both popular sovereignty and Taney’s position throughout his debates with Douglas. The moral question regarding slavery, manifesting itself in the practical questions of the expansion of slavery, is what a civil war would be fought over. After all, the formal move to secession—a constitutionally debatable claim also at issue in the approach to war—and the war itself was triggered in response to Lincoln being elected president on the position that slavery was wrong and should not be expanded.

Teachers might best plan and teach Toward Civil War with emphasis on the following approaches:

- Emphasize the breakdown in civil dialogue in the several violent episodes related to slavery preceding the Civil War: Bleeding Kansas, Preston Brooks’s attack on Charles Sumner, and John Brown’s raid on the federal armory at Harpers Ferry. Go into some detail to bring these events alive for students.
- Clarify the party alignment that was emerging in 1854. The Democratic Party was dividing between those who favored the principle of “popular sovereignty,” in which a state or territory could vote to allow slavery or not, and those who explicitly favored slavery. Meanwhile, the Republican Party was founded in 1854 in opposition to laws encouraging the spread of slavery. The split of the Democratic Party and the consolidation of the Republican Party in 1860 assured the election of Lincoln and significantly contributed to the coming of the Civil War.
- Explain how Lincoln believed the Supreme Court was rejecting the Founders’ view on slavery and would lead, together with Stephen Douglas’s popular sovereignty, to the spread of slavery throughout the country.
- Help students think through Lincoln’s understanding of the evil of slavery and its relationship to the founding ideas of America: that all men are created equal, have unalienable rights, and that legitimate government is based on the consent of the governed. Students should see that the whole question of slavery depended on whether Americans believed slavery was good or evil.
- Tell students the stories of the Lincoln-Douglas Debates, presenting the settings and atmosphere as imaginatively as possible.
- Help students to understand the various pressures that were mounting on the Southern states during the 1850s, from increased abolitionist activities to the sheer industrial might of the Northern states to a burgeoning plantation debt as other countries produced more cotton and the price of cotton fell as a result.
- Tell students the stories of Lincoln’s speeches and his reception during these years, including the founding of the Republican Party and the various conventions in 1856 and especially 1860. Students should sense the drama of the times.
- Share with students the apple and frame metaphor that Lincoln used to describe the relationship between the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution. Help students understand the arguments with respect to the American founding and slavery.
- Provide a clear overview of events between Lincoln’s election and South Carolina’s attack on Fort Sumter in Charleston Harbor. Students should learn both Lincoln and the South’s accounts of what happened.
- There were, of course, other factors and dimensions that impelled each side to fight the Civil War. Students should be familiar with these, as well as the view of most Southerners that the war was about defending what they saw as the rights of their states. This view and Lincoln’s counterview and incumbent duty to preserve the Union and Constitution may have been the occasion for the Civil War, but students should understand that the war was, at its heart, fought over whether slavery would be permitted to spread and so remain indefinitely, or be restricted and returned to the path to extinction on which the founding generation had left it. This question was, in turn, based on the morality of slavery, which Abraham Lincoln would later maintain in his Gettysburg Address was a question about the rejection or fulfillment of the ideas on which America was founded.

STRENGTHENING UNDERSTANDING: POST-LESSON ACTIVITIES AND ASSIGNMENTS

Activity 1: Find pictures that represent five different scenes from this lesson. Print off enough images for each group of five students to have a set. Give each student in the group a different picture (all groups will have the same five pictures). Have the students arrange the pictures in the order that those events occurred. Once the students have figured out the correct order of events, have students line up in order and go over the order of events as a class. Conclude the activity by asking students how they knew what event the picture was portraying. Ask students how they remembered the order of events/what they did to figure out the correct order. If there are groups that did not figure out the correct order, ask those students questions in order to move them to the correct sequence.

Activity 2: Assign students to act out how the 1860 election unfolded and then how southern states proceeded to secede after Abraham Lincoln’s election. Have some students make Lincoln’s arguments to keep the states from seceding. Students should appreciate the delicate and frustrating situation in which Lincoln found himself.

Assignment 1: Have students and parents complete a “Talk about History” assignment in which parents ask their child a series of questions about what they learned in history from a given lesson. Parents record the answers and the student returns to school (provided in appendix).

Assignment 2: Have students draw and color a scene of their choice from the Lincoln-Douglas debates, the Republican nominating convention of 1860 in which Abraham Lincoln was nominated for president, or the attack on Fort Sumter. Have students present briefly what they drew, the story behind it, and why they depicted it the way they did.
Lesson 3 — The Civil War

LESSON OBJECTIVE

Students learn about the major figures, common soldiers, strategy, and specific battles of the American Civil War, including a close study of the statesmanship of President Abraham Lincoln.

TEACHER PREPARATION

Create a note outline based on the following:

Teacher Texts
- Land of Hope Young Reader's Edition  Chapters 21 and 22
- The Story of the Thirteen Colonies and the Great Republic Pages 170–195
- The Civil War and Reconstruction Pages 79–237, 252–273

Trade Book
- The Last Brother
- Abraham Lincoln
- A Picture Book of Abraham Lincoln
- The Gettysburg Address
- The Lincoln Memorial

Online.Hillsdale.edu
- The Great American Story Lecture 10

CORE CONTENT IN THIS LESSON

Geography & Places
- Fort Sumter
- Union
- Yankees
- Confederacy
- Rebels
- Border States
- Appomattox Court House
- Ford’s Theatre

Persons
- Abraham Lincoln
- Jefferson Davis
- Robert E. Lee
- Thomas “Stonewall” Jackson
- Clara Barton
- Ulysses S. Grant
- William Tecumseh Sherman
- Martin Delany
- Robert Gould Shaw
- John Wilkes Booth
Terms and Topics

- secession
- Confederate States of America
- Army of the Potomac
- Army of Northern Virginia
- American Red Cross
- ironclads
- USS Monitor*
- CSS Virginia
- Battle of Antietam
- abolition
- Battle of Gettysburg
- Pickett’s Charge
- 54th Massachusetts Regiment
- Sherman’s “March to the Sea”

Primary Sources

- Gettysburg Address, Abraham Lincoln

To Know by Heart

- “Battle Hymn of the Republic,” first stanza — Julia Ward Howe
- Gettysburg Address — Abraham Lincoln
- “So Atlanta is ours, and fairly won.” — William Tecumseh Sherman telegram announcing the fall of Atlanta to Abraham Lincoln
- “Lincoln,” Nancy Byrd Turner

Dates

1861–65 Civil War

Images

- Historical figures and events
- Landscape pictures of geographic places featured in this lesson
- Soldier uniforms, weaponry, flags
- Grade-level appropriate depictions and photographs of figures at various scenes and moments and in battle
- Maps: overall strategies
- Relevant forts
- Reenactment photos
- Pictures of the Emancipation Proclamation, Gettysburg Address, etc.
- Robert Gould Shaw and the 54th Massachusetts Regiment Memorial
- Lincoln Memorial
- Statue of Abraham Lincoln (Hillsdale College campus)

STORIES FOR THE AMERICAN HEART

- Biographies and roles of Abraham Lincoln, Robert E. Lee, Ulysses S. Grant, and William Tecumseh Sherman in the Civil War
- Robert E. Lee’s denial of Abraham Lincoln’s offer to command the Union forces
- How Stonewall Jackson got his nickname
- Battle of the ironclads
- Fighting at Little Round Top and Pickett’s Charge

*A previous version referred to the USS Merrimack instead of the USS Monitor.
- The writing and delivery of the Gettysburg Address
- Robert E. Lee’s surrender to Ulysses S. Grant at Appomattox Court House
- Assassination of Abraham Lincoln at Ford’s Theatre
- Abraham Lincoln’s funeral train

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

- Why did the Southern states think the Constitution allowed them to leave the United States?
- Why did Abraham Lincoln think that the Southern states cannot leave the country?
- Why was Abraham Lincoln’s first goal for fighting the Civil War to preserve the Union?
- Why was Abraham Lincoln’s second goal for fighting the Civil War to stop the spread of slavery?
- How did Abraham Lincoln keep the Border States in the Union?
- What things were helpful to the Union in the Civil War?
- What things were helpful to the Confederacy in the Civil War?
- How did the Union think they could win the war?
- How did the Confederacy think they could win the war?
- How did soldiers fight each other?
- What was it like to be a soldier in the Civil War?
- What did Clara Barton do during the Civil War?
- What was Robert E. Lee like? Why was he a good general?
- What happened at the Battle of Antietam?
- What was the problem with most of the Union generals early in the war?
- What happened in the battle of the ironclads?
- What was the Emancipation Proclamation and what did it do?
- Why did Abraham Lincoln believe he could free the slaves in the Confederacy?
- How did the Emancipation Proclamation change Lincoln’s goals for the war?
- What happened at the Battle of Gettysburg?
- What was Pickett’s Charge?
- What did Abraham Lincoln say in the Gettysburg Address?
- What was Ulysses S. Grant like? Why was he a good general?
- What happened during the March to the Sea?
- Why were many people not happy with Abraham Lincoln before the 1864 election?
- Why did Robert E. Lee eventually surrender?
- What happened at Appomattox Court House?
- Why did the Union win the Civil War?
- What happened to Abraham Lincoln just a few days after the end of the Civil War?
- Why did John Wilkes Booth shoot Abraham Lincoln? What did he do afterwards?

Questions from the U.S. Civics Test:
- Question 92: Name the U.S. war between the North and the South.
- Question 93: The Civil War had many important events. Name one.
- Question 94: Abraham Lincoln is famous for many things. Name one.
- Question 95: What did the Emancipation Proclamation do?
- Question 96: What U.S. war ended slavery?
KEYS TO THE LESSON

The American Civil War may be the defining event in American history. The outcome of the Civil War determined whether the nation would live according to the principles of liberty, equality under law, and self-government, or reject those truths in favor of slavery, inequality, and tyrannical rule. Students should appreciate this about the bloodiest conflict in their nation’s history. They should also know the stories of the heroic actions both leaders and of ordinary citizens in that war, understand the strategies employed in general and in specific battles, and consider the key moments and factors that led the Union to ultimate victory. Additionally, students have an unmatched opportunity to understand statesmanship through the careful study of Abraham Lincoln’s thoughts, speeches, and actions as he led the nation through the Civil War.

Teachers might best plan and teach the Civil War with emphasis on the following approaches:

- Have students consider the arguments by the South and by Abraham Lincoln regarding the idea of “states’ rights” and the constitutionality of secession. Students should understand that there is no such thing as a “state right,” since rights belong only to persons. States possess powers (not rights) which the states are to use to protect the rights of their citizens (including from encroachment by the federal government by appealing to the Constitution). Lincoln believed secession was unconstitutional and that he, having taken an oath in his office as president, could and must preserve the Constitution and Union.
- Help students to see how the decision by Southern states to secede was largely determined by a small elite or even merely by governors. In Virginia, for example, the governor himself made the decision to secede without consulting the legislature. Moreover, insofar as slavery was the chief interest the South wanted to preserve, only a minority of Southerners owned slaves and even a smaller minority owned a large number of slaves on plantations. The majority of Southerners were not slaveholders and while fighting for their states would preserve slavery, many common Southerners fought for the argument of states’ rights rather than to preserve the institution of slavery.
- Teach students about the delicacy with which Abraham Lincoln had to approach the border states (slave states that remained in the Union) and why this delicacy was needed. Lincoln was mindful of this necessity when he wrote his first inaugural address.
- Explain that although Lincoln as a person was against slavery and wanted it abolished, his first constitutional obligation as president was to preserve the Union. By preserving the Union Lincoln believed, like the Founders and Frederick Douglass, that slavery had the best chance of being abolished.
- Have students think through and compare the various advantages and disadvantages each side had at the outset of the war and how these shifted during the war.
- Build students’ familiarity with the style of warfare in the mid-19th century, and show them plenty of images to do so, being mindful of grade-level appropriateness. Students need this foundation for their subsequent study of battles. This helps them to imagine and understand what happens in battle and to appreciate the bravery of soldiers fighting on both sides.
- Present to students explanations of each side’s strategy at various stages of the war and the tactics and battle plans employed in specific battles.
- As with any conflict, dwell on the key contributions of both leaders and common soldiers in the war, especially Robert E. Lee and Ulysses S. Grant.
• Share with students the unity found within the Union ranks in the cause of the United States and eventually the abolition of slavery. 1.3 million Union men of European ancestry fought in the Civil War and 180,000 African American men volunteered for the Union forces, making up nearly 10 percent of the Union army. Of all Union soldiers, 600,000 were wounded and approximately 360,000 Union men were killed.
• Teach the war, especially the major battles and military campaigns, in some detail. Students should understand how the battles came to be, the key stories, factors, and moments from the battle itself, and the significance of their various outcomes on subsequent events. Employ battle maps often.
• Help students to note the major themes running through the early years of the war, namely how Confederate commanders carried the day repeatedly despite the North’s growing advantages, and how they exhibited military leadership and decisiveness. Students should also appreciate how unpopular Abraham Lincoln was in the North during much of the war.
• Have students come to know Abraham Lincoln, in his personal life, interior thoughts and troubles, and his great love for his country. Students should also think about the thinking and decision-making that makes Lincoln perhaps the greatest statesman in American history.
• Teach students about the Emancipation Proclamation and the technicalities Abraham Lincoln navigated in thinking of it, drawing it up, and timing its promulgation. He had to retain the border states, abide by the Constitution, achieve victory, and earn the support of public opinion in order for slaves to be effectively freed—and he did it all. Students should understand that Lincoln’s justification for freeing the slaves involved exercising his executive powers as commander-in-chief of the armed forces during an armed rebellion. This is why Lincoln only had the authority to apply the Emancipation Proclamation to those states in actual rebellion, why it could not be applied to slave-holding border states not in rebellion, and why he knew that after the war, an amendment to the Constitution would be necessary to bring emancipation to all the states and make it permanent.
• Read aloud with students and discuss the Gettysburg Address. It is a magnificent work of oratory, but it also gets at the heart of the American founding and the ideas that maintain the United States. It also shows the importance of defending and advancing those ideas, both in the Civil War and in our own day, as is incumbent on every American citizen.
• Note the importance of Abraham Lincoln’s choice of Ulysses S. Grant as General-in-Chief of the entire Union Army. Grant’s decisiveness combined with William Tecumseh Sherman’s boldness proved essential in prosecuting the war from late 1863 onward.
• Recap the war by considering major statistics, including the number of causalities and deaths on each side. Ask what stance Americans today should have towards those who fought in the Civil War, distinguishing between Northern soldiers and Southern soldiers. When considering Southern soldiers, be sure to note the tragic death of so many Americans, even if they were fighting for a confederate government dedicated to preserving slavery. As noted previously, most of those doing the actual fighting for the South did not own slaves and believed that they were fighting for their country as well.
• Share some of the main ideas in Abraham Lincoln’s second inaugural address. Lincoln addresses many topics within the speech, both reflecting on the war and outlining a plan for after the war. In some respects, this speech is “part two” of what Lincoln began to assert in the Gettysburg Address. One of the main ideas Lincoln suggests, however, is that the Civil War was a punishment for the whole nation. This punishment was not necessarily for the mere existence of slavery but because, unlike the founding generation, the nation had in the time since the founding not continued to work for the abolition of the evil of slavery. While no country will ever be perfect, a people should work to make sure its laws do not promote the perpetuation of a practice that violates the equal natural rights of its fellow citizens.

- To set up the following unit, outline for students Abraham Lincoln’s preliminary plans for reconstruction, and impress upon students the immense historical consequences of Lincoln’s assassination.

STRENGTHENING UNDERSTANDING: POST-LESSON ACTIVITIES AND ASSIGNMENTS

Activity 1: Find pictures that represent five different scenes from this lesson. Print off enough images for each group of five students to have a set. Give each student in the group a different picture (all groups will have the same five pictures). Have the students arrange the pictures in the order that those events occurred. Once the students have figured out the correct order of events, have students line up in order and go over the order of events as a class. Conclude the activity by asking students how they knew what event the picture was portraying. Ask students how they remembered the order of events/what they did to figure out the correct order. If there are groups that did not figure out the correct order, ask those students questions in order to move them to the correct sequence.

Activity 2: Provide students with copies of a map that can also be projected on the board. Review with students the events of the war and where certain battles took place. As a class, mark on the map on the board and have students do the same on their own maps. Make indications about who won each battle and review with students how the battle went and what its significance was.

Activity 3: Conduct a round robin reading of the Gettysburg Address. Then discuss it with students and begin to have them learn parts of the speech by heart. Plan two days for each student to recite their parts aloud.

______

Assignment 1: Have students and parents complete a “Talk about History” assignment in which parents ask their child a series of questions about what they learned in history from a given lesson. Parents record the answers and the student returns to school (provided in appendix).

Assignment 2: Have students draw and color a scene of their choice from the Civil War. Have students present briefly in class what they drew, the story behind it, and why they depicted it the way they did.

FORMATIVE QUIZ 2

Provide students with numbered papers. Using the “Review Sheets” in the Appendix, make statements and ask students if they are True or False. Have them draw ☑️ for “True” or ☐️ for “False” next to each number. Review as a class and talk through what makes each answer correct.
Lesson 4 — Reconstruction
1865–1877

4-5 classes

LEsson OBJECTIVE

Students learn about the remarkable fulfillment of civil rights for freedmen during Reconstruction despite the objections of some and then the reversal of many of those realizations in Southern states during Reconstruction and after its end in 1877.

TEACHER PREPARATION

Create a note outline based on the following:

Teacher Texts

Land of Hope Young Reader’s Edition
Chapters 23 and 24

The Story of the Thirteen Colonies and the Great Republic
Pages 196–202

The Civil War and Reconstruction
Pages 274–317

Trade Book

If You Lived at the Time of the Civil War

Online.Hillsdale.edu

The Great American Story
Lecture 11

Civil Rights in American History
Lectures 4 and 5

CORE CONTENT IN THIS LESSON

Geography & Places

Former Confederacy

Persons

Andrew Johnson
Ulysses S. Grant

Hiram Revels
Rutherford B. Hayes

Terms and Topics

Reconstruction
sharecropping

Radical Republicans
black codes

freedmen
scalawags and carpetbaggers

13th, 14th, 15th Amendments
Transcontinental Railroad

military districts
Compromise of 1877

To Know by Heart

“Lift Every Voice and Sing” — James Weldon Johnson
Dates
1865–77  Reconstruction

Images
Historical figures and events
Photographs of African Americans in the south, both in freedom and with the heavy restrictions placed on their freedom

STORIES FOR THE AMERICAN HEART
- The swearing in of Hiram Revels to the U.S. Senate
- Completion of the Transcontinental Railroad at Promontory Point, Utah

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND
- What does reconstruction mean?
- What was the North like after the Civil War?
- What was the South like after the Civil War?
- How did Northerners and Southerners feel about each other after the Civil War?
- What plans did Abraham Lincoln have for Reconstruction?
- What plans did the Radical Republicans have for Reconstruction?
- Why did Andrew Johnson and the Republicans not get along?
- What did a Confederate state have to do in order to rejoin the Union?
- What changes did Republicans make to the Constitution?
- What did the 13th Amendment do?
- How did life improve for African Americans in the South during Reconstruction?
- How did some people and governments in the Southern states continue to try to hurt African Americans during Reconstruction?
- How did Republicans in the North attempt to defend and protect African Americans in the South during Reconstruction?
- How were African Americans in the South forced to fend for themselves?
- What was Ulysses S. Grant’s presidency like?
- What happened in the election of 1876 and the Compromise of 1877?
- How did some people and governments in the Southern states continue to try to hurt African Americans in the South after Reconstruction?
- Questions from the U.S. Civics Test:
  - Question 63: There are four amendments to the U.S. Constitution about who can vote. Describe one of them.
  - Question 97: What amendment gives citizenship to all persons born in the United States?
  - Question 98: When did all men get the right to vote?
  - Question 126: Name three national U.S. holidays.
  - Question 127: What is Memorial Day?
KEYS TO THE LESSON

Even before the battlefield fighting was over, a new kind of struggle would emerge to determine the status of former slaves now made free. In decisive ways, Abraham Lincoln’s assassination was devastating for the prospects of healing the nation while effectively securing the equal rights of freedmen. Not only was the desire for vengeance that Lincoln attempted to abate unleashed against the South, but the Republicans controlling Congress themselves fought bitterly with President Andrew Johnson over the purpose and method of Reconstruction. While some remarkable gains were made for African Americans in the South, particularly in fulfilling in law the core ideas enunciated in the American founding and fought for by the Union, objections to such fulfillments remained, new injustices were established, and the management of Reconstruction was in disarray. The Compromise of 1877 ended the period of Reconstruction, leaving the protections African Americans had gained without federal protection, resulting in decades of restrictions on their rights and liberties.

Teachers might best plan and teach Reconstruction with emphasis on the following approaches:

- Have students consider the effect of Abraham Lincoln’s assassination on Reconstruction and the future of America, especially as regards civil rights for African Americans. Lincoln’s focus was healing the nation while simultaneously providing for the effective and long-term establishment of equal rights for African Americans. Vice President Andrew Johnson succeeded Lincoln after his assassination.

- The transformation of a society away from decades of slavery was no small task. Depict Reconstruction as being tragically undermined and strained by the conflicts between congressional Republicans (who strongly opposed slavery), President Andrew Johnson (a pro-Union Democrat with little sympathy for former slaves), and lawmakers in the Southern states (who mostly wished to restrict the rights of the new freedmen), all of whom operated out of distrust following a painful and bloody Civil War.

- Teach students about each of the Reconstruction Amendments to the Constitution. It is important to note the major and meaningful efforts Northerners made to guarantee the rights of African Americans.

- Teach students about both the important gains and protections Republicans won for African Americans during Reconstruction as well as the ways in which these were undermined by actions in the former confederate states and Johnson himself. Students should gain an appreciation of the remarkable speed and degrees to which former slaves were incorporated into the civil body early in Reconstruction, including the thousands of African Americans who would hold office at the local, state, and even federal level. But they should also understand the ways that Johnson resisted equal treatment of African Americans and in doing so encouraged and allowed certain bad policies (such as “black codes” passed by state legislatures) in the former Confederacy. In fact, many of the reversals of reconstruction began during the presidential reconstruction of Johnson, who was decidedly against secession but by no means opposed to slavery. Congress repeatedly had to override his vetoes and enact Constitutional amendments to prevent his defense of inequalities.

- Have students learn about the ways in which many civil rights achievements were thwarted or undone both during and after Reconstruction. For instance, spend time discussing how as Southerners were refranchised, African American officials were voted out of office and how “black codes” would eventually become Jim Crow laws. Discuss how “black codes” limited freedmen’s civil rights and imposed economic restrictions, including making being unemployed illegal, prohibiting landownership, prohibiting assemblies of freedmen only, prohibiting teaching freedmen to read or write, segregating public facilities, prohibiting freedmen from serving on juries, and carrying out corporal punishments for violators, among other restrictions and injustices. Note also the use of poll taxes and literacy tests to prohibit African Americans from voting.

- Explain how sharecropping made it nearly impossible for freedmen to accumulate enough savings to purchase their own land or set-off on a different pursuit. Moreover, students should be aware of the struggle facing freedmen who were still in a society prejudiced against them, without many possessions or even the ability to read.
- Explain the emergence of efforts to intimidate African Americans and Republicans and their effect on diminishing the political participation of freedmen.
- Teach students how President Ulysses S. Grant tried to prohibit intimidation of freedmen exercising their civil rights. Nonetheless, such measures were usually sloppily enforced.
- At the same time, note the improvements during Reconstruction in building hospitals, creating a public school system, securing civil rights in principle, and fostering community within the freedmen community, especially in marital and family stability and through vibrant churches.
- Explain that Reconstruction effectively ended with the Compromise of 1877 that settled the disputed election of 1876. Congress (now controlled by the Democratic Party) would allow Republican Rutherford B. Hayes to be declared president in exchange for his withdrawing federal troops in former confederate states. Point out that in the backdrop was both continuing Southern resistance and a gradual decrease in Northern zeal for (and political interest in) reform within the South.
- Ask students to consider the tragic nature of Reconstruction: a time of so much hoped for and achieved in applying the principle of equal natural rights was repeatedly undermined and mismanaged, then suddenly ended for political expediency, enabling new forms of injustice in certain areas of the country, after a war to end injustice had consumed the lives of hundreds of thousands of Americans.
- Nevertheless, make sure students do not lose sight of the momentous achievements in liberty, equality, and self-government fulfilled because of the Civil War. Students should appreciate the very significant achievements of Lincoln and the Civil War while looking forward to future generations of Americans who would seek to live up to the fundamental principles of America in their own times.

STRENGTHENING UNDERSTANDING: POST-LESSON ACTIVITIES AND ASSIGNMENTS

Activity 1: Find pictures that represent five different scenes from this lesson. Print off enough images for each group of five students to have a set. Give each student in the group a different picture (all groups will have the same five pictures). Have the students arrange the pictures in the order that those events occurred. Once the students have figured out the correct order of events, have students line up in order and go over the order of events as a class. Conclude the activity by asking students how they knew what event the picture was portraying. Ask students how they remembered the order of events/what they did to figure out the correct order. If there are groups that did not figure out the correct order, ask those students questions in order to move them to the correct sequence.

Assignment 1: Have students and parents complete a “Talk about History” assignment in which parents ask their child a series of questions about what they learned in history from a given lesson. Parents record the answers and the student returns to school (provided in appendix).

Assignment 2: Have students draw and color a scene or figure from this lesson. Have students present briefly what or whom they drew, the story behind it, and why they depicted the scene or person the way they did.
APPENDIX A

Talk about History

Review Sheets

Tests

Writing Assignment
TALK ABOUT HISTORY

Student Name: ___________________________  Due: _____________

Story/Lesson from History: ____________________________________________________________

1. Who/what did you learn about in history class today?
   Student Answer: _________________________________________________________________

2. Who were the most important characters in the story?
   Student Answer: _________________________________________________________________

3. Tell me more about one of those characters.
   Student Answer: _________________________________________________________________

4. Tell me about the most exciting/interesting part of the story today.
   Student Answer: _________________________________________________________________

Parent Signature: ___________________________  Date: _________________

TALK ABOUT HISTORY

Student Name: ___________________________  Due: _____________

Story/Lesson from History: ____________________________________________________________

1. Who/what did you learn about in history class today?
   Student Answer: _________________________________________________________________

2. Who were the most important characters in the story?
   Student Answer: _________________________________________________________________

3. Tell me more about one of those characters.
   Student Answer: _________________________________________________________________

4. Tell me about the most exciting/interesting part of the story today.
   Student Answer: _________________________________________________________________

Parent Signature: ___________________________  Date: _________________
History Assessment and Review in Grades K–2

REVIEWING AND STUDYING

One-page Review Sheets are included in the following materials. Teachers are encouraged to review items on these sheets with students in the days leading up to an assessment. Between reviewing at the beginning of each class period and this review based on the Review Sheets, students should not need to do any additional studying or review. Review Sheets may be sent home, however, if parents wish to review with their students at home.

ASSESSMENT

The method for assessing students on history in grades K-2 depends on the grade level and student ability.

For students who cannot yet read and write:

Option 1: Choose several items from the Review Sheet to ask each student orally. This may be done in private with the same questions while students complete another activity, or it may be administered aloud with the entire class, varying questions for each student.

Option 2: Create a test with images for matching or identifying terms and topics. Read aloud a description or explanation of a Person, Term, Topic, or Story to the whole class and have each student circle or place a number/letter next to the corresponding image on their test. For the Questions, read aloud a statement that would answer the question and ask students if it is True or False. Have them draw 😊 for “True” or 🙁 for “False” next to each statement.

For students who can read and write:

Teachers may administer the tests included in the following materials. It is recommended, especially early in a school year, to have each student complete the test individually, but with the class proceeding together from question to question, each being read aloud by the teacher.
Review Sheet — Unit 4, Test 1

Lesson 1 | The Expansion of Slavery
Lesson 2 | Toward Civil War

Test on ____________

DATES: When did ________________ occur?

1861 Civil War begins

PERSONS: Tell me who ________________ was and what he/she did.

- Abraham Lincoln
- Frederick Douglass
- Harriet Beecher Stowe
- Harriet Tubman
- Stephen Douglas

TERMS AND TOPICS: Tell me what ________________ is/are/was/were and why we learned about it.

- cotton gin
- secession
- abolitionism
- Narrative of the Life of Frederick Douglass
- Uncle Tom’s Cabin
- Underground Railroad
- Bleeding Kansas
- a house divided
- Lincoln-Douglas Debates

STORIES FOR THE AMERICAN HEART: Tell me the story of...

- Biography of Frederick Douglass
- Biography of Abraham Lincoln
- Actions of Harriet Tubman and the Underground Railroad
- The first shots fired on Fort Sumter

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND: Tell me...

- Why many Founders who were against slavery thought that allowing slavery and keeping the Americans united would be the only way eventually to get rid of slavery.
- Why the Founders expected that slavery would eventually die out on its own.
- The name of the invention after the founding that made cotton more valuable and actually increased slavery, which ruined the Founders’ guess that slavery would end on its own.
- What life was like for slaves in the Southern states.
- Who the abolitionists were and what kinds of things they did to try to end slavery.
- Who Harriet Beecher Stowe was and what her book, Uncle Tom’s Cabin, did.
- If Abraham Lincoln was for or against slavery and why.
- What Abraham Lincoln’s childhood was like.
- Why Abraham Lincoln said it was wrong to “not care” about whether people vote for slavery or not.
- What Abraham Lincoln meant when he said that “a house divided against itself cannot stand.”
- What Southern states did after Abraham Lincoln was elected.
- How slavery was the real reason the Civil War was fought.
The American Civil War — Test 1

Lesson 1 | The Expansion of Slavery
Lesson 2 | Toward Civil War

DATES: Circle the year the Civil War began.

A. 1877  B. 1776  C. 1861

PERSONS: Match the person to who he/she was or what he/she did.

A. Frederick Douglass  B. Harriet Beecher Stowe  C. Stephen Douglas

1. ________ Argued that people should vote whether or not to have slavery.

2. ________ An escaped slave who wrote about the horrors of slavery and worked to end slavery.

3. ________ A little lady whose book Uncle Tom’s Cabin let northerners know how bad slavery was.

TERMS AND TOPICS: Match the term to the correct definition, description, or explanation.

A. a house divided  C. Bleeding Kansas  E. Lincoln-Douglas Debates
B. abolitionism  D. cotton gin  F. secession

4. ________ An invention that made Southerners want more slaves to work.

5. ________ When people worked to end slavery.

6. ________ Disagreements over whether people should be able to vote for slavery or not.

7. ________ Fighting about slavery in a western territory.

8. ________ Abraham Lincoln’s worry about America’s divisions hurting the country.

9. ________ When a state tries to leave a country.
STORIES FOR THE AMERICAN HEART: Tell me about Harriet Tubman and the Underground Railroad.

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

10. Tell me why many Founders who were against slavery thought that allowing slavery and keeping the Americans united would be the only way eventually to get rid of slavery.

11. Tell me what life was like for slaves in the Southern states.

12. Tell me who the abolitionists were and what kinds of things they did to try to end slavery.

13. Tell me what Abraham Lincoln’s childhood was like.

14. Tell me how slavery was the real reason the Civil War was fought.
Review Sheet — Unit 1, Test 2

Lesson 3 | The Civil War
Lesson 4 | Reconstruction

Test on _____________

DATES: When did _______________ occur?

1865  Civil War ends

PERSONS: Tell me who _______________ was and what he/she did.

Abraham Lincoln  Clara Barton  John Wilkes Booth
Jefferson Davis  Ulysses S. Grant  Hiram Revels
Robert E. Lee  William Tecumseh Sherman

TERMS AND TOPICS: Tell me what _______________ is/are/was/were and why we learned about it.

Confederate States of America  54th Massachusetts  black codes
ironclads  March to the Sea  scalawags and carpetbaggers Emancipation Proclamation  Reconstruction  Transcontinental Railroad Battle of Gettysburg  13th Amendment  Compromise of 1877
Pickett’s Charge  freedmen

STORIES FOR THE AMERICAN HEART: Tell me the story of...

- The writing and delivery of the Gettysburg Address
- Robert E. Lee’s surrender to Ulysses S. Grant at Appomattox Court House

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND: Tell me...

☐ Why Abraham Lincoln thought that the Southern states could not leave the country.
☐ How soldiers fought each other in the Civil War.
☐ What the problem was with most of the Union generals early in the war.
☐ What Robert E. Lee was like and why he was a good general.
☐ What the Emancipation Proclamation did.
☐ What Ulysses S. Grant was like and why he was a good general.
☐ Why the Union won the Civil War.
☐ What Reconstruction was.
☐ Why Andrew Johnson and the Republicans did not get along.
☐ How life improved for African Americans in the South during Reconstruction.
☐ How some people and governments in the Southern states tried to hurt African Americans during and after Reconstruction.
The American Civil War — Test 2

Lesson 3 | The Civil War
Lesson 4 | Reconstruction

DATES: Circle the year the Civil War ended.

A. 1877  B. 1865  C. 1860

PERSONS: Match the person to who he/she was or what he/she did.

A. Abraham Lincoln  B. Robert E. Lee  C. Ulysses S. Grant

1. ________Led the Confederate Army of Northern Virginia through the entire Civil War.

2. ________Led Union army to victory later in the Civil War.

3. ________Was President of the United States during the Civil War.

TERMS AND TOPICS: Match the term to the correct definition, description, or explanation.

A. Confederate States of America  B. Emancipation Proclamation  C. Battle of Gettysburg  D. Reconstruction  E. 13th Amendment  F. Compromise of 1877

4. ________What the Southern states called themselves during the Civil War.

5. ________Abraham Lincoln’s order freeing the slaves in the South.

6. ________A very bloody conflict where the Union army stopped the invasion of the Southern army.

7. ________The time after the Civil War.

8. ________Changed the Constitution to make slavery illegal everywhere in America.

9. ________Ended Reconstruction and many protections for former slaves in the South.
STORIES FOR THE AMERICAN HEART: Tell me the story of Robert E. Lee’s surrender to Ulysses S. Grant at Appomattox Court House.

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

10. Tell me how soldiers fought each other in the Civil War.

11. Tell me what Robert E. Lee was like and why he was a good general.

12. Tell me what Ulysses S. Grant was like and why he was a good general.

13. Tell me why the Union won the Civil War.

14. Tell me why Andrew Johnson and the Republicans did not get along.
Writing Assignment — The American Civil War

Due on ______________

Why did Americans fight a civil war? What did northerners and President Lincoln do by winning the Civil War?
APPENDIX B

Primary Source

Abraham Lincoln
On the Consecration of the Soldiers’ National Cemetery

November 19, 1863

Soldiers’ National Cemetery | Gettysburg, Pennsylvania

Gettysburg Address

BACKGROUND

Abraham Lincoln delivered these remarks at the dedication of the Union cemetery for those soldiers killed in the Battle of Gettysburg in the summer of 1863.

ANNOTATIONS

Four score and seven years ago our fathers brought forth, on this continent, a new nation, conceived in Liberty, and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal.

Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that nation, or any nation so conceived, and so dedicated, can long endure. We are met on a great battle-field of that war. We have come to dedicate a portion of that field, as a final resting-place for those who here gave their lives, that that nation might live. It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this.

But, in a larger sense, we can not dedicate—we can not consecrate—we can not hallow—this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here, have consecrated it far above our poor power to add or detract. The world will little note, nor long remember what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here. It is for us the living, rather, to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus far so nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us—that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they here gave the last full measure of devotion—that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain—that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom—and that government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth.

---

3rd-5th Grade
American History

4 units | 30-40-minute classes

Overview

Unit 1 | The British Colonies of North America
37–41 classes

Lesson 1  The Lands, Waters, and Peoples of America
Lesson 2  1492–1630  Exploration and Settlement
Lesson 3  1630–1732  The Colonies in Profile
Lesson 4  1607–1763  Major Events in the Colonies

Unit 2 | The American Founding
35–39 classes

Lesson 1  1763–1776  Self–Government or Tyranny
Lesson 2  1776  The Declaration of Independence
Lesson 3  1776–1783  The War of Independence
Lesson 4  1783–1789  The United States Constitution

Unit 3 | The Early Republic
Coming Soon!
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Lesson</th>
<th>Year Range</th>
<th>Topic</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Lesson 1</td>
<td>1848–1854</td>
<td>The Expansion of Slavery</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lesson 2</td>
<td>1854–1861</td>
<td>Toward Civil War</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lesson 3</td>
<td>1861–1865</td>
<td>The Civil War</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lesson 4</td>
<td>1865–1877</td>
<td>Reconstruction</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
UNIT 1
The British Colonies of North America
1492–1763

UNIT PREVIEW

Structure

LESSON 1  The Lands, Waters, and Peoples of America  6–7 classes  p. 7
LESSON 2  1492–1630 Exploration and Settlement  9–10 classes  p. 11
LESSON 3  1630–1732 The Colonies in Profile  9–10 classes  p. 19
LESSON 4  1607–1763 Major Events in the Colonies  9–10 classes  p. 27
APPENDIX A  Study Guide, Test, and Writing Assignment  p. 33
APPENDIX B  Primary Source  p. 45

Why Teach the British Colonies of North America?

Christopher Columbus’s discovery of what was then termed “The New World” is one of the most consequential events in all of recorded history. It was as if another half of Earth was being opened to the peoples of Europe, Africa, and Asia, and the changes that followed this momentous discovery were immense. Students should be especially aware of the profound effects of the initial contact of European explorers with the indigenous peoples of North America. They should understand the ways of life characteristic of Native American tribes, the exploits of European explorers and settlers, and the triumphs and tragedies that defined the relationships between settlers and natives. Students should also study closely the manner in which the British colonies of North America were established, since those first settlements would be the seedbed of our country. Our unique American heritage began here, on these coasts, among scattered settlements of men and women pursuing economic independence or religious freedom, leaving behind their familiar lives to seek liberty and opportunity at what to them was the edge of the world. With the promise of freedom at these far reaches also came untold hardships and daily dangers. The American story begins with those few who braved these risks for the freedom to pursue what all human beings desire to attain: happiness.

Enduring Ideas from This Unit

1. America’s varied and wondrous geography has played a crucial role in many of America’s successes.
2. The discovery, exploration, and settlement of the Western Hemisphere was one of the most consequential series of events in human history.
3. The contact between indigenous North American and European civilizations resulted in both benefits and afflictions for natives and colonists alike.
4. The British colonies of North America were unique, and their circumstances gradually shaped the character of the colonists into something unprecedented: the American.
5. The freedom afforded to the American colonists resulted in a degree of successful self-government unknown to the rest of the world in 1763.

What Teachers Should Consider

Imagine two more continents, an eighth and a ninth, with different terrain, untouched resources, seemingly limitless lands, and complete openness to any sort of political regime. This is the vision teachers might consider adopting in preparing students to learn American history. In other words, one can adopt an outlook similar to that of the people who began the first chapter in the story of America. Such an outlook will help students to see the origins of America as something that was fluid and not at all inevitable.

In the same way the explorers, settlers, and indigenous Native Americans keenly fixed their attention on the contours of the North American landscape, so should students of American history at the outset of their studies. A close study of American geography sets the stage on which Americans of every generation would act out their lives.

Europeans’ exploration and settlement of the Western Hemisphere is an extraordinary era in terms of historical impact, but it also contains engaging stories of intrepid discoverers and of the conditions they found and helped to shape. It is important to find the proper balance in conveying the story of that era. Students ought to step into the lives of these explorers and settlers and understand not only their motivations for undertaking such hazardous trips and ways of living but also their experiences on the Atlantic and on the fringes of an unknown continent. They should also think carefully and honestly about the interactions between Native Americans, explorers, and settlers. They will encounter a mixed picture. At times, they will see cooperation, care, and mutual respect; at other times they will see all the duplicity and injustice that human nature is capable of. They will see these traits exhibited by all parties at various moments and in different circumstances.

Teachers should also focus on making clear the differences between England’s North American colonies and those of other emerging New World empires, such as Spain, France, and Portugal. They should bring out what was unique among the English settlers, from the form of their colonies’ settlements to the social and economic ventures of the colonists themselves, as well as their varied relationships to the mother country. Each English colony may be taught separately, each offering a distinct social and economic profile, while a final lesson may be devoted to studying the major events and movements in shared colonial American history. Together, students should come to see that an unplanned experiment was unfolding in the British colonies of North America: one that was shaping a unique society and citizenry, one that would be equipped for great accomplishments in the coming centuries.

How Teachers Can Learn More

TEXTS

Land of Hope, Wilfred McClay
The Formative Years, 1607–1763, Clarence Ver Steeg
Freedom Just Around the Corner, Walter McDougall

ONLINE COURSES | Online.Hillsdale.edu

The Great American Story
American Heritage

Lesson Planning Resources

TEACHER RESOURCES

Land of Hope Young Reader’s Edition, Volume 1, Wilfred McClay
The Geography of the United States, Core Knowledge
The Story of the Thirteen Colonies and the Great Republic, H.A. Guerber
Colonial Times, Anne Goudvis and Stephanie Harvey
The American Revolution and Constitution, Anne Goudvis and Stephanie Harvey
The Age of Exploration, Core Knowledge
A Jamestown Time Capsule, Jessica Freeburg
Pilgrims: Magic Tree House Fact Tracker, Mary Pope Osborne
Science on the Mayflower, Tammy Enz
STUDENT RESOURCES

The Landing of the Pilgrims, James Daugherty
Meet George Washington, Joan Heilbroner
Ben Franklin of Old Philadelphia, Margaret Cousins

TRADE BOOKS

Exploration & Conquest, Betsy Maestro
Discovery of the Americas, Betsy Maestro
Aboard the Santa Maria, Kate Mikoley
James Towne, Marcia Sewall
If You Sailed On the Mayflower, Ann McGovern
Aboard the Mayflower, Theresa Emminizer
If You Lived With the Iroquois, Ellen Levine
The New Americans, Betsy Maestro
If You Lived in Colonial Times, Ann McGovern
If You Lived in Williamsburg in Colonial Days, Barbara Brenner
Three Young Pilgrims, Cheryl Harness
The Courage of Sarah Noble, Alice Dalgliesh Struggle for a Continent, Betsy Maestro

PRIMARY SOURCE

The Mayflower Compact
LESSON PLANS,
ACTIVITIES AND ASSIGNMENTS,
AND FORMATIVE QUIZZES
Lesson 1—The Lands, Waters, and Peoples of America

LESSON OBJECTIVE

Students learn about the geography of what would become the United States of America, including its physical contours, climate, advantages for civilization, and its Native American inhabitants.

TEACHER PREPARATION

Create a note outline based on the following:

Teacher Texts
- The Geography of the United States

Online.Hillsdale.edu
- The Great American Story Lectures 1 and 2
- American Heritage Lecture 1

CORE CONTENT IN THIS LESSON

Topographic Geography
- Atlantic Ocean
- San Salvador
- Appalachian Mountains
- Lake Ontario
- Niagara Falls
- Lake Erie
- Chesapeake Bay
- Gulf of Mexico
- Mississippi River
- Lake Huron
- Lake Michigan
- Lake Superior
- Great Lakes
- Great Plains
- Rocky Mountains
- Grand Canyon
- Death Valley
- Mojave Desert
- Pacific Ocean
- Bering Strait
- Hawaiian Islands

Political Geography
- Virginia
- Richmond
- Jamestown
- Maryland
- Annapolis
- Baltimore
- Massachusetts
- Boston
- Plymouth
- Connecticut, Hartford
- Rhode Island, Providence
- Delaware, Dover
- New Hampshire, Concord
- North Carolina, Raleigh

6–7 classes
South Carolina
  Columbia
  Charleston
New Jersey, Trenton
New York
  Albany
  New York City

Pennsylvania
  Harrisburg
  Philadelphia
Georgia, Atlanta
Washington, District of Columbia

Terms and Topics
  glaciers
  land bridge terrain natural resources climate Mayas
  Aztecs

Incas
  Hopewell cities towns countryside

Images
  Maps
  Famous or exemplar landscapes, landmarks, bodies of water in America
  Illustrations of indigenous peoples, civilizations, and life
  Photographs of Aztec, Maya, Inca, Hopewell, and Ancestral Pueblo ruins

STORY FOR THE AMERICAN HEART
  ▪ Christopher Columbus’s crew on their voyage and sighting land

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND
  ▪ What are some of the different kinds of terrain in the American landscape?
  ▪ Why is the American landscape a good place for people to live?
  ▪ How is the terrain different between different regions?
  ▪ Where did the indigenous peoples of North and South America come from? How do we believe they came?
  ▪ How did different groups of Native Americans live?
  ▪ What are some ways in which Native Americans and Europeans lived differently?

KEYS TO THE LESSON

Every story has a setting, and the true story of history is no different. To tell and to teach this story effectively requires first introducing students to the stage on which Americans would act. Thus, American history should begin with a study of American geography. The lesson should transport students to the different places of America, not through an online virtual map but through the use of their own imaginations. Geography instruction is an excellent way to awaken and exercise the imaginations of students, priming them for all the other journeys which studying history will ask their minds to undertake. Every history lesson will involve a similar setting of the stage in the students’ imaginations, and this lesson establishes that precedent. Of course, the lesson also gives students the “lay of the land” for the entire study of American history, beginning with an immersive trip through the country’s magnificent and diverse landscape. This geography lesson can be full of simple questions about what students observe, training them in the skill of careful discernment of detail. At the end of the lesson, the class may return to the virgin topography of the United States and place the various indigenous civilizations on it, learning the smattering of their history that has survived, and then return to the Atlantic and to the Spanish caravels and carracks just over the eastern horizon.

Teachers might best plan and teach The Lands, Waters, and Peoples of America with emphasis on the following approaches:

- Begin by telling a story that will encourage students to use their imaginations and set the precedent for the way class will normally be taught. The story of Christopher Columbus’s crew sighting land is an excellent example. The story may be picked up when Columbus’s three ships are already en route. Paint the scene. Provide descriptions of the ship. Help students get a sense of what sailing was like in those days, and the dangers it involved. Draw out the sounds and smells onboard the ships. Introduce the kind of men on board, the letters and instructions they had with them, and what they may have been thinking from moment to moment. Talk about their captain: his appearance, thoughts, and comportment. Share the story of how recently the crew had nearly mutinied against him, and how he quelled their fears. Describe the sudden appearance of a large flock of birds the previous day. Finally, bring students to the very early morning of October 12, 1492, after the view from the ship’s rail had not changed for weeks, when the call came from the masts, “La tierra!” Land!

- Introduce landmarks, bodies of water, and other physical characteristics, moving from east to west. The items listed under “Topographic Geography” follow in roughly this order. The goal is to make sure students are aware of these landmarks in order to develop an appreciation for the beauty and diversity of their country’s landscape.

- Call upon students’ imaginations by describing the settings of what you introduce with vivid language that engages all their senses. Place them in particular climates with the correct weather depending on the season and discuss the kinds of natural resources and economic activity to which each area is conducive. Record all this information with the class on a physical map handed out to them and on its projection on the board. As the class proceeds from coast to coast, label the map together. Ask plenty of questions in the process. For review, project images of key areas discussed on the map and have students try to identify what is being projected.

- Emphasize with students the tremendous advantages America’s land offers to human flourishing. America had excellent and untouched soils for cultivation, temperature and rainfall averages were ideal, and timber was plentiful. Native plants and animals suitable for human consumption were abundant, while imported livestock thrived. The virgin forests provided all the fuel needed for fires, heating, and cooking, as well as for building. Waterways were plentiful and mostly navigable; their importance cannot be overstated, and students should appreciate that the colonial-era Atlantic world imagined the world primarily in terms of water flow, especially in North America. Most of the country had mild winters with long, warm growing seasons and few areas subject to drought. As for security from foreign powers, the United States would have two massive oceans separating it from most of the rest of the world.

- After covering topography, transition to the modern political map with a new projected map and a corresponding political map handout. In teaching the political map, proceed in the order in which the first thirteen states were settled as colonies, and then in the order in which the remaining thirty-seven became states in the Union. The colonies and their major cities and features should be discussed in detail, while details on the remaining states may be reserved for later grades. Review the topography, weather, climate, and seasons in the process. Discuss how population is distributed across the country, and then group the states into different regions.

- After covering the modern political United States, return to the topographical map and place the indigenous tribes onto the map of North America and into the environments in which the various tribes lived. The diversity of tribes is astounding, and highlighting several communities, particularly on the eastern seaboard, will put students in the right historical context and assist with teaching the events in subsequent lessons.
- Explain how America is and always has been a land of immigrants. Even those who would be considered the indigenous or “native” peoples of both North and South America likely migrated from northeast Asia. Settlements and even great cities of Central and South America emerged in following years as migration resulted in people spreading over the land of the Western Hemisphere.
- Show the range of different Western Hemisphere civilizations through the millennia prior to Christopher Columbus, including their ways of life, customs, and beliefs. In conjunction with state and local history, explore the history and traditions of historical Native Americans from the school’s locality or state.
- Conclude this first lesson by reminding students that to Columbus, his crew, and the peoples of Europe, Africa, and Asia in 1492 (and for millennia before), none of this was known to them, and discovering the entirety of the New World would take hundreds of years, even after Columbus’s voyages.

STRENGTHENING UNDERSTANDING: POST-LESSON ACTIVITIES AND ASSIGNMENTS

Activity 1: Complete a physical map of the United States together as a class and study it for a future map assessment (teacher created).

Activity 2: Complete a political map of the United States together as a class (teacher created).

Activity 3: Map major historical indigenous tribes onto a physical map together as a class (teacher created).

Assignment 1: Have students and parents complete a “Talk about History” assignment in which parents ask their child a series of questions about what they learned in history from a given lesson. Parents record the answers and the student returns to school (provided in appendix).

Assignment 2: What natural resources made North America a good place to live? (2–4 sentences)

Assignment 3: Choose two indigenous tribes in North America and describe how the environment in which they lived shaped their lifestyle. (2–4 sentences)
Lesson 2—Exploration and Settlement

1492–1630

9–10 classes

LESSON OBJECTIVE

Students learn about the European exploration of North America and the first English settlement efforts at Roanoke, Jamestown, Plymouth, and Massachusetts Bay.

TEACHER PREPARATION

Create a note outline based on the following:

Student Text
Selections
The Landing of the Pilgrims and Colonial Times
Primary Source
See below.

Teacher Texts

Land of Hope Young Reader’s Edition, Volume 1
Pages 3–11, 15–25
The Story of the Thirteen Colonies and the Great Republic
Pages 11–44, 56–57
Colonial Times
The Age of Exploration
Pages 2–47, 54–65
The Landing of the Pilgrims
A Jamestown Time Capsule
Pilgrims: Magic Tree House Fact Tracker
Science on the Mayflower

Trade Books

Exploration & Conquest
Discovery of the Americas
Aboard the Santa Maria
James Towne
If You Sailed On the Mayflower
Aboard the Mayflower

Online.Hillsdale.edu

The Great American Story
Lecture 2
American Heritage
Lecture 2

STUDENT PREPARATION

Assignment 1: Students look at images of Spanish or Portuguese caravels and describe some challenges explorers may have faced while crossing the Atlantic Ocean.
Assignment 2: Students look at a world map prior to Christopher Columbus and describe why his theories of navigation may have seemed unbelievable according to many Europeans.

Assignment 3: Students pre-read selections from The Landing of the Pilgrims (based on grade level reading ability).

Assignment 4: Students pre-read the Mayflower Compact (based on grade level reading ability).

Assignment 5: Students look at “The first Thanksgiving 1621” painting by Jean Leon Gerome Ferris and discuss the goodwill of the Native Americans and its reciprocation by the Pilgrims.

Assignment 6: Students pre-read selections from Colonial Times (based on grade level reading ability).

Core Content in This Lesson

Geography & Places
- Genoa
- San Salvador/Watling Island
- “The New World”
- La Florida
- St. Augustine
- Virginia
- Roanoke
- Chesapeake Bay
- Jamestown
- Plymouth
- Massachusetts Bay
- Boston

Persons
- Leif Erikson
- Ferdinand and Isabella
- Christopher Columbus
- John Smith
- Pocahontas
- Lord De La Warr
- John Rolfe
- William Bradford
- Massasoit
- John Winthrop

Terms and Topics
- caravel
- merchants
- nation-states
- Niña, Pinta, and Santa María
- Taíno
- “Indians”
- conquistadors
- Columbian Exchange
- smallpox
- Virginia Company
- indentured servants
- Powhatan
- “Starving Time”
- tobacco
- House of Burgesses
- Pilgrims
- Mayflower
- religious freedom
- self-government
- Wampanoag
- Puritans

Primary Source
- The Mayflower Compact
To Know by Heart

“We must consider that we shall be as a city upon a hill. The eyes of all people are upon us.” —John Winthrop

Timeline

1492       Columbus lands on San Salvador Island
1607       Jamestown settled
1620       Pilgrims settle Plymouth

4th Thursday in November       Thanksgiving Day

Images

Historical figures and events
World map prior to Columbus
Caravel and carrack
Maps of Columbus’s voyages and other exploration
Dress of Native Americans, explorers, and settlers
Illustrated map of Jamestown
Mayflower
Mayflower Compact facsimile
First Thanksgiving

Stories for the American Heart

• Christopher Columbus’s account of making landfall
• The Lost Colony of Roanoke
• John Smith’s account of the founding of Jamestown
• The “Starving Time” at Jamestown
• Pocahontas, John Smith, and John Rolfe
• The voyage of the Mayflower
• Signing of the Mayflower Compact
• William Bradford’s account of going ashore at Plymouth
• The first winter at Plymouth
• Accounts of the First Thanksgiving by Edward Winslow and William Bradford

Questions for the American Mind

• Why did Europeans begin exploring the ocean in the 1400s?
• What was Christopher Columbus’s theory about the fastest route to Asia?
• Why was exploration, especially by sailing west, so dangerous?
• How did Christopher Columbus’s voyages change the world?
• Was Christopher Columbus successful? Why or why not?
• How did England settle the New World? How was it different from other countries?
• Why did settlers want to establish Jamestown?
• What problems did Jamestown’s settlers face?
- What events helped Jamestown to succeed?
- What two things both happened in Jamestown in 1619?
- What is “self-government”?
- Why did the Pilgrims want to establish Plymouth?
- Why did the Pilgrims create the Mayflower Compact?
- How did the First Thanksgiving come about? Why?
- Why did John Winthrop say that the settlers at Massachusetts Bay were like “a city upon a hill”?
- Questions from the U.S. Civics Test:
  - Question 73: The colonists came to America for many reasons. Name one.
  - Question 74: Who lived in America before the Europeans arrived?
  - Question 75: What group of people was taken and sold as slaves?

Keys to the Lesson

Christopher Columbus’s discovery of the New World was one of the signal achievements of the age of exploration. Enterprising commoners who followed in his wake braved the seas and these wild lands for their own fortunes and opportunity. Nearly one hundred years would pass before the English would attempt a permanent settlement in North America and another two decades before they found any success. Yet while Jamestown was founded chiefly on economic motives, the next two decades would see the Plymouth and Massachusetts Bay colonies founded, at least in part for religious and cultural ends. What was common to all these efforts was the desire for freedom to better their conditions—both the quality of earthly life and the preparation for eternal life. Put differently, they desired the freedom to seek happiness, made available to the common man in ways that had no parallel in the Old World.

Teachers might best plan and teach Exploration and Settlement with emphasis on the following approaches:

- Begin the teaching of American history by helping students gain historical perspective. Using the following reference points, ask them to compare today’s way of life with life in the centuries prior to the 1600s.
  - ability to believe and act on one’s beliefs without fear of arrest or worse
  - ability to speak one’s mind without fear of arrest or worse
  - acquisition of clothing, food, and shelter
  - communication by internet, text, phones, mail
  - electricity, plumbing, heating, cooling
  - travel by plane, car, boat, horse and buggy, walking
- Offer students some background on the reasons why Europeans began exploring in the first place. Reasons include a newfound daringness in European thought and culture, trade interests in Asia, Muslim control of land routes, newly emerging and competing monarchs, growing prosperity among an expanding middle class, and new maritime technology. Riding these currents, many were inspired to turn to the seas in search of what was beyond, first along the African coast, and then across the Atlantic. A short review of explorers who predated Christopher Columbus may be helpful.
- Relay to students the background to Christopher Columbus. Of important note is the attention he gave to new theories of navigation and the size, but not the shape, of the world. It is a misconception that many people believed the Earth was flat during Columbus’ lifetime. Most educated people since the ancient Greeks believed the world was round. Columbus theorized the world was much smaller than others believed. This led him to surmise that it would be possible to travel to the East Indies by sailing west.

- Of Columbus’s first voyage, help students to imagine what he was doing and what his crew was undertaking as well. It was far from certain that they would find the route Columbus sought, or that they would survive trying. Even then, Columbus was confident of his theories and of his ability.
- Share the stories of each of Columbus’s four voyages, marking the gradual decline in success, based on the stated goals of each trip.
- Consider Columbus’s role in establishing the first enduring links between the Old and New Worlds, initiating European civilization’s influence on the Western Hemisphere. Additionally, his enterprising spirit has epitomized a quintessentially American trait to the American people.
- Explore with students the history of interactions between the indigenous peoples of North and South America and European explorers and settlers. Of paramount importance is that students not paint with too broad of a brush. The relationships varied widely. Many interactions and relationships were mutually respectful and cooperative. Others were brutal and unjust. Often the relations between the same groups ebbed and flowed between friendship and conflict over time. Ask why misunderstandings, duplicity, and conflict between very different peoples and cultures—and between fallible individuals of all sorts—might arise.
- In addition to conflicts, discuss also the indigenous people’s lack of acquired immunity to diseases, notably smallpox, which most Europeans had been conditioned to survive.
- Highlight the later years of Columbus’s life, including his removal as commander in Spanish-claimed territories, his shipwreck and stranding on Jamaica for a year, and Spain’s unwillingness to commission any further expeditions under his command. Columbus died as an abject failure in the eyes of the world and likely in his own eyes, as he never did find a passage to Asia yet also did not understand that what he had discovered was another half of planet Earth. Note how his sailings along the isthmus of Panama left him, unknowingly, just a few dozen miles from the vast Pacific Ocean, the existence of which he knew nothing.
- Review other explorations between Columbus and the beginning of English settlement efforts in the late 1500s. Study Ponce de Leon’s discovery of Florida and the eventual settlement at St. Augustine, marking the first European presence in the future United States. Students need not study all of these events in detail, but they should grasp the overall strategy that Spain, Portugal, and even France adopted toward exploring and settling the New World, namely, a top-down, economically motivated approach under the direct centralized control of their respective monarchies. It will be important to contrast this approach with that of the English in the next lesson.
- Trace the paths of various explorers into the future states of America, particularly in Florida and the West. The presence of Catholic missionaries is of special note, highlighting one motivation for exploration.
- Recount the first English effort to establish a permanent settlement in North America in the colony of Roanoke, which famously disappeared with barely a trace after a brief four-year existence.
▪ Recount the founding of Jamestown as emblematic of one important motivation for the English to establish a colony: material opportunity for the lower classes. Land ownership by common folk was extremely rare in almost all of Europe, and economic mobility itself was a relatively new and rare phenomenon. The organizers and settlers of Jamestown embodied the enterprising spirit that would come to define emigrants from England to North America, and, for that matter, millions of immigrants throughout America’s history. This degree of opportunity for the ordinary person was unprecedented. It partly explains why so many European commoners left what was familiar and risked the greater likelihood of an earlier death to pursue it. The Jamestown settlers exemplified the idea of pursuing “the American dream.”

▪ Help students to appreciate the several periods when Jamestown was on the verge of failing and the many deaths incurred despite its eventual success. Of particular note was Jamestown’s original experiment with a form of communism. This collectivism, plus rampant disease, helped produce a disastrous first year and a half for the fledgling settlement. John Smith’s requirement that settlers earn their bread by their work and his guarantee of private property ownership, along with some much-needed assistance from the local Native Americans, not only saved the settlement but also became quintessentially American traits, both in law and in the character of the people. But even this near disaster paled in comparison to what was known as the “Starving Time,” in which failure was averted only by a return to the rule of law under Lord De La Warr. The turning point for Jamestown was the successful cultivation of tobacco by John Rolfe. While not the gold many settlers had originally envisioned, the crop would both shore up Jamestown’s existence and spread the news among the English and other Europeans that opportunities were present and realizable in English Virginia.

▪ Consider how the year 1619 at Jamestown offers a profound insight into colonial America:
  - On the one hand, it was in 1619 that the first enslaved Africans, having been taken from a Portuguese slave ship on route to Mexico by an English privateer, landed at Jamestown.
  - On the other hand, it was also in 1619 at Jamestown that the Virginia House of Burgesses first convened, marking the beginning of representative self-government in the colonies. This self-government would flourish for more than 150 years as the British colonists of North America largely governed themselves and developed the thoughts, practices, and habits of a self-governing people. Be sure to discuss what is meant by “self-government.”

▪ Show how the founding of Plymouth was emblematic of the other important motivation for Englishmen to establish a colony: religion. In the wake of the Protestant Reformation, the Christian world was divided, with various forms of strife and severe restrictions on religious belief and practice. In England, these divisions were within Protestantism itself, with Puritans wishing to purify the Church of England of remaining Catholic trappings and Separatist Puritans (whom we call Pilgrims) seeking to establish a new, true Church of England. It was this latter group that sought not only the freedom to practice their form of Anglicanism but also to re-found the Church in the New World.

▪ Spend some time with the Mayflower Compact, signed off the coast of Cape Cod before the settlers went ashore. Emphasize the English tradition of the rule of law and of forms of democratic expression traced back at least to the Magna Carta. Facing a lawless wilderness with families to protect and ex-convicts in their midst, the Pilgrims resorted to that English tradition of self-government under the rule of law—a social contract among themselves—with God as its ultimate judge. Both the Pilgrims at Plymouth in 1620 and the convening of the Virginia House of Burgesses down the coast at Jamestown in 1619, the first two successful English settlements, almost immediately practiced self-government. Self-government under law was therefore present at the very inception of America, a fact that makes America unique.

- Note the terrible first winter the Pilgrims suffered at Plymouth, and how the Wampanoag Indians truly saved those who did survive. The next year, with the help of the Wampanoag, was a tremendous success, which Pilgrims and Native Americans together celebrated, and for which they gave thanks to God in what is considered America’s First Thanksgiving (notwithstanding a similar celebration in Spanish Florida in the previous century). Share accounts of this festive Thanksgiving from Edward Winslow and William Bradford.

- Finally, discuss the founding of Massachusetts Bay Colony and the leadership of its first governor, John Winthrop. Like the Pilgrims, these Puritans were fierce critics of the Church of England. Unlike the Pilgrims, however, the Puritans at Massachusetts Bay sought not to separate from the Church of England but to establish a community that would help purify and correct the Church of England while remaining a part of it. As evident in Winthrop’s “A Modell of Christian Charity,” New England would convert Old England by its example. Together with Jamestown and Plymouth, the English had a beachhead in the New World, and the news spread far and wide across the Atlantic.

STRENGTHENING UNDERSTANDING: POST-LESSON ACTIVITIES AND ASSIGNMENTS

Activity 1: Assign each student a different event to draw from the years between Columbus’ landing in San Salvador through the First Thanksgiving. Then have students arrange themselves in the correct order of events in class and have each present briefly what they drew, the story behind it, its relationship to other scenes, and why they depicted it the way they did.

Activity 2: Using a printed map, have students draw the Columbian Exchange and list or draw several products that would be traded from the Americas to the Old Word and vice versa.

Assignment 1: Have students and parents complete a “Talk about History” assignment in which parents ask their child a series of questions about what they learned in history from a given lesson. Parents record the answers and the student returns to school (provided in appendix).

Assignment 2: What were the primary motivations of the Jamestown settlers? What were the primary motivations of the Plymouth and Massachusetts Bay settlers? What were the similarities and differences between these two groups’ motivations? (2–4 sentences)

Assignment 3: What are some of the reasons Jamestown nearly failed in its early years? What strategies did men like John Smith and Lord De La Warr use to save the young colony? (2–4 sentences)

Assignment 4: Retell the story of the First Thanksgiving and Algonquian’s role in saving the Pilgrims who survived the harsh winter (2–4 sentences).
Formative Quiz 1

MATCHING: Write the letter of each definition to the correct word it defines.

_____ Virginia Company
A. a cash crop exported from Virginia to Europe

_____ “starving time”
B. a document in which the Pilgrims organized themselves under the rule of law

_____ Mayflower Compact
C. a period in which many of Jamestown colonists died

_____ tobacco
D. Englishmen who combined their resources to finance travels to England’s first successful colony

_____ House of Burgesses
E. first convened in 1619 and marked the beginning of representative self-government in the colonies

SHORT ANSWER: Answer the following in complete sentences.

1. Why did Europeans begin exploring the ocean in the 1400s?

_________________________________________________________________________________
_________________________________________________________________________________

2. Was Christopher Columbus successful? Why or why not?

_________________________________________________________________________________
_________________________________________________________________________________

3. What events helped Jamestown to succeed?

_________________________________________________________________________________
_________________________________________________________________________________

4. Why did the Pilgrims want to establish Plymouth?

_________________________________________________________________________________
_________________________________________________________________________________

5. Why did John Winthrop say that the settlers at Massachusetts Bay were like “a city upon a hill”?

_________________________________________________________________________________
Lesson 3—The Colonies in Profile

LESSON OBJECTIVE

Students learn about the thirteen colonies that would become the United States of America, including their foundings and ways of life for colonists.

TEACHER PREPARATION

Create a note outline based on the following:

Student Texts
Selections

Teacher Texts

Land of Hope Young Reader’s Edition, Volume 1
The Story of the Thirteen Colonies and the Great Republic
Colonial Times

Trade Books

If You Lived With the Iroquois
The New Americans
If You Lived in Colonial Times
If You Lived in Williamsburg in Colonial Days
Three Young Pilgrims

Online.Hillsdale.edu

The Great American Story
American Heritage

STUDENT PREPARATION

Assignment 1: Students pre-read selections from Colonial Times (based on grade level reading ability).

Assignment 2: Students look at images displaying the geography of the New England, Middle, and Southern colonies and list the advantages and disadvantages presented by the natural features of each region.
Core Content in This Lesson

Geography & Places
- New Hampshire
- Maryland
- Connecticut
- Rhode Island
- Delaware
- North Carolina
- South Carolina
- New Jersey
- New York
- Pennsylvania
- Philadelphia
- Georgia
- New England Colonies
- Middle Colonies
- Southern Colonies

Persons
- Lord Baltimore
- Roger Williams
- Peter Stuyvesant
- William Penn
- James Oglethorpe

Terms and Topics
- Public education
- Religious freedom
- Township
- Quakers
- Self-government
- Colonial assemblies
- Colonial governors
- Militia
- Triangle Trade
- Indentured servitude
- Chattel slavery
- Slave ships
- Middle Passage
- Individualism
- Aristocracy

Images
- Historical figures and events
- Landscape pictures of geographic places featured in this lesson
- Map of the Triangle Trade
- Depictions of indentured servants and then slaves in the colonies

Stories for the American Heart
- Roger Williams’s efforts to establish religious toleration in Rhode Island
- Stories of Peter Stuyvesant’s governance in New York
- Accounts from the Salem Witch Trials
- Descriptions of slavery and life on a slave ship
- Stories of African Americans who won their freedom in the colonies
- Accounts of life in the different colonies

Questions for the American Mind
- How did the English settle the New World differently than other countries?
- How did many European settlers see the New World as a place of opportunity?
- What is religious freedom or toleration? Why was this special in the colonies compared to other parts of the world?
- Why was it important that colonial children learned to read and think? Why was this special in the colonies compared to children in other parts of the world?
- What was unique about who was able to own property and vote in the colonies compared to other places in the world?
- How did the kind of work colonists vary from region to region?
- What was indentured servitude? How is it similar to and different from slavery?
- What are the origins of slavery in world history?
- How were Africans first enslaved, before being brought to the Western Hemisphere?
- What was it like to be an African on the Middle Passage and then a slave in the New World?
- How were African slaves distributed in the New World? What proportions of Africans were taken to which parts?
- How did slavery gradually expand and become accepted by laws?
- Describe the main characteristics of the “American” colonist? Where did these traits come from?
- How were the colonies’ leading citizens distinct from the leaders in European societies?

Questions from the U.S. Civics Test:
- Question 73: The colonists came to America for many reasons. Name one.
- Question 75: What group of people was taken and sold as slaves?

Keys to the Lesson

Teaching the histories of each colony helps students to understand and appreciate the humble origins of the future United States. It is also very revealing. Students can see in the early histories of many colonies the beginnings of traits that would eventually be hallmarks of American society, law, and citizenry.

Teachers might best plan and teach The Colonies in Profile with emphasis on the following approaches:

- Try to teach the colonies in the order in which they were founded (i.e., as listed above in “Geography and Places”). A map may be projected and distributed to students for reference as the lesson proceeds from colony to colony.
- Compare with students the basic economic differences between French, Spanish, and English colonies; i.e., the native fur trade (France), tributary native labor and precious metals (Spain), and settlement agriculture (England).
- Note the seemingly haphazard approach the English took to colonization, largely shaped by the monarch and parliamentary politics in England at the time of each colonial settlement. For one, colonization was decentralized, and most of the original colonies were established as private property ventures, often sanctioned by the crown but really in the possession of private individuals through joint-stock companies. These were then populated not with government officials or hired agents but with men of all ranks who were also seeking their own opportunity, freedom, and plot of land. Both of these features accounted for the lack of an overall master plan for colonizing North America and marked important departures from the approaches taken by Spain, Portugal, and France. This lack of a plan would become a problem later when England would seek to centralize the administration of the colonies, largely in an effort to raise revenue and enforce the sovereignty of Parliament.
Help students to understand the importance of these traits. Not only did the English approach to colonization trend toward greater independence from the monarchy, it also attracted and encouraged individuals and families who were independent-minded and determined. What the settlers did not bring with them from Europe were the legal class distinctions that defined the aristocratic and monarchical nations they left behind. These individuals (except for their British governors) were common people who immigrated to America seeking their freedom and to better their station in life. The rugged individualism, practice of personal independence, work ethic, and ingenuity to succeed would become well-known American characteristics and in some cases would result in the formation of new colonies by separation from an existing colony, as was the case in New England.

Spend time on what it meant to make a living and survive in the daunting wilderness and how such perseverance shaped the character and mind of the colonists. This would include looking at lifestyles and kinds of work done in the colonies, the type of self-reliance necessary for such lives, and the ways in which Christian religious beliefs contributed to how communities functioned.

Consider how strongly matters of religious faith defined colonial culture, largely because so many came to America to escape the religious persecutions or limitations of the Old World. From the Pilgrims and the Puritans to Roman Catholics and Jews, a wide variety of faiths (most of them Christian and many of whom were intolerant of one another in the Old World) permeated colonial settlements, and their adherents increasingly came to respect one another as neighbors. Establishing this religious freedom in law, moreover, was widespread and exceptional compared to the rest of the world, even while events such as the persecution of the Quakers in Massachusetts still occurred.

Note also for the students that the diversity of religious belief was accompanied by the diversity of immigrants. New York and Rhode Island, for example, were well known for the number of people who had migrated there from many countries other than the British Isles.

Help students appreciate that colonial America was highly literate and that the leading members of colonial society and government were educated in classical thought, ancient and contemporary history, and philosophy and politics (including thinkers of the moderate Enlightenment). Such high levels of literacy and learning were unheard of anywhere else in the world. Important factors that contributed to this high degree of literacy among the people was the insistence on being able to read the Bible, broad support for education, and collegiate preparation.

Emphasize with students the degree of self-government that the colonists exercised. Include in this discussion the meaning of self-government. In brief, the colonists largely governed their own internal affairs (rule over local matters, including taxation, as opposed to international trade and security) through local legislatures and governance structures chosen by the people. This was partly due to the English tradition of legislative authority and the rule of law, the loose and decentralized pattern of British colonial settlements and rule compared to other empires. Another factor at play here was the great distance between London and the American eastern seaboard, which led to long periods of “benign neglect” of the colonies and the further development of local institutions of self-government. While all of the colonies would eventually become official royal colonies with royal governors, colony-wide legislative bodies were prolific, as were local governments such as townships, counties, and cities. Unlike almost every place in the world at that time and in history, the people were to a large extent ruling themselves.

Discuss how private property opportunities and protections enabled commoners to earn their livelihood in freedom and contributed to the characteristics of Americans as industrious and independent.
• Explain to students the several kinds of trade and vocational trades present in the various colonies. Farming was, of course, the main livelihood, but manufacturing, fishing, whaling, shipbuilding, and other trades (particularly in New England) rapidly emerged as key colonial contributions. Trade was principally with England, but the British colonies of North America developed robust trade among one another and with the colonies of other nations as well.

• Share with students the complex patterns of relationship between the colonists and Native Americans. The relationships ran the gamut from friendly to violent, varying widely depending on the tribe involved, with misunderstandings and clashes of cultures and languages. Disagreements abounded over the concepts of communal versus private property. Violent clashes occurred along the edges of the colonial frontier, and cross-frontier retaliations by both sides were not uncommon. Colonists could be caught in conflicts between various Native American tribes, and likewise, Native Americans were often caught in conflicts between European powers. Systematic displacement of Native Americans was usually limited to localities during this period (such as after King Philip’s War in southern New England and through the Indian slave trade on the South Carolina frontier). Displacement over time was primarily due to devastation from disease and gradual, individual settlement westward.

• Mention that a number of colonists criticized some of the ways that colonial governments dealt with Native Americans. These also condemned and sought to remove slavery from their colonies. Arguments for justice toward Native Americans and Africans often cited Christian religious beliefs and moral philosophy.

• Review with students the emergence of chattel slavery during the Renaissance in Europe and through colonization, then address slavery in what would become the future United States. When teaching students about the history of slavery in the British colonies of North America, be mindful of the following:

  - Help students to understand why a full understanding of the human person, of equality, and of justice all make slavery an evil action and practice, violating the principle that all people are equal in their humanity and possession of natural rights. Therefore, no one person may automatically infringe on the humanity or rights of another unless some initial violation of another’s rights has occurred.

  - Discuss the history of slavery in world history, from ancient times through the middle ages and in different places, leading up to the transatlantic slave trade. Portugal first began using African slaves on their sugar plantations off the west African coast, manifesting the chattel and race-based aspects of slavery in European colonies. The slave trade gradually made its way to the various colonies established throughout the Western Hemisphere, particularly with the cultivation of sugar cane in the Caribbean.

  - Ask students to imagine the Middle Passage and the barbarities of slavery and the slave trade. Overall, of the nearly 11 million Africans who survived being brought to the Western Hemisphere, around 3 percent, or about 350,000, were brought to the North American continent, with the majority of all Africans taken to other colonies in the Caribbean and South America.

As mentioned in the previous lesson, the first Africans were brought to Jamestown by an English privateer who had captured a Portuguese slave ship en route from Africa, likely headed for Portugal’s South American colonies.

Discuss the similarities and differences between slavery and indentured servitude. Indentured servitude was a common way for those who could not afford passage or to establish themselves in the New World to tie themselves to a sponsor for a number of years, offering free labor in exchange for passage across the Atlantic and shelter in the colonies. Oftentimes indentured servitude was little different from slavery in its practice, as shown in transcripts from court cases of indentured servants claiming relief from a cruel master.

It would be several decades before a law emerged in the southern colonies that concerned African colonists in particular or the practice of slavery. In 1662, forty-three years after the arrival of the first Africans at Jamestown, Virginia’s commanding general determined that a child born to an enslaved woman would also be a “servant for life,” and in 1668, corporal punishment for slaves was permitted in law. These appear to be the first laws regarding slavery in colonial America.

The transatlantic slave trade grew with the sugar cane plantations of the Caribbean as far back as the early 1500s—plantations which also happened to become England’s most valuable colonies. At the same time, the source of labor shifted away from indigenous peoples, European convicts, and indentured servants to slaves. Although slavery was more widespread in the southern colonies (to grow tobacco and rice) and almost universal in England’s Caribbean sugar plantations, few laws explicitly prohibited the practice in most colonies, at least at certain times in their histories. Consider also the early abolitionist efforts of some colonists, the Quakers, for example.

- Reflect with students on the unique American character that emerged among the free British colonists in North America. The harshness and risk of settling the New World gave them a certain grit and determination, along with an enterprising mind and innovative skill set. The universal demand for trade skills and farming in establishing a new civilization placed the vast majority of colonists within what we would call today the “working class.” In New England especially, colonists’ Protestantism made them widely literate for the sake of reading the Bible, skeptical of human sources of authority, and focused on individual improvement. At the same time, it made them highly idealistic, with many seeking to re-found Christendom. For many colonists, previous persecution granted them a deeper and more passionate sense of justice, of right and wrong. It also made them highly attuned to the politics on which freedom depended. A certain rugged, enterprising, and justice-loving individualism defined the colonists.

- Explain how a sort of unofficial aristocracy emerged throughout the colonies, but an aristocracy open to promotion by the meritorious; that is, based on merit, talent, and virtue instead of mere heredity. This unofficial class of leading citizens was also modeled more on the English gentleman rather than on the courts of continental Europe. Their stations in life ranged from planters in the south, where the aristocratic element was most prevalent, to clergy, merchants, professors, and manufacturers in the north. And in general, all of them were highly learned.
STRENGTHENING UNDERSTANDING: POST-LESSON ACTIVITIES AND ASSIGNMENTS

Activity 1: Assign each student a different colony and have them describe its founding. Then have students arrange themselves in the correct order based on when the colonies were founded. Have each student present briefly who founded the colony and his or their primary motivation for founding that colony.

Activity 2: Using a printed map, have students label each of the colonies and color the colonies using three different colors for each of the different regions: New England, Middle, and Southern colonies.

Assignment 1: Have students and parents complete a “Talk about History” assignment in which parents ask their child a series of questions about what they learned in history from a given lesson. Parents record the answers and the student returns to school (provided in appendix).

Assignment 2: What was religious toleration and why was it important in the colonies? (2–4 sentences)

Assignment 3: What was chattel slavery, where did it come from, and how was it promoted and resisted in the colonies? (2–4 sentences)

Assignment 4: What kind of unofficial aristocracy emerged throughout the colonies, and how did this differ from the aristocracy in Europe? (2–4 sentences)
Formative Quiz 2

Covering Lesson 3
10-15 minutes

MATCHING: Write the letter of each definition to the correct word it defines.

____ indentured servitude
A. an exchange of free labor for passage across the Atlantic and shelter in the colonies

____ self-government
B. England’s loose control over the American colonies

____ James Oglethorpe
C. politically deciding one’s internal affairs

____ The Middle Passage
D. the route by which Africans were taken to the Americas from Africa

____ salutary neglect
E. tried to set up a debtor’s haven in Georgia

SHORT ANSWER: Answer the following in complete sentences.

1. How did many European settlers see the New World as a place of opportunity?

_________________________________________________________________________________
_________________________________________________________________________________

2. Why was it important that colonial children learned to read and think?

_________________________________________________________________________________
_________________________________________________________________________________

3. What was unique about who was able to own property and vote in the colonies compared to other places in the world?

_________________________________________________________________________________
_________________________________________________________________________________

4. What are the origins of slavery in world history?

_________________________________________________________________________________
_________________________________________________________________________________

5. How did slavery gradually expand and become accepted by laws?

_________________________________________________________________________________
_________________________________________________________________________________
Lesson 4—Major Events in the Colonies

1607–1763

9–10 classes

LESSON OBJECTIVE

Students learn about the major events and movements in colonial America and further study the ideas and experiences that were shaping the colonists in the 1600s and 1700s.

TEACHER PREPARATION

Create a note outline based on the following:

Student Texts

Land of Hope Young Reader’s Edition, Volume 1
Meet George Washington
Ben Franklin of Old Philadelphia

Teacher Texts

Land of Hope Young Reader’s Edition, Volume 1
The Story of the Thirteen Colonies and the Great Republic
The American Revolution and Constitution

Trade Books

Struggle for a Continent
The Courage of Sarah Noble

Online.Hillsdale.edu

The Great American Story
American Heritage

STUDENT PREPARATION

Assignment 1: Students pre-read selections from The American Revolution and Constitution (based on grade level reading ability).

Assignment 2: Students draw, label, and color on a map the approximate extents of Spanish, French, and English claims in North America up until 1754.

Assignment 3: Students pre-read selections from Meet George Washington (based on grade level reading ability).

Assignment 4: Students pre-read selections from Ben Franklin of Old Philadelphia (based on grade level reading ability).
CORE CONTENT IN THIS LESSON

Geography & Places
- Appalachian Mountains
- Allegheny Mountains
- Ohio River Valley
- The Great Lakes
- Canada
- Mississippi River
- Quebec
- Montreal
- Duquesne

Persons
- Jonathan Edwards
- George III
- George Washington
- Benjamin Franklin

Terms and Topics
- King Philip’s War
- English Civil War
- Bacon’s Rebellion
- Glorious Revolution
- English Bill of Rights
- “salutary neglect”
- representation
- self-government
- The Great Awakening
- French and Indian War
- Iroquois Confederacy
- Battle of Jumonville Glen
- Albany Congress
- Fort Duquesne
- Treaty of Paris

To Know by Heart
Selections from George Washington’s “Rules of Civility & Decent Behavior in Company and Conversation,” such as:
- “Be not apt to relate news if you know not the truth thereof.”
- “Speak not evil of the absent for it is unjust.”
- “Use no Reproachfull Language against any one neither Curse nor Revile.”
- And a rule of each student’s choice regarding eating.

Timeline
- 1688 Glorious Revolution; English Bill of Rights
- 1754–63 The French and Indian War

Images
- Historical figures and events
- Dress of colonists from different periods and places
- Uniforms and munitions of soldiers in the various wars
- Depictions of battles and battlefields
- Colonial assembly buildings
- Depictions of Great Awakening gatherings and revival scenes
STORIES FOR THE AMERICAN HEART

- A sermon by Jonathan Edwards
- George Washington and the cherry tree (legend)
- George Washington’s time as a surveyor
- George Washington’s first battles in the Virginia militia, including his survival and Braddock’s death
- Benjamin Franklin’s autobiography

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

- What was it like to wage war in colonial North America?
- What did the colonists learn from the English Civil War?
- Which ideas from Europe about government influenced the colonists?
- What is “salutary neglect”? Why was it good that England did not pay the colonists much attention?
- What did self-government look like in the colonies?
- How did the Great Awakening help colonists feel like they had more in common than they thought?
- Who fought in the French and Indian War? Why did they fight?
- What was the role of George Washington in the French and Indian War?
- What were the major battles and moments in the French and Indian War?
- What was the Albany Plan of Union? What did it show about the unity of the colonies?
- Why did the British win the French and Indian War?
- How did the Treaty of Paris reshape North America?
- What was good and bad about the territory that the British gained from France?
- Questions from the U.S. Civics Test:
  - Question 85: Benjamin Franklin is famous for many things. Name one.
  - Question 86: George Washington is famous for many things. Name one.

KEYS TO THE LESSON

Having learned about the establishment and characteristics of each colony, students should consider the major influences and events that shaped colonial history. These include, of course, events that occurred within the colonies themselves, but also certain ideas and events in Europe that had significant influence on the colonists, too. Treatment of some general Enlightenment ideas and of the English Civil War does not need to be extensive in an American history class, but students should understand how these events affected and informed the colonists. Once the lesson enters the eighteenth century, special focus should be placed on the events that created in the colonists a sense of independence from Great Britain and of greater dependence on one another, even as they themselves did not fully recognize or articulate these trends. In general, this lesson should help students see what the colonists and colonies had become before they learn about the American founding.

Teachers might best plan and teach Major Events in the Colonies with emphasis on the following approaches:
Review with students the relationships between Native Americans and the settlers. Note the variety of relationships and circumstances over time, helping students to recognize how much time colonial history spans. Disease was the main factor that sent the Native Americans into decline. When significant conflict did occur, it often involved an entangling of rivalries among Native American tribes and those of European powers and their colonies. In light of such conflicts, American colonists in particular were well versed in defending themselves with their own arms and in locally assembled citizen militias.

Teach students about wars that occurred in the New World, either between settlers and Native Americans or with colonies of other countries. A lot of detail is not necessary, but students should appreciate that these wars were significant for those who were endangered by them and left largely to their own defenses. Students should also be introduced to the style, strategy, and tactics of seventeenth- and early eighteenth-century warfare, particularly as waged in North America.

Offer a brief history of the English Civil War, which involved and influenced some of the main political thought of the colonists, as well as the Glorious Revolution a few decades later. These political developments informed the colonists and drew their careful attention to political considerations.

Discuss with students the Magna Carta and the English Bill of Rights to show that there is a long history of understanding that a “fundamental law” exists.

Review or discuss the historical ideas that influenced the colonial leaders. In addition to a Judeo-Christian faith tradition and Greco-Roman philosophy and law, Enlightenment ideas also influenced leading colonists, especially those regarding the sources of power and the purpose of government.

Consider with students the English statesman Edmund Burke’s idea that the colonists in British North America enjoyed a relationship of “salutary neglect” with respect to the English government. They were “neglected” in the sense that they were a month away by sea from England, which meant poor communication and the near impossibility of governing directly. The English also largely overlooked their colonies in North America, sometimes viewing the colonists merely as poor tradesmen, former criminals, religious radicals, and commoners of no noble birth. Compared to England’s Caribbean colonies, they were also far less profitable. England’s preoccupation with rivals Spain and France and her own civil war also left English kings and Parliament with relatively little thought to give the colonies. The mercantilist restrictions on trade, moreover, were seldom fully enforced or even capable of being completely enforced, and the colonies largely traded freely with the world.

Help students understand why this relationship of neglect was not, in Burke’s view, a disadvantage but actually healthy for the colonists. Overall, the colonists were still protected, especially on the seas, by the English. At the same time, however, they were not regulated or administratively directed beyond the general forms of governance; e.g., a royal governor and a local legislature. The colonists were largely free to take the enterprising, individualist spirit of common English settlers and, forced by necessity, to innovate and work hard to pursue livelihoods and security within their own spheres. Laws, moreover, could not wait for a two- or three-month lapse in communication. Colonists were both permitted and forced by circumstances to practice the elements of English law they had brought with them, including a recognition of certain rights and the limits of authority. The colonists had ample talent and opportunity to govern themselves: they had education and a group of leading colonists who were learned in classical thought; they had the English rule of law tradition; and they had general Enlightenment ideas. This tradition of self-government would allow for many generations of practice in self-rule as a feature of daily life. The colonists, therefore, were both used to and deeply practiced in locally governing themselves, replete with the ideas and habits that this process cultivated.

- Briefly spend time reviewing how the colonists governed themselves, including a discussion of what representation is. In general, representation by election determined the composition of the various colonial assemblies, beginning with the Virginia House of Burgesses in 1619. That representative self-government was the norm in the colonies was astonishing compared to the rest of the world and human history and the high degree of participation by the average colonist in local government was widespread.

- Clarify for students that each colony originally did not see itself as part of a shared English colonial political state. Although their own proprietary charters were eventually replaced with royal charters, each colony viewed itself as its own separate entity, only loosely bound to the others by a common mother country and overall shared culture. This view would persist up to the eve of the Revolution.

- Explore with students how the Great Awakening throughout the colonies provided the separate and distinct colonies with something they could hold in common. At the same time, it awakened a passion for right moral conduct and justice that could be attached to any cause.

- Teach students about the various conflicts in which the British colonists of North America found themselves. Spend some time in particular with the French and Indian War. Of special note here is the presence of a young George Washington and the Virginia militia fighting alongside the British regulars. This is a good opportunity to introduce Washington, including his boyhood biography and his exploits in the war, and especially his actions during the attack on General Braddock. The French and Indian War was also important for providing the colonists another shared experience, this time amidst the adversities of war, and for demonstrating increased cooperation and a sense of unity, as evidenced by the Albany Congress. This is also a good place to introduce the architect of the Albany congress and plan, Benjamin Franklin, including teaching about his biography up to this juncture. In addition to fostering advances toward and experiences in united action, the French and Indian War is also of great importance for understanding the circumstances that would lead to the American Revolution.

- Share with students maps showing the transfer of territory to the British Empire through the Treaty of Paris. Discuss with students what this meant for the relative power of Great Britain and France and the new challenges and opportunities inherent in such a sudden change of territory and power.

STRENGTHENING UNDERSTANDING: POST-LESSON ACTIVITIES AND ASSIGNMENTS

Activity 1: Assign each student a different event to draw from the years between The Glorious Revolution and the French and Indian War. Then have students arrange themselves in the correct order of events in class and have each present briefly what they drew, the story behind it, its relationship to other scenes, and why they depicted it the way they did.

Activity 2: Each student chooses one of George Washington’s suggestions from “Rules of Civility & Decent Behavior in Company and Conversation,” recite it by heart, and describe what it means.
Activity 3: Students draw, label, and color on a map the approximate extents of Spanish, French, and English claims in North America after the Treaty of Paris in 1763, and compare the changes to the map they made prior to the French and Indian War.

Assignment 1: Have students and parents complete a “Talk about History” assignment in which parents ask their child a series of questions about what they learned in history from a given lesson. Parents record the answers and the student returns to school (provided in appendix).

Assignment 2: What is “salutary neglect,” and how did it turn out to be a good thing for the colonists? (2–4 sentences)

Assignment 3: Retell the story of the French and Indian War and its effects (2–4 sentences).
APPENDIX A

Talk about History

Study Guide

Test

Writing Assignment
TALK ABOUT HISTORY

Student Name: ___________________________       Due: _______________

Story/Lesson from History: ____________________________________________________________

1. Who/what did you learn about in history class today?
   Student Answer: __________________________________________________________________

2. Who were the most important characters in the story?
   Student Answer: __________________________________________________________________

3. Tell me more about one of those characters.
   Student Answer: __________________________________________________________________

4. Tell me about the most exciting/interesting part of the story today.
   Student Answer: __________________________________________________________________

Parent Signature: ________________________       Date: ________________

TALK ABOUT HISTORY

Student Name: ___________________________       Due: _______________

Story/Lesson from History: ____________________________________________________________

1. Who/what did you learn about in history class today?
   Student Answer: __________________________________________________________________

2. Who were the most important characters in the story?
   Student Answer: __________________________________________________________________

3. Tell me more about one of those characters.
   Student Answer: __________________________________________________________________

4. Tell me about the most exciting/interesting part of the story today.
   Student Answer: __________________________________________________________________

Parent Signature: ________________________       Date: ________________
Study Guide — Unit 1 Test

Lesson 2 | Exploration and Settlement
Lesson 3 | The Colonies in Profile
Lesson 4 | Major Events in the Colonies

Test on ____________

TIMELINE

When given dates in order, match events from a list to the years or dates that they happened.

1492  Christopher Columbus land on San Salvador Island
1607  Jamestown founded
1620  Pilgrims land at Plymouth

PERSONS

Identify each, provide biographical details, and explain what he or she thought or did in specific periods or events.

Christopher Columbus  William Bradford  William Penn
John Smith  Massasoit  James Oglethorpe
Pocahontas  John Winthrop  Jonathan Edwards
Lord De La Warr  Roger Williams  George Washington
John Rolfe  Lord Baltimore  Benjamin Franklin

TERMS AND TOPICS

Identify each and explain its significance to the period of history studied.

Niña, Pinta, and Santa María  Mayflower  Glorious Revolution
Taíno  religious freedom  English Bill of Rights
Columbian Exchange  self-government  “salutary neglect” smallpox  Quakers  representation
Virginia Company  militia  The Great Awakening indentured servants  Triangle Trade  French and Indian War “Starving Time”  chattel slavery  Iroquois Confederacy tobacco  slave ships  Albany Congress colonial assemblies  Middle Passage  Treaty of Paris
House of Burgesses  King Philip’s War
Pilgrims  English Civil War

Copyright © 2022 Hillsdale College. All Rights Reserved.
STORIES FOR THE AMERICAN HEART

Be familiar with each of the following stories.

- Christopher Columbus’s crew on their voyage and sighting of land
- The “Starving Time” at Jamestown
- The voyage of the Mayflower
- The First Thanksgiving
- What it was like on a slave ship on the Middle Passage and what it was like to farm tobacco
- George Washington’s first battles in the Virginia militia, including his survival and Braddock’s death
- Benjamin Franklin’s biography

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

Based on notes from lessons and conversations, answer each of the following.

- Why did Europeans begin exploring the ocean in the 1400s?
- How did Christopher Columbus’s voyages change the world?
- Why did settlers want to establish Jamestown?
- What events helped Jamestown to succeed?
- Why did the Pilgrims create the Mayflower Compact?
- How did the English settle the New World differently than other countries?
- How did many European settlers see the New World as a place of opportunity?
- What is religious freedom or toleration? Why was this special in the colonies compared to other parts of the world?
- Why was it important that colonial children learned to read and think? Why was this special in the colonies compared to children in other parts of the world?
- What was indentured servitude? How is it similar to and different from slavery?
- How were Africans first enslaved, before being brought to the Western Hemisphere?
- What was it like to be an African on the Middle Passage and then a slave in the New World?
- What is “salutary neglect”? Why was it good that England did not pay the colonists much attention?
- What did self-government look like in the colonies?
- How did the Great Awakening help colonists feel like they had more in common than they thought?
- Who fought in the French and Indian War? Why did they fight?
- Why did the British win the French and Indian War?
- How did the Treaty of Paris reshape North America?
The British Colonies of North America — Unit 1 Test

Lesson 2 | Exploration and Settlement
Lesson 3 | The Colonies in Profile
Lesson 4 | Major Events in the Colonies

TIMELINE: Write the letter of each event next to the date or years it took place.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1492</td>
<td>A. Jamestown founded</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1607</td>
<td>B. Pilgrims land at Plymouth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1620</td>
<td>C. Christopher Columbus land on San Salvador Island</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

MATCHING: Write the letter of each definition to the correct word it defines.

- __Columbian Exchange__
  - A. a body of armed citizens prepared for military service at any time
- __smallpox__
  - B. a deadly disease that was brought to the Americas by Europeans and killed many indigenous peoples
- __Virginia Company__
  - C. an English ship that transported the first Pilgrims from England to the New World
- __tobacco__
  - D. an English trading company charted by King James I that founded Jamestown
- __Mayflower__
  - E. cash crop grown in Virginia that ultimately made it successful
- __religious freedom__
  - F. conflict back in their home country that influenced the colonists’ view of government and freedom
- __self-government__
  - G. people have a say in the laws that they have to live under
- __militia__
  - H. the belief held by many colonists that people should be allowed to freely hold religious beliefs and practice religious customs
- __Middle Passage__
  - I. the route by which Africans were taken to the Americas in slavery
- __English Civil War__
  - J. the transfer of diseases, ideas, goods, and peoples between the New World and the Old World following the voyage of Christopher Columbus
MULTIPLE CHOICE: Circle the option that best answers each question.

1. Who required the Jamestown colonists to work for their bread and guaranteed private property ownership?
   a. Ponce de Leon
   b. John Smith
   c. William Bradford
   d. John Winthrop

2. What was the name of the trade pattern between Europe, Africa, and the Americas?
   a. Triangle Trade
   b. Middle Passage
   c. Great Awakening
   d. Glorious Revolution

3. These were made up of elected representatives and allowed the colonies to govern themselves?
   a. joint-stock companies
   b. townships
   c. colonial assemblies
   d. royal charters

4. Who founded the Province of Maryland as a haven for Catholics?
   a. Thomas Hooker
   b. Roger Williams
   c. James Oglethorpe
   d. Lord Baltimore

5. Who wrote the Albany Plan of Union?
   a. Benjamin Franklin
   b. George Washington
   c. Roger Williams
   d. George III

6. What formally ended the French and Indian Wars?
   a. Bacon’s Rebellion
   b. The Glorious Revolution
   c. The Treaty of Paris
   d. The English Bill of Rights
STORIES FOR THE AMERICAN HEART: Tell me about the George Washington’s first battles in the Virginia militia.

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND: Answer the following in complete sentences.

1. How did Christopher Columbus’s voyages change the world?

2. Why did the Pilgrims create the Mayflower Compact?

3. Why was it important that colonial children learned to read and think? Why was this special in the colonies compared to children in other parts of the world?

4. What is “salutary neglect”? Why was it good that England did not pay the colonists much attention?

5. How did the Great Awakening help colonists feel like they had more in common than they thought?
Writing Assignment — The British Colonies of North America

Unit 1

Due on ____________

DIRECTIONS

In one paragraph, retell the story of how the British colonized North America. Be sure to explain the motivations of colonists and how this influenced how they governed themselves.
APPENDIX B

Primary Source

The Pilgrims
THE UNDERSIGNED SUBJECTS OF KING JAMES

Agreement Between the Settlers of New Plymouth

LAW

November 11, 1620

Mayflower | Off the Coast of Cape Cod, Colony of Virginia

The Mayflower Compact

BACKGROUND

The settlers who traveled to the British possession of Virginia on the Mayflower drafted and signed this agreement pertaining to their governance before disembarking in the New World.

ANNOTATIONS

IN THE NAME OF GOD, AMEN. We, whose names are underwritten, the Loyal Subjects of our dread Sovereign Lord King James, by the Grace of God, of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. Having undertaken for the Glory of God, and Advancement of the Christian Faith, and the Honour of our King and Country, a Voyage to plant the first Colony in the northern Parts of Virginia; Do by these Presents, solemnly and mutually, in the Presence of God and one another, covenant and combine ourselves together into a civil Body Politick, for our better Ordering and Preservation, and Furtherance of the Ends aforesaid: And by Virtue hereof do enact, constitute, and frame, such just and equal Laws, Ordinances, Acts, Constitutions, and Officers, from time to time, as shall be thought most meet and convenient for the general Good of the Colony; unto which we promise all due Submission and Obedience.

IN WITNESS whereof we have hereunto subscribed our names at Cape-Cod the eleventh of November, in the Reign of our Sovereign Lord King James, of England, France, and Ireland, the eighteenth, and of Scotland the fifty-fourth, Anno Domini; 1620.

UNIT 2
The American Founding
1763–1789

UNIT PREVIEW

Structure

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Lesson</th>
<th>Period</th>
<th>Topic</th>
<th>Classes</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Lesson 1</td>
<td>1763–1776</td>
<td>Self-Government or Tyranny</td>
<td>9–10</td>
<td>p. 7</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lesson 2</td>
<td>1776</td>
<td>The Declaration of Independence</td>
<td>4–5</td>
<td>p. 14</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lesson 3</td>
<td>1776–1783</td>
<td>The War of Independence</td>
<td>9–10</td>
<td>p. 21</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lesson 4</td>
<td>1783–1789</td>
<td>The United States Constitution</td>
<td>9–10</td>
<td>p. 28</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Appendix A</td>
<td>Talk about History, Study Guides, Tests, and Writing Assignment</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>p. 37</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Appendix B</td>
<td>Primary Sources</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>p. 55</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Why Teach the American Founding

The beginning is the most important part of any endeavor, for a small change at the beginning will result in a very different end. How much truer this is of the most expansive of human endeavors: founding and sustaining a free country. The United States of America has achieved the greatest degree of freedom and prosperity for the greatest proportion of any country’s population in the history of humankind. How is it that the common American’s pursuit of happiness has resulted in such exceptional outcomes over time? This phenomenon compels mindful young Americans to seek to understand how their nation has achieved such results. And America’s youth could find no greater source of understanding than the history of their country’s founding, starting with their forefathers’ ideas, words, and deeds.
Enduring Ideas from this Unit

1. The United States is unprecedented in establishing its existence not on grounds of racial origin nor family privilege but on ideas asserted to be true of all people at all times: namely, on the equal human dignity of each person.
2. America was founded on the view that government should be controlled by the people themselves and limited to the purpose of protecting each person’s natural rights and fostering the common good.
3. Regular, ordinary Americans of everyday means sacrificed their security and very lives to defend these truths about human beings and civic life against a tyranny of the most powerful nation of its day.
4. The United States Constitution’s chief quality is that it allows the people to govern themselves with respect for the dignity of each person while both channeling and restraining the natural ambition of human beings to gain power and recognition.
5. The Constitution is a carefully wrought and considered document, and its original intent and structure should be honored both for the sake of our forebears, to whom we and the world owe our freedom and prosperity, and because the events of the last two hundred years have proven the Constitution’s remarkable achievements time and time again.

What Teachers Should Consider

The United States of America is unprecedented in many ways in the course of human history, but most significantly in the opportunity all its citizens have to pursue unmatched conditions of freedom, security, and prosperity. The country owes its unprecedented success to an unprecedented founding, a beginning forged and canonized in the Declaration of Independence, the War of Independence, and the U.S. Constitution.

And yet, never have so many Americans known so little about this founding. As for love of country, one cannot love (or even consider loving) what one does not know.

The teaching of the American founding is perhaps the most necessary series of lessons a teacher can share with his or her students if those students intend to enjoy the benefits of living in America for the duration of their lives.

With this in mind, a teacher ought to take special care to learn the history and ideas of the American founding. Ambiguity in the teacher’s own understanding, or assumptions derived from anywhere but careful scholarship and a deep reading of America’s founding documents, will leave him or her unprepared to help students understand this history accurately.

The teacher might best open the unit with lessons aimed at understanding why the colonists declared independence in the first place. It was not to avoid paying taxes or about wanting to preserve slavery. (These are misconceptions at best, distortions at worst.) It was to choose—between liberty under self-government and servitude under tyranny. Class may proceed at a brisk pace through the years 1763–1776, touching on the many acts of the British and respective colonial responses to those acts. Spend time on the conflicts and battles; students should chart the gradual shift in public sentiment toward independence.
The Declaration of Independence itself deserves careful study. Such lessons may begin with stories of the writing of the Declaration. Students should read parts of the document aloud together in class, and teachers can foster extensive conversations about what it says, what it means, and why it says it. The majority of the conversation should dwell on the first, second, and final paragraphs of the Declaration. Understanding what is meant by those words is pivotal to understanding American history, what makes America an exceptional nation, and the responsibilities every American citizen has. The list of grievances should be discussed in light of the previous history that led to the Declaration.

The American War of Independence should be taught so as to fill the moral imaginations of students with images of the heroic characters and actions of its American participants. Strategy, battles, and the general arc of the war should be taught in detail, punctuated with accounts of the key moments and figures who contributed to America’s ultimate victory. The ideas for which the War of Independence was fought are matched in the American memory only by the stories of those who fought for them.

When teaching the aftermath of the War of Independence up to the Constitutional Convention, teachers should make clear that America’s foray into governing itself entirely independent of Great Britain initially trended toward abject failure. The Articles of Confederation ordered public affairs in a reactionary rather than prudent manner. Students should understand that the Constitutional Convention, in many respects, saved the country from another sort of tyranny: majority tyranny.

Finally, the Constitutional Convention and the Constitution itself should be studied in tandem and in detail. Students should consider carefully the Framers’ intentions in how they constructed the Constitution. Students should understand that nothing in the Constitution was haphazardly decided. Given the unprecedented long-term success of the Constitution, students should appreciate that any changes to the Constitution warrant careful and complete understanding of why the Framers crafted it the way they did, as explained in their own words.

How Teachers Can Learn More

TEXTS

Land of Hope, Wilfred McClay
A Short History of the American Revolution, James Stokesbury
The Glorious Cause, Robert Middlekauff
We Still Hold These Truths, Matthew Spalding

ONLINE COURSES | Online.Hillsdale.edu

The Great American Story
Civil Rights in American History
Introduction to the Constitution
Constitution 101
Lesson Planning Resources

TEACHER RESOURCES

Land of Hope Young Reader’s Edition, Wilfred McClay
The Story of the Thirteen Colonies and the Great Republic, H.A. Guerber
The American Revolution and Constitution, Anne Goudvis and Stephanie Harvey
Guns for General Washington, Seymour Reit
Johnny Tremain, Esther Hoskins Forbes

STUDENT RESOURCES

Liberty!, Lucille Recht Penner
The Declaration of Independence, Elizabeth Raum
The American Revolution, Bruce Bliven, Jr.
The United States Constitution, Liz Sonneborn

TRADE BOOKS AND NOVELS

Liberty or Death, Betsy Maestro
Give Me Liberty!, Russell Freedman
Guns for General Washington, Seymour Reit
Johnny Tremain, Esther Hoskins Forbes
A New Nation, Betsy Maestro
A More Perfect Union, Betsy Maestro
We The People, Lynne Cheney

PRIMARY SOURCES

“Give Me Liberty or Give Me Death!,” Patrick Henry
Common Sense, Thomas Paine
Declaration of Independence
Resignation Speech, George Washington
“Liberty and Peace,” Phillis Wheatley
The United States Constitution
The Bill of Rights
LESSON PLANS,
ACTIVITIES AND ASSIGNMENTS,
AND FORMATIVE QUIZZES
Lesson 1 — Self-Government or Tyranny

LESSON OBJECTIVE

Students learn how new British exertions of authority over the colonists led to the Declaration of Independence.

TEACHER PREPARATION

Create a note outline based on the following:

Student Texts

Liberty! Pages 6–17, 26–31, 35
Primary Sources See below.

Teacher Texts

Land of Hope Young Reader’s Edition Chapter 5
The Story of the Thirteen Colonies and the Great Republic Pages 68–80
The American Revolution and Constitution Pages 12–28, 34–50

Trade Books

Liberty or Death
Give Me Liberty!

Online.Hillsdale.edu

The Great American Story Lecture 3

STUDENT PREPARATION

Assignment 1: Students look at the painting Spirit of ’76 and describe what the “spirit of 1776” was in a few sentences.

Assignment 2: Students pre-read Liberty!, pages 6–17, 26–31, and 35 (based on grade level reading ability).

CORE CONTENT IN THIS LESSON

Geography & Places

Boston
Philadelphia
Independence Hall

Lexington and Concord
Ticonderoga
Persons
George III  Patric Henry
George Washington  John Adams
Crispus Attucks  Abigail Adams
Paul Revere  Ethan Allen
Samuel Adams  Thomas Adams
Benjamin Franklin  Thomas Jefferson

Terms and Topics
self–government  Intolerable Acts representation  First Continental Congress consent  Minutemen
French and Indian War  Battles of Lexington & Concord
Proclamation of 1763  Siege of Fort Ticonderoga
Sons of Liberty  Second Continental Congress
Declaratory Act  Continental Army
Boston Massacre  Battle of Bunker Hill
Boston Tea Party  Liberation of Boston

Primary Sources
“Give Me Liberty or Give Me Death!,” Patrick Henry
"Common Sense," Thomas Paine

To Know by Heart
“Appeal to Heaven”
“Don’t Tread On Me”
“Give me liberty or give me death!” — Patrick Henry
“I am no more a Virginian, but an American!” — Patrick Henry
“Paul Revere’s Ride,” Henry Wadsworth Longfellow
“One if by land, two if by sea.”
“The shot heard round the world.”
“Concord Hymn” — Ralph Waldo Emerson
“Don’t fire till you see the whites of their eyes!” — Israel Putnam, William Prescott, or legend

Timeline
1754–1763  French and Indian War
1770  Boston Massacre
1773  Boston Tea Party
1775  Lexington and Concord
July 4, 1776  Declaration of Independence signed

Images
Historical figures and events
Revolutionary era flags
Paul Revere’s Engraving of Boston Harbor under occupation
Paul Revere’s Engraving of the Boston Massacre
Independence Hall (exterior and interior)
Battle maps and battle scene depictions
Uniforms and arms of the Minutemen, the Continental Army soldiers, and the Redcoats
Medical equipment
Spirit of ’76 painting by Archibald Willard

STORIES FOR THE AMERICAN HEART

- Biographies and the roles of George Washington, Benjamin Franklin, Samuel Adams, Patrick Henry, Thomas Paine, and Thomas Jefferson up through 1776
- Boston Massacre
- John Adams’s heroic defense of the redcoats
- Boston Tea Party
- Patrick Henry’s “Give me liberty or give me death!” speech
- Paul Revere’s Ride
- Minutemen at the Battles of Lexington and Concord
- Ethan Allen, Henry Knox, and the Green Mountain Boys capturing the guns from Fort Ticonderoga
- Letters of John and Abigail Adams
- John Adams’s nomination of George Washington to command the Continental Army
- Battle of Bunker Hill
- Liberation of Boston
- John Adams’s nomination of Thomas Jefferson to draft the Declaration of Independence

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

- Why was it good that the colonists had been allowed so much freedom to govern themselves?
- What is self–government? How was the colonists’ freedom to govern themselves limited by the British?
- What was the Proclamation Line of 1763? Why were the colonists upset about it?
- What is a tax? What is it used for?
- Why were the colonists upset about new taxes?
- What were the two types of patriots? How did they resist the British differently?
- How was a boycott used by the Sons of Liberty to repeal the Stamp Act?
- How did the British try to trick the colonists into buying tea with the Tea Act?
- What did the colonists have to do for British soldiers in the colonies?
- What happened in the Boston Massacre and why?
- Why was John Adams’s defense of the redcoats after the Boston Massacre heroic?
- What happened at the Boston Tea Party and why?
- What were the Intolerable Acts and why were they called such by the colonists?
- How did the First Continental Congress unify the colonies?
- How did the Sons of Liberty alert the colonists that the British were coming before Lexington and Concord?
- What happened at the Battle of Lexington and Concord?
- What was the ‘shot heard round the world’ and why is it called that?
- What happened at the Siege of Fort Ticonderoga?
- Even though the Patriots lost the Battle of Bunker Hill, why did it strengthen their spirit to fight?
- What happened at the Battle of Bunker Hill?
- What was George Washington like?
- What did Thomas Paine say in his pamphlet Common Sense? Did it change people’s minds?
- What did the Second Continental Congress do?
- Questions from the U.S. Civics Test:
  - Question 77: Name one reason why the Americans declared independence from Britain.
  - Question 85: Benjamin Franklin is famous for many things. Name one.
  - Question 86: George Washington is famous for many things. Name one.

Keys to the Lesson

For more than 150 years, the British colonists of North America rarely quarreled with their countrymen on the other side of the Atlantic. Then in 1763, the British began to claim new control over the colonists. What followed were thirteen years of increased tension and sometimes violent clashes leading to outright war in 1775 and, in 1776, the declaring of independence by the colonists and the formation of a new country separate from British power. This decade and a half gave birth to the nation each American citizen calls home. It is imperative that American students know the people, actions, and stories that led to the founding of their country. The chief aim of teaching these fourteen years, therefore, is to help students to understand the actions by both Great Britain and the colonists that compelled the Americans to such a separation and to found a new, unprecedented kind of country.

Teachers might best plan and teach Self-Government or Tyranny with emphasis on the following approaches:

- Read aloud together with students in class the book Liberty!, asking questions throughout.
- By way of background, discuss with students the significance of rights and freedoms to the colonists, appealing to students’ innate sense of justice and fairness. A long English tradition of possessing certain rights or freedoms to act in certain ways had been carried over to the colonies from England. In addition to these traditional guarantees by British government, the colonists had had ample time and space in which to exercise these freedoms, including by actively governing themselves. This was owing in large part to the haphazard way in which the colonies were established and the great distance between them and Great Britain. Setting up these considerations now with students will make the subsequent infringements on the colonists’ rights all the more clear.
- Have students consider the issues the British in North America faced following the French and Indian War (in Europe, the Seven Years’ War), namely, the risk of further conflict (and associated costs) with Native Americans as colonists moved westward, and the massive debt that Great Britain had accumulated in the late war.
- Show how Great Britain’s attempted solutions to these problems (prohibiting colonial expansion and the sudden enforcement of lax tax laws) marked the first shift in the relationship between Great Britain and the colonists and heralded the end of the period of “salutary neglect,” during which American colonists had grown accustomed to practicing self-government.
Help students see the pattern that this initial shift would grow into: attempts by the British (Parliament and, to a certain extent, King George III) to exert more control, alternating with American resistance to what they argued were infringements on their rights as Englishmen.

Teach about the various British acts: what they were, why they were passed, how the colonists resisted, and what happened next as a consequence.

Consider with students that self-government, or representative self-government, was at the heart of the issue. Emphasize that this was not merely a nice-sounding phrase. Instead, the colonists gradually came to recognize the following as a question of liberty or tyranny: whether they were self-governed through their elected representatives or were dictated to and controlled by a distant government in which they had no consent. Make clear that this was the question: not merely whether the colonists would have representation in Parliament (it was impractical) nor whether they had to pay taxes, but whether or not people must be controlled by the will of others in government without their free consent.

Explain how the Americans organized themselves to engage with and resist the British, a capacity born of decades of practice in self-government and a trait of American citizens for subsequent generations. In due course, the Boston Massacre impressed on public opinion the British position’s semblance to tyranny.

Emphasize for students how there were often two competing approaches to responding to British actions: one that attempted deliberation and petition, and another that resorted to destruction of property and even tarring and feathering. In the end, the former approach prevailed, resorting to arms only as necessary to defend their assertion of rights, self-government, and liberty.

Highlight that it was the Boston Tea Party, however, that brought issues to a head, prompting the British to respond to various actions in Massachusetts with the Intolerable Acts. Help students to consider that in five separate, odious ways, these acts show how preventing a people from governing themselves in even something as simple as a tax on paper and tea can lead to tyranny if not effectively recognized and resisted.

Spend time illustrating how it was really across 1774–75, in response to the execution of the Intolerable Acts, that specific Founding Fathers marshaled their talents and ideas, eventually leading to declaring independence and forming a new nation by summer 1776.

Teach in some detail the open armed conflicts at Lexington and Concord, Fort Ticonderoga, and Bunker Hill. Students should learn how these battles bolstered the patriot cause and transformed public opinion in these final two years of British rule.

Show how and why Thomas Paine’s pamphlet Common Sense proved decisive in shifting public opinion at the start of 1776.

Finally, emphasize how the news in the spring of 1776—that the British had hired German mercenary soldiers to deploy against British-Americans, and were now selectively encouraging slave rebellions in the colonies, while the Continental Congress recommended that the colonies begin forming their own governments—were key factors in moving a majority of the state delegates at the Second Continental Congress to commission a committee to draft a potential declaration of independence.
STRENGTHENING UNDERSTANDING: POST-LESSON ACTIVITIES AND ASSIGNMENTS

Activity 1: Assign each student a different event to draw from the years between the French and Indian War through the Battle of Bunker Hill. Then have students arrange themselves in the correct order of events in class and have each present briefly what they drew, the story behind it, its relationship to other scenes, and why they depicted it the way they did.

Activity 2: Have students draw maps of Boston and the surrounding area. Have students trace the battles of Lexington, Concord, and Bunker Hill as well as the route taken by Paul Revere. Ask plenty of questions in the process.

Assignment 1: Have students and parents complete a “Talk about History” assignment in which parents ask their child a series of questions about what they learned in history from a given lesson. Parents record the answers and the student returns to school (provided in appendix).

Assignment 2: How did the British change their treatment of the colonists after the French and Indian War? Why did they do so? (2–4 sentences)

Assignment 3: Why did the colonists argue it was unjust for Parliament to levy taxes against the colonists who had no representation in Parliament? (2–4 sentences)

Assignment 4: Retell the story of the Boston Massacre and John Adams’s role in the trial that followed (2–4 sentences).
Formative Quiz 1

Matching: Write the letter of each definition to the correct word it defines.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Term</th>
<th>Definition</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>____ militia</td>
<td>A. a formal written request signed by several people</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>____ massacre</td>
<td>B. a group that made laws for the colonies</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>____ petition</td>
<td>C. a violent unjust killing of innocent people</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>____ Minutemen</td>
<td>D. an armed body of citizens prepared for military service</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>____ Congress</td>
<td>E. colonists ready to fight at a minute’s notice</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Short Answer: Answer the following in complete sentences.

1. What was being stored in Concord that the British were seeking?

2. Explain the meaning of the colonists crying out “no taxation without representation.”

3. Why did John Adams defend the British soldiers in the trial after the Boston Massacre?

4. Why is the shot fired on the North Bridge in Concord, which killed the first British soldier, referred to as the "shot heard 'round the world"?

5. Who said this quote: “The distinctions between Virginias, Pennsylvanians, New Yorkers, and New Englanders are no more. I am not a Virginian but an American”? What does it mean?
Lesson 2 — The Declaration of Independence

LESSON OBJECTIVE

Students learn about the movement in favor of independence and about the drafting and signing of the Declaration of Independence. They also read the Declaration of Independence and engage in a seminar conversation about its contents and ideas.

TEACHER PREPARATION

Create a note outline based on the following:

Student Texts
- The Declaration of Independence
  Chapter 5
- Primary Sources
  See below.

Teacher Texts
- Land of Hope Young Reader’s Edition
- The Story of the Thirteen Colonies and the Great Republic
  Pages 81–82
- The American Revolution and Constitution
  Pages 155–160, 178–181

Trade Books
- Give Me Liberty!
- Liberty or Death

Online.Hillsdale.edu
- The Great American Story
  Lecture 3
- Introduction to the Constitution
  Lectures 1, 2, 3
- Constitution 101
  Lecture 2
- Civil Rights in American History
  Lectures 1, 2, 3

STUDENT PREPARATION

Assignment 1: Students pre-read The Declaration of Independence (based on grade level reading ability).

CORE CONTENT IN THIS LESSON

Geography & Places
- Philadelphia
- Independence Hall
Persons

Benjamin Franklin
John Adams

Terms and Topics

Laws of Nature and of Nature's God
self–evident
natural rights
equality
unalienable
liberty

pursuit of happiness
consent of the governed list of grievances
slavery
self–government
representation
Liberty Bell

Primary Sources

Declaration of Independence

To Know by Heart

“When in the Course of human Events, it becomes necessary for one People to dissolve the Political Bands which have connected them with another, and to assume among the Powers of the Earth, the separate and equal Station to which the Laws of Nature and of Nature’s God entitle them, a decent Respect to the Opinions of Mankind requires that they should declare the causes which impel them to the Separation.

“We hold these Truths to be self–evident, that all Men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty, and the Pursuit of Happiness——That to secure these Rights, Governments are instituted among Men, deriving their just Powers from the Consent of the Governed, that whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these Ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government, laying its Foundation on such Principles, and organizing its Powers in such Form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their Safety and Happiness.” — First two sentences of the Declaration of Independence

“And for the support of this Declaration, with a firm reliance on the protection of divine Providence, we mutually pledge to each other our Lives, our Fortunes and our sacred Honor.” — Final sentence of the Declaration of Independence

“We must all hang together or else we shall assuredly all hang separately.” — Benjamin Franklin

Timeline

July 2, 1776  Second Continental Congress votes for independence
July 4, 1776  Declaration of Independence signed
Images
Thomas Jefferson, Benjamin Franklin, and John Adams
Independence Hall (exterior and interior)
Photos or facsimiles of original Declaration of Independence
National Archives Building and Rotunda
Jefferson Memorial
Statue of Thomas Jefferson (Hillsdale College campus)

Stories for the American Heart

- The first public reading of the Declaration of Independence at the State House Yard, the tolling of the Liberty Bell, and the removal of the royal coat of arms
- The quiet in Independence Hall when the signers realized they had committed treason in the eyes of the Crown and had started down a road that was to end in death or independence or both.

Questions for the American Mind

- What is the Declaration of Independence about?
- Who was the main writer of the Declaration of Independence?
- What did the Declaration of Independence do beyond stating America’s independence from Britain?
- What were the consequences for signing the Declaration and why were the men so willing to sign it?
- Why did the colonists argue they were justified in breaking away from Great Britain? What wrong had Britain done to them?
- What is a “self-evident” truth?
- What does it mean that “all men are created equal”?
- What is a natural right?
- What does “unalienable” mean?
- What is liberty (or freedom) according to the founders?
- Is liberty the same thing as doing whatever you want? Why or why not?
- Why do people create government? What is it supposed to do?
- Where does the government’s power come from?
- What are the people free to do if the government fails or violates its purpose?
- Why is it special that America was created based on the words of the Declaration of Independence?
- America is a country that believes in certain ideas. What are these ideas?
- On what day do we celebrate our country’s independence, its “birthday”?
- Questions from the U.S. Civics Test:
  - Question 8: Why is the Declaration of Independence important?
  - Question 9: What founding document said the American colonies were free from Britain?
  - Question 10: Name two important ideas from the Declaration of Independence and the U.S. Constitution.
  - Question 11: The words “Life, Liberty, and the pursuit of Happiness” are in what founding document?
Question 75: What group of people was taken and sold as slaves?

Question 77: Name one reason why the Americans declared independence from Britain.

Question 78: Who wrote the Declaration of Independence?

Question 79: When was the Declaration of Independence adopted?

Question 81: There were 13 original states. Name five.

Question 85: Benjamin Franklin is famous for many things. Name one.

Question 87: Thomas Jefferson is famous for many things. Name one.

Question 125: What is Independence Day?

Question 126: Name three national U.S. holidays.

Keys to the Lesson

The Declaration of Independence was not merely a renunciation of dependence on Great Britain. It was, in fact, generative. It created an entity—a nation—that stood on its own, had its own existence, and was independent of other nations. Even today, it offers guiding principles that continue to shape our arguments about the nature and limits of political authority. In brief, the Declaration of Independence created and still defines the United States of America.

Like an organizational mission statement, the Declaration is an indication of the Founders’ intention, a guiding star for our political life, and a benchmark for measuring our public institutions. Americans should consider all questions concerning the public sphere in light of the truths asserted in the Declaration. The Declaration of Independence should be both the beginning and end for students’ understanding of their country, their citizenship, and the benefits and responsibilities of being an American.

Referring questions of our common life to the Declaration of Independence does not mean that Americans should be forced or manipulated to believe the ideas of the Declaration to be true. But this unit asks students at least to consider whether the Declaration’s claims are true. Indeed, Thomas Jefferson and the delegates at the Second Continental Congress addressed the Declaration of Independence not only to Americans in 1776 but also to the critical judgment of American students in the 21st Century, for, as they stated, “a decent respect to the opinions of mankind requires that they should declare the causes which impel them to the separation” [emphasis added]. The lasting claim of the Declaration is that there are certain truths about all men having unalienable rights. As a historical matter, as well, students should think about how the American founding—and the continuation of the American experiment—has succeeded or failed against its stated objectives.

Students should think about the Declaration of Independence as the foundation and even the heart of their country’s existence. While a more extensive study of the Declaration should occur in later grades, including consideration of the thinkers who influenced the Founders, the historical treatment of the American Revolution deserves some conversation on the ideas of the Declaration.
Teachers might best plan and teach the Declaration of Independence with emphasis on the following approaches:

- Read aloud together with students in class the book The Declaration of Independence, asking questions throughout.
- Help students to see that the Founders intended to speak to them, to posit truths for their consideration and ultimate judgment. “[A] decent respect to the opinions of mankind” means that the Declaration was not merely intended as an argument about the unique situation of the colonists in 1776; the Founders submitted their claims to the judgment of all people in all times because they were asserting truths about all people in all times. This especially includes future Americans and, in this case, American students.
- Lead students through key phrases from the Declaration of Independence, especially the first and second paragraphs. Pause frequently to ask students questions.
- Help students to consider that the Founders are making assertions of the existence of objective truth by referencing “the Laws of Nature and of Nature’s God” and by describing the truths as “self-evident.” This abides by the first law of logic, that of contradiction, which is the basis of all reasoning and of our capacity to make sense of reality: i.e., that something cannot both be and not be at the same time in the same way. The use of the words “the Laws of Nature and of Nature’s God” ties truth to an external reality (nature) with fixed and reliable features (laws). “Self-evident” ties truth to fixed definitions—a “self-evident” claim is one that is true by definition of the idea in question, like the claim that a triangle has three sides. A “self-evident” truth is not merely a matter of perspective; it can be known and understood by anyone at any time.
- Ask students what the Declaration means by “all men are created equal.” For one thing, “men” means human being not males as opposed to females. Based on the totality of their writings available, the principal authors of the Declaration meant that men and women share equally in human dignity and in possession of natural rights or freedoms that are simply part of being human. A consistent application of equality would make slavery impossible—and the Second Continental Congress could scarcely have missed this point. This meaning of equality did not suggest equality in talent, property, or other accidentals to one’s humanity, qualities that are unique to a particular person and circumstance.
- Note that the mere articulation that all men are created equal was revolutionary. Compared to the degree and universality of equality we take for granted today, such a statement and contemporary limits on the principle in practice leave the Founders open to much potential criticism. For example, in general, women, men without land, and African Americans were not able to vote. But the mere fact that most men were able to vote was a significant departure from what was normal in the rest of the world. And even though civil equality was not universal, the statement about inherent and equal dignity of all people was unheard of at the time. Many Founders believed (and the centuries since have proven them correct) that this founding principle would allow for ever greater realizations of equality through history. In brief, were it not for the Founders’ assertion of human equality, albeit imperfectly put into practice, the kind of equality we are used to today likely would never have arisen, or certainly not from American shores.
- Ask students what the Declaration states to be the purpose of government. Students should understand the Declaration’s argument that government is created to secure the natural rights of each person.
▪ Ask students about the source of a government’s power. The Declaration explains that government power comes from the free consent of the people. Students should also consider the Declaration’s argument that people do not receive their rights from government, nor do they surrender their fundamental rights to it. Instead, the rights to “life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness” are natural—they are inherent in being human—and government is delegated power by the sovereign people to secure their rights and pursue the common good. Rather than surrendering their rights to government, people create government to protect their rights. The Declaration describes these rights as “unalienable,” meaning that they cannot be relinquished or taken away, though they may be forfeited when a person violates the rights of another person, (e.g., the penalty for taking someone else’s life or liberty might be to lose your own life or liberty).

▪ Help students to understand what is meant by self-government: legitimate government exists to secure rights and derives its “just powers from the consent of the governed,” that is, from the citizen body. The fundamental purpose of government is clear and its powers are limited. As a result, and by design, the people have the liberty to govern themselves in most aspects of their daily lives.

▪ Read the list of grievances and ask students to connect some of the grievances to historical events they studied in the previous lesson. Then ask students to explain how those events violate the statements made in the first two paragraphs of the Declaration.

▪ Introduce the contradiction between the words of the Declaration of Independence and slavery. Talk with students about what a contradiction is and ways in which they have felt or acted in a contradictory way at home or school. The contradiction is genuine and students should rightly grapple with it. In the Constitution lesson, there will be opportunities to see how slaveholding Founders grappled with this contradiction. Here students should see how contradiction, doing both good and bad, runs through the heart of each person.

▪ When discussing compromises between the principled claims of the Declaration and the brutal matter of slavery, be mindful of the following:
  - Slavery was one of the few matters of disagreement among the colonial revolutionaries in their otherwise generally united challenge to England. Those who opposed slavery as well as those who favored it agreed about the growing threat of British tyranny.
  - Many of the American Founders, especially those from northern colonies, strongly opposed slavery but nevertheless accepted a temporary compromise on the issue, believing that an independent and united country would provide the best prospect for actually abolishing slavery. Without unity between northern and southern colonies, either the colonists would have lost the war, in which case slavery would simply be continued by Great Britain, or the southern colonies would have formed their own separate country, in which case the North would have no power over the South to abolish slavery. The key for the American Founders, especially those who opposed slavery, would be to continue efforts against slavery as a united country—united around the principles of the Declaration of Independence.
  - The idea that a country can be founded on a principle—rather than merely on claims of territory, tribe, or military power—is uniquely American. America’s founding principle that “all men are created equal and that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights” was unprecedented. Almost all recognized that the statement of the principles, despite a compromise that allowed for the pre-existing institution’s continuing existence, undermined the legitimacy of slavery.
Many northern Founders and even some slaveholding Founders recognized the hypocrisy of claiming the principle of equality in spite of the continuing institution of slavery. Nevertheless, some southern Founders did not believe this phrase to be true for slaves and therefore did not believe it was hypocritical.

Many have understood the principle of equality as the enduring object or goal of American political life, with each generation seeking further to expand the conditions of political equality. This was the view of many Founders, as well as of Abraham Lincoln, abolitionists like Frederick Douglass, and civil rights leaders like Martin Luther King Jr., who called the Declaration a “promissory note to which every American was to fall heir” in his 1963 “I Have a Dream” speech.

Slavery and the subsequent inequality and violations of the rights of the descendants of slaves, as well as of women and certain immigrants, are glaring ways in which the country has fallen short of its founding idea.

The Declaration’s principle of equality—and the persistence and bravery of Americans of all origins to sacrifice and even die insisting that the nation should live up to the principle—has led to unprecedented achievements of human equality and the protection of equal rights.

Strengthening Understanding: Post-Lesson Activities and Assignments

Activity 1: Reenact with students the votes to declare independence and the signing of the Declaration of Independence. Divide students into thirteen groups representing the thirteen colonies. Have a roll call vote by colony and then invite each student to sign a replica Declaration of Independence. The purpose of this exercise is to help students understand the very real and very personal commitment the delegates made. Over the entire proceeding, remind students of the consequences that each of them would face if the revolution failed, and reinforce with them that it probably would fail and that these things probably would happen to them.

Assignment 1: Have students and parents complete a “Talk about History” assignment in which parents ask their child a series of questions about what they learned in history from a given lesson. Parents record the answers and the student returns to school (provided in appendix).

Assignment 2: Using the first lines of the Declaration of Independence, highlight with a highlighter certain key phrases and terms and then write explanations of what these phrases mean, why they were important for the colonists’ situation, and why they are important for all people at all times (4–6 sentences).

Assignment 3: Have students learn by heart and recite the first paragraph of the Declaration of Independence. Some grade levels can learn by heart and recite the second or final paragraph as well.
Lesson 3 — The War of Independence

LESSON OBJECTIVE

Students learn about the major figures, common soldiers, strategy, and specific battles of the American War of Independence.

TEACHER PREPARATION

Create a note outline based on the following:

Student Texts
- The American Revolution
  Pages 63–77, 86–104, 131–147
- Primary Sources
  See below.

Teacher Texts
- Land of Hope Young Reader’s Edition
  Chapter 6
- The Story of the Thirteen Colonies and the Great Republic
  Pages 83–102
- The American Revolution and Constitution
  Pages 4, 33, 53–104, 112–121, 133–136

Trade Books & Novels
- Liberty or Death
- Guns for General Washington
- Johnny Tremain

Online.Hillsdale.edu
- The Great American Story
  Lecture 4

STUDENT PREPARATION

CORE CONTENT IN THIS LESSON

Geography & Places
- Delaware River
- Valley Forge
- Yorktown

Persons
- George Washington
- John Adams
- Phillis Wheatley
- Abigail Adams
Terms and Topics

Patriot/Revolutionary
- Ethan Allen
- Henry Knox
- Marquis de Lafayette
- Baron von Steuben
- Benedict Arnold
- John Burgoyne
- Alexander Hamilton

Tory/Loyalist
- Henry Knox
- Benedict Arnold
- John Burgoyne

Continental Army
- privateer
- Brown Bess Musket
- volley
- Battle of New York
- mercenary
- Hessians
- Crossing of the Delaware
- Battle of Trenton

Terms and Topics
- Betsy Ross Flag
- Yankee Doodle
- Battle of Saratoga
- guerrilla warfare
- ally
- French Treaty of Alliance
- Battle of Yorktown
- Newburgh Conspiracy
- American Cincinnatus
- Treaty of Paris

Primary Sources
- Resignation Speech, George Washington
- “Liberty and Peace,” Phillis Wheatley

To Know by Heart
- “These are the times that try men’s souls.” — Thomas Paine, The Crisis
- Yankee–Doodle, first stanza
- “George Washington,” Rosemary and Stephen Vincent Benet
- “I only regret that I have but one life to lose for my country.” — Nathan Hale

Timeline
- (1775) 1776–1783 War of Independence
- July 4, 1776 Declaration of Independence signed
- Christmas, 1776 Battle of Trenton
- 1777–78 Winter Quarters at Valley Forge
- 1781 (Fall) Battle of Yorktown; Cornwallis Surrenders
- 1783 Treaty of Paris

Images
- Historical figures
- Images and uniforms of British and American officers and soldiers
- Landscape pictures of geographic places featured in this lesson
- Depictions of figures at various scenes and moments and in battle
- “Washington Crossing the Delaware” painting
- Betsy Ross Flag and other flags
- Maps: overall strategies, specific battles
- Relevant forts
- Medical equipment
STORIES FOR THE AMERICAN HEART

- The fates of the signers of the Declaration of Independence
- David Bushnell’s submarine attack
- Washington’s Crossing of the Delaware
- The American farmers joining the Battle of Saratoga
- Washington encouraging his men at Valley Forge
- Stories of Margaret Corbin, Molly Pitcher, Abigail Adams, and Martha Washington during the war
- Washington’s camp acting out the Cato play by Joseph Addison
- Washington on horseback at the Battle of Monmouth
- Washington’s dismissal of the Newburgh Conspiracy
- Story of Emily Geiger and Deborah Sampson

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

- Who was favored to win the War of Independence?
- What things were helpful to the Americans in the War of Independence?
- What things were helpful to the British in the War of Independence?
- How did the Americans think they could win the war?
- How did the British think they could win the war?
- How did soldiers fight each other?
- What things does an army need to be successful?
- Why were the Americans in trouble in the winter of 1776?
- How did Washington’s military strategy build confidence in the Americans?
- What happened at the crossing of the Delaware River and the Battle of Trenton?
- How did the victory at Saratoga invite other countries to take America seriously?
- Why did the French form an alliance with the United States?
- How did the army suffer in the winter of 1777–78 and how did they regain new hope?
- What important contribution did Baron von Steuben make to the Continental Army?
- What is the legacy of Benedict Arnold in light of his actions at West Point?
- How did the Americans defeat the British at Yorktown?
- Why did the Americans win the War of Independence?
- What were the terms of the Treaty of Paris?
- Why were soldiers on the verge of mutiny in 1783? How did George Washington resolve the crisis?

Questions from the U.S. Civics Test:

- Question 76: What war did the Americans fight to win independence from Britain?
- Question 80: The American Revolution had many important events. Name one.
- Question 86: George Washington is famous for many things. Name one.
- Question 89: Alexander Hamilton is famous for many things. Name one.
- Question 121: Why does the flag have 13 stripes?
Question 122: Why does the flag have 50 stars?

Question 124: The Nation’s first motto was “E Pluribus Unum.” What does that mean?

Keys to the Lesson

The American Revolution was truly a “David and Goliath” clash: a fledging strand of remote colonies loosely cooperating as one through a continental, mostly citizen army, fought and won independence from the greatest military power in the world. Students should appreciate this about the war of their forefathers. They should also know key stories of the heroic actions of the leaders and the many common folk in that struggle, understand the strategies employed in general and in specific battles, and consider the key moments and factors that led the Americans to victory.

Teachers might best plan and teach the War of Independence with emphasis on the following approaches:

- Read aloud together with students in class the corresponding pages from The American Revolution, asking questions throughout.
- Read selections from Guns for General Washington and Johnny Tremain aloud to students in class.
- Discuss how the new states organized themselves in the Articles of Confederation. Students should understand generally how it worked and some of its problems.
- Emphasis with students how declaring independence, while no easy task in the first place, was comparatively the easy part. Fighting to prove that the new country could defend its claims to independence was a whole other matter, and one that was very much in doubt.
- Ask students to identify and compare the various advantages and disadvantages of each side at the outset of the war and how these shifted over the years. Having students take simple notes as a “T-Chart” can be effective for this part of the lesson.
- Introduce students to the contemporary style of warfare by using images, maps, and artifacts. This approach will provide a foundation for their subsequent study of battles, help them to understand what happens in battle, and allow them to appreciate the bravery of soldiers fighting on both sides.
- Help students to empathize with the common Continental Army soldier and perceive the risk facing all the colonists, especially the leaders. Conditions were truly awful at many points in the war. The prospect of imminent defeat and the dire consequences for all involved weighed heavily upon the colonists throughout the war. The leaders—the men we now consider the American Founders—would most certainly have been killed if they were captured or the war was lost. In spite of the risks, they risked everything and sacrificed much for the cause of freedom and self-government. Students should appreciate the great debt we owe them.
- Explain in general each side’s strategy at various stages of the war and the tactics and battle plans employed in some important battles.
- Teach major battles with some detail, focusing on the story and its drama. Students should understand how the battles came to be, the key stories, factors, and moments from the battles themselves, and the significance of their various outcomes on subsequent events. Employ battle maps as appropriate.
As with any conflict, draw attention to the key contributions of both leaders and common soldiers in the war. George Washington should be especially considered, not so much in his battle tactics as in his overall strategy for the war and his stirring leadership of his soldiers. Read aloud Washington’s resignation speech, presenting it as vividly as possible and helping students appreciate the significance of Washington’s character and example.

Explain how the principles of the Declaration of Independence were already effecting change among the Americans even prior to the resolution of the war. By the end of the war, every northern state except for New York and New Jersey had explicitly outlawed slavery, and some New England colonies had allowed African Americans to vote. Students should also learn of the outsized contributions of African American soldiers in the war, with five thousand serving in the Continental Army over the course of the war and, by some accounts, African Americans composing nearly a quarter of the American forces at Yorktown.

Read aloud Phyllis Wheatley’s “Liberty and Peace.” Consider Wheatley’s perspective on the revolution, bearing in mind her status as a former slave.

STRENGTHENING UNDERSTANDING: POST-LESSON ACTIVITIES AND ASSIGNMENTS

Activity 1: Assign each student a different event to draw from the War of Independence. Then have students arrange themselves in the correct order of events in class and have each present briefly what they drew, the story behind it, its relationship to other scenes, and why they depicted it the way they did.

Activity 2: Have students draw a map of the thirteen colonies and then draw and label strategy and battle sites of the War of Independence (this assignment can be assigned at the end of the lesson or be an ongoing assignment as battles are taught).

Assignment 1: Have students and parents complete a “Talk about History” assignment in which parents ask their child a series of questions about what they learned in history from a given lesson. Parents record the answers and the student returns to school (provided in appendix).

Assignment 2: Make a T–chart. On one side, list the leadership virtues George Washington exhibited during the war. On the other side, give examples from the war in which that virtue was on display.

Assignment 3: Choose a battle from the War of Independence and retell the story of what happened in the battle (1 paragraph).

Assignment 4: Give three reasons why the Americans won the War of Independence and explain each reason (2–4 sentences).
Formative Quiz 2

MULTIPLE CHOICE: Circle the option that best answers each question.

1. What is an alliance?
   a. an agreement between two countries to stop fighting
   b. a nation neighboring a country at war
   c. a nation that has promised to help another nation in wartime
   d. a non–professional soldier

2. What is guerrilla warfare?
   a. a type of irregular hit–and–run military activity
   b. training animals to fight with your army
   c. a children’s game based on real warfare
   d. attacking an enemy army from the side

3. Who physically wrote or penned the Declaration of Independence?
   a. Thomas Jefferson
   b. George Washington
   c. Paul Revere
   d. John Adams

4. What river did Washington and his men cross to fight in the Battle of Trenton?
   a. Potomac River
   b. Delaware River
   c. Charles River
   d. York River

5. Who was the main ally to the Americans during the war?
   a. The French
   b. The Dutch
   c. The Germans
   d. The British
SHORT ANSWER: Answer the following in complete sentences.

6. How did the Americans think they could win the War of Independence?
_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________

7. Why did the French form an alliance with the United States?
_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________

8. Who was Benedict Arnold and why is he well known?
_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________

9. The colonial army suffered greatly at Valley Forge, but regained their hope at the end of the winter. Name one specific hardship the army faced and one way they regained hope.
_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________

10. What important contribution did Baron von Steuben make to the Continental Army?
_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________
Lesson 4 — The United States Constitution

1783–1789

9-10 classes

Lesson Objective

Students learn about the drafting of the Constitution, the debates within the Constitutional Convention and its ratification by the states, the political thought undergirding the Constitution, and the basic structure and powers of the federal government.

Teacher Preparation

Create a note outline based on the following:

Student Texts

- The United States Constitution
- Primary Sources

Teacher Texts

- Land of Hope Young Reader’s Edition
- The Story of the Thirteen Colonies and the Great Republic
- The American Revolution and Constitution

Trade Books

- A New Nation
- A More Perfect Union
- We The People

Online.Hillsdale.edu

- The Great American Story
- Constitution 101
- Civil Rights in American History

Student Preparation

Assignment 1: Students pre-read The United States Constitution (based on grade level reading ability).

Core Content in This Lesson

Geography & Places

- Philadelphia
- Independence Hall
Persons
James Madison
Gouvernour Morris
James Wilson
George Washington
Alexander Hamilton
Publius

Terms and Topics
Articles of Confederation
Shays’ Rebellion
Constitutional Convention
Father of the Constitution
Constitution
natural rights
equality
consent of the governed
self–government
faction
majority tyranny
representation republicanism
federalism
limited government enumerated powers
separation of powers
checks and balances
Great Compromise
Three-Fifths Clause
legislative power
Congress
bicameralism
House of Representatives
Senate
impeachment
executive powers
Electoral College
Commander–in–Chief veto power
judicial powers judicial review
amendment
The Federalist
Anti–Federalists
Bill of Rights
freedom of religion
free exercise
establishment clause
freedom of speech
freedom of the press
right to assembly
right to keep and bear arms

Primary Sources
The United States Constitution
The Bill of Rights

To Know by Heart
Preamble to the U.S. Constitution
“A republic, if you can keep it.” — Benjamin Franklin
“If men were angels, no government would be necessary.” — Federalist 10
First Amendment

Timeline
September 17, 1787    Constitutional Convention concludes (Constitution Day)
1789    Constitution takes effect; George Washington elected president
Images
Paintings of historical figures and events
Depictions of scenes from the Constitutional Convention
Photographs of Independence hall (exterior and interior)
Photos or facsimiles of the original Articles of Confederation, Constitution, Federalist, and Bill of Rights
The Signing of the American Constitution painting, Samuel Knecht
Statue of James Madison (Hillsdale College campus)
National Archives Building and the Rotunda for the Charters of Freedom
Paintings by Barry Faulkner in the Rotunda for the Charters of Freedom

Stories for the American Heart

- Benjamin Franklin’s story about the sun on George Washington’s chair being a sunrise for the country
- Benjamin Franklin’s reply to a woman’s question about what the Constitutional Convention had created: “A republic, if you can keep it,” and what this means

Questions for the American Mind

- What is government and what is its purpose?
- Why were the Articles of Confederation not able to protect the rights of Americans?
- What was Shays’ Rebellion and why did it worry the founders?
- What is a constitution and what does it do?
- Who was the main thinker behind the Constitution, known as the “Father of the Constitution”?
- How are the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution connected?
- What was The Federalist, what was its purpose, and why do we still read it?
- Did the founders think the way people are changes over time or that it doesn’t change? (talking about people in general, not necessarily in each person’s own life)
- How did the founders think people tended to be: good, bad, smart, mistaken, a mixture of all of the above?
- Why were the founders worried about people who have power over others?
- Why did the founders believe it was so important to make sure people agreed to rules and laws that government made?
- Why were the founders so worried about people becoming angry with each other and dividing into groups or factions?
- What were the founders so worried that a group of most people would do to a group of few people (majority tyranny)?
- Why did the founders believe that having a big country with many different views would help make sure that one group would not makes laws to hurt another group?
- What were some things that the delegates at the Constitutional Convention disagreed about?
- Why did the founders think it was important to make sure that power in the government, or control over others, was divided among different groups instead of all held by one person or group?
- What is a representative democracy (or a democratic republic, or constitutional republic)?
- What is federalism and how does it divide power?
What are the levels of government? How is each organized?
What is the separation of powers and how does it divide power?
What does the legislative power allow Congress to do?
What does the executive power allow the President to do?
What does the judicial power allow the Supreme Court to do?
How are members of Congress, the President, and the Supreme Court each chosen?
How does a bill become a law?
Why does the Constitution make it so hard for it to be changed?
Did everyone think the Constitution was a good idea? Why not?
What does the Bill of Rights do and why?
What is freedom of religion and why is it important?
What is freedom of speech and why is it important?
What is the right to assembly and why is it important?
What is the right to bear arms and why is it important?
What is due process and why is it important?
What does each elected or appointed person swear to do for the Constitution?
Who controls the Constitution?
What are the various responsibilities of U.S. citizens?
Questions from the U.S. Civics Test:
  Question 1: What is the form of government of the United States?
  Question 2: What is the supreme law of the land?
  Question 3: Name one thing the U.S. Constitution does.
  Question 4: The U.S. Constitution starts with the words “We the People.” What does “We the People” mean?
  Question 6: What does the Bill of Rights protect?
  Question 10: Name two important ideas from the Declaration of Independence and the U.S. Constitution.
  Question 13: What is the rule of law?
  Question 14: Many documents influenced the U.S. Constitution. Name one.
  Question 82: What founding document was written in 1787?
  Question 83: The Federalist Papers supported the passage of the U.S. Constitution. Name one of the writers.
  Question 84: Why were the Federalist Papers important?
  Question 86: George Washington is famous for many things. Name one.
  Question 88: James Madison is famous for many things. Name one.
  Question 89: Alexander Hamilton is famous for many things. Name one.

Keys to the Lesson

“It seems to have been reserved to the people of this country, by their conduct and example, to decide the important question, whether societies of men are really capable or not of establishing good government from reflection and choice, or whether they are forever destined to depend for their political constitutions on accident and force.” Thus wrote Alexander Hamilton in the opening paragraph of Federalist 1 in support of the newly proposed United States Constitution. Indeed, it is the Constitution that gives institutional form to the principles of the Declaration of Independence. It is, as Abraham Lincoln would later express it, the “frame of silver” meant to adorn and, most importantly, to protect the “apple of gold” that is the Declaration of Independence and the truths it asserts. The Constitution is the vehicle for the American experiment in self-government.

Study of the Constitution and of the history of its creation shows students how and that human beings are able to govern themselves in freedom, securing the equal protection of rights and the dignity of each person through reflection, deliberation, and choice. This is a significant thing for students to grasp, for if a constitution cannot achieve these ends, then force and violence are the only alternatives left to mankind.

Students should understand the main ideas and the basic structure of the Constitution and the government it established, and know the stories from the Constitutional Convention and the ratification debates.

Teachers might best plan and teach the Constitution with emphasis on the following approaches. While the length of this advice is larger than advice for other lessons, it is owing to the ease with which so many features of the Constitution can be taught incorrectly, with significant consequences. Therefore, this advice includes many corrections to common misconceptions that can be quickly addressed in class.

- Read aloud together with students in class the book The United States Constitution, asking questions throughout.
- Review briefly the structure of the Articles of Confederation and the issues that emerged under such a structure during the War of Independence, especially the debt cancellation laws by states (a clear example of majority tyranny), varieties of currencies, interstate trade barriers, separate agreements between states and foreign powers, the inability to enforce the Treaty of Paris against the British with respect to western territories, and Shays’ Rebellion.
- Lead students through the process of the Constitutional Convention. Help them see that the Convention was arranged to ensure that all the states were able to speak and be represented. Through stories of the various debates and compromises, explain the difficulty of establishing a government that would satisfy all parties.
- Describe the environment and people of the Constitutional Convention, as well as the history and tone of the ratification debate that followed.
- Read and talk about certain key phrases from the Constitution with particular attention to the Preamble and the structure of government that the Constitution establishes.
- Clarify that the Constitution establishes a republic, not a democracy. In a pure democracy the people make all legislative decisions by direct majority vote; in a republic, the people elect certain individuals to represent their interests in deliberating and voting. The deliberations and voting record of representatives should usually reflect but should also be more refined than that of the entire people voting directly. Sometimes this distinction is described in terms of direct democracy vs. representative democracy.
- Explain the importance of the principles of separation of powers and federalism, and why these ideas are central to the Constitution’s safeguards against the corrupting tendency of power.
- Consider how the Constitution repeatedly structures federal institutions to refine and enlarge the will of the people.
- Explain how the House of Representatives is meant to be a more dynamic and immediate expression of the people’s will, while the Senate is meant to be more deliberative and circumspect.
- Emphasize that the Framers of the Constitution were chiefly concerned with allowing the will of the majority to rule—thereby guaranteeing the consent of the governed—while still preserving the rights of the minority and thereby securing justice.
- Describe the American Founders’ understanding of human nature. They understood human nature to be fixed and unchanging, good but also flawed and tending toward corrupting power. In response to human nature, government must guard against the opposite dangers of lawlessness and tyranny, accounting for the realities of human nature and rejecting the possibility of utopia.
- Show how the Constitution does not deny, demonize, or elevate human nature, but rather seeks to channel the powers of human beings into constructive institutions while mitigating man’s baser tendencies. In brief, the Constitution is constructed on a deep and accurate understanding of fixed human nature born of the Founders’ knowledge of history, their own experience, and their prudence.
- Ask about the source and purpose of a government’s power. Review how the Declaration of Independence claims that government power comes from the free consent of the people, and ask students to identify whether and how the Constitution accomplishes that goal.
- Teach in general terms the structure, makeup, and powers of each branch of government and explain why the Founders made them so. Students should understand the basics of how each branch works, how they work together, and how the branches check and balance one another.
- Take the time to discuss the ways in which slavery was addressed in the Constitution, including the extents to which the Constitution both left slavery in place and also placed new national limits on it. As Frederick Douglass and Abraham Lincoln would later acknowledge, the Declaration’s principle of equality and the Constitution’s arrangements gave the Founders the belief that they had placed slavery on the path to eventual extinction. This of course does not excuse the fact that many of these founders still held African Americans in slavery during their lifetimes.
- Clarify for students the arguments of northerners and southerners concerning the Three-Fifths Clause. The clause was not about the humanity of slaves; it was strictly about how much representation slave-owning states would receive in Congress and the Electoral College. The great hypocrisy of the slaveholders was that while they refused to call a slave a human being, they insisted that each slave be counted as a whole person for purposes of representation. In fact, it was the anti-slavery Founders who did not want slaves counted at all in the Constitution for the purposes of representation. The fact that slaves were only counted as three-fifths for the purposes of representation was a disappointment for southern states, as they had demanded they be counted as a whole person. It was a partial victory for northern opponents to slavery, as it would give the slaveholding states less influence in lawmaking than they wished. Additionally, students should understand that in the mind of those opposed to slavery, this compromise was the only politically viable route if they were to secure southern support for the Constitution, without which the country would become disunited, with the South able to perpetuate slavery indefinitely as their own country without northern abolitionists. Students need not agree with the tenets of the compromise, but they must understand it as the founders themselves understood it.
- Remind students that the slave trade was not formally limited in the states (the Continental Congress had temporarily banned the practice in 1774) until the passage of the Constitution, which allowed for it to be outlawed nationwide in 1808 (which it was) and for Congress to discourage it by imposing tariffs on the slave trade in the meantime. Students should understand that without the compromise that allowed this twenty-year delay, the power to abolish the slave trade would not have been granted by the slaveholding interest in the first place.
Consider with students the significance of the Constitution not using the word “slave” and instead using “person.” Refusing to use the word “slave” avoided giving legal legitimacy to slavery. Even Article IV, Section 2, Clause 3 emphasizes that slavery was legal based on certain state, not federal, laws. The use of the word “person” forced even slaveholders to recognize the humanity of the slave: that he or she was in fact a human person, not property. There would be no federally-recognized “property in man.”

Consider with students the sectional nature of views on slavery during the founding. The majority of northerners and northern founders (e.g., John Adams, Benjamin Franklin, Benjamin Rush, Gouverneur Morris, and John Jay) spoke and wrote extensively on the immorality of slavery and its need to be abolished. Some northern founders, such as John Jay, Alexander Hamilton, and Benjamin Franklin, founded or served in abolitionist societies.

Consider also that even among the southern founders who supported slavery or held slaves, several leading founders expressed regret and fear of divine retribution for slavery in America, such as Thomas Jefferson, James Madison, and George Washington. Some freed their slaves as well, such as George Washington, who by the end of his life freed the slaves in his family estate. And many, like Thomas Jefferson, nevertheless maintained that slaves were men in full possession of the natural rights of all men. Making these observations does not diminish the inhumaneness of slavery or dismiss the wrong of racism by certain colonists or other individual Americans living in other generations.

Note the belief of many Founders, based on the evidence at the time, that slavery was naturally on the way to extinction. Public opinion had steadily grown against it; the principles of the Declaration of Independence and Revolution would continue to be a force toward realizing equality; and the Constitution had further restricted slavery, permitted further restrictions by holding the union together, and kept slavery on its path to extinction.

Teach students about the Anti-Federalists’ concerns with the Constitution, the arguments for and against a Bill of Rights, and how the Federalists ultimately convinced states to ratify the Constitution (provided that a Bill of Rights was included).

Help students understand why each of the rights found in the Bill of Rights corresponds to the preservation of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, and how these rights answer some of the grievances in the Declaration of Independence as well as the problems under the Articles of Confederation. Especially consider the 1st, 2nd, 5th, and 10th Amendments.

Finally, tell about the first elections, meetings of the Electoral College, and George Washington’s inauguration in 1789.

STRENGTHENING UNDERSTANDING: POST-LESSON ACTIVITIES AND ASSIGNMENTS

Activity 1: Divide students into a large group (the people), a medium–sized group (the House of Representatives), and a small group (the Senate). Have the people come up with a policy idea and propose it to the House of Representatives and the Senate. Then have each group discuss their idea one group at a time while everyone else listens. Students should understand how the size and talents of the students in each group changes the nature of the discussions. Students should see how representation in general allows for a more refined and broader consensus on ideas while the Senate provides the greatest opportunity for reflection and careful conversation. These are the virtues of representation and the democratic republican form of government the Constitution establishes.
Assignment 1: Have students and parents complete a “Talk about History” assignment in which parents ask their child a series of questions about what they learned in history from a given lesson. Parents record the answers and the student returns to school (provided in appendix).

Assignment 2: Explain to someone who argues that the government should be more active and powerful what the founders would have said in response and why (2–4 sentences).

Assignment 3: The writers of the Constitution wanted all American citizens to be self-governed. What does it mean to self-govern yourself? (2–4 sentences)

Assignment 4: Have students learn by heart and recite the Preamble to the Constitution.

Assignment 5: Explain why each of the five rights outlined in the First Amendment are important (5–6 sentences).
APPENDIX A

Talk about History

Study Guides

Tests

Writing Assignment
TALK ABOUT HISTORY

Student Name: ___________________________  Due: ________________

Story/Lesson from History: ____________________________________________

1. Who/what did you learn about in history class today?
   Student Answer: ____________________________________________________

2. Who were the most important characters in the story?
   Student Answer: ____________________________________________________

3. Tell me more about one of those characters.
   Student Answer: ____________________________________________________

4. Tell me about the most exciting/interesting part of the story today.
   Student Answer: ____________________________________________________

Parent Signature: ________________________________  Date: ________________
Study Guide — Unit 2, Test 1

Lesson 1 | Self-Government or Tyranny
Lesson 2 | The Declaration of Independence

Test on _____________

TIMELINE

When given dates in order, match events from a list to the years or dates that they happened.

1770 Boston Massacre
1773 Boston Tea Party
July 4, 1776 Declaration of Independence signed

PERSONS

Identify each, provide biographical details, and explain what he or she thought or did in specific periods or events.

George III Paul Revere Thomas Paine
George Washington Benjamin Franklin Thomas Jefferson
Patrick Henry John Adams
Crispus Attucks Abigail Adams

TERMS AND TOPICS

Identify each and explain its significance to the period of history studied.

self-government Sons of Liberty Common Sense representation Boston Tea Party Bunker Hill petition Intolerable Acts self-evident militia Committee of natural rights mercenary Correspondence equality boycott Continental Army unalienable treason Minutemen pursuit of happiness
Proclamation Line Redcoats Patriot/Revolutionary Stamp Act Lexington & Concord Tory/Loyalist
STORIES FOR THE AMERICAN HEART

Be familiar with each of the following stories.

- Biographies and the roles of George Washington, John Adams, and Thomas Jefferson up through 1776
- Boston Massacre
- Boston Tea Party
- Minutemen at the Battles of Lexington and Concord
- Battle of Bunker Hill

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

Based on notes from lessons and conversations, answer each of the following.

☐ Why was it good that the colonists had been allowed so much freedom to govern themselves?
☐ Why were the colonists upset about new taxes?
☐ What were the two types of patriots? How did they resist the British differently?
☐ Why was John Adams’s defense of the redcoats after the Boston Massacre heroic?
☐ What were the Intolerable Acts and why were they called such by the colonists?
☐ How did the Sons of Liberty alert the colonists that the British were coming before Lexington and Concord?
☐ What was the ‘shot heard round the world’ and why is it called that?
☐ Even though the Patriots lost the Battle of Bunker Hill, why did it strengthen their spirit to fight?
☐ What did the Second Continental Congress do?
☐ What is the Declaration of Independence about?
☐ Who was the main writer of the Declaration of Independence?
☐ What were the consequences for signing the Declaration and why were the men so willing to sign it?
☐ What is a “self–evident” truth?
☐ What does it mean that “all men are created equal”?
☐ What is a natural right?
☐ Why do people create government? What is it supposed to do?
The American Founding — Test 1

Lesson 1 | Self-Government or Tyranny
Lesson 2 | The Declaration of Independence

TIMELINE: Write the letter of each event next to the date or years it took place.

- 1770
- 1773
- July 4, 1776

A. Boston Massacre
B. Boston Tea Party
C. Declaration of Independence signed

MATCHING: Write the letter of each definition to the correct word it defines.

- Proclamation Line
  - A. a body of armed citizens prepared for military service at any time
- representation
  - B. a group of colonists who used protest and sometimes violence to resist the British
- Sons of Liberty
  - C. a soldier from another country you can hire to fight
- boycott
  - D. an attempt by the British to prevent colonial settlement beyond the Appalachian Mountains to avoid conflict with Native Americans
- Boston Tea Party
  - E. an organized campaign in which people refuse to have any dealings with a particular group or country in order to force a change of policy
- militia
  - F. the ability for people to choose those who make laws for them
- Common Sense
  - G. the group of colonial representatives who voted to declare independence from Great Britain
- Second Continental Congress
  - H. Thomas Paine’s influential pamphlet that convinced more Americans to declare independence
- mercenary
  - I. when colonists destroyed British tea in response to British restrictions and monopolies
MULTIPLE CHOICE: Circle the option that best answers each question.

1. What did colonists call the shooting of civilians in Boston by British soldiers after the Redcoats were attacked by the mob?
   a. The Boston Tea Party
   b. The Battle of Bunker Hill
   c. The Olive Branch Petition
   d. The Boston Massacre

2. On the night of Paul Revere’s ride, what were the British soldiers sent to do?
   a. surrender to the colonists
   b. arrest John Hancock and Samuel Adams and take the Minutemen’s supplies
   c. bomb Boston Harbor
   d. attack the French

3. Who stated, “I am no longer a Virginian but an American”?
   a. Benedict Arnold
   b. General Cornwallis
   c. George Washington
   d. Patrick Henry

4. What was the name of the battle outside Boston in which the colonists only retreated because they ran out of ammunition, inflicting heavy losses on the British in the process?
   a. Bunker Hill
   b. Lexington
   c. Concord
   d. Fort Ticonderoga

5. Who was chosen as Commander in Chief of the Continental Army?
   a. John Adams
   b. Benjamin Franklin
   c. Sam Adams
   d. George Washington

6. Who physically wrote or penned the Declaration of Independence?
   a. Thomas Jefferson
   b. George Washington
   c. Paul Revere
   d. John Adams
STORIES FOR THE AMERICAN HEART: Tell me about the battles of Lexington and Concord.

_____________________________________________________________________________________

_____________________________________________________________________________________

_____________________________________________________________________________________

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND: Answer the following in complete sentences.

7. Why were the colonists upset about new taxes?

_____________________________________________________________________________________

_____________________________________________________________________________________

8. What were the Intolerable Acts and why were they called such by the colonists?

_____________________________________________________________________________________

_____________________________________________________________________________________

9. What is the Declaration of Independence about?

_____________________________________________________________________________________

_____________________________________________________________________________________

10. What does it mean that “all men are created equal”?

_____________________________________________________________________________________

_____________________________________________________________________________________

11. Why do people create government? What is it supposed to do?

_____________________________________________________________________________________

_____________________________________________________________________________________
Study Guide — Unit 2, Test 2

Lesson 3 | The War of Independence
Lesson 4 | The Constitution

Test on ____________

TIMELINE

When given chronological dates, match events from a list to the years or dates that they happened.

1775–1783  War of Independence
1776 (Christmas)  Crossing the Delaware/Battle of Trenton
September 17, 1787  Constitutional Convention concludes (Constitution Day)

PERSONS

Identify each, provide biographical details, and explain what he or she thought or did in specific periods or events.

George III  Baron von Steuben  James Madison
George Washington  Benedict Arnold  Publius
Ethan Allen  Charles Cornwallis
Henry Knox  Alexander Hamilton

TERMS AND TOPICS

Identify each and explain its significance to the period of history studied.

guerrilla warfare  Velay  Hessians  Betsy Ross Flag  Yankee Doodle  Trenton  Saratoga  France  Yorktown  Newburgh Conspiracy  American Cincinnatus  Northwest Ordinance ally  delegate  constitutional convention  Father of the Constitution  constitution  majority tyranny  limited government  separation of powers  checks and balances  compromise  legislative power  Congress  executive powers  President  judicial powers  Supreme Court  amendment  Three-Fifths Compromise  The Federalist Papers  Bill of Rights  freedom of religion  freedom of speech  right to bear arms
STORIES FOR THE AMERICAN HEART

Be familiar with each of the following stories.

- Washington’s Crossing of the Delaware
- The American farmers joining the Battle of Saratoga
- Washington encouraging his men at Valley Forge
- Washington’s dismissal of the Newburgh Conspiracy
- Benjamin Franklin’s reply to a woman’s question about what the Constitutional Convention had created: “A republic, if you can keep it,” and what this means

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

Based on notes from lessons and conversations, answer each of the following.

☐ How did soldiers fight each other in the War of Independence?
☐ How did Washington’s military strategy build confidence in the Americans?
☐ What happened at the crossing of the Delaware River and the Battle of Trenton?
☐ Why did the French form an alliance with the United States?
☐ How did the army suffer in the winter of 1777–78 and how did they regain new hope?
☐ What important contribution did Baron von Steuben make to the Continental Army?
☐ How did the Americans defeat the British at Yorktown?
☐ Why did the Americans win the War of Independence?
☐ What is a constitution and what does it do?
☐ Why did the founders think it was important to make sure that power in the government, or control over others, was divided among different groups instead of all held by one person or group?
☐ What is federalism and how does it divide power?
☐ What is the separation of powers and how does it divide power?
☐ What does the legislative power allow Congress to do?
☐ What does the executive power allow the President to do?
☐ What does the judicial power allow the Supreme Court to do?
☐ What does the Bill of Rights do and why?
☐ What is freedom of speech and why is it important?
☐ What is the right to bear arms and why is it important?
☐ What is due process and why is it important?
The American Founding — Test 2

Lesson 3 | The War of Independence
Lesson 4 | The Constitution

TIMELINE: Write the letter of each event next to the date or years it took place.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year/Event</th>
<th>Description</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1775–1783</td>
<td>A. Constitutional Convention concludes</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1776 (Christmas)</td>
<td>(Constitution Day)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sept. 17, 1787</td>
<td>B. Crossing the Delaware/Battle of Trenton</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>C. War of Independence</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

MATCHING: Write the letter of each definition to the correct word it defines.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Definition</th>
<th>Description</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>____ guerrilla warfare</td>
<td>A. a law that outlawed slavery in the west and established public schools</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>____ Newburgh Conspiracy</td>
<td>B. a plan to overthrow the new Congress and make George Washington King of America</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>____ Northwest Ordinance</td>
<td>C. a series of newspaper articles in favor of the Constitution and which explains it</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>____ Constitutional Convention</td>
<td>D. an agreement in the Constitution where northerners did not allow slaves to count fully for representation in southern states because southerners wouldn’t treat them as people</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>____ majority tyranny</td>
<td>E. fighting by hiding from the enemy and surprising them with an attack when they are unprepared</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>____ 3/5 Compromise</td>
<td>F. how the Bill of Rights makes sure government does not stop people from defending themselves</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>____ The Federalist Papers</td>
<td>G. the meeting of colonial leaders to draft a new plan for government</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>____ right to bear arms</td>
<td>H. when a larger group of people violates the freedom of a smaller group of people</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
MULTIPLE CHOICE: Circle the option that best answers each question.

1. Which country was so impressed by the American victory in the Battle of Saratoga that they formed an alliance to help the Americans against the British?
   a. Russia
   b. Germany
   c. Italy
   d. France

2. What was the final battle of the war in which General Cornwallis surrendered to the Americans?
   a. Yorktown
   b. Bunker Hill
   c. Cowpens
   d. Saratoga

3. Who is known as the “American Cincinnatus” for not using his power to take over America?
   a. Thomas Jefferson
   b. John Jay
   c. George Washington
   d. John Adams

4. Who is known as the “Father of the Constitution”?
   a. George Washington
   b. James Madison
   c. Benjamin Franklin
   d. Alexander Hamilton

BRANCHES OF GOVERNMENT: Fill in the boxes below with the name of the correct branch of government.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Name of Branch</th>
<th>Name of Office/Institution</th>
<th>Responsibilities</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>President</td>
<td>Enforces Laws</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Congress</td>
<td>Makes Laws</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Supreme Court</td>
<td>Settles Disputes Over Laws</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
STORIES FOR THE AMERICAN HEART: Tell me about the Winter at Valley Forge.

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND: Answer the following in complete sentences.

5. What happened at the crossing of the Delaware River and the Battle of Trenton?

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________

6. What is a constitution and what does it do?

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________

7. Why did the founders think it was important to make sure that power in the government, or control over others, was divided among different groups instead of all held by one person or group?

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________

8. What is federalism and how does it divide power?

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________

9. What does the Bill of Rights do and why?

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________
Writing Assignment — The American Founding

DIRECTIONS

In one paragraph, retell the story of what happened in the American War of Independence. Be sure to explain the key moments that led to American victory.
APPENDIX B

Primary Sources

Patrick Henry

Thomas Paine

The Second Continental Congress

George Washington

Phillis Wheatley

The American People
Patrick Henry, Delegate to the Second Virginia Convention

On the Resolution for a State of Defense

Speech Excerpts

March 23, 1775

St. John’s Episcopal Church | Richmond, Virginia

Give Me Liberty or Give Me Death

Background

Just weeks before the battles of Lexington and Concord in Massachusetts, Patrick Henry delivered this speech in support of raising a company of cavalry or infantry in every Virginian county.

Annotations

Mr. President:

No man thinks more highly than I do of the patriotism, as well as abilities, of the very worthy gentlemen who have just addressed the House. But different men often see the same subject in different lights; and, therefore, I hope it will not be thought disrespectful to those gentlemen if, entertaining as I do opinions of a character very opposite to theirs, I shall speak forth my sentiments freely and without reserve. This is no time for ceremony.

The question before the House is one of awful moment to this country. For my own part, I consider it as nothing less than a question of freedom or slavery; and in proportion to the magnitude of the subject ought to be the freedom of the debate. It is only in this way that we can hope to arrive at truth, and fulfill the great responsibility which we hold to God and our country. Should I keep back my opinions at such a time, through fear of giving offense, I should consider myself as guilty of treason towards my country, and of an act of disloyalty toward the Majesty of Heaven, which I revere above all earthly kings….

Notes & Questions

Sir, we have done everything that could be done to avert the storm which is now coming.

on. We have petitioned; we have remonstrated; we have supplicated; we have prostrated ourselves before the throne, and have implored its interposition to arrest the tyrannical hands of the ministry and Parliament. Our petitions have been slighted; our remonstrances have produced additional violence and insult; our supplications have been disregarded; and we have been spurned, with contempt, from the foot of the throne!

In vain, after these things, may we indulge the fond hope of peace and reconciliation. There is no longer any room for hope. If we wish to be free—if we mean to preserve inviolate those inestimable privileges for which we have been so long contending—if we mean not basely to abandon the noble struggle in which we have been so long engaged, and which we have pledged ourselves never to abandon until the glorious object of our contest shall be obtained—we must fight! I repeat it, sir, we must fight! An appeal to arms and to the God of hosts is all that is left us!...

Sir, we are not weak if we make a proper use of those means which the God of nature hath placed in our power. Three millions of people, armed in the holy cause of liberty, and in such a country as that which we possess, are invincible by any force which our enemy can send against us.

Besides, sir, we shall not fight our battles alone. There is a just God who presides over the destinies of nations, and who will raise up friends to fight our battles for us. The battle, sir, is not to the strong alone; it is to the vigilant, the active, the brave. Besides, sir, we have no election. If we were base enough to desire it, it is now too late to retire from the contest. There is no retreat but in submission and slavery! Our chains are forged! Their clanking may be heard on the plains of Boston! The war is inevitable—and let it come! I repeat it, sir, let it come.

It is in vain, sir, to extenuate the matter. Gentlemen may cry, peace, peace—but there is no peace. The war is actually begun! The next gale that sweeps from the north will bring to our ears the clash of resounding arms! Our brethren are already in the field! Why stand we here idle? What is it that gentlemen wish? What would they have? Is life so dear, or peace so sweet, as to be purchased at the price of chains and slavery?
Forbid it, Almighty God! I know not what course others may take; but as for me, give me liberty or give me death!
THOMAS PAINE

Common Sense

PAMPHLET EXCERPT

January 10, 1776

Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

BACKGROUND

After outright conflict the previous year at Lexington and Concord and Bunker Hill, and with Boston occupied by the British army and navy, Thomas Paine wrote this pamphlet on the relationship between the British and the American colonists.

ANNOTATIONS

Introduction

PERHAPS the sentiments contained in the following pages are not yet sufficiently fashionable to procure them general favor. A long habit of not thinking a thing wrong gives it a superficial appearance of being right, and raises at first a formidable outcry in defense of custom. But tumult soon subsides. Time makes more converts than reason.

As a long and violent abuse of power is generally the means of calling the right of it in question (and in matters too which might never have been thought of, had not the sufferers been aggravated into the inquiry), and as the King of England hath undertaken in his own Right to support the Parliament in what he calls Theirs, and as the good people of this country are grievously oppressed by the combination, they have an undoubted privilege to inquire into the pretensions of both, and equally to reject the usurpation of either . . .

The cause of America is in a great measure the cause of all mankind. Many circumstances hath and will arise which are not local, but universal, and through which the principles of all Lovers of Mankind are affected, and in the event of which their Affections are interested. The laying a Country desolate with Fire and Sword, declaring War against the natural rights of all Mankind, and extirpating the Defenders thereof from the Face of the Earth, is the Concern of every Man to whom Nature hath given the Power of feeling; of which Class, regardless of Party Censure, is the AUTHOR.

Thoughts on the Present State of American Affairs.

In the following pages I offer nothing more than simple facts, plain arguments, and common sense: and have no other preliminaries to settle with the reader, than that he will divest himself of prejudice and prepossession, and suffer his reason and his feelings to determine for themselves: that he will put on, or rather that he will not put off, the true character of a man, and generously enlarge his views beyond the present day….

It is the good fortune of many to live distant from the scene of present sorrow; the evil is not sufficiently brought to their doors to make them feel the precariousness with which all American property is possessed. But let our imaginations transport us a few moments to Boston; that seat of wretchedness will teach us wisdom, and instruct us for ever to renounce a power in whom we can have no trust. The inhabitants of that unfortunate city who but a few months ago were in ease and affluence, have now no other alternative than to stay and starve, or turn out to beg. Endangered by the fire of their friends if they continue within the city, and plundered by the soldiery if they leave it, in their present situation they are prisoners without the hope of redemption, and in a general attack for their relief they would be exposed to the fury of both armies…

No man was a warmer wisher for a reconciliation than myself, before the fatal nineteenth of April, 1775, but the moment the event of that day was made known, I rejected the hardened, sullen-tempered Pharaoh of England for ever; and disdain the wretch, that with the pretended title of FATHER OF HIS PEOPLE can unfeelingly hear of their slaughter, and composedly sleep with their blood upon his soul.
But admitting that matters were now made up, what would be the event? I answer, the ruin of the Continent. And that for several reasons.

First. The powers of governing still remaining in the hands of the King, he will have a negative over the whole legislation of this Continent. And as he hath shown himself such an inveterate enemy to liberty, and discovered such a thirst for arbitrary power, is he, or is he not, a proper person to say to these colonies, You shall make no laws but what I please!? And is there any inhabitant of America so ignorant as not to know, that according to what is called the present constitution, this Continent can make no laws but what the king gives leave to; and is there any man so unwise as not to see, that (considering what has happened) he will suffer no law to be made here but such as suits his purpose? We may be as effectually enslaved by the want of laws in America, as by submitting to laws made for us in England….

Secondly. That as even the best terms which we can expect to obtain can amount to no more than a temporary expedient, or a kind of government by guardianship, which can last no longer than till the Colonies come of age, so the general face and state of things in the interim will be unsettled and unpromising. Emigrants of property will not choose to come to a country whose form of government hangs but by a thread, and who is every day tottering on the brink of commotion and disturbance; and numbers of the present inhabitants would lay hold of the interval to dispose of their effects, and quit the Continent.

But the most powerful of all arguments is, that nothing but independance, i. e. a Continental form of government, can keep the peace of the Continent and preserve it inviolate from civil wars. I dread the event of a reconciliation with Britain now, as it is more than probable that it will be followed by a revolt some where or other, the consequences of which may be far more fatal than all the malice of Britain….

A government of our own is our natural right: and when a man seriously reflects on the precariousness of human affairs, he will become convinced, that it is infinitely wiser and safer, to form a constitution of our own in a cool deliberate manner, while we have it in our power, than to trust such an interesting event to time and chance….
O! ye that love mankind! Ye that dare oppose not only the tyranny but the tyrant, stand forth! Every spot of the old world is overrun with oppression. Freedom hath been hunted round the Globe. Asia and Africa have long expelled her. Europe regards her like a stranger, and England hath given her warning to depart. O! receive the fugitive, and prepare in time an asylum for mankind.
THE THIRTEEN UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

The Unanimous Declaration

A DECLARATION

July 4, 1776

Pennsylvania State House | Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

Declaration of Independence

BACKGROUND

The delegates from each colony at the Second Continental Congress announced their votes to form a new country separate from Great Britain in this statement to mankind that expounds both the principles on which this new country would be founded and the reasons they judged themselves justified to separate.

ANNOTATIONS

When in the Course of human events, it becomes necessary for one people to dissolve the political bands which have connected them with another, and to assume among the powers of the earth, the separate and equal station to which the Laws of Nature and of Nature's God entitle them, a decent respect to the opinions of mankind requires that they should declare the causes which impel them to the separation.

We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness.—That to secure these rights, Governments are instituted among Men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed,—That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their Safety and Happiness. Prudence, indeed, will dictate that Governments long established should not be changed for light and transient causes; and accordingly all experience hath shown, that mankind are more disposed to suffer, while evils are sufferable, than to right themselves by abolishing the forms to which they are accustomed. But when a long train of abuses and usurpations, pursuing invariably the same Object evinces a design to reduce them under absolute Despotism, it is their right, it is their duty, to throw off such Government, and to provide new Guards for their future security.—Such has been the patient sufferance of these Colonies; and such is now the necessity which constrains them to alter their former Systems of Government. The history of the present King of Great Britain is a history of repeated injuries and usurpations, all having in direct object the establishment of an absolute Tyranny over these States. To prove this, let Facts be submitted to a candid world.

---

5

He has refused his Assent to Laws, the most wholesome and necessary for the public good.

He has forbidden his Governors to pass Laws of immediate and pressing importance, unless suspended in their operation till his Assent should be obtained; and when so suspended, he has utterly neglected to attend to them.

10

He has refused to pass other Laws for the accommodation of large districts of people, unless those people would relinquish the right of Representation in the Legislature, a right inestimable to them and formidable to tyrants only.

15

He has called together legislative bodies at places unusual, uncomfortable, and distant from the depository of their public Records, for the sole purpose of fatiguing them into compliance with his measures.

20

He has dissolved Representative Houses repeatedly, for opposing with manly firmness his invasions on the rights of the people.

25

He has refused for a long time, after such dissolutions, to cause others to be elected;
whereby the Legislative powers, incapable of Annihilation, have returned to the People at large for their exercise; the State remaining in the mean time exposed to all the dangers of invasion from without, and convulsions within.
He has endeavored to prevent the population of these States; for that purpose obstructing the Laws for Naturalization of Foreigners; refusing to pass others to encourage their migrations hither, and raising the conditions of new Appropriations of Lands.

He has obstructed the Administration of Justice, by refusing his Assent to Laws for establishing Judiciary powers.

He has made Judges dependent on his Will alone, for the tenure of their offices, and the amount and payment of their salaries.

He has erected a multitude of New Offices, and sent hither swarms of Officers to harass our people, and eat out their substance.

He has kept among us, in times of peace, Standing Armies without the Consent of our legislatures.

He has affected to render the Military independent of and superior to the Civil power.

He has combined with others to subject us to a jurisdiction foreign to our constitution, and unacknowledged by our laws; giving his Assent to their Acts of pretended Legislation:

For Quartering large bodies of armed troops among us:

For protecting them, by a mock Trial, from punishment for any Murders which they should commit on the Inhabitants of these States:

For cutting off our Trade with all parts of the world:

For imposing Taxes on us without our Consent:

For depriving us in many cases, of the benefits of Trial by Jury:
For transporting us beyond Seas to be tried for pretended offenses:

For abolishing the free System of English Laws in a neighboring Province, establishing therein an Arbitrary government, and enlarging its Boundaries so as to render it at once an example and fit instrument for introducing the same absolute rule into these Colonies:

For taking away our Charters, abolishing our most valuable Laws, and altering fundamentally the Forms of our Governments:

For suspending our own Legislatures, and declaring themselves invested with power to legislate for us in all cases whatsoever.

He has abdicated Government here, by declaring us out of his Protection and waging War against us.

He has plundered our seas, ravaged our Coasts, burnt our towns, and destroyed the lives of our people.

He is at this time transporting large Armies of foreign Mercenaries to complete the works of death, desolation and tyranny, already begun with circumstances of Cruelty and perfidy scarcely paralleled in the most barbarous ages, and totally unworthy the Head of a civilized nation.

He has constrained our fellow Citizens taken Captive on the high Seas to bear Arms against their Country, to become the executioners of their friends and Brethren, or to fall themselves by their Hands.

He has excited domestic insurrections amongst us, and has endeavored to bring on the inhabitants of our frontiers, the merciless Indian Savages, whose known rule of warfare, is an undistinguished destruction of all ages, sexes and conditions.
In every stage of these Oppressions We have Petitioned for Redress in the most humble terms: Our repeated Petitions have been answered only by repeated injury. A Prince whose character is thus marked by every act which may define a Tyrant, is unfit to be the ruler of a free people.

Nor have We been wanting in attentions to our British brethren. We have warned them from time to time of attempts by their legislature to extend an unwarrantable jurisdiction over us. We have reminded them of the circumstances of our emigration and settlement here. We have appealed to their native justice and magnanimity, and we have conjured them by the ties of our common kindred to disavow these usurpations, which, would inevitably interrupt our connections and correspondence. They too have been deaf to the voice of justice and of consanguinity. We must, therefore, acquiesce in the necessity, which denounces our Separation, and hold them, as we hold the rest of mankind, Enemies in War, in Peace Friends.

We, therefore, the Representatives of the united States of America, in General Congress, Assembled, appealing to the Supreme Judge of the world for the rectitude of our intentions, do, in the Name, and by Authority of the good People of these Colonies, solemnly publish and declare, That these United Colonies are, and of Right ought to be Free and Independent States; that they are Absolved from all Allegiance to the British Crown, and that all political connection between them and the State of Great Britain, is and ought to be totally dissolved; and that as Free and Independent States, they have full Power to levy War, conclude Peace, contract Alliances, establish Commerce, and to do all other Acts and Things which Independent States may of right do. And for the support of this Declaration, with a firm reliance on the protection of divine Providence, we mutually pledge to each other our Lives, our Fortunes and our sacred Honor.

Georgia
Button Gwinnett, Lyman Hall, George Walton
The Declaration of Independence

North Carolina
William Hooper, Joseph Hewes, John Penn

South Carolina
Edward Rutledge, Thomas Heyward, Jr., Thomas Lynch, Jr., Arthur Middleton

Maryland
Samuel Chase, William Paca, Thomas Stone, Charles Carroll of Carrollton

Virginia
George Wythe, Richard Henry Lee, Thomas Jefferson, Benjamin Harrison, Thomas Nelson, Jr., Francis Lightfoot Lee, Carter Braxton

Pennsylvania
Robert Morris, Benjamin Rush, Benjamin Franklin, John Morton, George Clymer, James Smith, George Taylor, James Wilson, George Ross

Delaware
Caesar Rodney, George Read, Thomas McKean

New York
William Floyd, Philip Livingston, Francis Lewis, Lewis Morris

New Jersey
Richard Stockton, John Witherspoon, Francis Hopkinson, John Hart, Abraham Clark

New Hampshire
Josiah Bartlett, William Whipple, Matthew Thornton

Massachusetts
John Hancock, Samuel Adams, John Adams, Robert Treat Paine, Elbridge Gerry
Rhode Island
Stephen Hopkins, William Ellery

Connecticut
5 Roger Sherman, Samuel Huntington, William Williams, Oliver Wolcot
GENERAL GEORGE WASHINGTON, COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF OF THE CONTINENTAL ARMY

Address to Congress

SPEECH

December 23, 1783

Old Senate Chamber of the Maryland State House | Annapolis, Maryland

BACKGROUND

George Washington delivered this message to Congress to resign his commission as Commander-in-Chief of the Continental Army.

ANNOTATIONS

The great events on which my resignation depended having at length taken place; I have now the honor of offering my sincere Congratulations to Congress and of presenting myself before them to surrender into their hands the trust committed to me, and to claim the indulgence of retiring from the Service of my Country.

Happy in the confirmation of our Independence and Sovereignty, and pleased with the opportunity afforded the United States of becoming a respectable Nation, I resign with satisfaction the Appointment I accepted with diffidence. A diffidence in my abilities to accomplish so arduous a task, which however was superseded by a confidence in the rectitude of our Cause, the support of the Supreme Power of the Union, and the patronage of Heaven.

The Successful termination of the War has verified the most sanguine expectations, and my gratitude for the interposition of Providence, and the assistance I have received from my Countrymen, encreases with every review of the momentous Contest.

While I repeat my obligations to the Army in general, I should do injustice to my own feelings not to acknowledge in this place the peculiar Services and distinguished merits of the Gentlemen who have been attached to my person during the War. It was impossible the choice of confidential Officers to compose my family should have been more fortunate.

Permit me Sir, to recommend in particular those, who have continued in Service to the present moment, as worthy of the favorable notice and patronage of Congress.

I consider it an indispensable duty to close this last solemn act of my Official life, by commending the Interests of our dearest Country to the protection of Almighty God, and those who have the superintendence of them, to his holy keeping.

Having now finished the work assigned me, I retire from the great theatre of Action; and bidding an Affectionate farewell to this August body under whose orders I have so long acted, I here offer my Commission, and take my leave of all the employments of public life.
Phyllis Wheatley

“Liberty and Peace”

Poem

1784

Boston, Massachusetts

Background

Phyllis Wheatley composed this poem after the signing of the Treaty of Paris officially ending the War of Independence.

Annotations

LO! Freedom comes. Th’ prescient Muse foretold,
All Eyes th’ accomplish’d Prophecy behold:

Her Port describ’d, "She moves divinely fair,
"Olive and Laurel bind her golden Hair."
She, the bright Progeny of Heaven, descends,
And every Grace her sovereign Step attends;
For now kind Heaven, indulgent to our Prayer,

In smiling Peace resolves the Din of War.
Fix’d in Columbia her illustrious Line,
And bids in thee her future Councils shine.
To every Realm her Portals open’d wide,
Receives from each the full commercial Tide.

Each Art and Science now with rising Charms
Th’ expanding Heart with Emulation warms.
E’en great Britannia sees with dread Surprize,
And from the dazzling Splendor turns her Eyes!

Britain, whose Navies swept th’ Atlantic o’er,

Phyllis Wheatley, Liberty and Peace (Boston: Warden and Russell, 1784).
And Thunder sent to every distant Shore;
E'en thou, in Manners cruel as thou art,
The Sword resign'd, resume the friendly Part!
For Galia's Power espous'd Columbia's Cause,
And new-born Rome shall give Britannia Law,
Nor unremember'd in the grateful Strain,
Shall princely Louis' friendly Deeds remain;
The generous Prince th' impending Vengeance eye's,
Sees the fierce Wrong, and to the rescue flies.

Perish that Thirst of boundless Power, that drew
On Albion's Head the Curse to Tyrants due.
But thou appeas'd submit to Heaven's decree,
That bids this Realm of Freedom rival thee!
Now sheathe the Sword that bade the Brave attone
With guiltless Blood for Madness not their own.
Sent from th' Enjoyment of their native Shore
Ill-fated – never to behold her more!
From every Kingdom on Europa's Coast
Throng'd various Troops, their Glory, Strength and Boast.

With heart-felt pity fair Hibernia saw
Columbia menac'd by the Tyrant's Law:
On hostile Fields fraternal Arms engage,
And mutual Deaths, all dealt with mutual Rage:
The Muse's Ear hears mother Earth deplore
Her ample Surface smoak with kindred Gore:
The hostile Field destroys the social Ties,
And every-lasting Slumber seals their Eyes.
Columbia mourns, the haughty Foes deride,
Her Treasures plunder'd, and her Towns destroy'd:
Witness how Charlestown's curling Smoaks arise,
In sable Columns to the clouded Skies!
The ample Dome, high-wrought with curious Toil,
In one sad Hour the savage Troops despoil.
Descending Peace and Power of War confounds;

From every Tongue celestial Peace resounds:
As for the East th’ illustrious King of Day,
With rising Radiance drives the Shades away,
So Freedom comes array’d with Charms divine,
And in her Train Commerce and Plenty shine.

Britannia owns her Independent Reign,
Hibernia, Scotia, and the Realms of Spain;
And great Germania’s ample Coast admires
The generous Spirit that Columbia fires.
Auspicious Heaven shall fill with fav’ring Gales,

Where e’er Columbia spreads her swelling Sails:
To every Realm shall Peace her Charms display,
And Heavenly Freedom spread her golden Ray.

THE END
THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

The Constitution

LAW

March 4, 1789

United States of America

BACKGROUND

Delegates to the Constitutional Convention drafted and the states ratified this Constitution, forming the second national government for the United States of America.

ANNOTATIONS

Preamble

We the People of the United States, in Order to form a more perfect Union, establish Justice, insure domestic Tranquility, provide for the common defense, promote the general Welfare, and secure the Blessings of Liberty to ourselves and our Posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America.

Article I

Section 1. All legislative Powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives.

Section 2. The House of Representatives shall be composed of Members chosen every second Year by the People of the several States, and the Electors in each State shall have the Qualifications requisite for Electors of the most numerous Branch of the State Legislature.

No person shall be a Representative who shall not have attained to the Age of twenty five Years, and been seven Years a Citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an Inhabitant of that State in which he shall be chosen.

Representatives and direct Taxes shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union, according to their respective Numbers, which shall be determined by adding to the whole Number of free Persons, including those bound to Service for a Term of Years, and excluding Indians not taxed, three fifths of all other Persons. The actual Enumeration shall be made within three Years after the first Meeting of the Congress of the United States, and within every subsequent Term of ten Years, in such Manner as they shall by Law direct. The Number of Representatives shall not exceed one for every thirty Thousand, but each State shall have at Least one Representative; and until such enumeration shall be made, the State of New Hampshire shall be entitled to choose three, Massachusetts eight, Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations one, Connecticut five, New-York six, New Jersey four, Pennsylvania eight, Delaware one, Maryland six, Virginia ten, North Carolina five, South Carolina five, and Georgia three.

When vacancies happen in the Representation from any State, the Executive Authority thereof shall issue Writs of Election to fill such Vacancies.

The House of Representatives shall choose their Speaker and other Officers; and shall have the sole Power of Impeachment.

Section 3. The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the Legislature thereof, for six Years; and each Senator shall have one Vote.

Immediately after they shall be assembled in Consequence of the first Election, they shall be divided as equally as may be into three Classes. The Seats of the Senators of the first Class shall be vacated at the Expiration of the second Year, of the second Class at the Expiration of the fourth Year, and of the third Class at the Expiration of the sixth Year, so that one third may be chosen every second Year; and if Vacancies happen by Resignation, or otherwise, during the Recess of the Legislature of any State, the Executive thereof may make temporary Appointments until the next Meeting of the Legislature, which shall then fill such Vacancies.
No Person shall be a Senator who shall not have attained to the Age of thirty Years, and been nine Years a Citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an Inhabitant of that State for which he shall be chosen.

The Vice President of the United States shall be President of the Senate, but shall have no Vote, unless they be equally divided.

The Senate shall choose their other Officers, and also a President pro tempore, in the Absence of the Vice President, or when he shall exercise the Office of President of the United States.

The Senate shall have the sole Power to try all Impeachments. When sitting for that Purpose, they shall be on Oath or Affirmation. When the President of the United States is tried, the Chief Justice shall preside: And no Person shall be convicted without the Concurrence of two thirds of the Members present.

Judgment in Cases of Impeachment shall not extend further than to removal from Office, and disqualification to hold and enjoy any Office of honor, Trust or Profit under the United States: but the Party convicted shall nevertheless be liable and subject to Indictment, Trial, Judgment and Punishment, according to Law.

Section 4. The Times, Places and Manner of holding Elections for Senators and Representatives, shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by Law make or alter such Regulations, except as to the Places of choosing Senators.

The Congress shall assemble at least once in every Year, and such Meeting shall be on the first Monday in December, unless they shall by Law appoint a different Day.

Section 5. Each House shall be the Judge of the Elections, Returns and Qualifications of its own Members, and a Majority of each shall constitute a Quorum to do Business; but a smaller Number may adjourn from day to day, and may be authorized to compel the Attendance of absent Members, in such Manner, and under such Penalties as each House may provide.
Each House may determine the Rules of its Proceedings, punish its Members for disorderly Behavior, and, with the Concurrence of two thirds, expel a Member.

Each House shall keep a Journal of its Proceedings, and from time to time publish the same, excepting such Parts as may in their Judgment require Secrecy; and the Yeas and Nays of the Members of either House on any question shall, at the Desire of one fifth of those Present, be entered on the Journal.

Neither House, during the Session of Congress, shall, without the Consent of the other, adjourn for more than three days, nor to any other Place than that in which the two Houses shall be sitting.

Section 6. The Senators and Representatives shall receive a Compensation for their Services, to be ascertained by Law, and paid out of the Treasury of the United States. They shall in all Cases, except Treason, Felony and Breach of the Peace, be privileged from Arrest during their Attendance at the Session of their respective Houses, and in going to and returning from the same; and for any Speech or Debate in either House, they shall not be questioned in any other Place.

No Senator or Representative shall, during the Time for which he was elected, be appointed to any civil Office under the Authority of the United States, which shall have been created, or the Emoluments whereof shall have been encreased during such time; and no Person holding any Office under the United States, shall be a Member of either House during his Continuance in Office.

Section 7. All Bills for raising Revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives; but the Senate may propose or concur with Amendments as on other Bills.

Every Bill which shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate, shall, before it become a Law, be presented to the President of the United States; If he approve he shall sign it, but if not he shall return it, with his Objections to that House in which it shall have originated, who shall enter the Objections at large on their Journal, and proceed to reconsider it. If after such Reconsideration two thirds of that House shall agree to pass the Bill, it shall be sent, together with the Objections, to the other House, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered, and if approved by two thirds of that House, it shall become a Law. But in all such Cases the Votes of both Houses shall be determined by yeas and Nays, and the Names of the Persons voting for and against the Bill shall be entered on the Journal of each House respectively. If any Bill shall not be returned by the President within ten days (Sundays excepted) after it shall have been presented to him, the Same shall be a Law, in like Manner as if he had signed it, unless the Congress by their Adjournment prevent its Return in which Case it shall not be a Law.

Every Order, Resolution, or Vote to which the Concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary (except on a question of Adjournment) shall be presented to the President of the United States; and before the Same shall take Effect, shall be approved by him, or being disapproved by him, shall be repassed by two thirds of the Senate and House of Representatives, according to the Rules and Limitations prescribed in the Case of a Bill.

Section 8. The Congress shall have Power To lay and collect Taxes, Duties, Imposts and Excises, to pay the Debts and provide for the common Defense and general Welfare of the United States; but all Duties, Imposts and Excises shall be uniform throughout the United States;

To borrow Money on the credit of the United States;

To regulate Commerce with foreign Nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian Tribes;

To establish an uniform Rule of Naturalization, and uniform Laws on the subject of Bankruptcies throughout the United States;

To coin Money, regulate the Value thereof, and of foreign Coin, and fix the Standard of Weights and Measures;

To provide for the Punishment of counterfeiting the Securities and current Coin of the United States;

To establish Post Offices and post Roads;

Copyright © 2021 Hillsdale College. All Rights Reserved.
To promote the Progress of Science and useful Arts, by securing for limited Times to Authors and Inventors the exclusive Right to their respective Writings and Discoveries;

To constitute Tribunals inferior to the supreme Court;

To define and punish Piracies and Felonies committed on the high Seas, and Offenses against the Law of Nations;

To declare War, grant Letters of Marque and Reprisal, and make Rules concerning Captures on Land and Water;

To raise and support Armies, but no Appropriation of Money to that Use shall be for a longer Term than two Years;

To provide and maintain a Navy;

To make Rules for the Government and Regulation of the land and naval Forces;

To provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions;

To provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia, and for governing such Part of them as may be employed in the Service of the United States, reserving to the States respectively, the Appointment of the Officers, and the Authority of training the Militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress;

To exercise exclusive Legislation in all Cases whatsoever, over such District (not exceeding ten Miles square) as may, by Cession of particular States, and the Acceptance of Congress, become the Seat of the Government of the United States, and to exercise like Authority over all Places purchased by the Consent of the Legislature of the State in which the Same shall be, for the Erection of Forts, Magazines, Arsenals, dock-Yards, and other needful Buildings;—And

To make all Laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into Execution the foregoing Powers, and all other Powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any Department or Officer thereof.
Section 9. The Migration or Importation of such Persons as any of the States now existing shall think proper to admit, shall not be prohibited by the Congress prior to the Year one thousand eight hundred and eight, but a Tax or duty may be imposed on such Importation, not exceeding ten dollars for each Person.

5 The Privilege of the Writ of Habeas Corpus shall not be suspended, unless when in Cases of Rebellion or Invasion the public Safety may require it.

No Bill of Attainder or ex post facto Law shall be passed.

No Capitation, or other direct, Tax shall be laid, unless in Proportion to the Census or Enumeration herein before directed to be taken.

10 No Tax or Duty shall be laid on Articles exported from any State.

No Preference shall be given by any Regulation of Commerce or Revenue to the Ports of one State over those of another: nor shall Vessels bound to, or from, one State, be obliged to enter, clear, or pay Duties in another.

No Money shall be drawn from the Treasury, but in Consequence of Appropriations made by Law; and a regular Statement and Account of the Receipts and Expenditures of all public Money shall be published from time to time.

No Title of Nobility shall be granted by the United States: And no Person holding any Office of Profit or Trust under them, shall, without the Consent of the Congress, accept of any present, Emolument, Office, or Title, of any kind whatever, from any King, Prince, or foreign State.

20 Section 10. No State shall enter into any Treaty, Alliance, or Confederation; grant Letters of Marque and Reprisal; coin Money; emit Bills of Credit; make any Thing but gold and silver Coin a Tender in Payment of Debts; pass any Bill of Attainder, ex post facto Law, or Law impairing the Obligation of Contracts, or grant any Title of Nobility.

25 No State shall, without the Consent of the Congress, lay any Imposts or Duties on Imports or Exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing its inspection Laws: and the net Produce of all Duties and Imposts, laid by any State on Imports or Exports, shall be for the Use of the Treasury of the United States; and all such Laws shall be subject to the Revision and Control of the Congress.

No State shall, without the Consent of Congress, lay any duty of Tonnage, keep Troops, or Ships of War in time of Peace, enter into any Agreement or Compact with another State, or with a foreign Power, or engage in War, unless actually invaded, or in such imminent Danger as will not admit of delay.

Article II

Section 1. The executive Power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America. He shall hold his Office during the Term of four Years, and, together with the Vice-President chosen for the same Term, be elected as follows:

Each State shall appoint, in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a Number of Electors, equal to the whole Number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress: but no Senator or Representative, or Person holding an Office of Trust or Profit under the United States, shall be appointed an Elector.

The Electors shall meet in their respective States, and vote by Ballot for two Persons, of whom one at least shall not be an Inhabitant of the same State with themselves. And they shall make a List of all the Persons voted for, and of the Number of Votes for each; which List they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the Seat of the Government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate. The President of the Senate shall, in the Presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the Certificates, and the Votes shall then be counted. The Person having the greatest Number of Votes shall be the President, if such Number be a Majority of the whole Number of Electors appointed; and if there be more than one who have such Majority, and have an equal Number of Votes, then the House of Representatives shall immediately choose by Ballot one of them for President; and if no Person have a Majority, then from the five highest on the List the said House shall in like Manner choose the President. But in choosing the President, the Votes shall be taken by States, the Representation from each State having one Vote; a quorum for this Purpose shall consist of a Member or Members from two thirds of the States, and a Majority of all the States shall be necessary to a Choice. In every Case, after the Choice of the President, the Person having the greatest Number of Votes of the Electors shall be the Vice President. But if there should remain two or more who have equal Votes, the Senate shall choose from them by Ballot the Vice President.

The Congress may determine the Time of choosing the Electors, and the Day on which they shall give their Votes; which Day shall be the same throughout the United States.

No Person except a natural born Citizen, or a Citizen of the United States, at the time of the Adoption of this Constitution, shall be eligible to the Office of President; neither shall any Person be eligible to that Office who shall not have attained to the Age of thirty-five Years, and been fourteen Years a Resident within the United States.

In Case of the Removal of the President from Office, or of his Death, Resignation, or Ina-Bility to discharge the Powers and Duties of the said Office, the Same shall devolve on the Vice President, and the Congress may by Law provide for the Case of Removal, Death, Resignation or Inability, both of the President and Vice President, declaring what Officer shall then act as President, and such Officer shall act accordingly, until the Disability be removed, or a President shall be elected.

The President shall, at stated Times, receive for his Services, a Compensation, which shall neither be increased nor diminished during the Period for which he shall have been elected, and he shall not receive within that Period any other Emolument from the United States, or any of them.

Before he enter on the Execution of his Office, he shall take the following Oath or Affirmation:—"I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully execute the Office of President of the United States, and will to the best of my Ability, preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States."

Section 2. The President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and of the Militia of the several States, when called into the actual Service of the United States; he may require the Opinion, in writing, of the principal Officer in each of the executive Departments, upon any subject relating to the Duties of their respective Offices, and he shall have Power to grant Reprieves and Pardons for Offenses against the United States, except in Cases of Impeachment.

He shall have Power, by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate, to make Treaties, provided two thirds of the Senators present concur; and he shall nominate, and by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate, shall appoint Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls, Judges of the supreme Court, and all other Officers of the United States, whose Appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by Law: but the Congress may by Law vest the Appointment of such inferior Officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the Courts of Law, or in the Heads of Departments.

The President shall have Power to fill up all Vacancies that may happen during the Recess of the Senate, by granting Commissions which shall expire at the End of their next Session.

Section 3. He shall from time to time give to the Congress Information of the State of the Union, and recommend to their Consideration such Measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient; he may, on extraordinary Occasions, convene both Houses, or either of them, and in Case of Disagreement between them, with Respect to the Time of Adjournment, he may adjourn them to such Time as he shall think proper; he shall receive Ambassadors and other public Ministers; he shall take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed, and shall Commission all the Officers of the United States.

Section 4. The President, Vice President and all civil Officers of the United States, shall be removed from Office on Impeachment for, and Conviction of, Treason, Bribery, or other high Crimes and Misdemeanors.

Article III

Section 1. The judicial Power of the United States, shall be vested in one supreme Court, and in such inferior Courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The Judges, both of the supreme and inferior Courts, shall hold their Offices during good Behavior, and shall, at stated Times, receive for their Services a Compensation, which shall not be diminished during their Continuance in Office.

Section 2. The judicial Power shall extend to all Cases, in Law and Equity, arising under this Constitution, the Laws of the United States, and Treaties made, or which shall be made, under their Authority;—to all Cases affecting Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls;—to all Cases of admiralty and maritime Jurisdiction; —to Controversies to which the United States shall be a Party;—to Controversies between two or more States;—between a State and Citizens of another State;—between Citizens of different States;—between Citizens of the same State claiming Lands under Grants of different States, and between a State, or the Citizens thereof, and foreign States, Citizens or Subjects.

In all Cases affecting Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls, and those in which a State shall be Party, the supreme Court shall have original Jurisdiction. In all the other Cases before mentioned, the supreme Court shall have appellate Jurisdiction, both as to Law and Fact, with such Exceptions, and under such Regulations as the Congress shall make.

The Trial of all Crimes, except in Cases of Impeachment, shall be by Jury; and such Trial shall be held in the State where the said Crimes shall have been committed; but when not committed within any State, the Trial shall be at such Place or Places as the Congress may by Law have directed.

Section 3. Treason against the United States, shall consist only in levying War against them, or in adhering to their Enemies, giving them Aid and Comfort. No Person shall be convicted of Treason unless on the Testimony of two Witnesses to the same overt Act, or on Confession in open Court.

The Congress shall have Power to declare the Punishment of Treason, but no Attainder of Treason shall work Corruption of Blood, or Forfeiture except during the Life of the Person attainted.
Article IV

Section 1. Full Faith and Credit shall be given in each State to the public Acts, Records, and judicial Proceedings of every other State. And the Congress may by general Laws prescribe the Manner in which such Acts, Records and Proceedings shall be proved, and the Effect thereof.

Section 2. The Citizens of each State shall be entitled to all Privileges and Immunities of Citizens in the several States.

A Person charged in any State with Treason, Felony, or other Crime, who shall flee from Justice, and be found in another State, shall on Demand of the executive Authority of the State from which he fled, be delivered up, to be removed to the State having Jurisdiction of the Crime.

No Person held to Service or Labor in one State, under the Laws thereof, escaping into another, shall, in Consequence of any Law or Regulation therein, be discharged from such Service or Labor, but shall be delivered up on Claim of the Party to whom such Service or Labor may be due.

Section 3. New States may be admitted by the Congress into this Union; but no new State shall be formed or erected within the Jurisdiction of any other State; nor any State be formed by the Junction of two or more States, or parts of States, without the Consent of the Legislatures of the States concerned as well as of the Congress.

The Congress shall have Power to dispose of and make all needful Rules and Regulations respecting the Territory or other Property belonging to the United States; and nothing in this Constitution shall be so construed as to Prejudice any Claims of the United States, or of any particular State.

Section 4. The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a Republican Form of Government, and shall protect each of them against Invasion; and on Application of the Legislature, or of the Executive (when the Legislature cannot be convened) against domestic Violence.
Article V

The Congress, whenever two thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose Amendments to this Constitution, or, on the Application of the Legislatures of two thirds of the several States, shall call a Convention for proposing Amendments, which, in either Case, shall be valid to all Intents and Purposes, as Part of this Constitution, when ratified by the Legislatures of three fourths of the several States, or by Conventions in three fourths thereof, as the one or the other Mode of Ratification may be proposed by the Congress; Provided that no Amendment which may be made prior to the Year One thousand eight hundred and eight shall in any Manner affect the first and fourth Clauses in the Ninth Section of the first Article; and that no State, without its Consent, shall be deprived of its equal Suffrage in the Senate.

Article VI

All Debts contracted and Engagements entered into, before the Adoption of this Constitution, shall be as valid against the United States under this Constitution, as under the Confederation.

This Constitution, and the Laws of the United States which shall be made in Pursuance thereof; and all Treaties made, or which shall be made, under the Authority of the United States, shall be the supreme Law of the Land; and the Judges in every State shall be bound thereby, any Thing in the Constitution or Laws of any State to the Contrary notwithstanding.

The Senators and Representatives before mentioned, and the Members of the several State Legislatures, and all executive and judicial Officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by Oath or Affirmation, to support this Constitution; but no religious Test shall ever be required as a Qualification to any Office or public Trust under the United States.
Article VII

The Ratification of the Conventions of nine States, shall be sufficient for the Establishment of this Constitution between the States so ratifying the Same.

Done in Convention by the Unanimous Consent of the States present the Seventeenth Day of September in the Year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and Eighty seven and of the Independence of the United States of America the Twelfth In witness whereof We have hereunto subscribed our Names.

George Washington—

President and deputy from Virginia

Delaware

George Read, Gunning Bedford, Jr., John Dickinson, Richard Bassett, Jacob Broom

Maryland

James McHenry, Daniel of St. Thomas Jenifer, Daniel Carroll

Virginia

John Blair, James Madison, Jr.

North Carolina

William Blount, Richard Dobbs Spaight, Hugh Williamson

South Carolina

John Rutledge, Charles Cotesworth Pinckney, Charles Pinckney, Pierce Butler
Georgia
William Few, Abraham Baldwin

New Hampshire
John Langdon, Nicholas Gilman

Massachusetts
Nathaniel Gorham, Rufus King

Connecticut
William Samuel Johnson, Roger Sherman

New York
Alexander Hamilton

New Jersey
William Livingston, David Brearley, William Paterson, Jonathan Dayton

Pennsylvania
Benjamin Franklin, Thomas Mifflin, Robert Morris, George Clymer, Thomas FitzSimmons, Jared Ingersoll, James Wilson, Gouverneur Morris

Attest William Jackson Secretary
FIRST CONGRESS

Proposed Amendments to the Constitution

JOIN RESOLUTION EXCERPT

September 25, 1789
Federal Hall | City of New-York, New York

Bill of Rights

BACKGROUND

As part of a compromise to secure the ratification of the Constitution, Federalists introduced in the first Congress a Bill of Rights as twelve amendments to the new Constitution. Below are the ten amendments that were ultimately ratified.

ANNOTATIONS

Amendment I

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

Amendment II

A well regulated Militia, being necessary to the security of a free State, the right of the people to keep and bear Arms shall not be infringed.

Amendment III

No Soldier shall, in time of peace be quartered in any house, without the consent of the Owner, nor in time of war, but in a manner to be prescribed by law.

NOTES & QUESTIONS

Amendment IV

The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no Warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by Oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized.

Amendment V

No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the Militia, when in actual service in time of War or public danger; nor shall any person be subject for the same offence to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb; nor shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation.

Amendment VI

In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law, and to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation; to be confronted with the witnesses against him; to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor, and to have the Assistance of Counsel for his defence.

Amendment VII

In Suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved, and no fact tried by a jury, shall be otherwise re-examined in any Court of the United States, than according to the rules of the common law.
Amendment VIII

Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted.

Amendment IX

The enumeration in the Constitution, of certain rights, shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people.

Amendment X

The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.
UNIT 4
The American Civil War
1848–1877

UNIT PREVIEW

Structure

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Lesson</th>
<th>Time Period</th>
<th>Topic</th>
<th>Classes</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Lesson 1</td>
<td>1848–1854</td>
<td>The Expansion of Slavery</td>
<td>9–10</td>
<td>p. 7</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lesson 2</td>
<td>1854–1861</td>
<td>Toward Civil War</td>
<td>7–8</td>
<td>p. 14</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lesson 3</td>
<td>1861–1865</td>
<td>The Civil War</td>
<td>9–10</td>
<td>p. 19</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lesson 4</td>
<td>1865–1877</td>
<td>Reconstruction</td>
<td>4–5</td>
<td>p. 28</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

APPENDIX A  Talk about History, Study Guides, Tests, and Writing Assignment  p. 33

APPENDIX B  Primary Sources  p. 51

Why Teach the American Civil War

“Four score and seven years ago our fathers brought forth on this continent, a new nation, conceived in Liberty, and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal. Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that nation, or any nation so conceived and so dedicated, can long endure.”

These famous opening lines from President Abraham Lincoln at Gettysburg express why the Civil War was fought. Whether America, founded in liberty and equality, could long endure depended on whether the nation’s original contradiction, slavery, could be abolished while still preserving the country’s existence as a union. American students must know how the ideas at the heart of their country were undermined by slavery; but they must also learn how heroic Americans committed to America’s founding ideas made great sacrifices and sometimes gave their lives, so that these ideas of liberty and equality might prevail over the dehumanizing tyranny of slavery. And students must learn that, like those in Lincoln’s audience, it is up to each American to oppose tyranny and dehumanization to ensure that “government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth.”

Enduring Ideas from this Unit

1. That slavery was the original contradiction in America, and that slavery is immoral, unjust, dehumanizing, and in violation of the inherent dignity and equal possession of natural rights of each person, as are any ways in which one person or group of people is favored over another due to the color of their skin.
2. That at its heart, the Civil War was fought over the issue of slavery: first, whether slavery would expand in America; next, whether it would be permitted at all; and last, whether the half of the country that opposed slavery would let the country be divided and the injustice to continue elsewhere, instead of fighting to preserve a union that would guarantee liberty and abolish slavery.
3. That President Abraham Lincoln exemplified American statesmanship as he piloted the nation toward fulfillment of its founding ideas, ended the barbarous and tyrannical institution of slavery, and nevertheless abided by the rule of law in doing so.
4. That the period of Reconstruction following the Civil War witnessed a realization of civil rights for freedmen, producing greater degrees of justice and equality that would nevertheless be challenged both during Reconstruction and in following decades.

What Teachers Should Consider

The American Civil War is one of the most important events in American history if only for its attempt to prove, with the blood of hundreds of thousands of Americans, that a people may freely govern themselves and organize themselves to preserve the liberty and equal natural rights of all.

Many students may not know that America was founded on these ideas. Fewer, perhaps, know that America even succeeded in proving these ideas true, striving to live up to them for twenty years, before such progress was eclipsed after Reconstruction. Although subsequent decades would manifest different kinds of failures to guarantee the equal protection of natural rights in certain parts of the country, the Civil War demonstrated that some statesmen and a considerable portion of Americans were committed to carrying out America’s founding promise to the point of bloodshed.

Teachers will greatly benefit from studying not only the war itself but also the thoughts, words, and deeds of the statesman who conducted the war for the Union: President Abraham Lincoln. Lincoln’s ideas and speeches, and his political actions, should constitute for students a model of prudence, both in the public arena and in their own lives. His understanding of the issue of slavery, not merely in the abstract but as it existed in America, can teach students much about their country and its history.
This unit should begin, therefore, with an understanding of slavery as it was found in America in 1848. The teacher should especially emphasize the changes in the status and practice of slavery since the founding in 1776. The teacher should also emphasize changes in legal and public opinion toward the institution since the Constitution went into effect in 1789. In brief, both had entrenched slavery instead of keeping it on the gradual path to extinction, where the founding generation had arguably placed it.

Abraham Lincoln saw these legal and public opinion shifts most clearly, and he saw that such changes struck directly at the ideas on which America was founded. In brief, his entire public career as well as the founding of the Republican Party were devoted to checking this change, to returning slavery to the path of extinction, and to fulfilling the founding ideas of constitutional self-government. Lincoln’s arguments to these ends dominate the crescendo leading to war in spring of 1861. At its heart, this is what the Civil War was about.

The teacher will be able to enrich his or her students by cultivating their imaginations with the events, battles, and images of the Civil War, the bloodiest conflict in which Americans have ever been involved. Strategy, battles, and the general history of the war should be taught in detail. The teacher should learn and share accounts and images of the important moments and figures who contributed to Union victory in 1865. Meanwhile, Lincoln’s careful yet effective maneuverings—both to preserve the Union and to seize the constitutional opportunity afforded him to emancipate the slaves—should be followed in detail.

The unit best concludes with a study of the period known as Reconstruction. Perhaps never in history was so much hoped for, achieved, and mismanaged in so short a period of time with respect to liberty and equality under the law. Students should learn to appreciate both the sacrifices of the Civil War and its immediate achievements during Reconstruction. Nevertheless, students should also learn about the emergence of different kinds of injustice, especially for African Americans living in the former rebel states: injustices that would be perpetuated for a century.

How Teachers Can Learn More

TEXTS

Land of Hope, Wilfred McClay
A Short History of the Civil War, James Stokesbury
Battle Cry of Freedom, James McPherson

ONLINE COURSES | Online.Hillsdale.edu

The Great American Story
Civil Rights in American History
Constitution 101
Lesson Planning Resources

TEACHER RESOURCES

- Land of Hope Young Reader’s Edition, Wilfred McClay
- The Story of the Thirteen Colonies and the Great Republic, H.A. Guerber
- The Civil War and Reconstruction, Anne Goudvis and Stephanie Harvey
- Fields of Fury, James McPherson

STUDENT RESOURCES

- Meet Abraham Lincoln, Barbara Cary
- The Civil War: Reader, Core Knowledge Foundation

TRADE BOOKS

- If You Lived When There Was Slavery in America, Anne Kamma
- If You Traveled on the Underground Railroad, Ellen Levine
- Abraham Lincoln and Frederick Douglass, Russell Freedman
- If You Lived at the Time of the Civil War, Kay Moore
- The Boys’ War, Jim Murphy

PRIMARY SOURCES

- Narrative of the Life of Frederick Douglass, Frederick Douglass
- “House Divided” speech, Abraham Lincoln
- First inaugural address, Abraham Lincoln
- Emancipation Proclamation, Abraham Lincoln
- Gettysburg Address, Abraham Lincoln
- Second inaugural address, Abraham Lincoln
- 13th Amendment
LESSON PLANS,
ACTIVITIES AND ASSIGNMENTS,
AND FORMATIVE QUIZZES
Lesson 1 — The Expansion of Slavery

LESSON OBJECTIVE

Students learn how the defenders of slavery began to assert that slavery was a “positive good” that ought to be expanded throughout the country instead of an existing evil that should be contained and kept on the path to extinction.

TEACHER PREPARATION

Create a note outline based on the following:

Student Texts
- Meet Abraham Lincoln Pages 1–44
- The Civil War: Reader Pages 42–51
- Primary Sources See below.

Teacher Texts
- Land of Hope Young Reader's Edition Chapters 19 and 20
- The Story of the Thirteen Colonies and the Great Republic Pages 150–159

Trade Books
- If You Lived When There Was Slavery in America
- If You Traveled on the Underground Railroad
- Abraham Lincoln and Frederick Douglass

Online.Hillsdale.edu
- The Great American Story Lecture 9
- Civil Rights in American History Lecture 3
- Constitution 101 Lecture 6

STUDENT PREPARATION

Assignment 1: Students pre–read Meet Abraham Lincoln, pages 1–44, in segments (grades 3–4) or The Civil War, pages 42–51 (grade 5).
Core Content in This Lesson

Geography & Places
California
Kansas–Nebraska Territory

Persons
Abraham Lincoln
Millard Fillmore
Frederick Douglass
Sojourner Truth
Harriet Beecher Stowe
Harriet Tubman
William Lloyd Garrison
Franklin Pierce
Stephen Douglas

Terms and Topics
King Cotton
antebellum
Gold Rush
secession
Compromise of 1850
Fugitive Slave Law
abolitionism
Narrative of the Life of Frederick Douglass
Uncle Tom's Cabin
Underground Railroad
Kansas-Nebraska Act
popular sovereignty

Primary Sources
Narrative of the Life of Frederick Douglass, Frederick Douglass

To Know by Heart
"Knowledge makes a man unfit to be a slave.” — Frederick Douglass
"Frederick Douglass” — Robert Hayden
"So you're the little woman who wrote the book that started this great war.” — Abraham Lincoln to Harriet Beecher Stowe upon their meeting
“Harriet Tubman,” Eloise Greenfield

Timeline
1846–48 Mexican–American War
1849 California Gold Rush

Images
Historical figures and events
Depictions of the life of slaves and the horrors of slavery
Maps of the free versus slave-state breakdown when changes occur
Pictures of first–edition copies of Narrative of the Life of Frederick Douglass and Uncle Tom's Cabin
Statue of Frederick Douglass (on the Hillsdale College campus)
STORIES FOR THE AMERICAN HEART

- Biographies and the roles of Frederick Douglass, Harriet Tubman, and Abraham Lincoln prior to the Civil War
- Childhood biography of Abraham Lincoln
- Grade–level appropriate scenes from Narrative of the Life of Frederick Douglass and Uncle Tom’s Cabin
- Actions of Harriet Tubman and the Underground Railroad

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

- Even though many wanted to abolish slavery, why did many leading Founders think that permitting slavery and keeping the Americans united would be the only way eventually to get rid of slavery?
- How did the Founders restrict slavery at the founding more than it had been before?
- How can we judge the actions of some Founders who expressed their belief that slavery was wrong but did not free their slaves in their lifetimes?
- Why did the Founders expect that slavery would eventually die out on its own?
- What invention after the Founding made cotton more valuable and actually increased slavery, which ruined the Founders’ guess that slavery would end on its own?
- Why did slavery thrive in the South?
- What was life like for slaves in the Southern states?
- How did John C. Calhoun reject the Founders’ views on slavery as expressed in the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution?
- Who was Frederick Douglass and what did he do?
- How did Frederick Douglass show that slavery was evil?
- How would Frederick Douglass have replied to John C. Calhoun’s assertions?
- Why did the South want to expand slavery? Why did the North want to stop slavery’s expansion, and some even want to abolish it where it existed?
- Who were the abolitionists? What kinds of things did they do to try to end slavery?
- Who was Harriet Tubman and what did she do?
- Who was Harriet Beecher Stowe and what did her book, Uncle Tom’s Cabin, do?
- How did the Underground Railroad work?
- What did Northerners and Southerners argue about whenever a new state was going to be made?
- Why did slave states want to expand the number of slave states in the western territories?
- What were the terms of the Compromise of 1850? Was it really a “compromise”? Why or why not?
- Was Abraham Lincoln for or against slavery? Why?
- What did the Kansas–Nebraska Act do?
- What was Stephen A. Douglass trying to accomplish with the Kansas–Nebraska Act?
- Did the Kansas–Nebraska Act help or hurt the preservation of the Union?
- What was the idea of “popular sovereignty”?
- Why did Abraham Lincoln believe “popular sovereignty” was wrong?
- Question from the U.S. Civics Test:
  - Question 75: What group of people was taken and sold as slaves?
KEYS TO THE LESSON

The status of slavery in 1848 was markedly different than it was when the Founders crafted the Constitution in 1787. The gradual decline in the profitability of slavery, evident during the founding, was forecast to continue—but this trend reversed direction upon the invention of the cotton gin in 1793. From then on, the demand for slave labor in the Southern states rapidly compounded. But the free population in the South was vastly outstripped by the burgeoning population of the North. If nothing changed, demographics and geography would eventually give Americans living in the North the power to limit slavery through law and perhaps even abolish it entirely through a constitutional amendment. Slaveholders in the South needed to change this trajectory by expanding slavery westward into the territories. Students need to understand that to justify such expansion, slavery advocates in the South had to change the opinion of Northerners: either to believe slavery to be morally good or, at the very least, to view slavery as merely a matter of the will of the majority, what Stephen Douglas called “popular sovereignty.” Moral relativism, the idea that there is no “right” or “wrong” besides what the majority of people want, and a belief in unfettered democracy through the vote of the majority were the slaveholders’ pillars in arguing to preserve slavery. Students should understand that Abraham Lincoln favored government “of the people, by the people, and for the people” but also saw how just letting a vote of the majority decide whether slavery was good or evil violated equality, freedom, and human dignity. Lincoln went about waging an oratorical war in defense of objective standards of truth and justice, of good and evil. Students should also learn how abolitionists, of both African and European descent, continued to publicize the horrors of slavery for Americans in Northern states far removed from witnessing slavery firsthand. Abolitionists also shepherded escaped slaves to freedom in the Northern states and Canada.

Teachers might best plan and teach the Expansion of Slavery with emphasis on the following approaches:

- Read aloud with students parts of Meet Abraham Lincoln or The Civil War, asking questions throughout.
- Review with students the status of slavery over the initial decades of the country’s history. At the founding, slavery was generally either openly condemned by those in the North or defended by those in the South. Its toleration by northern delegates and others who were opposed to slavery at the time of the founding was for the sake of a unity that even many abolitionists believed was the only eventual path toward abolition. The Declaration of Independence established the country on principles of equality that could and would be cited to demand the end of slavery, the Northwest Ordinance had prohibited the expansion of slavery, the Constitution refused to give legal standing to the institution, and many states had restricted or abolished slavery outright. Lastly, many leading Founders, including those who held slaves, believed that the profitability of slavery was gradually but decisively waning and that slavery would die out on its own in a relatively short period of time. The invention of the cotton gin in 1793 by Eli Whitney, however, greatly increased the profitability of slavery and reignited slaveholders’ interest in perpetuating and expanding slavery.
- Help students to imagine and understand the dehumanizing and brutal tyranny of slavery, emphasizing that the sheer fact that some people owned other human beings is and always will be morally reprehensible. Moreover, as Frederick Douglass argued, slavery actually dehumanized the master as well as the slave.
- Demonstrate for students how the growth in population in the North compared to the South would eventually allow Northern states to restrict slavery further and perhaps even abolish it with a constitutional amendment. Slaveholders recognized that they had to expand the number of slave states if they were to prohibit such actions by Northerners.

- Show students how slavery actually weakened the South as a whole while supporting the lifestyle of the elite few. For all other Southerners, slavery lowered the value and wages of labor by non-slaves, limited innovation, and thwarted economic development in the South. The Civil War would reveal the weakness of the position in which Southerners’ insistence on slavery had placed them. A simple comparison of the Northern to the Southern economy, development, and society before and during the Civil War illustrates the case.

- Teach students how the slavery issue nearly resulted in civil war over the question of expanding slavery into the territories acquired from Mexico after the Mexican-American War, brought to a head when California, after a population surge during the California Gold Rush, applied to become a state without slavery. California’s lone admission as a free state would have increased Northern power in Congress and the Electoral College against Southern states on the issue of slavery.

- Show how the Compromise of 1850 was not really a “compromise” in the real sense of the word. A “compromise” would involve all parties sacrificing something of their position to achieve a common outcome. The Compromise of 1850, however, was not one bill but five separate bills that had five separate lines of voting. Students should understand what some of these acts did, especially the Fugitive Slave Law. These laws may have avoided war in the short term, but it only deepened and delayed the divisions tearing at the country over the next ten years.

- Ask students about the effects of the Fugitive Slave Law, which compelled Northerners to assist in capturing escaped slaves and encouraged the practice of abducting free African Americans living in the North and forcing them into slavery.

- Teach students about the various parts of the abolitionist movement and its major figures. Students should learn that there was great diversity among abolitionists, especially in their underlying views about America’s governing principles and the best way to abolish slavery. For instance, William Lloyd Garrison actually agreed with the slaveholder reading of the Constitution while Frederick Douglass moved from this view to that of Abraham Lincoln that the Constitution was pro-freedom. One might read aloud with students some portions of Douglass’s Narrative of the Life of Frederick Douglass and discuss Harriet Beecher Stowe’s Uncle Tom’s Cabin, important works in making Northerners, most of whom had never seen slavery in practice, aware of its moral evil. Other abolitionists, such as Harriet Tubman and those running the Underground Railroad, heroically worked to lead escaped slaves to freedom. In general, most abolitionists appealed to the principles of equality stated in the Declaration of Independence in justifying their cause.

- Tell students the childhood and political biography of Abraham Lincoln, to show how he rose from poverty and obscurity to become arguably America’s greatest president.

- Have students learn what the Kansas-Nebraska Act did. Focus specifically on the idea of popular sovereignty and the idea that right and wrong amount to the mere will of the majority opinion.

- Explain why Abraham Lincoln believed the Kansas-Nebraska Act was dangerous. Students should understand that Lincoln saw slavery to be, above all, a moral question of right and wrong, of good and evil, and one that every American ought to take seriously as such. Lincoln also believed that leaving slavery to the vote of the majority was opposed to the ideas of the Declaration of Independence, and that slavery was simply a form of majority tyranny, one of the very dangers in democracy that the Founders had warned against. Finally, Lincoln condemned the Kansas-Nebraska Act as reversing the stance the Constitution, the Northwest Ordinance, and the founding generation had toward slavery: that it should be contained until it was abolished and by no means allowed to spread.

STRENGTHENING UNDERSTANDING: POST-LESSON ACTIVITIES AND ASSIGNMENTS

Activity 1: Have students draw a map of the United States leading up to the Civil War. Have them draw and label states that enter the union as either free or slave states. Students should track how the admittance of each state affects electoral representation (this activity can be assigned at the end of the lesson or be an ongoing activity as states are admitted).

Assignment 1: Have students and parents complete a “Talk about History” assignment in which parents ask their child a series of questions about what they learned in history from a given lesson. Parents record the answers and the student returns to school (provided in appendix).

Assignment 2: What did the Founders think and do about slavery? (2–4 sentences)

Assignment 3: What was life like for a slave? (2–4 sentences)

Assignment 4: How did abolitionists work to try to abolish slavery? (2–4 sentences)

Assignment 5: Retell the biography of one of the following: Frederick Douglass, Harriet Tubman, or Abraham Lincoln (1–2 paragraphs).
Formative Quiz 1

Matching: Write the letter of each definition to the correct word it defines.

- ____ King Cotton
- ____ Gold Rush
- ____ Fugitive Slave Law
- ____ Kansas–Nebraska Act
- ____ abolitionism

A. a law that let the people decide if two western territories would have slavery or not
B. a law that made it easier for Southerners to recapture escaped slaves in the North
C. efforts to end slavery
D. the main crop on which the Southern economy relied and which slaves harvested
E. when thousands of Americans headed west in hopes of quick riches while ballooning the size of the California Territory

Short Answer: Answer the following in complete sentences.

1. How did the Founders restrict slavery at the founding more than it had been before?

2. What invention after the Founding made cotton more valuable and actually increased slavery, which ruined the Founders’ guess that slavery would end on its own?

3. How did Frederick Douglass show that slavery was evil?

4. Who was Harriet Tubman and what did she do?

5. What was the idea of “popular sovereignty”?

Lesson 2 — Toward Civil War

1854–1861

7-8 classes

LESSON OBJECTIVE

Students learn how Abraham Lincoln and the new Republican Party’s opposition to the expansion of slavery led Southern states to secede from the Union, resulting in civil war.

TEACHER PREPARATION

Create a note outline based on the following:

Student Texts
Meet Abraham Lincoln  Pages 45–50
The Civil War: Reader  Pages 52–73
Primary Sources  See below.

Teacher Texts
Land of Hope Young Reader’s Edition  Chapter 20
The Story of the Thirteen Colonies and the Great Republic  Pages 160–169
The Civil War and Reconstruction  Pages 67–78

Trade Book
If You Lived at the Time of the Civil War

Online.Hillsdale.edu
The Great American Story  Lecture 9
Civil Rights in American History  Lecture 3
Constitution 101  Lecture 6

STUDENT PREPARATION

Assignment 1: Students pre-read Meet Abraham Lincoln, pages 45–50 (grades 3–4) or The Civil War, pages 52–73 (grade 5).

CORE CONTENT IN THIS LESSON

Geography & Places
Kansas–Nebraska Territory
Harpers Ferry
Fort Sumter
Persons
Abraham Lincoln
Frederick Douglass
Stephen Douglas
James Buchanan
John Brown

Terms and Topics
Bleeding Kansas
“a house divided”
popular sovereignty
Democratic Party
Republican Party
Lincoln–Douglas Debates
“don’t care”
majority tyranny
“apple and frame” metaphor
Wilberforce University

Primary Sources
“House Divided” speech, Abraham Lincoln

To Know by Heart
“A house divided against itself cannot stand.” — Abraham Lincoln, paraphrasing from the words of Jesus of Nazareth in the Bible

Timeline
1854 Republican Party founded
1860 Election of Abraham Lincoln; South Carolina secedes
April 12, 1861 Attack on Fort Sumter

Images
Historical figures and events
Depictions of the Lincoln–Douglas Debates
Campaign materials
Map of the 1860 election results
Fort Sumter

STORIES FOR THE AMERICAN HEART
- The breakdown of civil dialogue resulting in Preston Brooks’s attack on Charles Sumner
- What the Lincoln–Douglas Debates were like
- The scenes at the nominating conventions for each party in 1860
- The young girl who suggested to Abraham Lincoln that he grow a beard
- The first shots fired on Fort Sumter

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND
- What was Bleeding Kansas like and why did it happen?
- What kind of person was Abraham Lincoln?
- What was Abraham Lincoln’s childhood like?
- How did Abraham Lincoln learn?
Why did people create the Republican Party?
Why did Abraham Lincoln worry that the Dred Scott v. Sandford decision would allow slavery anywhere in the country?
Did Abraham Lincoln believe the Founders created a country to protect slavery or to end slavery? Why did he think this?
Why did Abraham Lincoln believe it was necessary to say that slavery was evil?
Why did Abraham Lincoln say it was wrong to “not care” about whether people vote for slavery or not?
What did Abraham Lincoln mean when he said that “a house divided against itself cannot stand?”
Why were slavery apologists in the South, especially the plantation owners, fearful of Lincoln’s election? How would the end of slavery change their way of life, considering both the debts many were under and their lifestyle?
How did Abraham Lincoln end up winning the 1860 election?
What did Southern states do after Abraham Lincoln was elected?
What did Abraham Lincoln mean when he wrote that the Declaration of Independence was like a golden apple and that the Constitution was a picture frame of silver?
What did Abraham Lincoln do after he was elected but before Fort Sumter was attacked?
What happened at Fort Sumter and how did Abraham Lincoln respond?
What was the reason, at first, why the North fought the Civil War?
How was slavery the real reason the Civil War was fought?
Question from the U.S. Civics Test:
  - Question 94: Abraham Lincoln is famous for many things. Name one.

Keys to the Lesson

The passage of the Kansas-Nebraska Act in 1854 sparked the little-known Abraham Lincoln to redouble his efforts to engage in the growing national debate over slavery in America. He saw a tremendous threat in the argument put forward by the bill’s sponsor, Stephen Douglas, that slavery was not a moral question but rather one that should simply be decided by the will of the majority. From 1854 to the outbreak of the Civil War in 1861, Lincoln would combat the idea that the morality of slavery was to be determined merely by majority opinion. Students should come to see this arc to Lincoln’s words and deeds. They should understand how he took up and articulated the heart of the matter regarding the morality of slavery and that slavery struck at America’s founding idea that all men are created equal. Roger Taney’s majority opinion in Dred Scott v. Sandford interpreted the Constitution to legitimize slavery, and Lincoln argued against both popular sovereignty and Taney’s position throughout his debates with Douglas. The moral question regarding slavery, manifesting itself in the practical questions of the expansion of slavery, is what a civil war would be fought over. After all, the formal move to secession—a constitutionally debatable claim also at issue in the approach to war—and the war itself was triggered in response to Lincoln being elected president on the position that slavery was wrong and should not be expanded.

Teachers might best plan and teach Toward Civil War with emphasis on the following approaches:

- Read aloud with students parts of Meet Abraham Lincoln or The Civil War, asking questions throughout.
- Emphasize the breakdown in civil dialogue in the several violent episodes related to slavery preceding the Civil War: Bleeding Kansas, Preston Brooks’s attack on Charles Sumner, and John Brown’s raid on the federal armory at Harpers Ferry. Go into some detail to bring these events alive for students. For example, it was Colonel Robert E. Lee who led federal troops to put down Brown’s uprising.

- Clarify the party alignment that was emerging in 1854. The Democratic Party was dividing between those who favored the principle of “popular sovereignty,” in which a state or territory could vote to allow slavery or not, and those who explicitly favored slavery. Meanwhile, the Republican Party was founded in 1854 in opposition to laws encouraging the spread of slavery. The split of the Democratic Party and the consolidation of the Republican Party in 1860 assured the election of Lincoln and significantly contributed to the coming of the Civil War.

- Consider Abraham Lincoln’s arguments against Roger Taney’s majority opinion in Dred Scott v. Sandford that asserted that slaves are not humans but only property, and that the Constitution protects their enslavement just as it does any other property. Lincoln points out that Taney’s ruling rejected the Founders’ view on slavery and would lead, together with Stephen Douglas’s popular sovereignty, to the spread of slavery throughout the country. By extension, this reasoning would also allow for other forms of majority tyranny.

- Help students think through Lincoln’s understanding of the evil of slavery and its relationship to the founding ideas of America: that all men are created equal, have unalienable rights, and that legitimate government is based on the consent of the governed. Students should see that the political question regarding the expansion of slavery ultimately depended on whether Americans believed slavery was good or evil.

- Read aloud parts of Lincoln’s “House Divided” speech in class. Consider the apparently harmful stance that Stephen Douglas takes in his position of popular sovereignty, that he does not care about what a group of people does regarding slavery, so long as the majority opinion decides it. Students should be asked why this is problematic.

- Tell students the stories of the Lincoln-Douglas Debates, presenting the settings and atmosphere as imaginatively as possible.

- Remind students that Lincoln did not believe the president could simply end slavery by his own will. While he could sign or veto laws in order to restrict its spread, abolishing slavery would likely require a constitutional amendment explicitly doing so, and that would require decades of changing public opinion, particularly in slaveholding states. His goal in the meantime was to return slavery to the path of eventual extinction via law and to convince public opinion of its immorality.

- Help students to understand the various pressures that were mounting on the Southern states during the 1850s, from increased abolitionist activities to the sheer industrial might of the Northern states to a burgeoning plantation debt as other countries produced more cotton and the price of cotton fell as a result.

- Tell students the stories of Lincoln’s speeches and his reception during these years, including the founding of the Republican Party and the various conventions in 1856 and especially 1860. Students should sense the drama of the times.

- Share with students the apple and frame metaphor that Lincoln used to describe the relationship between the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution. Help students understand the arguments with respect to the American founding and slavery.

- Provide a clear overview of events between Lincoln’s election and South Carolina’s attack on Fort Sumter in Charleston Harbor. Students should learn both Lincoln and the South’s accounts of what happened.
There were, of course, other factors and dimensions that impelled each side to fight the Civil War. Students should be familiar with these, as well as the view of most Southerners that the war was about defending what they saw as the rights of their states. This view and Lincoln’s counterview and incumbent duty to preserve the Union and Constitution may have been the occasion for the Civil War, but students should understand that the war was, at its heart, fought over whether slavery would be permitted to spread and so remain indefinitely, or be restricted and returned to the path to extinction on which the founding generation had left it. This question was, in turn, based on the morality of slavery, which Abraham Lincoln would later maintain in his Gettysburg Address was a question about the rejection or fulfillment of the ideas on which America was founded.

STRENGTHENING UNDERSTANDING: POST-LESSON ACTIVITIES AND ASSIGNMENTS

Activity 1: Assign each student a different event to draw from the Mexican–American War to the first shots fired at Fort Sumter. Then have students arrange themselves in the correct order of events in class and have each present briefly what they drew, the story behind it, its relationship to other scenes, and why they depicted it the way they did.

Assignment 1: Have students and parents complete a “Talk about History” assignment in which parents ask their child a series of questions about what they learned in history from a given lesson. Parents record the answers and the student returns to school (provided in appendix).

Assignment 2: Why did Abraham Lincoln think it was so important that people understand how evil and wrong slavery was? (2–4 sentences)

Assignment 3: Make a T–chart. On one side, write out the virtues and qualities that made Abraham Lincoln a good statesman. On the other side, write and explain events or decisions in which these qualities were on display. Continue to track these decisions throughout the study of the Civil War.

Assignment 4: Answer the following question: Why and how did the Civil War begin? (2–4 sentences)
Lesson 3 — The Civil War

1861–1865

9-10 classes

LESSON OBJECTIVE

Students learn about the major figures, common soldiers, strategy, and specific battles of the American Civil War, including a close study of the statesmanship of President Abraham Lincoln.

TEACHER PREPARATION

Create a note outline based on the following:

Student Texts

Meet Abraham Lincoln
Pages 51–68

The Civil War: Reader
Pages 74–113, 130–157

Primary Sources
See below.

Teacher Texts

Land of Hope Young Reader’s Edition
Chapters 21 and 22

The Civil War and Reconstruction
Pages 79–237, 252–273

Fields of Fury
As helpful

Trade Book

If You Lived at the Time of the Civil War

The Boys’ War

Online.Hillsdale.edu

The Great American Story
Lecture 10

Constitution 101
Lecture 7

STUDENT PREPARATION

Assignment 1: Students pre-read Meet Abraham Lincoln, pages 51–68 (grades 3–4) or The Civil War, pages 74–113, 130–157, in segments and at the teacher’s discretion (grade 5).

CORE CONTENT IN THIS LESSON

Geography & Places

Fort Sumter
Union
Confederacy
Richmond

West Virginia
Border States
Appomattox Court House
Ford’s Theatre
Persons
Abraham Lincoln
Jefferson Davis
George McClellan
Robert E. Lee
Thomas “Stonewall” Jackson
Clara Barton

Ulysses S. Grant
William Tecumseh Sherman
Martin Delany
Robert Gould Shaw
John Wilkes Booth

Terms and Topics
secession
Confederate States of America
railroads
minié ball
Army of the Potomac
Army of Northern Virginia
American Red Cross
The Pony Express
Battle of First Manassas/Bull Run
ironclads

USS Monitor*
CSS Virginia
abolition
Battle of Antietam
Battle of Fort Wagner
Battle of Vicksburg
Battle of Gettysburg
Pickett’s Charge
54th Massachusetts Regiment
Sherman’s “March to the Sea”

Primary Sources
First inaugural address, Abraham Lincoln
Emancipation Proclamation, Abraham Lincoln
Gettysburg Address, Abraham Lincoln

To Know by Heart
“Battle Hymn of the Republic,” first stanza — Julia Ward Howe
Gettysburg Address — Abraham Lincoln
"So Atlanta is ours, and fairly won." — William Tecumseh Sherman telegram announcing the fall of Atlanta to Abraham Lincoln
“O Captain! My Captain!” — Walt Whitman

Timeline
1861–65 Civil War
1863 Emancipation Proclamation takes effect
July 1–3, 1863 Battle of Gettysburg
April 9, 1865 Robert E. Lee surrenders at Appomattox
April 14–15, 1865 Abraham Lincoln assassinated;
Andrew Johnson becomes president

Images
Historical figures and events
Landscape pictures of geographic places featured in this lesson

*A previous version referred to the USS Merrimack instead of the USS Monitor.
Soldier uniforms, weaponry, flags
Depictions and photographs of figures at various scenes and moments and in battle
Maps: overall strategies, specific battles
Relevant forts
Battle scene depictions and photographs
Medical equipment
Reenactment photos
Pictures of the Emancipation Proclamation, Gettysburg Address, etc.
Robert Gould Shaw and the 54th Massachusetts Regiment Memorial
Lincoln Memorial
Statue of Abraham Lincoln (Hillsdale College campus)

STORIES FOR THE AMERICAN HEART

- Biographies and roles of Abraham Lincoln, Jefferson Davis, Robert E. Lee, Ulysses S. Grant, and William Tecumseh Sherman in the Civil War
- Robert E. Lee’s denial of Abraham Lincoln’s offer to command the Union forces
- Sullivan Ballou’s letter to his wife, Sarah, on the eve of the First Battle of Bull Run/Manassas, 1861
- How Stonewall Jackson got his nickname
- Battle of the ironclads
- The killing of Stonewall Jackson by friendly fire
- Fighting at Little Round Top and Pickett’s Charge
- The writing and delivery of the Gettysburg Address
- Robert E. Lee’s surrender to Ulysses S. Grant at Appomattox Court House
- Abraham Lincoln’s cabinet meeting regarding healing with the South just hours before his assassination
- Assassination of Abraham Lincoln at Ford’s Theatre
- Abraham Lincoln’s funeral train

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

- Why did the Southern states think the Constitution allowed them to leave the United States?
- What was important about Virginia’s decision to secede? How did it come about?
- Why did Abraham Lincoln think that the Southern states could not leave the country?
- Why was Abraham Lincoln’s first goal for fighting the Civil War to preserve the Union?
- Why was Abraham Lincoln’s second goal for fighting the Civil War to stop the spread of slavery?
- How did Abraham Lincoln keep the border states in the Union?
- What things were helpful to the Union in the Civil War?
- What things were helpful to the Confederacy in the Civil War?
- How did the Union think they could win the war?
- How did the Confederacy think they could win the war?
- Why did both sides believe the war would end quickly?
- How did soldiers fight each other?
- What was it like to be a soldier in the Civil War?
- What did Clara Barton do during the Civil War?
- What was Robert E. Lee like? Why was he a good general?
- Why was Robert E. Lee conflicted over Lincoln’s offer to command the Union forces?
- How did the battle between the Monitor and the Virginia change naval warfare?
- What happened at the Battle of Antietam?
- What was the problem with most of the Union generals early in the war?
- What happened in the battle of the ironclads?
- What was the Emancipation Proclamation and what did it do?
- Why did Abraham Lincoln believe he could free the slaves in the Confederacy?
- How did the Emancipation Proclamation change Lincoln’s goals for the war?
- Why was the capture of New Orleans so important to the Northern strategy?
- What happened at the Battle of Vicksburg?
- What happened at the Battle of Gettysburg?
- What was Pickett’s Charge?
- How did the North win the Battle of Gettysburg? Why was this such a crucial victory?
- What did Abraham Lincoln say in the Gettysburg Address?
- What was Ulysses S. Grant like? Why was he a good general?
- What was William Tecumseh Sherman’s ‘total war’ strategy?
- What happened during the March to the Sea?
- Why were many people not happy with Abraham Lincoln before the 1864 election?
- Why did Robert E. Lee eventually surrender?
- What happened at Appomattox Court House?
- What were the most significant moments in the Civil War?
- Why did the Union win the Civil War?
- What happened to Abraham Lincoln just a few days after the end of the Civil War?
- Why did John Wilkes Booth shoot Abraham Lincoln? What did he do afterwards?
- Questions from the U.S. Civics Test:
  - Question 92: Name the U.S. war between the North and the South.
  - Question 93: The Civil War had many important events. Name one.
  - Question 94: Abraham Lincoln is famous for many things. Name one.
  - Question 95: What did the Emancipation Proclamation do?
  - Question 96: What U.S. war ended slavery?

Keys to the Lesson

The American Civil War may be the defining event in American history. The outcome of the Civil War determined whether the nation would live according to the principles of liberty, equality under law, and self-government, or reject those truths in favor of slavery, inequality, and tyrannical rule. Students should appreciate this about the bloodiest conflict in their nation’s history. They should also know the stories of the heroic actions both leaders and of ordinary citizens in that war, understand the strategies employed in general and in specific battles, and consider the key moments and factors that led the Union to ultimate victory. Additionally, students have an unmatched opportunity to understand statesmanship through the careful study of Abraham Lincoln’s thoughts, speeches, and actions as he led the nation through the Civil War.

Teachers might best plan and teach the Civil War with emphasis on the following approaches:

- Read aloud with students parts of Meet Abraham Lincoln or The Civil War, asking questions throughout.
- Have students consider the arguments by the South and by Abraham Lincoln regarding the idea of “states’ rights” and the constitutionality of secession. Students should understand that there is no such thing as a “state right,” since rights belong only to persons. States (as governments) possess powers (not rights), as outlined in their state and in the federal Constitution, which the states are to use to protect the rights and the common good of their citizens (including from encroachment by the federal government by appealing to the Constitution itself). Read brief portions of Lincoln’s first inaugural address where he presents the case for how secession is unconstitutional and how he, having taken an oath in his office as president, can and must preserve the Constitution and Union.

- Help students to see how the decision by Southern states to secede was largely determined by a small elite or even merely by governors. In Virginia, for example, the governor himself made the decision to secede without consulting the legislature. Moreover, insofar as slavery was the chief interest the South wanted to preserve, only a minority of Southerners owned slaves and even a smaller minority owned a large number of slaves on plantations. The majority of Southerners were not slaveholders and while fighting for their states would preserve slavery, many common Southerners fought for the argument of states’ rights rather than to preserve the institution of slavery.

- Emphasize that the governing state known as the Confederacy was founded on the rejection of the principle of equality from the Declaration of Independence, and on an argument of the inequality of races, as asserted by its vice president, Alexander Stephens, who said that African American inferiority was the “cornerstone” of the Confederacy.

- Teach students about the delicacy with which Abraham Lincoln had to approach the border states (slave states that remained in the Union) and why this delicacy was needed. Lincoln was mindful of this necessity when he wrote his first inaugural address.

- Explain that Abraham Lincoln’s first goal in fighting the Civil War was to preserve the Union. It is important that students understand Lincoln’s reasoning. He was against slavery and wanted it abolished, but his constitutional obligation was to preserve the Union. If he acted otherwise, he would violate the Constitution and the rule of law, becoming no better than the seceding states and forfeiting his moral authority as the defender of the rule of law. Students should also know that while Lincoln did not believe he could abolish slavery alone or that abolishing slavery was the purpose for fighting the war, he nonetheless believed, like many of the Founders, that the only way to abolish slavery would be if the Union were preserved.

- Have students think through and compare the various advantages and disadvantages each side had at the outset of the war and how these shifted during the war. Having students take simple notes, as a “T-Chart” can be effective for this part of the lesson.

- Build students’ familiarity with the style of warfare in the mid-19th century, and show them plenty of images to do so. Students need this foundation for their subsequent study of battles. This helps them to imagine and understand what happens in battle and to appreciate the bravery of soldiers fighting on both sides.

- Present to students explanations of each side’s strategy at various stages of the war and the tactics and battle plans employed in specific battles. Of special note are the Union’s Anaconda Plan, James Longstreet’s development of trench warfare, the siege and battle of Vicksburg, and Robert E. Lee’s strategy preceding Gettysburg, among others.

- As with any conflict, dwell on the key contributions of both leaders and common soldiers in the war, especially Robert E. Lee, Stonewall Jackson, Ulysses S. Grant, and William Tecumseh Sherman.
Consider with students how the Civil War was a “brothers’ war,” that is, it was among fellow citizens, sometimes even friends and family members. Ask students how this is distinct from other wars. It is also, for this reason, considered one of the worst and most tragic kinds of war.

Share with students the unity found within the Union ranks in the cause of the United States and eventually the abolition of slavery. 1.3 million Union men of European ancestry fought in the Civil War and 180,000 African American men volunteered for the Union forces, making up nearly 10 percent of the Union army. Of all Union soldiers, 600,000 were wounded and approximately 360,000 Union men were killed.

Teach the war, especially the major battles and military campaigns, in some detail. Students should understand how the battles came to be, the key stories, factors, and moments from the battle itself, and the significance of their various outcomes on subsequent events. Employ battle maps often and have students track battles and campaigns.

Help students to note the major themes running through the early years of the war, namely how Confederate commanders carried the day repeatedly despite the North’s growing advantages, and how they exhibited military leadership and decisiveness. Students should also appreciate how unpopular Abraham Lincoln was in the North during much of the war.

Have students come to know Abraham Lincoln, in his personal life, interior thoughts and troubles, and his great love for his country. Students should also think about the thinking and decision-making that makes Lincoln perhaps the greatest statesman in American history.

Based on his writings, words, and deeds, show students how Abraham Lincoln always believed in the equal human dignity of African Americans and grew over the course of his career to see that African Americans were equal socially as well, a growth in understanding that he knew more Americans would need to develop in order for African Americans to be treated truly as equals. As his own experience showed, he believed this would take some time, particularly in slave-holding states.

Read aloud in class the Emancipation Proclamation and teach students the technicalities Abraham Lincoln navigated in thinking of it, drawing it up, and the timing of its promulgation. He had to retain the border states, abide by the Constitution, achieve victory, and earn the support of public opinion in order for slaves to be effectively freed—and he did it all. Students should understand that Lincoln’s justification for freeing the slaves involved exercising his executive powers as commander-in-chief of the armed forces during an armed rebellion. This is why Lincoln only had the authority to apply the Emancipation Proclamation to those states in actual rebellion, why it could not be applied to slave-holding border states not in rebellion, and why he knew that after the war, an amendment to the Constitution would be necessary to bring emancipation to all the states and make it permanent.

Read aloud with students and discuss the Gettysburg Address. It is a magnificent work of oratory, but it also gets at the heart of the American founding and the ideas that maintain the United States. It also shows the importance of defending and advancing those ideas, both in the Civil War and in our own day, as is incumbent on every American citizen.

Note the importance of Abraham Lincoln’s choice of Ulysses S. Grant as General-in-Chief of the entire Union Army. Grant’s decisiveness combined with William Tecumseh Sherman’s boldness proved essential in prosecuting the war from late 1863 onward.

Recap the war by considering major statistics, including the number of causalities and deaths on each side. Ask what stance Americans today should have towards those who fought in the Civil War, distinguishing between Northern soldiers and Southern soldiers. When considering
Southern soldiers, be sure to note the tragic death of so many Americans, even if they were fighting for a confederate government dedicated to preserving slavery. As noted previously, most of those doing the actual fighting for the South did not own slaves and believed that they were fighting for their country as well.

- Share some of the main ideas in Abraham Lincoln’s second inaugural address. Lincoln addresses many topics within the speech, both reflecting on the war and outlining a plan for after the war. In some respects, this speech is “part two” of what Lincoln began to assert in the Gettysburg Address. One of the main ideas Lincoln suggests, however, is that the Civil War was a punishment for the whole nation. This punishment was not necessarily for the mere existence of slavery but because, unlike the founding generation, the nation had in the time since the founding not continued to work for the abolition of the evil of slavery. While no country will ever be perfect, a people should work to make sure its laws do not promote the perpetuation of a practice that violates the equal natural rights of its fellow citizens.

- To set up the following unit, outline for students Abraham Lincoln’s preliminary plans for reconstruction, and impress upon students the immense historical consequences of Lincoln’s assassination.

STRENGTHENING UNDERSTANDING: POST-LESSON ACTIVITIES AND ASSIGNMENTS

Activity 1: Assign each student a different event to draw from the Civil War. Then have students arrange themselves in the correct order of events in class and have each present briefly what they drew, the story behind it, its relationship to other scenes, and why they depicted it the way they did.

Activity 2: Have students draw a map of the United States during the Civil War and then draw and label the Union, Confederate, and Border states, strategy, and battle sites of the Civil War (this activity can be assigned at the end of the lesson or be an ongoing activity as battles are taught).

Assignment 1: Have students and parents complete a “Talk about History” assignment in which parents ask their child a series of questions about what they learned in history from a given lesson. Parents record the answers and the student returns to school (provided in appendix).

Assignment 2: Why did Abraham Lincoln and the Union fight the Civil War? (2–4 sentences)

Assignment 3: Have students learn by heart and recite the Gettysburg Address.

Assignment 4: Choose a battle from the Civil War and retell the story of what happened in the battle (1 paragraph).
Formative Quiz 2

Covering Lesson 3
10–15 minutes

MULTIPLE CHOICE: Circle the option that best answers each question.

1. What was the name of Confederate general who was famous for standing and fighting, but who was accidentally killed by friendly fire?
   a. George McClellan
   b. Thomas “Stonewall” Jackson
   c. Robert E. Lee
   d. William Tecumseh Sherman

2. What was the name of the all–African American regiment that fought bravely at Fort Wagner?
   a. 54th Tennessee
   b. 1st American
   c. 54th Massachusetts
   d. 25th Douglass

3. What was the name of the round bullet that so inflicted devastating wounds on Civil War soldiers?
   a. Brown Bess
   b. Rifle
   c. minié ball
   d. silver bullet

4. What Union victory made Abraham Lincoln confident enough that the Emancipation Proclamation would carry weight among Northerners?
   a. Gettysburg
   b. Bull Run
   c. Fort Wagner
   d. Antietam

5. Which Union victory secured the western theatre of war and propelled Ulysses S. Grant to command the entire Union forces?
   a. Gettysburg
   b. Bull Run
   c. Vicksburg
   d. Antietam
SHORT ANSWER: Answer the following in complete sentences.

6. What was important about Virginia’s decision to secede? How did it come about?

_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________

7. How did Abraham Lincoln keep the border states in the Union?

_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________

8. What things were helpful to the Union in the Civil War?

_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________

9. What was the problem with most of the Union generals early in the war?

_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________

10. What happened during the March to the Sea?

_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________
Lesson 4 — Reconstruction

1865–1877

4–5 classes

LESSON OBJECTIVE

Students learn about the remarkable fulfillment of civil rights for freedmen during Reconstruction despite the objections of some and then the reversal of many of those realizations in Southern states during Reconstruction and after its end in 1877.

TEACHER PREPARATION

Create a note outline based on the following:

Student Texts
- The Civil War: Reader
  Pages 158–189
- Primary Sources
  See below.

Teacher Texts
- Land of Hope Young Reader's Edition
  Chapters 23 and 24
- The Story of the Thirteen Colonies and the Great Republic
  Pages 196–202
- The Civil War and Reconstruction
  Pages 274–317

Trade Book
- If You Lived at the Time of the Civil War

Online.Hillsdale.edu
- The Great American Story
  Lecture 11
- Civil Rights in American History
  Lectures 4 and 5

STUDENT PREPARATION

Assignment 1: Students pre-read The Civil War, pages 158-189 (grade 5).

CORE CONTENT IN THIS LESSON

Geography & Places
- Former Confederacy

Persons
- Andrew Johnson
- Hiram Revels
- Ulysses S. Grant
- Elijah McCoy
- Rutherford B. Hayes
Terms and Topics

- Reconstruction
- Radical Republicans
- freedmen
- 13th, 14th, 15th Amendments
- military districts
- Freedmen’s Bureau
- sharecropping
- black codes
- scalawags and carpetbaggers
- Ku Klux Klan Acts
- Transcontinental Railroad
- Jim Crow
- Compromise of 1877

Primary Sources

- 13th Amendment

To Know by Heart

- First line of the 13th Amendment
- “Lift Every Voice and Sing” — James Weldon Johnson
- “Sympathy” — Paul Laurence Dunbar

Timeline

- 1865–77 Reconstruction

Images

- Historical figures and events
- Maps showing the gradual re-admittance of Southern states
- Photographs of African Americans in the South, both in freedom and with the heavy restrictions placed on their freedom

STORIES FOR THE AMERICAN HEART

- The swearing in of Hiram Revels to the US Senate
- Completion of the Transcontinental Railroad at Promontory Point, Utah

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

- What does reconstruction mean?
- What was the North like after the Civil War?
- What was the South like after the Civil War?
- How did Northerners and Southerners feel about each other after the Civil War?
- What plans did Abraham Lincoln have for Reconstruction?
- Why did Abraham Lincoln wish to avoid punishing the South after the war?
- How did the assassination of Abraham Lincoln drastically change the future of American history following the Civil War?
- What plans did the Radical Republicans have for Reconstruction?
- Why did Andrew Johnson and the Republicans not get along?
- Why was Andrew Johnson impeached?
- What did a Confederate state have to do in order to rejoin the Union?
- What changes did Republicans make to the Constitution?
What did the 13th Amendment do?
How did life improve for African Americans in the South during Reconstruction? Which liberties were secured to them?
How did some people and governments in the former confederate states continue to try to hurt African Americans during Reconstruction? How were newly-secured freedoms suppressed or denied?
How did Republicans in the North attempt to defend and protect African Americans in the South during Reconstruction?
How were African Americans in the South forced to fend for themselves?
What was Ulysses S. Grant’s presidency like?
What happened in the election of 1876 and the Compromise of 1877?
How did some people and governments in the former confederate states continue try to hurt African Americans in the South after Reconstruction?
How were the black codes designed to freedmen like slaves again?
Questions from the U.S. Civics Test:
  - Question 63: There are four amendments to the U.S. Constitution about who can vote. Describe one of them.
  - Question 97: What amendment gives citizenship to all persons born in the United States?
  - Question 98: When did all men get the right to vote?
  - Question 126: Name three national U.S. holidays.
  - Question 127: What is Memorial Day?

Keys to the Lesson

Even before the battlefield fighting was over, a new kind of struggle would emerge to determine the status of former slaves now made free. In decisive ways, Abraham Lincoln’s assassination was devastating for the prospects of healing the nation while effectively securing the equal rights of freedmen. Not only was the desire for vengeance that Lincoln attempted to abate unleashed against the South, but the Republicans controlling Congress themselves fought bitterly with President Andrew Johnson over the purpose and method of Reconstruction. While some remarkable gains were made for African Americans in the South, particularly in fulfilling in law the core ideas enunciated in the American founding and fought for by the Union, objections to such fulfillments remained, new injustices were established, and the management of Reconstruction was in disarray. The Compromise of 1877 ended the period of Reconstruction, leaving the protections African Americans had gained without federal protection, resulting in decades of restrictions on their rights and liberties.

Teachers might best plan and teach Reconstruction with emphasis on the following approaches:

- Have students consider the effect of Abraham Lincoln’s assassination on Reconstruction and the future of America, especially as regards civil rights for African Americans. Lincoln’s focus was healing the nation while simultaneously providing for the effective and long-term establishment of equal rights for African Americans. Vice President Andrew Johnson succeeded Lincoln after his assassination.
- The transformation of a society away from decades of slavery was no small task. Depict Reconstruction as being tragically undermined and strained by the conflicts between congressional Republicans (who strongly opposed slavery), President Andrew Johnson (a pro-Union Democrat with little sympathy for former slaves), and lawmakers in the Southern states (who mostly wished to restrict the rights of the new freedmen), all of whom operated out of distrust following a painful and bloody Civil War.

- Have students read the 13th Amendment to the Constitution and discuss the laws passed during Reconstruction. It is important to note the major and meaningful efforts Northerners made to guarantee the rights of African Americans.

- Teach students about both the important gains and protections Republicans won for African Americans during Reconstruction as well as the ways in which these were undermined by actions in the former confederate states and Johnson himself. Students should gain an appreciation of the remarkable speed and degrees to which former slaves were incorporated into the civil body early in Reconstruction, including the thousands of African Americans who would hold office at the local, state, and even federal level. But they should also understand the ways that Johnson resisted equal treatment of African Americans and in doing so encouraged and allowed certain bad policies (such as “black codes” passed by state legislatures and movements such as what would become the Ku Klux Klan) in the former Confederacy. In fact, many of the reversals of reconstruction began during the presidential reconstruction of Johnson, who was decidedly against secession but by no means opposed to slavery. Congress repeatedly had to override his vetoes and enact Constitutional amendments to prevent his defense of inequalities.

- Have students learn about the ways in which many civil rights achievements were thwarted or undone both during and after Reconstruction. For instance, spend time discussing how as Southerners were refranchised, African American officials were voted out of office and how “black codes” would eventually become Jim Crow laws. Discuss how “black codes” limited freedmen’s civil rights and imposed economic restrictions, including making being unemployed illegal, prohibiting landownership, requiring long-term labor contracts, prohibiting assemblies of freedmen only, prohibiting teaching freedmen to read or write, segregating public facilities, prohibiting freedmen from serving on juries, and carrying out corporal punishments for violators, among other restrictions and injustices. Note also the use of poll taxes and literacy tests to prohibit African Americans from voting.

- Explain how sharecropping made it nearly impossible for freedmen to accumulate enough capital to purchase their own land or set-off on a different pursuit. Moreover, students should be aware of the struggle facing freedmen who were still in a society prejudiced against them, without capital, land, or even the ability to read.

- Explain the emergence of groups such as the Ku Klux Klan and the power that their intimidation of African Americans and Republicans had in diminishing the political participation of freedmen.

- Teach students how Republicans passed and President Ulysses S. Grant signed into law the Ku Klux Klan Acts to prohibit intimidation of freedmen exercising their civil rights. Grant also empowered the president to use the armed forces against those who tried to deny freedmen equal protection under the laws. Nonetheless, such measures were usually sloppily enforced.

- At the same time, note the improvements during Reconstruction in building hospitals, creating a public school system, securing civil rights in principle, and fostering community within the freedmen community, especially in marital and family stability and through vibrant churches.

- Explain that Reconstruction effectively ended with the Compromise of 1877 that settled the disputed election of 1876. Congress (now controlled by the Democratic Party) would allow Republican Rutherford B. Hayes to be declared president in exchange for his withdrawing federal troops in former confederate states. Point out that in the backdrop was both continuing Southern resistance and a gradual waning of Northern zeal for (and political interest in) reform within the South.

- Ask students to consider the tragic nature of Reconstruction: a time of so much hoped for and achieved in applying the principle of equal natural rights was repeatedly undermined and mismanaged, then suddenly ended for political expediency, enabling new forms of injustice in certain areas of the country, after a war to end injustice had consumed the lives of hundreds of thousands of Americans.
- Nevertheless, make sure students do not lose sight of the momentous achievements in liberty, equality, and self-government fulfilled because of the Civil War. Students should appreciate the very significant achievements of Lincoln and the Civil War while looking forward to future generations of Americans who would seek to live up to the fundamental principles of America in their own times.

STRENGTHENING UNDERSTANDING: POST-LESSON ACTIVITIES AND ASSIGNMENTS

Activity 1: Have students draw a map of the United States after the Civil War and then track the re-admittance of states into the Union during Reconstruction (this activity can be assigned at the end of the lesson or be an ongoing activity as battles are taught).

_________

Assignment 1: Have students and parents complete a “Talk about History” assignment in which parents ask their child a series of questions about what they learned in history from a given lesson. Parents record the answers and the student returns to school (provided in appendix).

Assignment 2: What were the good things and bad things that happened during Reconstruction? (2–4 sentences)

Assignment 3: How might Reconstruction have been different had Abraham Lincoln been alive? What would Lincoln have done the same and different than what happened? (2–4 sentences)
APPENDIX A

Talk about History

Study Guides

Tests

Writing Assignment
TALK ABOUT HISTORY

Student Name: ___________________________  Due: ________________

Story/Lesson from History: __________________________________________________________

1. Who/what did you learn about in history class today?
   Student Answer: ________________________________________________________________

2. Who were the most important characters in the story?
   Student Answer: ________________________________________________________________

3. Tell me more about one of those characters.
   Student Answer: ________________________________________________________________

4. Tell me about the most exciting/interesting part of the story today.
   Student Answer: ________________________________________________________________

Parent Signature: _______________________________  Date: ________________

TALK ABOUT HISTORY

Student Name: ___________________________  Due: ________________

Story/Lesson from History: __________________________________________________________

1. Who/what did you learn about in history class today?
   Student Answer: ________________________________________________________________

2. Who were the most important characters in the story?
   Student Answer: ________________________________________________________________

3. Tell me more about one of those characters.
   Student Answer: ________________________________________________________________

4. Tell me about the most exciting/interesting part of the story today.
   Student Answer: ________________________________________________________________

Parent Signature: _______________________________  Date: ________________
Study Guide — Unit 4, Test 1

Lesson 1 | The Expansion of Slavery
Lesson 2 | Toward Civil War

Test on ______________

TIMELINE

When given dates in order, match events from a list to the years or dates that they happened.

- 1849  California Gold Rush
- 1860  Election of Abraham Lincoln; South Carolina secedes
- April 12, 1861  Attack on Fort Sumter

PERSONS

Identify each, provide biographical details, and explain what he or she thought or did in specific periods or events.

- Abraham Lincoln
- Frederick Douglass
- Sojourner Truth
- Harriet Beecher Stowe
- Harriet Tubman
- Stephen Douglas

TERMS AND TOPICS

Identify each and explain its significance to the period of history studied.

- cotton gin
- Antebellum
- secession
- Compromise of 1850
- abolitionism
- Narrative of the Life of Frederick Douglass
- Uncle Tom’s Cabin
- Underground Railroad
- popular sovereignty
- Bleeding Kansas
- a house divided
- Republican Party
- Dred Scott v. Sandford
- Lincoln–Douglas Debates

STORIES FOR THE AMERICAN HEART

Be familiar with each of the following stories.

- Biographies and the roles of Frederick Douglass, Harriet Tubman, and Abraham Lincoln prior to the Civil War
- Actions of Harriet Tubman and the Underground Railroad
- The first shots fired on Fort Sumter
QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

Based on notes from lessons and conversations, answer each of the following.

□ Even though many wanted to abolish slavery, why did the Founders think that permitting slavery and keeping the Americans united would be the only way eventually to get rid of slavery?

□ Why did the Founders expect that slavery would eventually die out on its own?

□ What invention after the founding made cotton more valuable and actually increased slavery, which ruined the Founders’ guess that slavery would end on its own?

□ How did Frederick Douglass show that slavery was evil?

□ Who were the abolitionists? What kinds of things did they do to try to end slavery?

□ How did the Underground Railroad work?

□ Why did slave states want to expand the number of slave states in the western territories?

□ Why did Abraham Lincoln believe “popular sovereignty” was wrong?

□ Why did people create the Republican Party?

□ Did Abraham Lincoln believe the Founders created a country to protect slavery or to end slavery?

   Why did he think this?

□ What did Abraham Lincoln mean when he said that “a house divided against itself cannot stand?”

□ What did Southern states do after Abraham Lincoln was elected?

□ What happened at Fort Sumter and how did Abraham Lincoln respond?

□ How was slavery the real reason the Civil War was fought?
The American Civil War — Test 1

Lesson 1 | The Expansion of Slavery
Lesson 2 | Toward Civil War

TIMELINE: Write the letter of each event next to the date or years it took place.

1849 ________ A. Election of Lincoln; South Carolina secedes
1860 ________ B. California Gold Rush
April 12, 1861 ________ C. Attack on Fort Sumter

MATCHING: Write the letter of each definition to the correct word it defines.

___ antebellum A. a new political group formed to prevent the spread of slavery ___ abolitionism B. a series of public conversations between two Illinois Senate candidates about whether slavery should be expanded and how that decision should be made ___ Republican Party C. a Supreme Court decision that said slaves were not people ___ popular sovereignty D. efforts to end slavery
___ Bleeding Kansas E. fighting over whether slavery would exist in a new territory; hinted at the Civil War ___ Dred Scott v. Sandford F. Lincoln’s warning about the threat of disunity over slavery to America ___ a house divided G. the time before the Civil War ___ Lincoln–Douglas Debates H. when a state attempts to leave the United States ___ secession I. where the people get to vote on whether to have slavery or not in a territory or state

MULTIPLE CHOICE: Circle the option that best answers each question.

1. Which invention radically increased the demand for slave labor after the American founding?
   a. the light bulb
   b. the steamboat
   c. the train
   d. the cotton gin
2. What was the series of separate agreements that merely postponed civil war?
   a. Great Compromise
   b. Three-Fifths Compromise
   c. Compromise of 1850
   d. Bad Compromise

3. Who was the “little lady” who wrote the book called Uncle Tom’s Cabin that helped Northerners imagine the horrors of slavery?
   a. Harriet Tubman
   b. Phyllis Wheatley
   c. Sojourner Truth
   d. Harriet Beecher Stowe

4. Who was an escaped slave who bravely led many other slaves to freedom on the Underground Railroad?
   a. Harriet Tubman
   b. Frederick Douglass
   c. William Lloyd Garrison
   d. Harriet Beecher Stowe

5. Who was raised in a log cabin, taught himself instead of going to school, and came to argue that slavery was a moral evil that needed to be resisted?
   a. Stephen Douglas
   b. Abraham Lincoln
   c. Henry Clay
   d. Millard Fillmore

6. Who was the Illinois Senator who argued that when slavery would exist in state should be left up to the people to decide by voting?
   a. Abraham Lincoln
   b. Henry Clay
   c. Millard Fillmore
   d. Stephen Douglas

Questions for the American Mind: Answer the following in complete sentences.

7. Even though many wanted to abolish slavery, why did the Founders think that permitting slavery and keeping the Americans united would be the only way eventually to get rid of slavery?
8. How did the Underground Railroad work?

_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________

9. Why did slave states want to expand the number of slave states in the western territories?

_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________

10. Why did Abraham Lincoln believe “popular sovereignty” was wrong?

_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________

11. What happened at Fort Sumter and how did Abraham Lincoln respond?

_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________

STORIES FOR THE AMERICAN HEART: Tell me about the life of Frederick Douglass.

_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________

Copyright © 2022 Hillsdale College. All Rights Reserved.
Study Guide — Unit 4, Test 2

Lesson 3 | The Civil War
Lesson 4 | Reconstruction

Test on ____________

TIMELINE

When given dates in order, match events from a list to the years or dates that they happened.

1861–65    Civil War
April 14–15, 1865   Abraham Lincoln assassinated; Andrew Johnson becomes president
1865–77    Reconstruction

PERSONS

Identify each, provide biographical details, and explain what he or she thought or did in specific periods or events.

Abraham Lincoln    Clara Barton    Andrew Johnson
Jefferson Davis    Ulysses S. Grant    Hiram Revels
Robert E. Lee    William Tecumseh Sherman    Rutherford B. Hayes
Thomas “Stonewall” Jackson    John Wilkes Booth

TERMS AND TOPICS

Identify each and explain its significance to the period of history studied.

Confederate States of America    American Red Cross    Pickett’s Charge
minié ball    ironclads    54th Massachusetts Reconstruction    Battle of Gettysburg    Sherman’s “March to the Sea” 13th Amendment    sharecropping    Jim Crow freedmen    black codes    Compromise of 1877
Freedmen’s Bureau    scalawags & carpetbaggers    Transcontinental Railroad
STORIES FOR THE AMERICAN HEART

Be familiar with each of the following stories.

- Battle of the ironclads
- Fighting at Little Round Top and Pickett’s Charge
- The writing and delivery of the Gettysburg Address
- Robert E. Lee’s surrender to Ulysses S. Grant at Appomattox Court House
- Assassination of Abraham Lincoln at Ford’s Theatre
- The swearing in of Hiram Revels to the U.S. Senate

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

Based on notes from lessons and conversations, answer each of the following.

□ Why did Abraham Lincoln think that the Southern states cannot leave the country?

□ Why was Abraham Lincoln’s first goal for fighting the Civil War to preserve the Union?

□ Why was Abraham Lincoln’s second goal for fighting the Civil War to stop the spread of slavery?

□ How did soldiers fight each other in the Civil War?

□ What was the problem with most of the Union generals early in the war?

□ What was the Emancipation Proclamation and what did it do?

□ How did the North win the Battle of Gettysburg? Why was this such a crucial victory?

□ What was Ulysses S. Grant like? Why was he a good general?

□ What happened during the March to the Sea?

□ Why did the Union win the Civil War?

□ What does reconstruction mean?

□ Why did Andrew Johnson and the Republicans not get along?

□ How did life improve for African Americans in the South during Reconstruction?

□ How did some people and governments in the Southern states continue to try to hurt African Americans during and after Reconstruction?

□ What happened in the election of 1876 and the compromise of 1877?
The American Civil War — Test 2

TIMELINE: Write the letter of each event next to the date or years it took place.

1861–1865 ______ A. Reconstruction
April 14–15, 1865 ______ B. Lincoln assassinated; Johnson president 1865-1877 ______ C. Civil War

MATCHING: Write the letter of each definition to the correct word it defines.

____ Confederate States of America
A. a form of transportation that could carry Americans all the way between the Atlantic and Pacific oceans

____ minié ball
B. a round bullet that inflicted terrible wounds during the Civil War

____ 54th Massachusetts
C. an all-African American regiment of soldiers who fought bravely at Fort Wagner for the Union

____ March to the Sea
D. former slaves who were freed by the Civil War

____ Reconstruction
E. General Sherman’s path of destruction from Atlanta to Savannah, Georgia

____ freedmen
F. laws Southern governments created targeted at restricting the freedoms of African Americans

____ sharecropping
G. the country the Southern states attempted to form during the Civil War

____ black codes
H. the only jobs available to former slaves in the South, in which they farmed for former slave-owners; little better than slavery

____ Transcontinental Railroad
I. the period following the Civil War in which Northerners controlled the government in Southern states

MULTIPLE CHOICE: Circle the option that best answers each question.

1. Which former U.S. Senator became the president of the Confederacy?
   a. Abraham Lincoln
   b. Jefferson Davis
   c. Robert E. Lee
   d. Stonewall Jackson
2. When the USS Monitor and the CSS Virginia clashed, it was the first battle of what kind of naval ship?
   a. tall ships
   b. submarines
   c. ironclads
   d. canoes

3. Who was the Union general who had not done well at West Point but who was bold and decisive in combat?
   a. Robert E. Lee
   b. George McClelland
   c. Ulysses S. Grant
   d. Thomas “Stonewall” Jackson

4. Who was considered the “Angel of the Battlefield” in her efforts to minister to wounded and dying soldiers during the Civil War by founding the American Red Cross?
   a. Harriet Tubman
   b. Clara Barton
   c. Sojourner Truth
   d. Harriet Beecher Stowe

5. Who was the Confederate sympathizer who shot Abraham Lincoln after Lincoln expressed giving voting rights to African Americans?
   a. Thomas “Stonewall” Jackson
   b. Andrew Johnson
   c. William Tecumseh Sherman
   d. John Wilkes Booth

6. Who was the first African American Senator, appointed and sworn in during Reconstruction?
   a. Frederick Douglass
   b. Hiram Revels
   c. Rutherford B. Hayes
   d. Andrew Johnson

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND: Answer the following in complete sentences.

7. Why was Abraham Lincoln’s second goal for fighting the Civil War to stop the spread of slavery?
8. What was the problem with most of the Union generals early in the war?

_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________

9. What was the Emancipation Proclamation and what did it do?

_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________

10. Why did the Union win the Civil War?

_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________

11. How did life improve for African Americans in the South during Reconstruction? How did it not improve?

_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________

STORIES FOR THE AMERICAN HEART: Tell me about the fighting at Little Round Top and Pickett’s Charge at the Battle of Gettysburg.

_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________
_____________________________________________________________________________________

Writing Assignment — The American Civil War

DIRECTIONS

In 1 paragraph, explain why America fought the Civil War based on what Abraham Lincoln argued in the Gettysburg Address.
APPENDIX B

Primary Sources

Frederick Douglass
Abraham Lincoln
The American People
The former slave and abolitionist Frederick Douglass wrote this autobiography on his life as a slave and his eventual escape and life in freedom.

Annotations

I WAS born in Tuckahoe, near Hillsborough, and about twelve miles from Easton, in Talbot county, Maryland. I have no accurate knowledge of my age, never having seen any authentic record containing it. By far the larger part of the slaves know as little of their ages as horses know of theirs, and it is the wish of most masters within my knowledge to keep their slaves thus ignorant. I do not remember to have ever met a slave who could tell of his birthday. They seldom come nearer to it than planting-time, harvest-time, cherry-time, spring-time, or fall-time. A want of information concerning my own was a source of unhappiness to me even during childhood. The white children could tell their ages. I could not tell why I ought to be deprived of the same privilege. I was not allowed to make any inquiries of my master concerning it. He deemed all such inquiries on the part of a slave improper and impertinent, and evidence of a restless spirit. The nearest estimate I can give makes me now between twenty-seven and twenty-eight years of age. I come to this, from hearing my master say, some time during 1835, I was about seventeen years old.

My mother was named Harriet Bailey. She was the daughter of Isaac and Betsey Bailey,

---

Frederick Douglass, Narrative of the Life of Frederick Douglass: An American Slave (Boston: Anti-Slavery Office, 1845).
both colored, and quite dark. My mother was of a darker complexion than either my grandmother or grandfather.

My father was a white man. He was admitted to be such by all I ever heard speak of my parentage. The opinion was also whispered that my master was my father; but of the correctness of this opinion, I know nothing; the means of knowing was withheld from me. My mother and I were separated when I was but an infant—before I knew her as my mother.
It is a common custom, in the part of Maryland from which I ran away, to part children from their mothers at a very early age. Frequently, before the child has reached its twelfth month, its mother is taken from it, and hired out on some farm a considerable distance off, and the child is placed under the care of an old woman, too old for field labor. For what this separation is done, I do not know, unless it be to hinder the development of the child’s affection toward its mother, and to blunt and destroy the natural affection of the mother for the child. This is the inevitable result.

I never saw my mother, to know her as such, more than four or five times in my life; and each of these times was very short in duration, and at night. She was hired by a Mr. Stewart, who lived about twelve miles from my home. She made her journeys to see me in the night, travelling the whole distance on foot, after the performance of her day’s work. She was a field hand, and a whipping is the penalty of not being in the field at sunrise, unless a slave has special permission from his or her master to the contrary—a permission which they seldom get, and one that gives to him that gives it the proud name of being a kind master.
I do not recollect of ever seeing my mother by the light of day. She was with me in the night.
She would lie down with me, and get me to sleep, but long before I waked she was gone.
Very little communication ever took place between us. Death soon ended what little we could have while she lived, and with it her hardships and suffering.

She died when I was about seven years old, on one of my master’s farms, near Lee’s Mill. I was not allowed to be present during her illness, at her death, or burial. She was gone long before I knew any thing about it. Never have enjoyed, to any considerable extent, her soothing presence, her tender and watchful care, I received the tidings of her death with much the same emotions I should have probably felt at the death of a stranger.

Called thus suddenly away, she left me without the slightest intimation of who my father was. The whisper that my master was my father, may or may not be true; and, true or false, it is of but little consequence to my purpose whilst the fact remains, in all its glaring odiousness, that slaveholders have ordained, and by law established, that the children of slave women shall in all cases follow the condition of their mothers; and this is done too obviously to administer to their own lusts, and make a gratification of their wicked desires profitable as well as pleasurable; for by this cunning arrangement, the slaveholder, in cases not a few, sustains to his slaves the double relation of master and father.

I know of such cases, and it is worthy, of remark that such slaves invariably suffer greater hardships, and have more to contend with, than others. They are, in the first place, a constant offence to their mistress. She is ever disposed to find fault with them; they can seldom do anything to please her; she is never better pleased than when she sees them under the lash, especially when she suspects her husband of showing to his mulatto children favors which he withholds from his black slaves. The master is frequently compelled to sell this class of his slaves, out of deference to the feelings of his white wife; and, cruel as the deed may strike any one to be, for a man to sell his own children to human flesh-mongers, it is often the dictate of humanity for him to do so; for, unless he does this, he must not only whip them himself, but must stand by and see one white son tie up his brother, of but few shades darker complexion than himself, and ply the gory lash to his naked back; and if he lisp one word of disapproval, “it is set down to his parental partiality, and only makes a bad matter worse, both for himself and the slave whom he would protect and defend….

I have had two masters. My first master’s name was Anthony. I do not remember his first name. He was generally called Captain Anthony—a title which, I presume, he acquired by sailing a craft on the Chesapeake Bay. He was not considered a rich slaveholder. He owned two or three farms, and about thirty slaves. His farms and slaves were under the care of an overseer. The overseer's name was Plummer. Mr. Plummer was a miserable drunkard, a profane swearer, and a savage monster. He always went armed with a cowskin and a heavy cudgel. I have known him to cut and slash the women's heads so horribly, that even master would be enraged at his cruelty, and would threaten to whip him if he did not mind himself.

Master, however, was not a humane slaveholder. It required extraordinary barbarity on the part of an overseer to affect him. He was a cruel man, hardened by a long life of slave-holding. He would at times seem to take great pleasure in whipping a slave. I have often been awakened at the dawn of day by the most heart-rending shrieks of an own aunt of mine, whom he used to tie up to a joist, and whip upon her naked back till she was literally covered with blood. No words, no tears, no prayers, from his gory victim, seemed to move his iron heart from its bloody purpose. The louder she screamed, the harder he whipped; and where the blood ran fastest, there he whipped longest. He would whip her to make her scream, and whip her to make her hush; and not until overcome by fatigue, would he cease to swing the blood-clotted cowskin. I remember the first time I ever witnessed this horrible exhibition. I was quite a child, but I well remember it. I never shall forget it whilst I remember any thing. It was the first of a long series of such outrages, of which I was doomed to be a witness and a participant. It struck me with awful force. It was the blood-stained gate, the entrance to the hell of slavery, through which I was about to pass. It was a most terrible spectacle. I wish I could commit to paper the feelings with which I beheld it….

As to my own treatment while I lived on Colonel Lloyd's plantation, it was very similar to that of the other slave children. I was not old enough to work in the field, and there being little else than field work to do, I had a great deal of leisure time. The most I had to do was to drive up the cows at evening, keep the fowls out of the garden, keep the front yard clean, and run of errands for my old master's daughter, Mrs. Lucretia Auld. The most of my leisure time I spent in helping Master Daniel Lloyd in finding his birds, after he had shot them. My connection with Master Daniel was of some advantage to me. He became quite attached to me, and was a sort of protector of me. He would not allow the older boys to impose upon me, and would divide his cakes with me.
I was seldom whipped by my old master, and suffered little from any thing else than hunger and cold. I suffered much from hunger, but much more from cold. In hottest summer and coldest winter, I was kept almost naked—no shoes, no stockings, no jacket, no trousers, nothing on but a coarse tow linen shirt, reaching only to my knees. I had no bed. I must have perished with cold, but that, the coldest nights, I used to steal a bag which was used for carrying corn to the mill. I would crawl into this bag, and there sleep on the cold, damp, clay floor, with my head in and feet out. My feet have been so cracked with the frost, that the pen with which I am writing might be laid in the gashes.

We were not regularly allowance. Our food was coarse corn meal boiled. This was called mush. It was put into a large wooden tray or trough, and set down upon the ground. The children were then called, like so many pigs, and like so many pigs they would come and devour the mush; some with oyster shells, others with pieces of shingle, some with naked hands, and none with spoons. He that ate fastest got most; he that was strongest secured the best place; and few left the trough satisfied. I was probably between seven and eight years old when I left Colonel Lloyd’s plantation. I left it with joy. I shall never forget the ecstasy with which I received the intelligence that my old master (Anthony) had determined to let me go to Baltimore, to live with Mr. Hugh Auld, brother to my old master’s son-in-law, Captain Thomas Auld. I received this information about three days before my departure. They were three of the happiest days I ever enjoyed. I spent the most part of all these three days in the creek, washing off the plantation scurf, and preparing myself for my departure.…

I often found myself regretting my own existence, and wishing myself dead; and but for the hope of being free, I have no doubt but that I should have killed myself, or done something for which I should have been killed. While in this state of mind, I was eager to hear any one speak of slavery. I was a ready listener. Every little while, I could hear something about the abolitionists. It was some time before I found what the word meant. It was always used in such connections as to make it an interesting word to me. If a slave ran away and succeeded in getting clear, or if a slave killed his master, set fire to a barn, or did any thing very wrong in the mind of a slaveholder, it was spoken of as the fruit of abolition. Hearing the word in this connection very often, I set about learning what it meant. The dictionary afforded me little or no help. I found it was “the act of abolishing;” but then I did not know what was to be abolished. Here I was perplexed. I did not dare to ask any one about its meaning, for I was satisfied that it was something they wanted me to know very little about. After a patient waiting, I got one of our city papers, containing an account of the number of petitions from the north, praying for the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia, and of the slave trade between the States. From this time I understood the words abolition and abolitionist, and always drew near when that word was spoken, expecting to hear something of importance to myself and fellow-slaves. The light broke in upon me by degrees. I went one day down on the wharf of Mr. Waters; and seeing two Irishmen unloading a scow of stone, I went, unasked, and helped them. When we had finished, one of them came to me and asked me if I were a slave. I told him I was. He asked, “Are ye a slave for life?” I told him that I was. The good Irishman seemed to be deeply affected by the statement. He said to the other that it was a pity so fine a little fellow as myself should be a slave for life. He said it was a shame to hold me. They both advised me to run away to the north; that I should find friends there, and that I should be free. I pretended not to be interested in what they said, and treated them as if I did not understand them; for I feared they might be treacherous. White men have been known to encourage slaves to escape, and then, to get the reward, catch them and return them to their masters. I was afraid that these seemingly good men might use me so; but I nevertheless remembered their advice, and from that time I resolved to run away. I looked forward to a time at which it would be safe for me to escape. I was too young to think of doing so immediately; besides, I wished to learn how to write, as I might have occasion to write my own pass. I consoled myself with the hope that I should one day find a good chance. Meanwhile, I would learn to write.

The idea as to how I might learn to write was suggested to me by being in Durgin and Bailey’s ship yard, and frequently seeing the ship carpenters, after hewing, and getting a piece of timber ready for use, write on the timber the name of that part of the ship for which it was intended. When a piece of timber was intended for the larboard side, it would be marked thus—“L.” When a piece was for the starboard side, it would be marked thus—“S.”
A piece for the larboard side forward, would be marked thus—“L. F.” When a piece was for starboard side forward, it would be marked thus—“S. F.” For larboard aft, it would be marked thus—“L.A.” For starboard aft, it would be marked thus—“S. A.” I soon learned the names of these letters, and for what they were intended when placed upon a piece of timber in the ship-yard. I immediately commenced copying them, and in a short time was able to make the four letters named. After that, when I met with any boy who I knew could write, I would tell him I could write as well as he. The next word would be, “I don’t believe you. Let me see you try it.” I would then make the letters which I had been so fortunate as to learn, and ask him to beat that. In this way I got a good many lessons in writing, which it is quite possible I should never have gotten in any other way. During this time, my copy-book was the board fence, brick wall, and pavement; my pen and ink was a lump of chalk. With these, I learned mainly how to write. I then commenced and continued copying the Italics in Webster’s Spelling Book, until I could make them all without looking on the book. By the time, my little Master Thomas had gone to school, and learned how to write, and had written over a number of copy-books. These had been brought home, and shown to some of our near neighbors, and then laid aside. My mistress used to go to class meeting at the Wilk Street meeting-house every Monday afternoon, and leave me to take care of the house. When left thus, I used to spend the time in writing in the spaces left in Master Thomas’s copy-book, copying what he had written. I continued to do this until I could write a hand very similar to that of Master Thomas. Thus after a long tedious effort for years, I finally succeeded in learning to write.....

Things went on without very smoothly indeed, but within there was trouble. It is impossible for me to describe my feelings as the time of my contemplated start drew near. I had a number of warm-hearted friends in Baltimore, — friends that I loved almost as I did my life, -and the thought of being separated from them forever was painful beyond expression. It is my opinion that thousands would escape from slavery, who now remain, but for the strong cords of affection that bind them to their friends. The thought of leaving my friends was decidedly the most painful thought with which I had to contend. The love of them was my tender point, and shook my decision more than all things else. Besides the pain of separation, the dread and apprehension of a failure exceeded what I had experienced at my first attempt. The appalling defeat I then sustained returned to torment me. I felt assured that, if I failed in this attempt, my case would be a hopeless one — it would seal my fate as a slave forever. I could not hope to get off with anything less than the severest punishment, and being placed beyond the means of escape. It required no very vivid imagination to depict the most frightful scenes through which I should have to pass, in case I failed. The wretchedness of slavery, and the blessedness of freedom, were perpetually before me. It was life and death with me. But I remained firm, and, according to my resolution, on the third day of September, 1838, I left my chains, and succeeded in reaching New York without the slightest interruption of any kind. How I did so, - what means I adopted, - what direction I travelled, and by what mode of conveyance, — I must leave unexplained, for the reasons before mentioned.

I have been frequently asked how I felt when I found myself in a free State. I have never been able to answer the question with any satisfaction to myself. It was a moment of the highest excitement I ever experienced. I suppose I felt as one may imagine the unarmed mariner to feel when he is rescued by a friendly man-of-war from the pursuit of a pirate. In writing to a dear friend, immediately after my arrival at New York, I said I felt like one who had escaped a den of hungry lions. This state of mind, however, very soon subsided; and I was again seized with a feeling of great insecurity and loneliness. I was yet liable to be taken back, and subjected to all the tortures of slavery. This in itself was enough to damp the ardor of my enthusiasm. But the loneliness overcame me. There I was in the midst of thousands, and yet a perfect stranger; without home and without friends, in the midst of thousands of my own brethren — children of a common Father, and yet I dared not to unfold to any one of them my sad condition. I was afraid to speak to any one for fear of speaking to the wrong one, and thereby falling into the hands of money-loving kidnappers, whose business it was to lie in wait for the panting fugitive, as the ferocious beasts of the forest lie in wait for their prey. The motto which I adopted when I started from slavery was this — “Trust no man!” I saw in every white man an enemy, and in almost every colored
It was a most painful situation; and, to understand it, one must needs experience it, or imagine himself in similar circumstances. Let him be a fugitive slave in a strange land—a land given up to be the hunting-ground for slaveholders—whose inhabitants are legalized kidnappers—where he is every moment subjected to the terrible liability of being seized upon by his fellow men, as the hideous crocodile seizes upon his prey! I say, let him place himself in my situation—without home or friends—without money or credit—wanting shelter, and no one to give it—wanting bread, and no money to buy it,—and at the same time let him feel that he is pursued by merciless men-hunters, and in total darkness as to what to do, where to go, or where to stay,—perfectly helpless both as to the means of defence and means of escape,—in the midst of plenty, yet suffering the terrible gnawings of hunger,—in the midst of houses, yet having no home,—among fellow-men, yet feeling as if in the midst of wild beasts, whose greediness to swallow up the trembling and half-famished fugitive is only equalled by that with which the monsters of the deep swallow up the helpless fish upon which they subsist,—I say, let him be placed in this most trying situation,—the situation in which I was placed,—then, and not till then, will he fully appreciate the hardships of, and know how to sympathize with, the toil-worn and whip-scarred fugitive slave.
ABRAHAM LINCOLN (R-IL)

To the Illinois Republican Party Convention

SPEECH EXCERPTS

June 16, 1858

House of Representatives Chamber at the Illinois State Capitol | Springfield, Illinois

A House Divided

BACKGROUND

Abraham Lincoln delivered this speech upon his nomination by the Illinois Republican Party to be its candidate for U.S. Senate in Illinois.

ANNOTATIONS

Mr. President and Gentlemen of the Convention:

If we could first know where we are, and whither we are tending, we could then better judge what to do, and how to do it.

We are now far into the fifth year, since a policy was initiated, with the avowed object, and confident promise, of putting an end to slavery agitation.

Under the operation of that policy, that agitation has not only, not ceased, but has constantly augmented.

In my opinion, it will not cease, until a crisis shall have been reached, and passed.

"A house divided against itself cannot stand."

I believe this government cannot endure, permanently half slave and half free.

I do not expect the Union to be dissolved—I do not expect the house to fall—but I do expect it will cease to be divided.

It will become all one thing, or all the other.

Either the opponents of slavery, will arrest the further spread of it, and place it where the public mind shall rest in the belief that it is in the course of ultimate extinction; or its advocates will push it forward, till it shall become alike lawful in all the States, old as well as new—North as well as South.

Auxiliary to all this, and working hand in hand with it, the Nebraska doctrine, or what is left of it, is to educate and mold public opinion, at least Northern public opinion, not to care whether slavery is voted down or voted up.

This shows exactly where we now are; and partially also, whither we are tending.
FIRST INAUGURAL ADDRESS

SPEECH EXCERPTS

March 4, 1861
U.S. Capitol | Washington, D.C.

BACKGROUND

Abraham Lincoln delivered this speech at his inauguration amidst declarations of secession by southern states.

ANNOTATIONS

Fellow citizens of the United States:

In compliance with a custom as old as the government itself, I appear before you to address you briefly, and to take, in your presence, the oath prescribed by the Constitution of the United States, to be taken by the President "before he enters on the execution of his office."

…The course here indicated will be followed, unless current events, and experience, shall show a modification, or change, to be proper; and in every case and exigency, my best discretion will be exercised, according to circumstances actually existing, and with a view and a hope of a peaceful solution of the national troubles, and the restoration of fraternal sympathies and affections.…

One section of our country believes slavery is right, and ought to be extended, while the other believes it is wrong, and ought not to be extended. This is the only substantial dispute.

The fugitive slave clause of the Constitution, and the law for the suppression of the foreign slave trade, are each as well enforced, perhaps, as any law can ever be in a community where the moral sense of the people imperfectly supports the law itself. The great body of the people abide by the dry legal obligation in both cases, and a few break over in each. This, I think, cannot be perfectly cured; and it would be worse in both cases after the separation of the sections, than before. The foreign slave trade, now imperfectly suppressed, would be ultimately revived without restriction, in one section; while fugitive slaves, now only partially surrendered, would not be surrendered at all, by the other.

Physically speaking, we cannot separate. We cannot remove our respective sections from each other, nor build an impassable wall between them. A husband and wife may be divorced, and go out of the presence, and beyond the reach of each other; but the different parts of our country cannot do this. They cannot but remain face to face; and intercourse, either amicable or hostile, must continue between them. Is it possible then to make that intercourse more advantageous, or more satisfactory, after separation than before? Can aliens make treaties easier than friends can make laws? Can treaties be more faithfully enforced between aliens, than laws can among friends? Suppose you go to war, you cannot fight always; and when, after much loss on both sides, and no gain on either, you cease fighting, the identical old questions, as to terms of intercourse, are again upon you.

This country, with its institutions, belongs to the people who inhabit it. Whenever they shall grow weary of the existing government, they can exercise their constitutional right of amending it, or their revolutionary right to dismember, or overthrow it. I can not be ignorant of the fact that many worthy, and patriotic citizens are desirous of having the national constitution amended. While I make no recommendation of amendments, I fully recognize the rightful authority of the people over the whole subject, to be exercised in either of the modes prescribed in the instrument itself; and I should, under existing circumstances, favor, rather than oppose, a fair opportunity being afforded the people to act upon it.…

My countrymen, one and all, think calmly and well, upon this whole subject. Nothing valuable can be lost by taking time. If there be an object to hurry any of you, in hot haste, to a step which you would never take deliberately, that object will be frustrated by taking time; but no good object can be frustrated by it. Such of you as are now dissatisfied, still have the old Constitution unimpaired, and, on the sensitive point, the laws of your own framing under it; while the new administration will have no immediate power, if it would, to change either. If it were admitted that you who are dissatisfied, hold the right side in the dispute, there still is no single good reason for precipitate action. Intelligence, patriotism, Christianity, and a firm reliance on Him, who has never yet forsaken this favored land, are still competent to adjust, in the best way, all our present difficulty.

In your hands, my dissatisfied fellow countrymen, and not in mine, is the momentous issue of civil war. The government will not assail you. You can have no conflict, without being yourselves the aggressors. You have no oath registered in Heaven to destroy the government, while I shall have the most solemn one to "preserve, protect and defend it."

I am loath to close. We are not enemies, but friends. We must not be enemies. Though passion may have strained, it must not break our bonds of affection. The mystic chords of memory, stretching from every battle-field, and patriot grave, to every living heart and hearthstone, all over this broad land, will yet swell the chorus of the Union, when again touched, as surely they will be, by the better angels of our nature.
PRESIDENT ABRAHAM LINCOLN (R-IL)

A Proclamation

AN ORDER

January 1, 1863

Executive Mansion | Washington, D.C.

Emancipation Proclamation

BACKGROUND

On September 22, 1862 after the Union victory in the Battle of Antietam, Abraham Lincoln announced this order concerning property in slaves in the rebelling states, which took effect January 1, 1863.

ANNOTATIONS

By the President of the United States of America: A Proclamation.

Whereas, on the twenty-second day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-two, a proclamation was issued by the President of the United States, containing, among other things, the following, to wit:

"That on the first day of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-three, all persons held as slaves within any State or designated part of a State, the people whereof shall then be in rebellion against the United States, shall be then, thenceforward, and forever free; and the Executive Government of the United States, including the military and naval authority thereof, will recognize and maintain the freedom of such persons, and will do no act or acts to repress such persons, or any of them, in any efforts they may make for their actual freedom….

Now, therefore I, Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States, by virtue of the power in me vested as Commander-in-Chief, of the Army and Navy of the United States in time of actual armed rebellion against authority and government of the United States, and as a

The Emancipation Proclamation
Abraham Lincoln

fit and necessary war measure for suppressing said rebellion, do, on this first day of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-three, and in accordance with my purpose so to do publicly proclaimed for the full period of one hundred days, from the day first above mentioned, order and designate as the States and parts of States wherein the people thereof respectively, are this day in rebellion against the United States, the following, to wit:…

And by virtue of the power, and for the purpose aforesaid, I do order and declare that all persons held as slaves within said designated States, and parts of States, are, and henceforth shall be free; and that the Executive government of the United States, including the military and naval authorities thereof, will recognize and maintain the freedom of said persons.

And I hereby enjoin upon the people so declared to be free to abstain from all violence, unless in necessary self-defense; and I recommend to them that, in all cases when allowed, they labor faithfully for reasonable wages.

And I further declare and make known, that such persons of suitable condition, will be received into the armed service of the United States to garrison forts, positions, stations, and other places, and to man vessels of all sorts in said service.

And upon this act, sincerely believed to be an act of justice, warranted by the Constitution, upon military necessity, I invoke the considerate judgment of mankind, and the gracious favor of Almighty God.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.
Done at the City of Washington, this first day of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-three, and of the Independence of the United States of America the eighty-seventh.

By the President:

Abraham Lincoln

William H. Seward, Secretary of State.
President Abraham Lincoln (r)

On the Consecration of the Soldiers’ National Cemetery

Speech

November 19, 1863

Soldiers’ National Cemetery | Gettysburg, Pennsylvania

Gettysburg Address

Background

Abraham Lincoln delivered these remarks at the dedication of the Union cemetery for those soldiers killed in the Battle of Gettysburg in the summer of 1863.

Annotations

Four score and seven years ago our fathers brought forth, on this continent, a new nation, conceived in Liberty, and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal.

Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that nation, or any nation so conceived, and so dedicated, can long endure. We are met on a great battle-field of that war. We have come to dedicate a portion of that field, as a final resting-place for those who here gave their lives, that that nation might live. It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this.

But, in a larger sense, we can not dedicate—we can not consecrate—we can not hallow—this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here, have consecrated it far above our poor power to add or detract. The world will little note, nor long remember what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here. It is for us the living, rather, to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus far so nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us—that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they here gave the last full measure of devotion—that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain—that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom—and that government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth.

---

Fellow Countrymen:

At this second appearing to take the oath of the presidential office, there is less occasion for an extended address than there was at the first. Then a statement, somewhat in detail, of a course to be pursued, seemed fitting and proper. Now, at the expiration of four years, during which public declarations have been constantly called forth on every point and phase of the great contest which still absorbs the attention, and engrosses the energies of the nation, little that is new could be presented. The progress of our arms, upon which all else chiefly depends, is as well known to the public as to myself; and it is, I trust, reasonably satisfactory and encouraging to all. With high hope for the future, no prediction in regard to it is ventured.

On the occasion corresponding to this four years ago, all thoughts were anxiously directed to an impending civil-war. All dreaded it—all sought to avert it. While the inaugural address was being delivered from this place, devoted altogether to saving the Union without war, insurgent agents were in the city seeking to destroy it without war—seeking to dissolve the Union, and divide effects, by negotiation. Both parties deprecated war; but one of them would make war rather than let the nation survive; and the other would accept war rather than let it perish. And the war came.

One eighth of the whole population were colored slaves, not distributed generally over the Union, but localized in the Southern part of it. These slaves constituted a peculiar and powerful interest. All knew that this interest was, somehow, the cause of the war. To strengthen, perpetuate, and extend this interest was the object for which the insurgents would rend the Union, even by war; while the government claimed no right to do more than to restrict the territorial enlargement of it. Neither party expected for the war, the magnitude, or the duration, which it has already attained. Neither anticipated that the cause of the conflict might cease with, or even before, the conflict itself should cease. Each looked for an easier triumph, and a result less fundamental and astounding. Both read the same Bible, and pray to the same God; and each invokes His aid against the other. It may seem strange that any men should dare to ask a just God’s assistance in wringing their bread from the sweat of other men’s faces; but let us judge not that we be not judged. The prayers of both could not be answered; that of neither has been answered fully. The Almighty has His own purposes. "Woe unto the world because of offenses! for it must needs be that offenses come; but woe to that man by whom the offense cometh!" If we shall suppose that American Slavery is one of those offenses which, in the providence of God, must needs come, but which, having continued through His appointed time, He now wills to remove, and that He gives to both North and South, this terrible war, as the woe due to those by whom the offense came, shall we discern therein any departure from those divine attributes which the believers in a Living God always ascribe to Him? Fondly do we hope—fervently do we pray—that this mighty scourge of war may speedily pass away. Yet, if God wills that it continue, until all the wealth piled by the bond-man’s two hundred and fifty years of unrequited toil shall be sunk, and until every drop of blood drawn with the lash, shall be paid by another drawn with the sword, as was said three thousand years ago, so still it must be said "the judgments of the Lord, are true and righteous altogether."
With malice toward none; with charity for all; with firmness in the right, as God gives us to see the right, let us strive on to finish the work we are in; to bind up the nation's wounds; to care for him who shall have borne the battle, and for his widow, and his orphan—to do all which may achieve and cherish a just, and a lasting peace, among ourselves, and with all nations.
U.S. Congress and States

Thirteenth Amendment to the Constitution

Amendment

December 18, 1865

United States of America

BACKGROUND

The U.S. Congress passed and three-quarters of states ratified the Thirteenth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution by December 6, 1865, and the amendment was acknowledged as effective by Secretary of State William Seward on December 18, 1865.

ANNOTATIONS

Section 1. Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction.

Section 2. Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

---

The House Joint Resolution proposing the 13th amendment to the Constitution, January 31, 1865; Enrolled Acts and Resolutions of Congress, 1789-1999; General Records of the United States Government; Record Group 11; National Archives.
MIDDLE SCHOOL

American History

8 units | 45-50-minute classes

OVERVIEW

Unit 1 | The British Colonies of North America

LESSON 1  The Lands, Waters, and Peoples of America

LESSON 2  1492–1630  Exploration and Settlement

LESSON 3  1630–1732  The Colonies in Profile

LESSON 4  1607–1763  Major Events in the Colonies

Unit 2 | The American Founding

LESSON 1  1763–1776  Self-Government or Tyranny

LESSON 2  1776  The Declaration of Independence

LESSON 3  1776–1783  The War of Independence

LESSON 4  1783–1789  The United States Constitution

Unit 3 | The Early Republic

Coming Soon!
Unit 4 | The American Civil War
29–33 classes

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Lesson</th>
<th>Years</th>
<th>Topic</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1</td>
<td>1848–1854</td>
<td>The Expansion of Slavery</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2</td>
<td>1854–1861</td>
<td>Toward Civil War</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3</td>
<td>1861–1865</td>
<td>The Civil War</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4</td>
<td>1865–1877</td>
<td>Reconstruction</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Unit 5 | The Turn of the Century
Coming Soon!

Unit 6 | The Interwar Years & World War II
Coming Soon!

Unit 7 | Post-War America
Coming Soon!

Unit 8 | Recent American History
Coming Soon!
UNIT 1

The British Colonies of North America
1492–1763

40–50-minute classes | 28–32 classes

UNIT PREVIEW

Structure

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Lesson</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Classes</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>LESSON 1</td>
<td>The Lands, Waters, and Peoples of America</td>
<td>4–5</td>
<td>7</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LESSON 2</td>
<td>1492–1630 Exploration and Settlement</td>
<td>5–6</td>
<td>14</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LESSON 3</td>
<td>1630–1732 The Colonies in Profile</td>
<td>4–5</td>
<td>25</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LESSON 4</td>
<td>1607–1763 Major Events in the Colonies</td>
<td>9–10</td>
<td>34</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>APPENDIX A</td>
<td>Study Guide, Test, and Writing Assignment</td>
<td></td>
<td>41</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>APPENDIX B</td>
<td>Primary Sources</td>
<td></td>
<td>55</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Why Teach the British Colonies of North America?

Christopher Columbus’s discovery of what was then termed “The New World” is one of the most consequential events in all of recorded history. It was as if another half of Earth was being opened to the peoples of Europe, Africa, and Asia, and the changes that followed this momentous discovery were immense. Students should be especially aware of the profound effects of the initial contact of European explorers with the indigenous peoples of North America. They should understand the ways of life characteristic of Native American tribes, the exploits of European explorers and settlers, and the triumphs and tragedies that defined the relationships between settlers and natives. Students should also study closely the manner in which the British colonies of North America were established, since those first settlements would be the seedbed of our country. Our unique American heritage began here, on these coasts, among scattered settlements of men and women pursuing economic independence or religious freedom, leaving behind their familiar lives to seek liberty and opportunity at what to them was the edge of the world. With the promise of freedom at these far reaches also came untold hardships and daily dangers. The American story begins with those few who braved these risks for the freedom to pursue what all human beings desire to attain: happiness.

Enduring Ideas from This Unit

1. America’s varied and wondrous geography has played a crucial role in many of America’s successes.
2. The discovery, exploration, and settlement of the Western Hemisphere was one of the most consequential series of events in human history.
3. The contact between indigenous North American and European civilizations resulted in both benefits and afflictions for natives and colonists alike.
4. The British colonies of North America were unique, and their circumstances gradually shaped the character of the colonists into something unprecedented: the American.
5. The freedom afforded to the American colonists resulted in a degree of successful self-government unknown to the rest of the world in 1763.

What Teachers Should Consider

Imagine two more continents, an eighth and a ninth, with different terrain, untouched resources, seemingly limitless lands, and complete openness to any sort of political regime. This is the vision teachers might consider adopting in preparing students to learn American history. In other words, one can adopt an outlook similar to that of the people who began the first chapter in the story of America. Such an outlook will help students to see the origins of America as something that was fluid and not at all inevitable.

In the same way the explorers, settlers, and indigenous Native Americans keenly fixed their attention on the contours of the North American landscape, so should students of American history at the outset of their studies. A close study of American geography sets the stage on which Americans of every generation would act out their lives.

Europeans’ exploration and settlement of the Western Hemisphere is an extraordinary era in terms of historical impact, but it also contains engaging stories of intrepid discoverers and of the conditions they found and helped to shape. It is important to find the proper balance in conveying the story of that era. Students ought to step into the lives of these explorers and settlers and understand not only their motivations for undertaking such hazardous trips and ways of living but also their experiences on the Atlantic and on the fringes of an unknown continent. They should also think carefully and honestly about the interactions between Native Americans, explorers, and settlers. They will encounter a mixed picture. At times, they will see cooperation, care, and mutual respect; at other times they will see all the duplicity and injustice that human nature is capable of. They will see these traits exhibited by all parties at various moments and in different circumstances.

Teachers should also focus on making clear the differences between England’s North American colonies and those of other emerging New World empires, such as Spain, France, and Portugal. They should bring out what was unique among the English settlers, from the form of their colonies’ settlements to the social and economic ventures of the colonists themselves, as well as their varied relationships to the mother country. Each English colony may be taught separately, each offering a distinct social and economic profile, while a final lesson may be devoted to studying the major events and movements in shared colonial American history. Together, students should come to see that an unplanned experiment was unfolding in the British colonies of North America: one that was shaping a unique society and citizenry, one that would be equipped for great accomplishments in the coming centuries.

How Teachers Can Learn More

TEXTS

* Albion’s Seed, David Hackett Fischer
* American Slavery, American Freedom, Edmund Morgan
* African Founders, David Hackett Fischer
* The Formative Years, 1607–1763, Clarence Ver Steeg
* The Roots of American Order, Russell Kirk
* Freedom Just Around the Corner, Walter McDougall
* American Heritage: A Reader, ed. Hillsdale College History Faculty

ONLINE COURSES | Online.Hillsdale.edu

* The Great American Story: A Land of Hope
* American Heritage: From Colonial Settlement to Current Day

Lesson Planning Resources

TEACHER RESOURCES

* Land of Hope, Wilfred McClay
* A Teacher’s Guide to Land of Hope, Wilfred McClay and John McBride

STUDENT RESOURCES

* Land of Hope Young Reader’s Edition, Volume 1, Wilfred McClay
PRIMARY SOURCES

Letter to King Ferdinand II, Christopher Columbus
The Mayflower Compact
“A Modell of Christian Charity,” John Winthrop
Preface to the Frame of Government of Pennsylvania
An Act for Freedom of Conscience in Pennsylvania
Magna Carta
English Bill of Rights
Second Treatise of Government, John Locke
LESSON PLANS, ASSIGNMENTS, AND FORMATIVE QUIZZES
Lesson 1—The Lands, Waters, and Peoples of America

LESSON OBJECTIVE

Students learn about the geography of what would become the United States of America, including its physical contours, climate, advantages for civilization, and its Native American inhabitants, as well as the present-day political map of the United States.

TEACHER PREPARATION

Create a note outline based on the following:

Student Texts
Land of Hope Young Reader’s Edition, Volume 1 Pages xiii-xv, 1-3
Primary Sources See below.

Teacher Texts
Land of Hope Pages xi–xiv, 2–7
A Teacher’s Guide to Land of Hope Pages 1–7

Online.Hillsdale.edu
The Great American Story Lectures 1 and 2
American Heritage Lecture 1

STUDENT PREPARATION

Assignment: Students read Land of Hope Young Reader’s Edition, Volume 1, pages xiii-xv and 1-3 and prepare for a reading quiz (provided below).

CORE CONTENT IN THIS LESSON

Topographic Geography
Atlantic Ocean Lake Ontario
Caribbean Sea Niagara River
San Salvador Niagara Falls
Bahamas Lake Erie
Puerto Rico Cape Cod
St. Lawrence River Nantucket
Appalachian Mountains Long Island
Green Mountains Manhattan Island
Lake Champlain Hudson River
Adirondack Mountains Catskill Mountains
Finger Lakes Allegheny River
Allegheny Mountains
District of Columbia
Potomac River
Chesapeake Bay
James River
Blue Ridge Mountains
Shenandoah Valley
Outer Banks
Great Smoky Mountains
Gulf of Mexico
Mississippi River
Mississippi Delta
Lake Pontchartrain
Ohio River
Ohio River Valley
Detroit/St. Clair Rivers
Lake St. Clair
Lake Huron
Lake Michigan
Straits of Mackinac
Michigan’s Lower Peninsula
Michigan’s Upper Peninsula
Lake Superior
Great Lakes
Cumberland Gap
49th Parallel

Great Plains
Missouri River
Rio Grande
Rocky Mountains
Continental Divide
Yellowstone National Park
Old Faithful
Great Salt Lake
Oklahoma Panhandle
Texas Panhandle
Colorado River
Grand Canyon
Gadsden Purchase
Puget Sound
Columbia River
Mount St. Helens
San Francisco Bay
Sierra Nevada
Death Valley
Mojave Desert
Pacific Ocean
Yukon River
Mount McKinley/Denali
Bering Sea
Hawaiian Islands

Political Geography

Virginia, Richmond
Massachusetts, Boston
New Hampshire, Concord
Maryland, Annapolis
Connecticut, Hartford
Rhode Island, Providence
Delaware, Dover
North Carolina, Raleigh
South Carolina, Columbia
New Jersey, Trenton
New York, Albany
Pennsylvania, Harrisburg
Georgia, Atlanta
Washington, District of Columbia
Vermont, Montpelier
Kentucky, Frankfort
Tennessee, Nashville
Ohio, Columbus

Louisiana, Baton Rouge
Indiana, Indianapolis
Mississippi, Jackson
Illinois, Springfield
Alabama, Montgomery
Maine, Augusta
Missouri, Jefferson City
Arkansas, Little Rock
Michigan, Lansing
Florida, Tallahassee
Texas, Austin
Iowa, Des Moines
Wisconsin, Madison
California, Sacramento
Minnesota, St. Paul
Oregon, Salem
Kansas, Topeka
West Virginia, Charleston
Nevada, Carson City
Nebraska, Lincoln
Colorado, Denver
North Dakota, Bismarck
South Dakota, Pierre
Montana, Helena
Washington, Olympia
Idaho, Boise
Wyoming, Cheyenne Utah, Salt Lake City
Oklahoma, Oklahoma City
New Mexico, Santa Fe
Arizona, Phoenix
Alaska, Juneau
Hawaii, Honolulu
New England Region
Mid-Atlantic Region
Southern Region
Midwest Region
Great Lakes States
Southwestern Region
Pacific Northwest Region

Terms and Topics

- glaciers
- continental shelf
- land bridge
- Mayas
- Aztecs
- Incas
- Hopewell
- Adena
- urban
- cities
- suburbs
- towns
- rural

Images

- Maps
  - Famous or exemplar landscapes, landmarks, bodies of water, present-day cities, and other geographic features
  - Illustrations of indigenous peoples, civilizations, and life
  - Photographs of Aztec, Maya, Inca, Hopewell, and Ancestral Pueblo ruins

Story for the American Heart

- Christopher Columbus’s crew on their voyage and sighting land

Questions for the American Mind

- How would you describe the topography of the United States?
- What resources and advantages does this land afford for the flourishing of a developed civilization? How does it compare to other places in the world?
- What are the various regions, and what are the topographical features that define each of them?
- Where did the indigenous peoples of North and South America come from? How do we believe they came?
- What kinds of civilizations did different groups of indigenous peoples establish in different parts of the Americas?
- How did European and indigenous cultures differ from one another? Is there evidence of conflict among indigenous tribes?
KEYS TO THE LESSON

Every story has a setting, and the true story of history is no different. To tell and to teach this story effectively requires first introducing students to the stage on which Americans would act. Thus, American history should begin with a study of American geography. This inaugural lesson does not seek to inundate students with facts to memorize (though they will learn many). Rather, it seeks to transport them to the different places of America, not through an online virtual map but through the use of their own imaginations. Geography instruction is an excellent way to awaken and exercise the imaginations of students, priming them for all the other journeys which this course will ask their minds to undertake. Every history lesson will involve a similar setting of the stage in the students’ imaginations, and this lesson establishes that precedent. Of course, the lesson also gives students the “lay of the land” for the entire study of American history, beginning with an immersive trip through the country’s magnificent and diverse landscape and then mapping it onto the modern political map of their country. This geography lesson can be full of simple questions about what students observe, training them in the skill of careful discernment of detail. In addition, the collaborative effort of mapping out the country is an excellent way to build rapport, to learn names, and to ease into the school year. At the end of the lesson, the class may return to the virgin topography of the United States and place the various indigenous civilizations on it, learning the smattering of their history that has survived, and then return to the Atlantic and to the Spanish caravels and carracks just over the eastern horizon.

Teachers might best plan and teach The Lands, Waters, and Peoples of America with emphasis on the following approaches:

- The year of teaching history may begin with a number of brief conversations, introductions, procedures, and assessments of students’ prior knowledge of the historical period. It can include discussing the meaning of history and why we study it. It should help students to see that the reasons for studying history are various. Knowing the history of one’s country is an essential component of good citizenship. But history also can have value as a form of reflection on human nature and on the requirements of a good society. And like any subject, knowing history is good for its own sake, i.e., for the enjoyment and pleasure that comes with knowing. Being made aware of their motivations may allow students to ascend from “Because I have to” to this highest reason as the year proceeds.

- Begin by telling a story that will encourage students to use their imaginations and set the precedent for the way class will normally be taught. The story of Christopher Columbus’s crew sighting land is an excellent example. The story may be picked up when Columbus’s three ships are already en route. Paint the scene. Provide descriptions of the ship. Help students get a sense of what sailing was like in those days, and the dangers it involved. Draw out the sounds and smells onboard the ships. Introduce the kind of men on board, the letters and instructions they had with them, and what they may have been thinking from moment to moment. Talk about their captain: his appearance, thoughts, and comportment. Share the story of how recently the crew had nearly mutinied against him, and how he quelled their fears. Describe the sudden appearance of a large flock of birds the previous day. Finally, bring students to the very early morning of October 12, 1492, after the view from the ship’s rail had not changed for weeks, when the call came from the masts, “La tierra!” Land!
- Next should come a lesson on the geography of what would become the United States. First go backwards and talk about the geological changes that shaped the continent over time using maps readily available online.
- Treat the physical topography of the United States, following the path that settlers would travel from the Atlantic seaboard westward to the Pacific Ocean. Introduce landmarks, bodies of water, and other physical characteristics, moving from east to west. The items listed under “Topographic Geography” follow in roughly this order. The goal is to make sure students are aware of these landmarks in order to develop an appreciation for the beauty and diversity of their country’s landscape.
- Call upon students’ imaginations by describing the settings of what you introduce with vivid language that engages all their senses. Place them in particular climates with the correct weather depending on the season, including types of natural disasters to which an area is subject. Record all this information with the class on a physical map handed out to them and on its projection on the board. As the class proceeds from coast to coast, label the map together. Ask plenty of questions in the process. For review, project images of key areas discussed on the map and have students try to identify what is being projected. Show a map that reflects this topography, such as a raised relief map, and the distribution of natural resources and future trade routes connected with these resources.
- Emphasize with students the tremendous advantages America’s land offers to human flourishing. America had excellent and untouched soils for cultivation, temperature and rainfall averages were ideal, and timber was plentiful. Native plants and animals suitable for human consumption were abundant, while imported livestock thrived. The virgin forests provided all the fuel needed for fires, heating, and cooking, as well as for building. Waterways were plentiful and mostly navigable; their importance cannot be overstated, and students should appreciate that the colonial-era Atlantic world imagined the world primarily in terms of water flow, especially in North America. Most of the country had mild winters with long, warm growing seasons and few areas subject to drought. As for security from foreign powers, the United States would have two massive oceans separating it from most of the rest of the world.
- After thoroughly covering topography, transition to the modern political map with a new projected map and a corresponding political map handout. In teaching the political map, proceed in the order in which the first thirteen states were settled as colonies, and then in the order in which the remaining thirty-seven became states in the Union. Note special topographical, population, and trade characteristics of each state, including capitals, major cities, and special attractions or landmarks. Review the topography, weather, climate, and seasons in the process. Discuss how population is distributed in the states and across the country, and then group the states into different regions.
- After covering the modern political United States, return to the topographical map and place the indigenous tribes onto the map of North America and into the environments in which the various tribes lived. The diversity of tribes is astounding, and highlighting several communities, particularly on the eastern seaboard, will put students in the right historical context and assist with teaching the events in subsequent lessons.
- Explain how America is and always has been a land of immigrants. Even those who would be considered the indigenous or “native” peoples of both North and South America likely migrated from northeast Asia. Settlements and even great cities of Central and South America emerged in following years as migration resulted in people spreading over the land of the Western Hemisphere.
- Show the range of different Western Hemisphere civilizations through the millennia prior to Christopher Columbus, including their ways of life, customs, and beliefs. In conjunction with state and local history, explore the history and traditions of historical Native Americans from the school’s locality or state.
- Conclude this first lesson by reminding students that to Columbus, his crew, and the peoples of Europe, Africa, and Asia in 1492 (and for millennia before), none of this was known to them, and discovering the entirety of the New World would take hundreds of years, even after Columbus’s voyages.

STRENGTHENING UNDERSTANDING: POST-LESSON ASSIGNMENTS

Assignment 1: Complete the topographical map of the United States together as a class and study it for a future map assessment (teacher created).

Assignment 2: Complete the political map of the United States together as a class and study it for a future map assessment (teacher created).
Reading Quiz

The British Colonies of North America | Lesson 1
Land of Hope, Volume 1, Pages xiii-xv, 1-3

DIRECTIONS: Answer each question.

1. What is one reason why the author thinks people must study history?

2. Name one major settlement in the Americas prior to European discovery.

3. Who was Leif Eriksson?

4. How did Native Americans first come to the Americas?
Lesson 2—Exploration and Settlement

1492–1630

5–6 classes

LESSON OBJECTIVE

Students learn about the European exploration of North America and the first English settlement efforts at Roanoke, Jamestown, Plymouth, and Massachusetts Bay.

TEACHER PREPARATION

Create a note outline based on the following:

Student Texts
Land of Hope Young Reader’s Edition, Volume 1  Pages 3–11, 15–25
Primary Sources  See below.

Teacher Texts
Land of Hope  Pages 7–13, 20–28

Online.Hillsdale.edu
The Great American Story  Lecture 2
American Heritage  Lecture 2

STUDENT PREPARATION

Assignment 1: Students read Land of Hope Young Reader’s Edition, Volume 1, pages 3–11 and prepare for a reading quiz (provided below).

Assignment 3: Students read and annotate excerpts from John Winthrop’s “A Modell of Christian Charity” and answer guiding reading questions (provided in appendix).

CORE CONTENT IN THIS LESSON

Geography & Places
Genoa  Virginia
San Salvador/Watling Island  Roanoke
“The New World”  Chesapeake Bay
La Florida  Jamestown
St. Augustine  Cape Cod
Plymouth
Massachusetts Bay

Boston

Persons

Leif Erikson
Ferdinand and Isabella
Christopher Columbus
Ponce de Leon
Amerigo Vespucci
John Smith
Pocahontas

Lord De La Warr
John Rolfe
William Bradford
Miles Standish
Massasoit
John Winthrop

Terms and Topics

Silk Road
Renaissance humanism
caravel
merchants
nation-states
_Niña, Pinta, and Santa María_
Taino
“Indians” conquistadors
Columbian Exchange
smallpox
mercantilism
joint-stock companies
Virginia Company
indentured servants

Powhatan
“Starving Time”
tobacco
House of Burgesses
Separatist Puritans
Pilgrims
Mayflower commoner
religious freedom
state of nature
social contract
rule of law
self-government
Wampanoag
Puritans

Primary Sources

Letter to King Ferdinand II, Christopher Columbus
The Mayflower Compact
“A Modell of Christian Charity,” John Winthrop

To Know by Heart

“We must consider that we shall be as a city upon a hill. The eyes of all people are upon us.” —John Winthrop

Timeline

Oct. 12, 1492  Columbus lands on San Salvador Island
1607  Jamestown settled
1619  Africans disembark at Jamestown;
      first meeting of the Virginia House of Burgesses
1620 Pilgrims settle Plymouth
1630 Puritans settle Massachusetts Bay

4th Thursday in November Thanksgiving Day

Images
- Historical figures and events
- World map prior to Columbus
- Caravel and carrack
- Maps of Columbus’s voyages and other exploration
- Dress of Native Americans, explorers, and settlers
- Waldseemüller and Ringmann map
- Illustrated map of Jamestown
- Mayflower
- Mayflower Compact facsimile
- First Thanksgiving

Stories for the American Heart
- Christopher Columbus’s account of making landfall
- Christopher Columbus’s voyages and interactions with natives
- Christopher Columbus’s death in poverty and believing he had failed
- The Lost Colony of Roanoke
- John Smith’s account of the founding of Jamestown
- The “Starving Time” at Jamestown
- Pocahontas, John Smith, and John Rolfe
- Excerpts from the diary of John Rolfe
- The voyage of the Mayflower
- William Bradford’s account of going ashore at Plymouth
- The first winter at Plymouth
- Accounts of the First Thanksgiving by Edward Winslow and William Bradford

Questions for the American Mind
- What events “unsettled” European civilization and influenced the decision to explore the seas beyond Europe? How so?
- What was Christopher Columbus’s theory?
- What were some of the ways in which Christopher Columbus’s voyages changed the world?
- In which ways was Christopher Columbus successful, and in which did he fail?
- From where do we get the name “America”?
- How was England’s approach to settlement different from that of other countries?
- What were the characteristics of the settlers in England’s first successful colonies?
- What motivated settlers to establish Jamestown?
- What problems did Jamestown’s settlers create and face? How did they manage to succeed?
- What two things happened in Jamestown in 1619?
What motivated the Pilgrims to settle at Plymouth? What were their goals?
Why did the Pilgrims draft and sign the Mayflower Compact?
What is so extraordinary about the Mayflower Compact?
How did the First Thanksgiving come about? Why?
Based on John Winthrop’s writings, how did the Puritans at Massachusetts Bay envision their lives and the task before them in North America?
Questions from the U.S. Civics Test:
- Question 73: The colonists came to America for many reasons. Name one.
- Question 74: Who lived in America before the Europeans arrived?
- Question 75: What group of people was taken and sold as slaves?

Keys to the Lesson

Christopher Columbus’s discovery of the New World was one of the signal achievements of the age of exploration. The ideas of Renaissance humanism fostered confidence in the capacities of man and led monarchs to sponsor expensive and risky voyages to the uncharted waters and lands an ocean away. Enterprising commoners braved the seas and these wild lands for their own fortunes and opportunity. Nearly one hundred years would pass before the English would attempt a permanent settlement in North America and another two decades before they found any success. Yet while Jamestown was founded chiefly on economic motives, the next two decades would see the Plymouth and Massachusetts Bay colonies founded, at least in part for religious and cultural ends. What was common to all these efforts was the desire for freedom to better their conditions—both the quality of earthly life and the preparation for eternal life. Put differently, they desired the freedom to seek happiness, made available to the common man in ways that had no parallel in the Old World.

Teachers might best plan and teach Exploration and Settlement with emphasis on the following approaches:

- Begin the teaching of American history by helping students gain historical perspective. Using the following reference points, ask them to compare today’s way of life with life in the centuries prior to the 1600s.
  - a political body based on natural rights and their equal protection
  - ability to believe and act on one’s beliefs without fear of arrest—or worse
  - ability to go about daily life without fear of being injured, killed, or having property taken
  - ability to possess the tools necessary to protect one’s food, shelter, family, and life
  - ability to put one’s thoughts into print without fear of arrest—or worse
  - ability to receive an education paid for, in part, by one’s neighbors
  - ability to speak one’s mind without fear of arrest—or worse
  - ability to vote for those who determine by law what one may or may not do
  - acquisition of clothing, food, and shelter
  - communication by internet, text, phone, mail
  - control of one’s ideas and inventions unless willingly shared with another
  - criticism or protest against those in power without fear of arrest—or worse
  - electricity, plumbing, heating, cooling
  - family structure
  - legal presumption of innocence when accused of a crime
- literacy and numeracy
- possession of one's own land for food and shelter
- religious practices
- risk of disease and injury
- slavery
- the distance of one's physical travels
- the role of most men in family life and the community (working at home or out of doors; defending the family and community)
- the role of most women in family life and the community (working at home indoors; caring for the family and neighbors)
- the rule of law
- travel by plane, car, boat, horse and buggy, walking
- trial by a jury of one's neighbors
- trial for crimes effected quickly and publicly

- Offer students some background on the reasons why Europeans began exploring in the first place. If students have previously studied European history, then a brief review will be sufficient. For this course, students should generally understand the Renaissance idea of humanism and the confidence it offered European governments and merchants to leverage the full capacities of man. Humanism intersected with other cultural currents: trade interests in Asia, Muslim control of land routes, newly emerging and competing monarchs, growing prosperity among an expanding middle class, and new maritime technology. Riding these currents, those inspired by humanist ideas turned to the seas in search of what was beyond, first along the African coast, and then across the Atlantic. A short review of explorers who predated Christopher Columbus may be helpful.

- Relay to students the background to Christopher Columbus. Of important note is the attention he gave to new theories of navigation and the size, but not the shape, of the world.

- Of Columbus's first voyage, help students to imagine what he was doing and what his crew was undertaking as well. It was far from certain that they would find the route Columbus sought, or that they would survive trying. Even then, Columbus was confident of his theories and of his ability.

- Share the stories of each of Columbus's four voyages, marking the gradual decline in success, based on the stated goals of each trip.

- Consider Columbus's specific actions and what they might suggest about his overall character. On the one hand, he was intrepid and determined in pursuit of his theories. He was also a mariner of great skill. Read with students letters in which he claims to have initially secured the respectful treatment of the natives his crew encountered, mindful that we do not have an account from the natives themselves. On the other hand, he was sometimes an incompetent leader whom his men did not listen to or respect, particularly when he took to imposing severe punishments and permitting cruel actions against certain native groups. Columbus's importance in American history is that he established the first enduring links between the Old and New Worlds, initiating European civilization's influence on the Western Hemisphere.
Use this opportunity to address with students the history of interactions between the indigenous peoples of North and South America and European explorers and settlers. Of paramount importance is that students not paint with too broad of a brush. The relationships varied widely. Many interactions and relationships were mutually respectful and cooperative. Others were brutal and unjust. Often the relations between the same groups ebbed and flowed between friendship and conflict over time. Ask why misunderstandings, duplicity, and conflict between very different peoples and cultures—and between fallible individuals of all sorts—might arise.

In addition to conflicts, discuss how the indigenous people’s lack of acquired immunity to diseases, notably smallpox, which most Europeans had been conditioned to survive, was a leading cause of the decline in the Native American population.

Highlight the later years of Columbus’s life, including his removal as commander in Spanish-claimed territories, his shipwreck and stranding on Jamaica for a year, and Spain’s unwillingness to commission any further expeditions under his command. Columbus died as an abject failure in the eyes of the world and likely in his own eyes, as he never did find a passage to Asia yet also did not understand that what he had discovered was another half of planet Earth. Note how his sailings along the isthmus of Panama left him, unknowingly, just a few dozen miles from the vast Pacific Ocean, the existence of which he knew nothing.

Explain that Italian mapmaker Amerigo Vespucci, after joining an outfit to the Western Hemisphere, asserted only after Columbus’s death that what Columbus had discovered were not parts of Asia but entirely “new” continents. German mapmakers Latinized and feminized his name into “America” on one of their first maps depicting the New World.

Review other explorations between Columbus and the beginning of English settlement efforts in the late 1500s. Study Ponce de Leon’s discovery of Florida and the eventual settlement at St. Augustine, marking the first European presence in the future United States. Students need not study all of these events in detail, but they should grasp the overall strategy that Spain, Portugal, and even France adopted toward exploring and settling the New World, namely, a top-down, economically motivated approach under the direct centralized control of their respective monarchies. It will be important to contrast this approach with that of the English in the next lesson. Have students study maps of the Western Hemisphere and the domains these various powers had claimed for their respective crowns. It should also be noted that, as revealed in the history of exploration by Hernando Cortés and Francisco Pizarro, there was often a gulf between the monarchs’ directives to deal with natives justly and humanely and the ability to enforce such restraints across an ocean.

Trace the paths of various explorers into the future states of America, particularly in Florida and the West. The presence of Catholic missionaries is of special note, highlighting one motivation for exploration.

Explain how the conflicts between Protestants and Catholics for the English throne, England’s relative distance from continental Europe, and its growing naval strength delayed its interests in exploration beyond the commissioning of voyages by John Cabot. The English largely contented themselves through much of the sixteenth century with preying on Spanish ships returning from the New World with spices and bullion.
Recount the first English effort to establish a permanent settlement in North America in the colony of Roanoke, which famously disappeared with barely a trace after a brief four-year existence.

Set up the founding of Jamestown as emblematic of one important motivation for the English to establish a colony: material opportunity for the lower classes. Land ownership by common folk was extremely rare in almost all of Europe, and economic mobility itself was a relatively new and rare phenomenon. The organizers and settlers of Jamestown embodied the enterprising spirit that would come to define emigrants from England to North America, and, for that matter, millions of immigrants throughout America’s history. This degree of opportunity for the ordinary person was unprecedented. It partly explains why so many European commoners left what was familiar and risked the greater likelihood of an earlier death to pursue it. The Jamestown settlers exemplified the idea of pursuing “the American dream.”

Help students to appreciate the several periods when Jamestown was on the verge of failing and the many deaths incurred despite its eventual success. Of particular note was Jamestown’s original experiment with a form of communism. This collectivism, plus rampant disease, helped produce a disastrous first year and a half for the fledgling settlement. John Smith’s requirement that settlers earn their bread by their work and his guarantee of private property ownership, along with some much-needed assistance from the local Native Americans, not only saved the settlement but also became quintessentially American traits, both in law and in the character of the people. But even this near disaster paled in comparison to what was known as the “Starving Time,” in which failure was averted only by a return to the rule of law under Lord De La Warr. The turning point for Jamestown was the successful cultivation of tobacco by John Rolfe. While not the gold many settlers had originally envisioned, the crop would both shore up Jamestown’s existence and spread the news among the English and other Europeans that opportunities were present and realizable in English Virginia.

Consider how the year 1619 at Jamestown offers a profound insight into colonial America:

- On the one hand, it was in 1619 that the first enslaved Africans, having been taken from a Portuguese slave ship en route to Mexico by an English privateer, landed at Jamestown.
- On the other hand, it was also in 1619 at Jamestown that the Virginia House of Burgesses first convened, marking the beginning of representative self-government in the colonies. This self-government would flourish for more than 150 years as the British colonists of North America largely governed themselves and developed the thoughts, practices, and habits of a self-governing people.

Show how the founding of Plymouth was emblematic of the other important motivation for Englishmen to establish a colony: religion. In the wake of the Protestant Reformation, the Christian world was divided, with various forms of strife and severe restrictions on religious belief and practice. In England, these divisions were within Protestantism itself, with Puritans wishing to purify the Church of England of remaining Catholic trappings and Separatist Puritans (whom we call Pilgrims) seeking to establish a new, true Church of England. It was this latter group that sought not only the freedom to practice their form of Anglicanism but also to re-found the Church in the New World. This band of settlers had the marks of a utopian mindset, even when the English crown required a number of prisoners to embark with them on the Mayflower. And unlike the all-male group that originally settled Jamestown, the Mayflower’s passengers included dozens of families.

Spend some time with the Mayflower Compact, signed off the coast of Cape Cod before the settlers went ashore. Emphasize the English tradition of the rule of law and of forms of democratic expression traced back at least to the Magna Carta. While it would still be decades before Thomas Hobbes and John Locke formulated the idea of the social contract, these Pilgrims made the social contract a reality. That is, facing a lawless wilderness (a state of nature) with families to protect and ex-convicts in their midst, the Pilgrims resorted to that English tradition of self-government under the rule of law—a social contract among themselves— with God as its ultimate judge. Both the Pilgrims at Plymouth in 1620 and the convening of the Virginia House of Burgesses down the coast at Jamestown in 1619, the first two successful English settlements, almost immediately practiced self-government. Self-government under law was therefore present at the very inception of America, a fact that makes America unique.

- Note the terrible first winter the Pilgrims suffered at Plymouth, and how the Wampanoag Indians truly saved those who did survive. The next year, with the help of the Wampanoag, was a tremendous success, which Pilgrims and Native Americans together celebrated, and for which they gave thanks to God in what is considered America’s First Thanksgiving (notwithstanding a similar celebration in Spanish Florida in the previous century). Share accounts of this festive Thanksgiving from Edward Winslow and William Bradford.

- Finally, discuss the founding of Massachusetts Bay Colony and the leadership of its first governor, John Winthrop. Like the Pilgrims, these Puritans were fierce critics of the Church of England. And like the Pilgrims, they saw the founding of a colony in New England as a sort of religious utopia. Unlike the Pilgrims, however, the Puritans at Massachusetts Bay sought not to separate from the Church of England but to establish a community that would help purify and correct the Church of England while remaining a part of it. As evident in Winthrop’s “A Modell of Christian Charity,” New England would convert Old England by its example. This settlement around Boston would be more of a theocracy than even its neighbor on Cape Cod. Together with Jamestown and Plymouth, the English had a beachhead in the New World, and the news spread far and wide across the Atlantic.

STRENGTHENING UNDERSTANDING: POST-LESSON ASSIGNMENTS

Assignment 1: Tell of the founding and early years of either Jamestown, Plymouth, or Massachusetts Bay (2–3 paragraphs).

Assignment 2: Taken together, how do the foundings of Jamestown, Plymouth, and Massachusetts Bay all demonstrate the principle and practice of self-government (1–2 paragraphs).
Reading Quiz

The British Colonies of North America | Lesson 2
Land of Hope Young Reader’s Edition, Volume 1, Pages 3-11

DIRECTIONS: Answer each question.

1. What was one motivation for European exploration in the late 1400s?

2. What is one way that Europe was changing in the 1400s?

3. Which country got a head start on exploration, especially along the African coast?

4. Which Italian sailor successfully petition Spain to finance his voyage across the Atlantic?

5. What did this sailor believe he had found?
Reading Quiz

The British Colonies of North America | Lesson 2
Land of Hope Young Reader’s Edition, Volume 1, Pages 15–25

DIRECTIONS: Answer each question.

1. Which country did England defeat on the high seas in 1588, allowing England to be more deliberate about settling the New World?

2. What was England’s first successful colony in North America?

3. Who settled at Plymouth?

4. What legal agreement—named after a ship—proved an early example of social contract and self-government in the British colonies?

5. Who famously described the civilization the Puritans were establishing as a “city upon a hill”?
Unit 1 — Formative Quiz 1

Covering Lessons 1–2
10–15 minutes

DIRECTIONS: Answer each question in at least one complete sentence.

1. What resources and advantages does this land afford for the flourishing of a developed civilization?

2. Where did the indigenous peoples of North and South America come from? How do we believe they came?

3. What events “unsettled” European civilization and influenced the decision to explore the seas beyond Europe?

4. How was England’s approach to settlement different from that of other countries?

5. What motivated the Pilgrims to settle at Plymouth? What were their goals?
Lesson 3—The Colonies in Profile

Lesson Objective

Students learn about each of the thirteen colonies that would become the United States of America, including their foundings, topography, law, and economies, as well as the presence of indentured servitude and slavery.

Teacher Preparation

Create a note outline based on the following:

Student Texts

Primary Sources See below.

Teacher Texts

Land of Hope Pages 25–30

A Teacher’s Guide to Land of Hope Pages 22–23

Online.Hillsdale.edu

The Great American Story Lecture 2

American Heritage Lecture 2

Student Preparation

Assignment 1: Students read Land of Hope Young Reader’s Edition, Volume 1, pages 25–27 and prepare for a reading quiz (provided below).

Assignment 2: Students read and annotate the Preface to the Frame of Government for Pennsylvania and An Act for Freedom of Conscience from Pennsylvania, and answer guiding reading questions (provided in appendix).

Core Content in This Lesson

Geography & Places

New Hampshire

Hudson River

Maryland

New York

Connecticut

Pennsylvania

Rhode Island

Philadelphia

Delaware

Georgia

Carolina

New England Colonies

New Jersey

Middle Colonies
Southern Colonies
West Indies

The Congo
Gold Coast

Persons
Lord Baltimore
Roger Williams
Henry Hudson
Peter Stuyvesant

William Penn
James Oglethorpe
Olaudah Equiano

Terms and Topics
proprietary charter
royal charter
Harvard College
public education
Catholics
Toleration Act
Fundamental Orders
of Connecticut religious freedom
township county piracy
Quakers
self-government
colonial assemblies
colonial governors

Roman Republic
mercantilism
free market
Navigation Acts
militia
Triangle Trade
indentured servitude
chattel slavery
Asante Empire
slave ships
Middle Passage
Deism
individualism
aristocracy

Primary Sources
Preface to the Frame of Government of Pennsylvania
An Act for Freedom of Conscience in Pennsylvania

Timeline
1607 Jamestown founded
1620 Pilgrims found Plymouth
1630 Puritans found Massachusetts Bay

Images
Historical figures and events
Landscape pictures of geographic places featured in this lesson
Map of the Triangle Trade
Blueprint of a slave ship
Depictions of indentured servants and then slaves in the colonies
STORIES FOR THE AMERICAN HEART

- Roger Williams’s statements and efforts to establish religious toleration in Rhode Island
- The successful English takeover of New Amsterdam from the Dutch
- Adriaen van der Donck’s account of Peter Stuyvesant’s governance in New York
- James Oglethorpe’s attempts and failure to establish a debtors’ haven in Georgia
- Accounts from the Salem Witch Trials
- Anthony and Mary Johnson’s accumulation of significant property
- Selections from Olaudah Equiano’s The Interesting Narrative of the Life of Olaudah Equiano
- The lives and accomplishments of Cuffee Slocum and Paul Cuffe in New England
- Jean Bion’s account of life on a French slave ship

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

- How may the English approach to settlement and colonization be best described?
- In what ways did different groups of European settlers see the New World as a place of opportunity and restoration?
- What was unique about religion in the colonies and in the eyes of the law?
- What were the roles of literacy and learning among the colonists?
- What is meant by self-government? How might it be said that the colonists governed themselves?
- What was distinctive about property ownership in the colonies?
- How did colonial economies vary from region to region?
- What was indentured servitude? How is it similar to and different from slavery?
- What are the origins of slavery in world history?
- How were Africans first enslaved, before being brought to the Western Hemisphere?
- What was it like to be an African on the Middle Passage and then a slave in the New World?
- How were African slaves distributed in the New World? What proportions of Africans were taken to which parts?
- How did slavery gradually expand and become sanctioned in law?
- What were the chief characteristics of the “American” colonists? What gave them these characteristics?
- How were the colonies’ leading citizens distinct from the aristocracies of Europe?
- Questions from the U.S. Civics Test:
  - Question 14: Many documents influenced the U.S. Constitution. Name one.
  - Question 73: The colonists came to America for many reasons. Name one.
  - Question 75: What group of people was taken and sold as slaves?

KEYS TO THE LESSON

Teaching the histories of each colony helps students to understand and appreciate the humble origins of the future United States. It is also very revealing. Students can see in the early histories of many colonies the beginnings of traits that would eventually be hallmarks of American society, law, and citizenry.

Teachers might best plan and teach The Colonies in Profile with emphasis on the following approaches:
Try to teach the colonies in the order in which they were founded (i.e., as listed above in “Geography and Places”). A map may be projected and distributed to students for reference as the lesson proceeds from colony to colony.

Compare with students the basic structural differences between French, Spanish, and English colonies; i.e., the native fur trade (France), tributary native labor and precious metals (Spain), and settlement agriculture (England). There are mostly accidental historical reasons for why these three powers’ empires developed as they did, and these factors then had determinative long-term consequences.

Note the seemingly haphazard approach the English took to colonization, largely shaped by the monarch and parliamentary politics in England at the time of each colonial settlement. For one, colonization was decentralized, and most of the original colonies were established as private property ventures, often sanctioned by the crown but really in the possession of private individuals through joint-stock companies. These were then populated not with government officials or hired agents but with men of all ranks who were also seeking their own opportunity, freedom, and plot of land. Both of these features accounted for the lack of an overall master plan for colonizing North America and marked important departures from the approaches taken by Spain, Portugal, and France. This lack of a plan would become a problem later when England would seek to centralize the administration of the colonies, largely in an effort to raise revenue and enforce the sovereignty of Parliament.

Help students to understand the importance of these traits. Not only did the English approach to colonization trend toward greater independence from the monarchy, it also attracted and encouraged individuals and families who were independent-minded and determined. What the settlers did not bring with them from Europe were the legal class distinctions that defined the aristocratic and monarchial nations they left behind. These individuals (except for their British governors) were common people who immigrated to America seeking their freedom and to better their station in life. The rugged individualism, practice of personal independence, work ethic, and ingenuity to succeed would become well-known American characteristics and in some cases would result in the formation of new colonies by separation from an existing colony, as was the case in New England.

Spend time on what it meant to make a living and survive in the daunting wilderness and how such perseverance shaped the character and mind of the colonists. This would include looking at lifestyles and kinds of work done in the colonies, the type of self-reliance necessary for such lives, and the ways in which Christian religious beliefs contributed to how communities functioned.

Consider how strongly matters of religious faith defined colonial culture, largely because so many came to America to escape the religious persecutions or limitations of the Old World. From the Pilgrims and the Puritans to Roman Catholics and Jews, a wide variety of faiths (most of them Christian and many of whom were intolerant of one another in the Old World) permeated colonial settlements, and their adherents increasingly came to respect one another as neighbors. Establishing this religious freedom in law, moreover, was widespread and exceptional compared to the rest of the world, even while events such as the persecution of the Quakers in Massachusetts still occurred.

Note also for the students that the diversity of religious belief was accompanied by the diversity of immigrants. New York and Rhode Island, for example, were well known for the number of people who had migrated there from many countries other than the British Isles.

Help students appreciate that colonial America was highly literate and that the leading members of colonial society and government were educated in classical thought, ancient and contemporary history, and philosophy and politics (including thinkers of the moderate Enlightenment). Such high levels of literacy and learning were unheard of anywhere else in the world. Important factors that contributed to this high degree of literacy among the people was the insistence on being able to read the Bible, broad support for education, and collegiate preparation.

- Emphasize with students the degree of self-government that the colonists exercised. Include in this discussion the meaning of self-government. In brief, the colonists largely governed their own internal affairs (rule over local matters, including taxation, as opposed to international trade and security) through local legislatures and governance structures chosen by the people. This was partly due to the English tradition of legislative authority and the rule of law, the loose and decentralized pattern of British colonial settlements and rule compared to other empires. Another factor at play here was the great distance between London and the American eastern seaboard, which led to long periods of “benign neglect” of the colonies and the further development of local institutions of self-government. While all of the colonies would eventually become official royal colonies with royal governors, colony-wide legislative bodies were prolific, as were local governments such as townships, counties, and cities. Unlike almost every place in the world at that time and in history, the people were to a large extent ruling themselves. Read with students the various examples of self-government as enacted by colonial legislatures, such as the Preface to the Frame of Government of Pennsylvania and an Act for Freedom of Conscience in Pennsylvania.

- Outline for students the near universal ownership of firearms among the colonists for self-defense, for hunting, and, when necessary, for the common self-defense.

- Discuss how private property opportunities and protections enabled commoners to earn their livelihood in freedom and contributed to the characteristics of Americans as industrious and independent.

- Explain to students the several kinds of trade and vocational trades present in the various colonies. Farming was, of course, the main livelihood, but manufacturing, fishing, whaling, shipbuilding, and other trades (particularly in New England) rapidly emerged as key colonial contributions. Trade was principally with England, but the British colonies of North America developed robust trade among one another and with the colonies of other nations as well.

- Share with students the complex patterns of relationship between the colonists and Native Americans. The relationships ran the gamut from friendly to violent, varying widely depending on the tribe involved, with misunderstandings and clashes of cultures and languages. Disagreements abounded over the concepts of communal versus private property. Violent clashes occurred along the edges of the colonial frontier, and cross-frontier retaliations by both sides were not uncommon. Colonists could be caught in conflicts between various Native American tribes, and likewise, Native Americans were often caught in conflicts between European powers. Systematic displacement of Native Americans was usually limited to localities during this period (such as after King Philip’s War in southern New England and through the Indian slave trade on the South Carolina frontier). Displacement over time was primarily due to devastation from disease and gradual, individual settlement westward.

- Mention that a number of colonists criticized some of the ways that colonial governments dealt with Native Americans. These also condemned and sought to remove slavery from their colonies. Arguments for justice toward Native Americans and Africans often cited Christian religious beliefs and moral philosophy.

- Review with students the emergence of chattel slavery during the Renaissance in Europe and through colonization, then address slavery in what would become the future United States. When teaching students about the history of slavery in the British colonies of North America, be mindful of the following:

- Help students to understand why a full understanding of the human person, of equality, and of justice all make slavery an evil action and practice, violating the principle that all people are equal in their humanity and possession of natural rights. Therefore, no one person may automatically infringe on the humanity or rights of another unless some initial violation of another’s rights has occurred.

- Discuss with students how racism is the belief that some people are superior or inferior to others based on race, racial characteristics, or ancestry, how racism arises from a failure to recognize the equal dignity and value of each human being, and how racism manifests itself through the voluntary acts of individual people, both private words and actions and public speech and actions, such as laws and regulations.

- Discuss the history of slavery in world history, from ancient times through the middle ages and in different places, leading up to the transatlantic slave trade. Portugal first began using African slaves on their sugar plantations off the west African coast, manifesting the chattel and race-based aspects of slavery in European colonies. The slave trade gradually made its way to the various colonies established throughout the Western Hemisphere, particularly with the cultivation of sugar cane in the Caribbean.

- Ask students to imagine the Middle Passage and the barbarities of slavery and the slave trade. Overall, of the nearly 11 million Africans who survived being brought to the Western Hemisphere, around 3 percent, or about 350,000, were brought to the North American continent, with the majority of all Africans taken to other colonies in the Caribbean and South America.

- As mentioned in the previous lesson, the first Africans were brought to Jamestown by an English privateer who had captured a Portuguese slave ship en route from Africa, likely headed for Portugal’s South American colonies.

- It would be several decades before a law emerged in the southern colonies that concerned African colonists in particular or the practice of slavery. In 1662, forty-three years after the arrival of the first Africans at Jamestown, Virginia’s commanding general determined that a child born to an enslaved woman would also be a “servant for life,” and in 1668, corporal punishment for slaves was permitted in law. These appear to be the first laws regarding slavery in colonial America.

- Discuss the similarities and differences between slavery and indentured servitude. Indentured servitude was a common way for those who could not afford passage or to establish themselves in the New World to tie themselves to a sponsor for a number of years, offering free labor in exchange for passage across the Atlantic and shelter in the colonies. Oftentimes indentured servitude was not much different from slavery in its practice, as shown in transcripts from court cases of indentured servants claiming relief from a cruel master.
corporal punishment for slaves was permitted in law. These appear to be the first laws regarding slavery in colonial America.

The transatlantic slave trade grew with the sugar cane plantations of the Caribbean as far back as the early 1500s—plantations which also happened to become England’s most valuable colonies. At the same time, the source of labor shifted away from indigenous peoples, European convicts, and indentured servants to slaves. Although slavery was more widespread in the southern colonies (to grow tobacco and rice) and almost universal in England’s Caribbean sugar plantations, few laws explicitly prohibited the practice in most colonies, at least at certain times in their histories. Consider also the early abolitionist efforts of some colonists, the Quakers, for example.

- Show students maps of the colonies around 1630, 1700, and 1730 that illustrate the real extent of settlement. They should see that the colonists mostly resided only along the Atlantic coast, still hardly a foothold compared to the vastness of the continental interior, the extent of which they did not yet fathom.

- Reflect with students on the unique American character that emerged among the free British colonists in North America. The harshness and risk of settling the New World gave them a certain grit and determination, along with an enterprising mind and innovative skill set. The universal demand for trade skills and farming in establishing a new civilization placed the vast majority of colonists within what we would call today the “working class.” In New England especially, colonists’ Protestantism made them widely literate for the sake of reading the Bible, skeptical of human sources of authority, and focused on individual improvement. At the same time, it made them highly idealistic, with many seeking to re-found Christendom. For many colonists, previous persecution granted them a deeper and more passionate sense of justice, of right and wrong. It also made them highly attuned to the politics on which freedom depended. A certain rugged, enterprising, and justice-loving individualism defined the colonists.

- Explain how a sort of unofficial aristocracy emerged throughout the colonies, but an aristocracy open to promotion by the meritorious; that is, based on merit, talent, and virtue instead of mere heredity. This unofficial class of leading citizens was also modeled more on the English gentleman rather than on the courts of continental Europe. Their stations in life ranged from planters in the south, where the aristocratic element was most prevalent, to clergy, merchants, professors, and manufacturers in the north. And in general, all of them were highly learned.

STRENGTHENING UNDERSTANDING: POST-LESSON ASSIGNMENTS

Assignment 1: Explain how lifestyle varied between colonies (1–2 paragraphs).

Assignment 2: Explain the origins of slavery, the transatlantic slave trade, and slavery in the New World (1–2 paragraphs).
Reading Quiz

DIRECTIONS: Answer each question.

1. What was the name of the main religious group in Pennsylvania, founded by one of their members, William Penn?

2. Which colony was founded as a place for those who could not repay their debts to begin life anew?

3. Which colony was originally founded for Catholics, but quickly became majority Protestant?
Unit 1 — Formative Quiz 2

Covering Lesson 3
10–15 minutes

DIRECTIONS: Answer each question in at least one complete sentence.

1. In what ways did different groups of European settlers see the New World as a place of opportunity and restoration?

2. What were the roles of literacy and learning among the colonists?

3. What are the origins of slavery in world history?

4. How did slavery gradually expand and become sanctioned in law?

5. How were the colonies’ leading citizens distinct from the aristocracies of Europe?
Lesson 4—Major Events in the Colonies

1607–1763

9–10 classes

LESSON OBJECTIVE

Students learn about the major events and movements in colonial America and further study the ideas and experiences that were shaping the colonists during what Edmund Burke called the period of “salutary neglect.”

TEACHER PREPARATION

Create a note outline based on the following:

Student Texts

Primary Sources See below.

Teacher Texts

Land of Hope Pages 14–20, 31–42

A Teacher’s Guide to Land of Hope Pages 15–19, 29–32

Online.Hillsdale.edu

The Great American Story Lectures 2 and 3

American Heritage Lectures 2 and 3

STUDENT PREPARATION

Assignment 1: Students read Land of Hope Young Reader’s Edition, Volume 1, pages 12–14 and 28–36, and prepare for a reading quiz (provided below).

Assignment 2: Students read and annotate excerpts from John Locke’s Second Treatise of Government and answer guiding reading questions (provided in appendix).

CORE CONTENT IN THIS LESSON

Geography & Places

Appalachian Mountains Mississippi River

Allegheny Mountains New Orleans

Ohio River Valley Quebec

The Great Lakes Montreal

Canada Duquesne

St. Lawrence River

Copyright © 2022 Hillsdale College. All Rights Reserved.
Persons

Thomas Hobbes
John Locke
Jonathan Edwards
George III
William Pitt
George Washington
Benjamin Franklin

Terms and Topics

King Philip’s War
Queen Anne’s War
Navigation Acts
English Civil War
The Enlightenment
Bacon’s Rebellion
Glorious Revolution
English Bill of Rights
“salutary neglect”
representation
self-government
township
The Great Awakening
Poor Richard’s Almanac
French and Indian War
Iroquois Confederacy
Battle of Jumonville Glen
Albany Congress
Fort Duquesne
Treaty of Paris

Primary Sources

Magna Carta
English Bill of Rights
Second Treatise of Government, John Locke

To Know by Heart

Selections from George Washington’s “Rules of Civility & Decent Behavior in Company and Conversation,” such as:
- “Be not apt to relate news if you know not the truth thereof.”
- “Speak not evil of the absent for it is unjust.”
- “Use no Reproachfull Language against any one neither Curse nor Revile.”

Timeline

1688 Glorious Revolution; English Bill of Rights
1754–63 The French and Indian War

Images

Historical figures and events
Dress of colonists from different periods and places
Uniforms and munitions of soldiers in the various wars
Depictions of battles and battlefields, including strategy and tactics, such as the Siege of Louisbourg
Colonial assembly buildings
Depictions of Great Awakening gatherings and revival scenes
STORIES FOR THE AMERICAN HEART

- A sermon by Jonathan Edwards
- George Washington and the cherry tree (legend)
- George Washington’s time as a surveyor
- George Washington’s first battles in the Virginia militia, including his survival and Braddock’s death
- John Winslow’s account of the Acadians during the French and Indian War
- Benjamin Franklin’s autobiography

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

- What was it like to wage war in North America during the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries?
- What did the colonists learn from the English Civil War?
- Which ancient and Enlightenment figures and ideas influenced the leading colonists?
- What were John Locke’s ideas on natural law, natural rights, and the social contract? To what extent had these already been reflected in English law and, therefore, in colonial law?
- What is “salutary neglect”? In what senses were the colonists neglected and how was this neglect actually beneficial to them?
- What did self-government look like in the colonies?
- How did the Great Awakening contribute to a greater sense of unity between the colonies?
- What were the causes of the French and Indian War?
- What were the major battles and moments in the French and Indian War?
- What was the Albany Plan of Union? What did it reveal about the relationships among the colonies?
- Why did the British defeat the French in the French and Indian War?
- How did the Treaty of Paris reshape North America?
- What challenges and opportunities did the British and the British colonists face with the changes wrought by the Treaty of Paris?
- Questions from the U.S. Civics Test:
  - Question 13: What is the rule of law?
  - Question 85: Benjamin Franklin is famous for many things. Name one.
  - Question 86: George Washington is famous for many things. Name one.

KEYS TO THE LESSON

Having learned about the establishment and characteristics of each colony, students should consider the major influences and events that shaped colonial history. These include, of course, events that occurred within the colonies themselves, but also certain ideas and events in Europe that had significant influence on the colonists, too. Treatment of the Enlightenment and the English Civil War does not need to be extensive in an American history class, but students should understand how these events affected and informed the colonists. Once the lesson enters the eighteenth century, special focus should be placed on the events that created in the colonists a sense of independence from Great Britain and of greater dependence on one another, even as they themselves did not fully recognize or articulate these trends. In general, this lesson should help students see what the colonists and colonies had become before they learn about the American founding.

Teachers might best plan and teach Major Events in the Colonies with emphasis on the following approaches:

- Review with students the relationships between Native Americans and the settlers. Note the variety of relationships and circumstances over time, helping students to recognize how much time colonial history spans. Disease was the main factor that sent the Native Americans into decline. When significant conflict did occur, it often involved an entangling of rivalries among Native American tribes and those of European powers and their colonies. In light of such conflicts, American colonists in particular were well versed in defending themselves with their own arms and in locally assembled citizen militias.

- Teach students about the various wars that occurred in the New World, either between settlers and Native Americans or with colonies of other countries. A lot of detail is not necessary, but students should appreciate that these wars were significant for those who were endangered by them and left largely to their own defenses. Students should also be introduced to the style, strategy, and tactics of seventeenth- and early eighteenth-century warfare, particularly as waged in North America.

- For a time, it was the Puritans who wound up in power in England. As Englishmen, the colonists followed the events of strife from across the ocean. Discuss with students the English Civil War, which involved and influenced some of the main political thought of the colonists, as well as the Glorious Revolution a few decades later. These political developments informed the colonists and drew their careful attention to political considerations.

- Read and discuss with students excerpts from the Magna Carta and the English Bill of Rights to show that there is a long history of understanding that a “fundamental law” exists, and that regardless of particular political institutions (such as the King or Parliament), that fundamental law grants rights and liberties.

- Review or discuss the intellectual influences on the Americans, particularly those who were the colonists’ unofficial aristocracy. In addition to a Judeo-Christian faith tradition and Greco-Roman philosophy and law, the Enlightenment also influenced leading colonists. Students should understand some of the Enlightenment’s main principles and thinkers. In addition to the English Enlightenment’s influence on Britain’s North American colonists in general, Enlightenment ideas on politics were of special interest to a people governing themselves and carefully observing political events taking place back in England.

- Read with students some of the emblematic thought of John Locke—especially the social contract theory—that leading colonists would entertain in the mid-eighteenth century.

- Consider with students the English statesman Edmund Burke’s idea that the colonists in British North America enjoyed a relationship of “salutary neglect” with respect to the English government. They were “neglected” in the sense that they were a month away by sea from England, which meant poor communication and the near impossibility of governing directly. The English also largely overlooked their colonies in North America, sometimes viewing the colonists merely as poor tradesmen, former criminals, religious radicals, and commoners of no noble birth. Compared to England’s Caribbean colonies, they were also far less profitable. England’s preoccupation with rivals Spain and France and her own civil war also left English kings and Parliament with relatively little thought to give the colonies. The mercantilist restrictions on trade, moreover, were seldom fully enforced or even capable of being completely enforced, and the colonies largely traded freely with the world.

- Help students understand why this relationship of neglect was not, in Burke’s view, a disadvantage but actually healthy for the colonists. Overall, the colonists were still protected, especially on the seas, by the English. At the same time, however, they were not regulated or administratively directed beyond the general forms of governance; e.g., a royal governor and a local legislature. The colonists were largely free to take the enterprising, individualist spirit of common English settlers and, forced by necessity, to innovate and work hard to pursue livelihoods and security within their own spheres. Laws, moreover, could not wait for a two- or three-month lapse in communication. Colonists were both permitted and forced by circumstances to practice the elements of English law they had brought with them, including a recognition of certain rights and the limits of authority. The colonists had ample talent and opportunity to govern themselves: they had education and a group of leading colonists who were learned in classical thought; they had the English rule of law tradition; and they had general Enlightenment ideas. This tradition of self-government would allow for many generations of practice in self-rule as a feature of daily life. The colonists, therefore, were both used to and deeply practiced in locally governing themselves, replete with the ideas and habits that this process cultivated.

- Briefly spend time reviewing the institutional forms that self-government took in the colonies. In general, representation by election determined the composition of the various colonial assemblies, beginning with the Virginia House of Burgesses in 1619. That representative self-government was the norm in the colonies was astonishing compared to the rest of the world and human history. The creation of the township was also a uniquely colonial American establishment, and the participation by the average colonist in local government was widespread.

- Clarify for students that each colony originally did not see itself as part of a shared English colonial political state. Although their own proprietary charters were eventually replaced with royal charters, each colony viewed itself as its own separate entity, only loosely bound to the others by a common mother country and overall shared culture. This view would persist up to the eve of the Revolution.

- Explore with students how the Great Awakening throughout the colonies provided the separate and distinct colonies with something they could hold in common. At the same time, it awakened a passion for right moral conduct and justice that could be attached to any cause.

- Teach students about the various conflicts in which the British colonists of North America found themselves. Spend some time in particular with the French and Indian War. Of special note here is the presence of a young George Washington and the Virginia militia fighting alongside the British regulars. This is a good opportunity to introduce Washington, including his boyhood biography and his exploits in the war, and especially his actions during the attack on General Braddock. The French and Indian War was also important for providing the colonists another shared experience, this time amidst the adversities of war, and for demonstrating increased cooperation and a sense of unity, as evidenced by the Albany Congress. This is also a good place to introduce the architect of the Albany congress and plan, Benjamin Franklin, including teaching about his biography up to this juncture. In addition to fostering advances toward and experiences in united action, the French and Indian War is also of great importance for understanding the circumstances that would lead to the American Revolution.
Share with students maps showing the transfer of territory to the British Empire through the Treaty of Paris. Discuss with students what this meant for the relative power of Great Britain and France and the new challenges and opportunities inherent in such a sudden change of territory and power.

STRENGTHENING UNDERSTANDING: POST-LESSON ASSIGNMENTS

Assignment 1: Explain the major events and ideas that influenced American colonists’ views of government (1–2 paragraphs).

Assignment 2: Tell the story of the French and Indian War (1–2 paragraphs).
Name_________________________ Date______________

Reading Quiz

The British Colonies of North America | Lesson 4
Land of Hope Young Reader’s Edition, Volume 1, Pages 12–14 and 28–36

DIRECTIONS: Answer each question.

1. What major disruption in Europe would have a significant influence on the future British colonies in North America?

2. Name one major event from the 1600s in England that the author mentions.

3. How was George Washington involved in the French and Indian War?

4. What was the Great Awakening about?

5. What was the Enlightenment about?
APPENDIX A

Study Guide

Test

Writing Assignment
Study Guide — The British Colonies of North America Test

TIMELINE

When given chronological dates, match events from a list to the years or dates that they happened.

Oct. 12, 1492  Columbus lands on San Salvador Island
1607  Jamestown settled
1619  Africans disembark at Jamestown; first meeting of the Virginia House of Burgesses
1620  Pilgrims settle Plymouth
1688  Glorious Revolution; English Bill of Rights
1730s  The Great Awakening
1754–63  The French and Indian War

GEOGRAPHY AND PLACES

Identify each on a map and/or tell where it is and explain its significance.

Genoa  Plymouth  The Great Lakes
San Salvador/Watling’s Island  Massachusetts Bay  Canada
“The New World”  Boston  Mississippi River
La Florida  New England Colonies  New Orleans
St. Augustine  Middle Colonies  Quebec
Virginia  Southern Colonies  Montreal
Roanoke  Appalachian Mountains  Duquesne
Jamestown  Allegheny Mountains  Ohio River Valley

PERSONS

Identify each, provide biographical details, and explain what he or she thought or did in specific periods or events.

Leif Erikson  John Rolfe  Thomas Hobbes
Ferdinand and Isabella  William Bradford  John Locke
Christopher Columbus  Massasoit  Jonathan Edwards
Ponce de Leon  John Winthrop  George III
Amerigo Vespucci  Roger Williams  George Washington
John Smith  William Penn  Benjamin Franklin
Pocahontas  James Oglethorpe

Copyright © 2022 Hillsdale College. All Rights Reserved.
TERMS AND TOPICS

Identify each and explain its significance to the period of history studied.

- glaciers
- land bridge
- Hopewell
- urban
- rural
- Silk Road
- nation-states
- Niña, Pinta, and Santa María
- Taíno
- “Indians”
- conquistadors
- Columbian Exchange
- smallpox
- joint-stock companies
- Virginia Company
- indentured servants
- Powhatan
- “Starving Time”
- tobacco
- House of Burgesses
- Pilgrims
- Mayflower
- commoner
- state of nature
- social contract
- self-government
- Wampanoag
- Puritans
- public education
- Fundamental Orders of Connecticut
- religious freedom
- colonial assemblies
- militia
- Triangle Trade
- chattel slavery
- Middle Passage
- Deism
- individualism
- King Philip’s War
- English Civil War
- The Enlightenment
- Glorious Revolution
- English Bill of Rights
- “salutary neglect”
- representation
- The Great Awakening
- French and Indian War
- Albany Congress
- Fort Duquesne
- Treaty of Paris

PRIMARY SOURCES

Based on annotations and notes from seminar conversations, be able to answer questions on each primary source. While you will not necessarily be asked why each primary source was created, what it did or argued, and what its effects were, being able to answer these kinds of questions will make you well-prepared.

The Mayflower Compact
“A Modell of Christian Charity,” John Winthrop
Magna Carta
English Bill of Rights
Second Treatise of Government, John Locke

STORIES FOR THE AMERICAN HEART

In your own words, retell each episode in narrative form. Consider your audience to be third grade students.

- Christopher Columbus’s voyages and interactions with natives
- The “Starving Time” at Jamestown
- Pocahontas, John Smith, and John Rolfe
- The voyage of the Mayflower
- Accounts of the First Thanksgiving by Edward Winslow and William Bradford
- George Washington and the cherry tree (legend)
- George Washington’s time as a surveyor
- George Washington’s first battles in the Virginia militia, including his survival and Braddock’s death
- Benjamin Franklin’s autobiography

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

Based on notes from lessons and seminar conversations, answer each of the following.

Lesson 1 | The Lands, Waters, and Peoples of America

- What resources and advantages does North America afford for the flourishing of a developed civilization? How does it compare to other places in the world?
- Where did the indigenous peoples of North and South America come from? How do we believe they came?
- What kinds of civilizations did different groups of indigenous peoples establish in different parts of the Americas?

Lesson 2 | Exploration and Settlement

- What was Christopher Columbus’s theory?
- What were some of the ways in which Christopher Columbus’s voyages changed the world?
- In which ways was Christopher Columbus successful, and in which did he fail?
- From where do we get the name “America”?
- What two things happened in Jamestown in 1619?
- What motivated the Pilgrims to settle at Plymouth? What were their goals?
- Why did the Pilgrims draft and sign the Mayflower Compact?
- Based on John Winthrop’s writings, how did the Puritans at Massachusetts Bay envision their lives and the task before them in North America?

Lesson 3 | The Colonies in Profile

- How may the English approach to settlement and colonization be best described?
- In what ways did the settlers and later colonists express a hope for renewal and restoration in the New World?
- What was unique about religion in the colonies and in the eyes of the law?
- What were the roles of literacy and learning among the colonists?
- What is meant by self-government? How might it be said that the colonists governed themselves?
- What was indentured servitude? How is it similar to and different from slavery?
- What are the origins of slavery in world history?
- What was it like to be an African on the Middle Passage and then a slave in the New World?
- How did slavery gradually expand and become sanctioned in law?
- What were the chief characteristics of the “American” colonists? What gave them these characteristics?
In what sense was there an “unofficial aristocracy” in the colonies? What made it “unofficial” and how was it distinct from the aristocracies of Europe?

Lesson 4 | Major Events in the Colonies

- What did the colonists learn from the English Civil War?
- Which ancient and Enlightenment figures and ideas influenced the leading colonists?
- What were John Locke’s ideas on natural law, natural rights, and the social contract? To what extent had these already been reflected in English law and, therefore, in colonial law?
- What is “salutary neglect”? In what senses were the colonists neglected and how was this neglect actually beneficial to them?
- How did the Great Awakening contribute to a greater sense of unity between the colonies?
- What were the causes of the French and Indian War?
- In what ways did the French and Indian War foster a greater unity among the colonies?
- What was the Albany Plan of Union? What did it reveal about the relationships among the colonies?
- How did the Treaty of Paris reshape North America?
- What challenges and opportunities did the British and the British colonists face with the changes wrought by the Treaty of Paris?
Test — The British Colonies of North America

TIMELINE

Write the letter of each event next to the date or years it took place.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Event Description</th>
<th>Date(s)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>A. Africans disembark at Jamestown; first meeting of the Virginia House of Burgesses</td>
<td>Oct. 12, 1492</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>B. Columbus lands on San Salvador Island</td>
<td>1607</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>C. Glorious Revolution; English Bill of Rights</td>
<td>1619</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>D. Jamestown settled</td>
<td>1620</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>E. Pilgrims settle Plymouth</td>
<td>1688</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>F. The French and Indian War</td>
<td>1730s</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>G. The Great Awakening</td>
<td>1754–63</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

GEOGRAPHY AND PLACES

1. Label with dots and/or circle:
   - Jamestown
   - Plymouth
   - Boston
   - Appalachian Mountains
   - Ohio River Valley
   - The Great Lakes
   - Mississippi River
   - New Orleans
   - Quebec
   - Montreal
   - Duquesne

![Map Image](Map courtesy of A Student Workbook for Land of Hope.)

PERSONS, TERMS, AND TOPICS

Fill in the blank.

2. England’s first attempt at establishing a permanent settlement in North America was the ________________ in present-day North Carolina. The experiment failed, however, when the colony disappeared without a trace four years into its existence.
3. England’s second attempt at colonization nearly failed on two occasions, and the settlers had a fraught relationship with the local Powhatan tribe. The eventual success of __________ came largely from __________’s successful cultivation of tobacco, which was exported to Europe at a great profit.

4. Not tolerated in England, the __________ were dismissed on a religious journey to Virginia under the leadership of William Bradford. Instead of settling in Virginia, however, they landed far to the north on the North American coast at Cape Cod and established __________.

5. Originally founded by the Dutch, __________ was seized by the British in 1664. This meager but ideal harbor town at the mouth of the Hudson River, with commerce moving between Manhattan Island and Long Island, would become the largest city in the Americas.

6. Pennsylvania was named after its founder, __________, who intended the colony to be a haven for Quakers and a place that would tolerate different religions.

7. John Calvert, Lord of Baltimore, Ireland, founded __________ as a refuge for persecuted Catholics from England. Quickly, however, Catholics found themselves in a minority.

8. With an economy based on the large plantation farming of tobacco, indigo, and rice, the __________ colonies developed an aristocratic society and culture of leisure dependent upon a lower class of slaves and yeoman farmers.

9. The British colonies in North America were part of a trade pattern that included England, Caribbean colonies, and African colonies. The American colonies exported cod, ships, lumber, rum, iron, whale oil, tobacco, indigo, and other raw materials to England, and they imported guns, clothes, furniture, paper, and tea from England and slaves from Africa. Historians named this trade system after the shape its trade routes made on a map of the Atlantic: the __________.

10. The colonists’ relationship with England left them both free to establish their own governmental structures and in need of doing so. While the emergence of government institutions did not follow any set pattern, such institutions were all based on the English law tradition, they developed organically, and they epitomized American rule by the people, called __________.

11. Power struggles often arose within colonial governments between the elected assemblies and the royally appointed __________. There thus emerged a long pattern of colonial power challenging and usually proving superior to English authority within the colonies, partly due to claims of power originating from the people themselves.

12. Agreed to in 1215 by King John and the English barons, the __________, or “Great Charter,” was the first English pronouncement of the rule of law. Together with the Mayflower Compact and the English Bill of Rights, which concluded the Glorious Revolution, the colonists drew many ideas and much language from these principal English legal precedents.
13. The philosophy of the British Enlightenment thinker __________________ defined an increasingly popular idea in England and in the colonies: that of a social contract that would allot power in a political body beholden to the people in order to preserve and protect the natural rights human beings equally enjoyed by virtue of their humanity.

14. Of the ancient Greek and Roman political philosophers, the American aristocracy was influenced far more by the ancient __________________, especially regarding their understanding that a republic ultimately rests on the virtue of its citizens.

15. Irish Member of Parliament Edmund Burke captured the idea that England’s relative neglect of the colonies contributed to the colonists’ successful governance of themselves in the phrase __________________.

16. As the population of the colonies doubled every generation, westward expansion brought the British into conflict not only with Native Americans but also with the French in Canada, especially over who controlled the very fertile and wild lands west of the __________________ Mountains known as the Ohio River Valley.

17. __________________ began his career as a surveyor from Virginia. His experience mapping and camping in the uncharted wilderness motivated him at age nineteen to join the Virginia militia, in which he rose to the rank of Major General.

18. To gain a secure alliance with the Iroquois Confederacy and to foster inter-colony cooperation during the French and Indian War, the seven most northern colonies met at the Albany Congress under the direction of the accomplished printer, thinker, statesman, and inventor from Philadelphia named __________________. While their plan for union was not adopted by the colonies, it was the first instance of united action among the several American colonies, and it became a model for future colonial cooperation.

STORIES FOR THE AMERICAN HEART

In your own words, retell each episode in narrative form. Consider your audience to be third grade students.

19. Christopher Columbus’s various interactions with Native Americans.
20. An account of the “Starving Time” at Jamestown.

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

Answer each of the following. Complete sentences are not necessary, but correct spelling and writing should be employed, and responses must fully answer each question.

21. Where did the indigenous peoples of North and South America come from? How do we believe they came?

22. What motivated the Pilgrims to settle at Plymouth? What were their goals?

23. Why did the Pilgrims draft and sign the Mayflower Compact?

24. What are the origins of slavery in world history?

25. What was it like to be an African on the Middle Passage and then a slave in the New World?

26. What did the colonists learn from the English Civil War?
27. What is “salutary neglect”? In what senses were the colonists neglected and how was this neglect actually beneficial to them?

28. What were the causes of the French and Indian War?

29. How did the Treaty of Paris reshape North America?
Writing Assignment — The British Colonies of North America

DIRECTIONS

Citing events and primary sources in your argument, write a 4–5 paragraph essay answering the question:

What are the most important historical moments or ideas in the history of the thirteen colonies, from the founding of Jamestown through the French and Indian War?
APPENDIX B

Primary Sources

Christopher Columbus

The Pilgrims

John Winthrop

William Penn

First Pennsylvania Provincial Assembly

John of England

Parliament of England

John Locke
ADMIRAL CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS
To King Ferdinand II of Aragon and Queen Isabella I of Castile
LETTER
February 15, 1493
The Niña | The Atlantic Ocean

BACKGROUND
Christopher Columbus informed King Ferdinand II of the discoveries on his first voyage in this letter from early 1493.

GUIDING QUESTIONS

1. What does Christopher Columbus find on his voyage?

2. How does Columbus describe the islands?

3. How do the Native Americans treat Columbus and his crew?

4. What is the culture of the Native Americans as described by Columbus?

5. Why does Columbus believe his voyage was important?

Christopher Columbus, “Letter to King Ferdinand II,” American Studies at the University of Virginia, https://xroads.virginia.edu/~Hyper/HNS/Garden/columbus.html.
Letter to Ferdinand and Isabella
Christopher Columbus

SIR: Since I know that you will be pleased at the great victory with which Our Lord has crowned my voyage, I write this to you, from which you will learn how in thirty-three days I passed from the Canary Islands to the Indies, with the fleet which the most illustrious King and Queen, our Sovereigns, gave to me. There I found very many islands, filled with innumerable people, and I have taken possession of them all for their Highnesses, done by proclamation and with the royal standard unfurled, and no opposition was offered to me.

To the first island which I found I gave the name "San Salvador," in remembrance of the Divine Majesty, Who had marvellously bestowed all this…To the second, I gave the name the island of "Santa Maria de Concepcion," to the third, "Fernandina," to the fourth, "Isabella," to the fifth island, "Juana," and so each received from me a new name.

When I came to Juana, I followed its coast to the westward, and I found it to be so extensive that I thought that it must be the mainland, the province of Cathay. And since there were neither towns nor villages on the seashore, but small hamlets only, with the people of which I could not have speech because they all fled immediately, I went forward on the same course, thinking that I could not fail to find great cities or towns. At the end of many leagues, seeing that there was no change and that the coast was bearing me northwards, which I wished to avoid, since winter was already approaching and I proposed to make from it to the south, and as, moreover, the wind was carrying me forward, I determined not to wait for a change in the weather and retraced my path as far as a remarkable harbour known to me. From that point, I sent two men inland to learn if there were a king or great cities. They travelled three days' journey, finding an infinity of small hamlets and people without number, but nothing of importance. For this reason, they returned.

I understood sufficiently from other Indians, whom I had already taken, that this land was nothing but an island, and I therefore followed its coast eastward for one hundred and seven leagues to the point where it ended. From that point, I saw another island, distant about eighteen leagues from the first, to the east, and to it I at once gave the name "Espanola." I went there and followed its northern coast, as I had followed that of Juana, to the eastward for one hundred and eighty-eight great leagues in a straight line. This island and all the others are very fertile to a limitless degree, and this island is extremely so. In it there are many harbours on the coast of the sea, beyond comparison with others that I know in Christendom, and many rivers, good and large, which is marvellous. Its lands are high; there are in it many sierras and very lofty mountains, beyond comparison with that of Tenerife. All are most beautiful, of a thousand shapes; all are accessible and are filled with trees of a thousand kinds and tall, so that they seem to touch the sky. I am told that they never lose their foliage, and this I can believe, for I saw them as green and lovely as they are in Spain in May, and some of them were flowering, some bearing fruit, and some at another stage, according to their nature. The nightingale was singing and other birds of a thousand kinds, in the month of November, there where I went. There are six or eight kinds of palm, which are a wonder to behold on account of their beautiful variety, but so are the other trees and fruits and plants. In it are marvellous pine groves; there are very wide and fertile plains, and there is honey; and there are birds of many kinds and fruits in great diversity. In the interior, there are mines of metals, and the population is without number.

Espanola is a marvel. The sierras and the mountains, the plains, the champaigns, are so lovely and so rich for planting and sowing, for breeding cattle of every kind, for building towns and villages. The harbours of the sea here are such as cannot be believed to exist unless they have been seen, and so with the rivers, many and great, and of good water, the majority of which contain gold. In the trees, fruits and plants, there is a great difference from those of Juana. In this island, there are many spices and great mines of gold and of other metals.

The people of this island and of all the other islands which I have found and of which I have information, all go naked, men and women, as their mothers bore them, although some of the women cover a single place with the leaf of a plant or with a net of cotton which they make for the purpose. They have no iron or steel or weapons, nor are they fitted to use them. This is not because they are not well built and of handsome stature, but because they are very marvellously timorous. They have no other arms than spears made of canes, cut in seeding time, to the ends of which they fix a small sharpened stick. Of these they do not dare to make use, for many times it has happened that I have sent ashore two or three men to some town to have speech with them, and countless people have come out to them, and as soon as they have seen my men approaching, they have fled, a father not even waiting for his son. This is not because ill has been done to any one of them; on the contrary, at every place where I have been and have been able to have speech with them, I have given to them of that which I had, such as cloth and many other things, receiving nothing in exchange. But so they are, incurably timid. It is true that, after they have been reassured and have lost this fear, they are so guileless and so generous with all that they possess, that no one would believe it who has not seen it. They refuse nothing that they possess, if it be asked of them; on the contrary, they invite any one to share it and display as much love as if they would give their hearts. They are content with whatever trifle of whatever kind that may be given to them, whether it be of value or valueless. I forbade that they should be given things so worthless as fragments of broken crockery, scraps of broken and lace tips, although when they were able to get them, they fancied that they possessed the best jewel in the world…They took even the pieces of the broken hoops of the wine barrels and, like savages, gave what they had, so that it seemed to me to be wrong and I forbade it. I gave them a thousand handsome good things, which I had brought, in order that they might conceive affection for us and, more than that, might become Christians and be inclined to the love and service of Your Highnesses and of the whole Castilian nation, and strive to collect and give us of the things which they have in abundance and which are necessary to us.

They do not hold any creed nor are they idolaters; but they all believe that power and good are in the heavens and were very firmly convinced that I, with these ships and men, came from the heavens, and in this belief they everywhere received me after they had mastered their fear. This belief is not the result of ignorance, for they are, on the contrary, of a very acute intelligence and they are men who navigate all those seas, so that it is amazing how good an account they give of everything. It is because they have never seen people clothed or ships of such a kind.
As soon as I arrived in the Indies, in the first island which I found, I took some of the natives by force, in order that they might learn and might give me information of whatever there is in these parts. And so it was that they soon understood us, and we them, either by speech or by signs, and they have been very serviceable. At present, those I bring with me are still of the opinion that I come from Heaven, for all the intercourse which they have had with me. They were the first to announce this wherever I went, and the others went running from house to house, and to the neighbouring towns, with loud cries of, "Come! Come! See the men from Heaven!" So all came, men and women alike, when their minds were set at rest concerning us, not one, small or great, remaining behind, and they all brought something to eat and drink, which they gave with extraordinary affection.

In all the islands, they have very many canoes, which are like rowing fustas, some larger and some smaller; some are greater than a fusta of eighteen benches. They are not so broad, because they are made of a single log of wood, but a fusta would not keep up with them in rowing, since their speed is an incredible thing. In these they navigate among all those islands, which are innumerable, and carry their goods. I have seen one of these canoes with seventy or eighty men in it, each one with his paddle.

In all these islands, I saw no great diversity in the appearance of the people or in their manners and language. On the contrary, they all understand one another, which is a very curious thing, on account of which I hope that their Highnesses will determine upon their conversion to our holy faith, towards which they are very inclined.
I have already said how I went one hundred and seven leagues in a straight line from west to east along the seashore of the island of Juana, and as a result of this voyage I can say that this island is larger than England and Scotland together, for, beyond these one hundred and even leagues, there remain to the westward two provinces to which I have not gone. One of these provinces they call "Avan," and there people are born with tails. These provinces cannot have a length of less than fifty or sixty leagues, as I could understand from those Indians whom I have and who know all the islands.

The other island, Espanola, has a circumference greater than all Spain from Collioure by the seacoast to Fuenterabia in Vizcaya, for I voyaged along one side for one hundred and eighty-eight great leagues in a straight line from west to east. It is a land to be desired and, when seen, never to be left. I have taken possession of all for their Highnesses, and all are more richly endowed than I know how or am able to say, and I hold all for their Highnesses, so that they may dispose of them as they do of the kingdoms of Castile and as absolutely. But especially, in this Espanola, in the situation most convenient and in the best position for the mines of gold and for all trade as well with the mainland here as with that there, belonging to the Grand Khan, where will be great trade and profit, I have taken possession of a large town, to which I gave the name "Villa de Navidad," and in it I have made fortifications and a fort, which will now by this time be entirely completed. In it I have left enough men for such a purpose with arms and artillery and provisions for more than a year, and a fusta, and one a master of all seacraft, to build others, and I have established great friendship with the king of that land, so much so, that he was proud to call me "brother" and to treat me as such. And even were he to change his attitude to one of hostility towards these men, he and his do not know what arms are. They go naked, as I have already said, and they are the most timorous people in the world, so that the men whom I have left there alone would suffice to destroy all that land, and the island is without danger for their persons, if they know how to govern themselves.

In all these islands, it seems to me that all men are content with one woman, and to their chief or king they give as many as twenty.

It appears to me that the women work more than do the men. I have been able to learn if they hold private property; it seemed to me to be that all took a share in whatever any one had, especially of eatable things.

In these islands I have so far found no human monstrosities, as many expected, but on the contrary the whole population is very well tried, nor are they negroes as in Guinea, but their hair is flowing and they are not born where there is intense force in the rays of the sun... In these islands, where there are high mountains, the cold was severe this winter, but they endure it, being used to it and with the help of meats which they consume with many and extremely hot spices. Thus I have found no monsters, nor had a report of any, except in an island "Carib," which is the second at the coming into the Indies, and which is inhabited by people who are regarded in all the islands as very fierce and who eat human flesh. They have many canoes with which they range through all the islands of India and pillage and take whatever they can. They are no more malformed than are the others, except that they have the custom of wearing their hair long like women, and they use bows and arrows of the same cane stems, with a small piece of wood at end, owing to their lack of iron which they do not possess. They are ferocious among these other people who are cowardly to an excessive degree, but I make no more account of them than of the rest. These are they who have intercourse with the women of "Matinino," which is the first island met on the way from Spain to the Indies, in which there is not a man. These women engage in no feminine occupation, but use bows and arrows of cane, like those already mentioned, and they arm and protect themselves with plates of copper, of which they have much.

In another island, which they assure me is larger than Espanola, the people have no hair. In it there is incalculable gold, and from it and from the other islands I bring with me Indians as evidence.

In conclusion, to speak only of what has been accomplished on this voyage, which was so hasty, their Highnesses can see that I will give them as much gold as they may need, if their Highnesses will render me very slight assistance; presently, I will give them spices and cotton, as much as their Highnesses shall command; and mastic, as much as they shall order to be shipped and which, up to now, has been found only in Greece, in the island of Chios, and the Seignory sells it for what it pleases; and aloe, as much as they shall order to be shipped; and slaves, as many as they shall order, and who will be from the idolaters. I believe also that I have found rhubarb and cinnamon, and I shall find a thousand other things of value, which the people whom I have left there will have discovered, for I have not delayed at any point, so far as the wind allowed me to sail, except in the town of Navidad, in order to leave it secured and well established, and in truth I should have done much more if the ships had served me as reason demanded.
This is enough. And thus the eternal God, Our Lord, gives to all those who walk in His way triumph over things which appear to be impossible, and this was notably one. For, although men have talked or have written of these lands, all was conjectural, without ocular evidence, but amounted only to this, that those who heard for the most part listened and judged rather by hearsay than from even a small something tangible. So that, since Our Redeemer has given the victory to our most illustrious King and Queen, and to their renowned kingdoms, in so great a matter, for this all Christendom ought to feel delight and make great feasts and give solemn thanks to the Holy Trinity, with many solemn prayers for the great exaltation which they shall have in the turning of so many peoples to our holy faith, and afterwards for the temporal benefits, because not only Spain but all Christendom will have hence refreshment and gain.

This is an account of the facts, thus abridged.

Done in the caravel, on the Canary Islands, on the fifteenth day of February, in the year one thousand four hundred and ninety-three.

At your orders.

THE ADMIRAL.
The Undersigned Subjects of King James

Agreement Between
the Settlers of New Plymouth

November 11, 1620

Mayflower | Off the Coast of Cape Cod, Colony of Virginia

The Mayflower Compact

BACKGROUND

The settlers who traveled to the British possession of Virginia on the Mayflower drafted and signed this agreement pertaining to their governance before disembarking in the New World.

ANNOTATIONS

IN THE NAME OF GOD, AMEN. We, whose names are underwritten, the Loyal Subjects of our dread Sovereign Lord King James, by the Grace of God, of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. Having undertaken for the Glory of God, and Advancement of the Christian Faith, and the Honour of our King and Country, a Voyage to plant the first Colony in the northern Parts of Virginia; Do by these Presents, solemnly and mutually, in the Presence of God and one another, covenant and combine ourselves together into a civil Body Politick, for our better Ordering and Preservation, and Furtherance of the Ends aforesaid: And by Virtue hereof do enact, constitute, and frame, such just and equal Laws, Ordinances, Acts, Constitutions, and Officers, from time to time, as shall be thought most meet and convenient for the general Good of the Colony; unto which we promise all due Submission and Obedience.

IN WITNESS whereof we have hereunto subscribed our names at Cape-Cod the eleventh of November, in the Reign of our Sovereign Lord King James, of England, France, and Ireland, the eighteenth, and of Scotland the fifty-fourth, Anno Domini; 1620.

GOVERNOR JOHN WINTHROP

A Modell of Christian Charity

SPEECH

April 8, 1630

The Arabella | The Atlantic Ocean

BACKGROUND

John Winthrop, governor of the Massachusetts Bay Colony, delivered these remarks aboard the Arabella toward the end of its voyage across the Atlantic Ocean.

GUIDING QUESTIONS

1. Why does John Winthrop say God gives different conditions to different people?

2. What are the work, end, and means of the Massachusetts Bay Colony?

3. What does it mean to be “a city on the hill,” according to Winthrop?

“A Model of Christian Charity,” Hanover Historical Texts Collection, https://history.hanover.edu/texts/winthmod.html
[Original Source: Collections of the Massachusetts Historical Society (Boston, 1838), 3rd Series 7:31-48.]
A Model of Christian Charity
John Winthrop

A Model hereof.

GOD ALMIGHTY in his most holy and wise providence, hath so disposed of the condition of mankind, as in all times some must be rich, some poor, some high and eminent in power and dignity; others mean and in submission.

The Reason hereof.

1 Reas. First to hold conformity with the rest of his world, being delighted to show forth the glory of his wisdom in the variety and difference of the creatures, and the glory of his power in ordering all these differences for the preservation and good of the whole; and the glory of his greatness, that as it is the glory of princes to have many officers, so this great king will have many stewards, Counting himself more honored in dispensing his gifts to man by man, than if he did it by his own immediate hands.

2 Reas. Secondly that he might have the more occasion to manifest the work of his Spirit: first upon the wicked in moderating and restraining them: so that the rich and mighty should not eat up the poor nor the poor and despised rise up against and shake off their yoke. 2ly In the regenerate, in exercising his graces in them, as in the great ones, their love, mercy, gentleness, temperance etc., in the poor and inferior sort, their faith, patience, obedience etc.

3 Reas. Thirdly, that every man might have need of others, and from hence they might be all knit more nearly together in the Bonds of brotherly affection. From hence it appears plainly that no man is made more honorable than another or more wealthy etc., out of any particular and singular respect to himself, but for the glory of his creator and the common good of the creature, man. Therefore God still reserves the property of these gifts to himself as Ezek. 16. 17. he there calls wealth, his gold and his silver, and Prov. 3. 9. he claims their service as his due, honor the Lord with thy riches etc.--All men being thus (by divine providence) ranked into two sorts, rich and poor; under the first are comprehended all such as are able to live comfortably by their own means duly improved; and all others are poor according to the former distribution. There are two rules whereby we are to walk one towards another: Justice and Mercy. These are always distinguished in their act and in their object, yet may they both concur in the same subject in each respect; as sometimes there may be an occasion of showing mercy to a rich man in some sudden danger or distress, and also doing of mere justice to a poor man in regard of some particular contract etc. There is likewise a double Law by which we are regulated in our conversation towards another; in both the former respects, the law of nature and the law of grace, or the moral law or the law of the gospel, to omit the rule of justice as not properly belonging to this purpose otherwise than it may fall into consideration in some particular cases. By the first of these laws man as he was enabled so with all is commanded to love his neighbor as himself. Upon this ground stands all the precepts of the moral law, which concerns our dealings with men. To apply this to the works of mercy; this law requires two things. First that every man afford his help to another in every want or distress. Secondly, that he perform this out of the same affection which makes him careful of his own goods, according to that of our Savior, (Math.) Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you. This was practiced by Abraham and Lot in entertaining the angels and the old man of Gibea. The law of Grace or of the Gospel hath some difference from the former; as in these respects, First the law of nature was given to man in the estate of innocency; this of the Gospel in the estate of regeneracy. 2ly, the former propounds one man to another, as the same flesh and image of God; this as a brother in Christ also, and in the communion of the same Spirit, and so teaches to put a difference between Christians and others. Do good to all, especially to the household of faith; upon this ground the Israelites were to put a difference between the brethren of such as were strangers though not of the Canaanites....

...It rests now to make some application of this discourse, by the present design, which gave the occasion of writing of it. Herein are 4 things to be propounded: first the persons, 2ly the work, 3ly the end, 4thly the means. 1. For the persons. We are a company professing ourselves fellow members of Christ, in which respect only though we were absent from each other many miles, and had our employments as far distant, yet we ought to account ourselves knit together by this bond of love, and, live in the exercise of it, if we would have comfort of our being in Christ. This was notorious in the practice of the Christians in former times; as is testified of the Waldenses, from the mouth of one of the adversaries Aeneas Sylvius "mutuo ament pere antequam norunt," they use to love any of their own religion even before they were acquainted with them. 2nly for the work we have in hand. It is by a mutual consent, through a special overruling providence and a more than an ordinary approbation of the Churches of Christ, to seek out a place of Cohabitation and Consortship under a due form of Government both civil and ecclesiastical. In such cases as this, the care of the public must over sway all private respects, by which, not only conscience, but mere civil policy, does bind us. For it is a true rule that particular Estates cannot subsist in the ruin of the public. 3ly The end is to improve our lives to do more service to the Lord; the comfort and increase of the body of Christ, whereof we are members; that ourselves and posterity may be the better preserved from the common corruptions of this evil world, to serve the Lord and work out our Salvation under the power and purity of his holy ordinances. 4thly for the means whereby this must be effected. They are twofold, a conformity with the work and end we aim at. These we see are extraordinary, therefore we must not content ourselves with usual ordinary means. Whatsoever we did, or ought to have, done, when we lived in England, the same must we do, and more also, where we go. That which the most in their churches maintain as truth in profession only, we must bring into familiar and constant practice; as in this duty of love, we must love brotherly without dissimulation, we must love one another with a pure heart fervently. We must bear one another’s burdens. We must not look only on our own things, but also on the things of our brethren. Neither must we think that the Lord will bear with such failings at our hands as he does from those among whom we have lived…

When God gives a special commission he looks to have it strictly observed in every article; When he gave Saul a commission to destroy Amalek, He indented with him upon certain articles, and because he failed in one of the least, and that upon a fair pretense, it lost him the kingdom, which should have been his reward, if he had observed his commission. Thus stands the cause between God and us. We are entered into Covenant with Him for this work. We have taken out a commission. The Lord hath given us leave to draw our own articles. We have professed to enterprise these and those accounts, upon these and those ends. We have hereupon besought Him of favor and blessing. Now if the Lord shall please to hear us, and bring us in peace to the place we desire, then hath he ratified this Covenant and sealed our Commission, and will expect a strict performance of the articles contained in it; but if we shall neglect the observation of these articles which are the ends we have propounded, and, dissembling with our God, shall fall to embrace this present world and prosecute our carnal intentions, seeking great things for ourselves and our posterity, the Lord will surely break out in wrath against us; be revenged of such a [sinful] people and make us know the price of the breach of such a Covenant.

Now the only way to avoid this shipwreck, and to provide for our posterity, is to follow the counsel of Micah, to do justly, to love mercy, to walk humbly with our God. For this end, we must be knit together, in this work, as one man. We must entertain each other in brotherly affection. We must be willing to abridge ourselves of our superfluities, for the supply of other's necessities. We must uphold a familiar commerce together in all meekness, gentleness, patience, and liberality. We must delight in each other; make other's conditions our own; rejoice together, mourn together, labor and suffer together, always having before our eyes our commission and community in the work, as members of the same body. So shall we keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace. The Lord will be our God, and delight to dwell among us, as his own people, and will command a blessing upon us in all our ways. So that we shall see much more of his wisdom, power, goodness and truth, than formerly we have been acquainted with. We shall find that the God of Israel is among us, when ten of us shall be able to resist a thousand of our enemies; when he shall make us a praise and glory that men shall say of succeeding plantations, "the Lord make it likely that of New England." For we must consider that we shall be as a city upon a hill. The eyes of all people are upon us. So that if we shall deal falsely with our God in this work we have undertaken, and so cause him to withdraw his present help from us, we shall be made a story and a by-word through the world. We shall open the mouths of enemies to speak evil of the ways of God, and all professors for God's sake. We shall shame the faces of many of God's worthy servants, and cause their prayers to be turned into curses upon us till we be consumed out of the good land whither we are a going.

I shall shut up this discourse with that exhortation of Moses, that faithful servant of the Lord, in his last farewell to Israel, Deut. 30. Beloved there is now set before us life and good, Death and evil, in that we are commanded this day to love the Lord our God, and to love one another, to walk in his ways and to keep his Commandments and his Ordinance and his laws, and the articles of our Covenant with him, that we may live and be multiplied, and that the Lord our God may bless us in the land whither we go to possess it. But if our hearts shall turn away, so that we will not obey, but shall be seduced, and worship and serve other Gods, our pleasure and profits, and serve them; it is propounded unto us this day, we shall surely perish out of the good land whither we pass over this vast sea to possess it;

Therefore let us choose life that we, and our seed may live, by obeying His voice and cleaving to Him, for He is our life and our prosperity.
WILLIAM PENN

Preface to the Frame of Government

BACKGROUND
William Penn, Founder of the Province of Pennsylvania, wrote this preface for the colony’s first constitution.

GUIDING QUESTIONS

1. According to William Penn, does God desire a government for mankind?

2. What is the purpose of government?

3. Are the people meant to participate in government?

4. What is the importance of good men to a community?

5. What is the relationship between liberty and obedience?

When the great and wise God had made the world, of all his creatures, it pleased him to choose man his Deputy to rule it: and to fit him for so great a charge and trust, he did not only qualify him with skill and power, but with integrity to use them justly. This native goodness was equally his honor and his happiness, and whilst he stood here, all went well; there was no need of coercive or compulsive means; the precept of divine love and truth, in his bosom, was the guide and keeper of his innocency. But lust prevailing against duty, made a lamentable breach upon it; and the law, that before had no power over him, took place upon him, and his disobedient posterity, that such as would not live comformable to the holy law within, should fall under the reproof and correction of the just law without, in a Judicial administration.

This the Apostle teaches in divers of his epistles: “The law,” says he, “was added because of transgression.” In another place, "knowing that the law was not made for the righteous man; but for the disobedient and ungodly, for sinners, for unholy and prophane, for murderers, for whoremongers, for them that defile themselves with mankind, and for man-stealers, for liars, for perjured persons," etc., but this is not all; he opens and carries the matter of government a little further: "let every soul be subject to the higher powers; for there is no power but of God. The powers that be are ordained of God: whosoever therefore resisteth the power, resisteth the ordinance of God. For rulers are not a terror to good works, but to evil: wilt thou then not be afraid of the power? Do that which is good, and thou shalt have praise of the same." "He is the minister of God to thee for good."

"Wherefore ye must needs be subject, not only for wrath, but for conscience sake."

This settles the divine right of government beyond exception, and that for two ends: first, to terrify evil doers; secondly, to cherish those that do well; which gives government a life beyond corruption, and makes it as durable in the world, as good men shall be. So that government seems to me a part of religion itself, a filing sacred in its institution and end. For, if it does not directly remove the cause, it crushes the effects of evil, and is as such, though a lower, yet an emanation of the same Divine Power, that is both author and object of pure religion; the difference lying here, that the one is more free and mental, the other more corporal and compulsive in its operations: but that is only to evil doers; government itself being otherwise as capable of kindness, goodness and charity, as a more private society. They weakly err, that think there is no other use of government than correction, which is the coarsest part of it: daily experience tells us that the care and regulation of many other affairs, more soft, and daily necessary, make up much of the greatest part of government; and which must have followed the peopling of the world, had Adam never fell, and will continue among men, on earth, under the highest attainments they may arrive at, by the coming of the blessed Second Adam, the Lord from heaven. Thus much of government in general, as to its rise and end.

For particular frames and models, it will become me to say little; and comparatively I will say nothing. My reasons are:

First. That the age is too nice and difficult for it; there being nothing the wits of men are more busy and divided upon. It is true, they seem to agree to the end, to wit, happiness; but, in the means, they differ, as to divine, so to this human felicity; and the cause is much the same, not always want of light and knowledge, but want of using them rightly. Men side with their passions against their reason, and their sinister interests have so strong a bias upon their minds, that they lean to them against the good of the things they know.

Secondly. I do not find a model in the world, that time, place, and some singular emergences have not necessarily altered; nor is it easy to frame a civil government, that shall serve all places alike.

Thirdly. I know what is said by the several admirers of monarchy, aristocracy, and democracy, which are the rule of one, a few, and many, and are the three common ideas of government, when men discourse on the subject. But I choose to solve the controversy with this small distinction, and it belongs to all three: Any government is free to the people under it, whatever be the frame, where the laws rule, and the people are a party to those laws, and more than this is tyranny, oligarchy, or confusion.
But lastly, when all is said, there is hardly one frame of government in the world so ill designed by its first founders that in good hands, [it] would not do well enough; and story tells us, the best in ill ones can do nothing that is great or good; witness the Jewish and Roman states. Governments, like clocks, go from the motion men give them; and as governments are made and moved by men, so by them they are ruined too. Wherefore governments rather depend upon men, than men upon governments. Let men be good, and the government cannot be bad; if it be ill, they will cure it. But if men be bad, let the government be never so good, they will endeavor to warp and spoil it to their turn.

I know some say, let us have good laws, and no matter for the men that execute them: but let them consider, that though good laws do well, good men do better: for good laws may want good men, and be abolished or evaded by ill men, but good men will never want good laws nor suffer ill ones. It is true, good laws have some awe upon-ill ministers, but that is where they have not power to escape or abolish them and the people are generally wise and good: but a loose and depraved people (which is the question) love laws and an administration like themselves. That, therefore, which makes a good constitution, must keep it, vie: men of wisdom and virtue, qualities, that because they descend not with worldly inheritances, must be carefully propagated by a virtuous education of youth; for which after ages will owe more to the care and prudence of founders and the successive magistracy than to their parents for their private patrimonies.

These considerations of the weight of government and the nice and various opinions about it made it uneasy to me to think of publishing the ensuing frame and conditional laws, foreseeing both the censures they will meet with from men of differing humors and engagements and the occasion they may give of discourse beyond my design.

But, next to the power of necessity, (which is a solicitor that will take no denial) this induced me to a compliance, that we have (with reverence to God and good conscience to men) to the best of our skill contrived and composed the frame and laws of this government to the great end of all government; viz., to support power in reverence with the people and to secure the people from the almost of power; that they may be free by their just obedience, and the magistrates honorable for their just administration; for liberty without obedience is confusion, and obedience without liberty is slavery. To carry this evenness is partly owing to the constitution, and partly to the magistracy. Where either of these fail, government will be subject to convulsions, but where both are wanting, it must be totally subverted; then where both meet, the government is like to endure, which I humbly pray and hope God will please to make the lot of this of Pennsylvania. Amen.

WILLIAM PENN.
FIRST PENNSYLVANIA PROVINCIAL ASSEMBLY

An Act for Freedom of Conscience

LAW

December 7, 1682
Province of Pennsylvania | Chester, Pennsylvania

BACKGROUND

William Penn, Governor of Pennsylvania, insisted upon this law, which the Pennsylvania Provincial Assembly passed in 1682.

GUIDING QUESTIONS

1. What is the proper end of government?

2. Why are there laws?

3. What is the freedom of conscience?

4. What are its limits?

5. What are the punishments given for breaking this law?

Whereas the glory of almighty God and the good of mankind is the reason and end of government and, therefore, government in itself is a venerable ordinance of God. And forasmuch as it is principally desired and intended by the Proprietary and Governor and the freemen of the province of Pennsylvania and territories thereunto belonging to make and establish such laws as shall best preserve true Christian and civil liberty in opposition to all unchristian, licentious, and unjust practices, whereby God may have his due, Caesar his due, and the people their due, from tyranny and oppression on the one side and insolence and licentiousness on the other, so that the best and firmest foundation may be laid for the present and future happiness of both the Governor and people of the province and territories aforesaid and their posterity.

Be it, therefore, enacted by William Penn, Proprietary and Governor, by and with the advice and consent of the deputies of the freemen of this province and counties aforesaid in assembly met and by the authority of the same, that these following chapters and paragraphs shall be the laws of Pennsylvania and the territories thereof.

Chap. i. Almighty God, being only Lord of conscience, father of lights and spirits, and the author as well as object of all divine knowledge, faith, and worship, who can only enlighten the mind and persuade and convince the understandings of people, in due reverence to his sovereignty over the souls of mankind:

Be it enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that no person now or at any time hereafter living in this province, who shall confess and acknowledge one almighty God to be the creator, upholder, and ruler of the world, and who professes him or herself obliged in conscience to live peaceably and quietly under the civil government, shall in any case be molested or prejudiced for his or her conscientious persuasion or practice. Nor shall he or she at any time be compelled to frequent or maintain any religious worship, place, or ministry whatever contrary to his or her mind, but shall freely and fully enjoy his, or her, Christian liberty in that respect, without any interruption or reflection. And if any person shall abuse or deride any other for his or her different persuasion and practice in matters of religion, such person shall be looked upon as a disturber of the peace and be punished accordingly.

But to the end that looseness, irreligion, and atheism may not creep in under pretense of conscience in this province, be it further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that, according to the example of the primitive Christians and for the ease of the creation, every first day of the week, called the Lord’s day, people shall abstain from their usual and common toil and labor that, whether masters, parents, children, or servants, they may the better dispose themselves to read the scriptures of truth at home or frequent such meetings of religious worship abroad as may best suit their respective persuasions.

Chap. ii. And be it further enacted by, etc., that all officers and persons commissioned and employed in the service of the government in this province and all members and deputies elected to serve in the Assembly thereof and all that have a right to elect such deputies shall be such as profess and declare they believe in Jesus Christ to be the son of God, the savior of the world, and that are not convicted of ill-fame or unsober and dishonest conversation and that are of twenty-one years of age at least.

Chap. iii. And be it further enacted, etc., that whosoever shall swear in their common conversation by the name of God or Christ or Jesus, being legally convicted thereof, shall pay, for every such offense, five shillings or suffer five days imprisonment in the house of correction at hard labor to the behoove of the public and be fed with bread and water only during that time.

Chap. v. And be it further enacted, etc., for the better prevention of corrupt communication, that whosoever shall speak loosely and profanely of almighty God, Christ Jesus, the Holy Spirit, or the scriptures of truth, and is legally convicted thereof, shall pay, for every such offense, five shillings or suffer five days imprisonment in the house of correction at hard labor to the behoove of the public and be fed with bread and water only during that time.
Chap. vi. And be it further enacted, etc., that whosoever shall, in their conversation, at any time curse himself or any other and is legally convicted thereof shall pay for every such offense five shillings or suffer five days imprisonment as aforesaid.
BACKGROUND

Following the loss of English territory in France, England was left weak and vulnerable. In order to regain power, King John attempted to assert total authority over all the barons of England. Stephen Langton, Archbishop of Canterbury, attempted to prevent the potential civil war by drafting the Magna Carta, which was signed by King John.

ANNOTATIONS

JOHN, by the grace of God King of England, Lord of Ireland, Duke of Normandy and Aquitaine, and Count of Anjou, to his archbishops, bishops, abbots, earls, barons, justices, foresters, sheriffs, stewards, servants, and to all his officials and loyal subjects, Greeting.

KNOW THAT BEFORE GOD, for the health of our soul and those of our ancestors and heirs, to the honour of God, the exaltation of the holy Church, and the better ordering of our kingdom, at the advice of our reverend fathers…and other loyal subjects:

(1) FIRST, THAT WE HAVE GRANTED TO GOD, and by this present charter have confirmed for us and our heirs in perpetuity, that the English Church shall be free, and shall have its rights undiminished, and its liberties unimpaired. That we wish this so to be observed, appears from the fact that of our own free will, before the outbreak of the present dispute between us and our barons, we granted and confirmed by charter the freedom of the Church’s elections – a right reckoned to be of the greatest necessity and importance to it – and caused this to be confirmed by Pope Innocent III. This freedom we shall observe ourselves, and desire to be observed in good faith by our heirs in perpetuity.

TO ALL FREE MEN OF OUR KINGDOM we have also granted, for us and our heirs for ever, all the liberties written out below, to have and to keep for them and their heirs, of us and our heirs: …

(4) The guardian of the land of an heir who is under age shall take from it only reasonable revenues, customary dues, and feudal services. He shall do this without destruction or damage to men or property. If we have given the guardianship of the land to a sheriff, or to any person answerable to us for the revenues, and he commits destruction or damage, we will exact compensation from him, and the land shall be entrusted to two worthy and prudent men of the same ‘fee’, who shall be answerable to us for the revenues, or to the person to whom we have assigned them. If we have given or sold to anyone the guardianship of such land, and he causes destruction or damage, he shall lose the guardianship of it, and it shall be handed over to two worthy and prudent men of the same ‘fee’, who shall be similarly answerable to us.

(5) For so long as a guardian has guardianship of such land, he shall maintain the houses, parks, fish preserves, ponds, mills, and everything else pertaining to it, from the revenues of the land itself. When the heir comes of age, he shall restore the whole land to him, stocked with plough teams and such implements of husbandry as the season demands and the revenues from the land can reasonably bear.

(6) Heirs may be given in marriage, but not to someone of lower social standing. Before a marriage takes place, it shall be made known to the heir’s next-of-kin.
(7) At her husband’s death, a widow may have her marriage portion and inheritance at once and without trouble. She shall pay nothing for her dower, marriage portion, or any inheritance that she and her husband held jointly on the day of his death…

(8) No widow shall be compelled to marry, so long as she wishes to remain without a husband. But she must give security that she will not marry without royal consent, if she holds her lands of the Crown, or without the consent of whatever other lord she may hold them of.

(9) Neither we nor our officials will seize any land or rent in payment of a debt, so long as the debtor has movable goods sufficient to discharge the debt…

(12) No ‘scutage’ or ‘aid’ may be levied in our kingdom without its general consent, unless it is for the ransom of our person, to make our eldest son a knight, and (once) to marry our eldest daughter. For these purposes only a reasonable ‘aid’ may be levied…

(13) The city of London shall enjoy all its ancient liberties and free customs, both by land and by water. We also will and grant that all other cities, boroughs, towns, and ports shall enjoy all their liberties and free customs.

(14) To obtain the general consent of the realm for the assessment of an ‘aid’ – except in the three cases specified above – or a ‘scutage’, we will cause the archbishops, bishops, abbots, earls, and greater barons to be summoned individually by letter…

(16) No man shall be forced to perform more service for a knight’s ‘fee’, or other free holding of land, than is due from it.

(17) Ordinary lawsuits shall not follow the royal court around, but shall be held in a fixed place…
(20) For a trivial offence, a free man shall be fined only in proportion to the degree of his offence, and for a serious offence correspondingly, but not so heavily as to deprive him of his livelihood. In the same way, a merchant shall be spared his merchandise, and a villein the implements of his husbandry, if they fall upon the mercy of a royal court. None of these fines shall be imposed except by the assessment on oath of reputable men of the neighbourhood.

(21) Earls and barons shall be fined only by their equals, and in proportion to the gravity of their offence.

(22) A fine imposed upon the lay property of a clerk in holy orders shall be assessed upon the same principles, without reference to the value of his ecclesiastical benefice…

(24) No sheriff, constable, coroners, or other royal officials are to hold lawsuits that should be held by the royal justices…

(30) No sheriff, royal official, or other person shall take horses or carts for transport from any free man, without his consent.

(31) Neither we nor any royal official will take wood for our castle, or for any other purpose, without the consent of the owner.

(32) We will not keep the lands of people convicted of felony in our hand for longer than a year and a day, after which they shall be returned to the lords of the ‘fees’ concerned…

(38) In future no official shall place a man on trial upon his own unsupported statement, without producing credible witnesses to the truth of it.

(39) No free man shall be seized or imprisoned, or stripped of his rights or possessions, or outlawed or exiled, or deprived of his standing in any way, nor will we proceed with force against him, or send others to do so, except by the lawful judgment of his equals or by the law of the land.

(40) To no one will we sell, to no one deny or delay right or justice…

(45) We will appoint as justices, constables, sheriffs, or other officials, only men that know the law of the realm and are minded to keep it well…

(51) As soon as peace is restored, we will remove from the kingdom all the foreign knights, bowmen, their attendants, and the mercenaries that have come to it, to its harm, with horses and arms.

(52) To any man whom we have deprived or dispossessed of lands, castles, liberties, or rights, without the lawful judgment of his equals, we will at once restore these. In cases of dispute the matter shall be resolved by the judgment of the twenty-five barons…

(55) All fines that have been given to us unjustly and against the law of the land, and all fines that we have exacted unjustly, shall be entirely remitted or the matter decided by a majority judgment of the twenty-five barons referred to below in the clause for securing the peace together with Stephen, archbishop of Canterbury, if he can be present…

(60) All these customs and liberties that we have granted shall be observed in our kingdom in so far as concerns our own relations with our subjects. Let all men of our kingdom, whether clergy or laymen, observe them similarly in their relations with their own men.

(61) SINCE WE HAVE GRANTED ALL THESE THINGS for God, for the better ordering of our kingdom, and to allay the discord that has arisen between us and our barons, and since we desire that they shall be enjoyed in their entirety, with lasting strength, for ever, we give and grant to the barons the following security:
The barons shall elect twenty-five of their number to keep, and cause to be observed with all their might, the peace and liberties granted and confirmed to them by this charter.

If we, our chief justice, our officials, or any of our servants offend in any respect against any man, or transgress any of the articles of the peace or of this security, and the offence is made known to four of the said twenty-five barons, they shall come to us – or in our absence from the kingdom to the chief justice – to declare it and claim immediate redress. If we, or in our absence abroad the chief justice, make no redress within forty days, reckoning from the day on which the offence was declared to us or to him, the four barons shall refer the matter to the rest of the twenty-five barons, who may distress upon and assail us in every way possible, with the support of the whole community of the land, by seizing our castles, lands, possessions, or anything else saving only our own person and those of the queen and our children, until they have secured such redress as they have determined upon. Having secured the redress, they may then resume their normal obedience to us…

If one of the twenty-five barons dies or leaves the country, or is prevented in any other way from discharging his duties, the rest of them shall choose another baron in his place, at their discretion, who shall be duly sworn in as they were.

In the event of disagreement among the twenty-five barons on any matter referred to them for decision, the verdict of the majority present shall have the same validity as a unanimous verdict of the whole twenty-five, whether these were all present or some of those summoned were unwilling or unable to appear.

The twenty-five barons shall swear to obey all the above articles faithfully, and shall cause them to be obeyed by others to the best of their power.

We will not seek to procure from anyone, either by our own efforts or those of a third party, anything by which any part of these concessions or liberties might be revoked or diminished. Should such a thing be procured, it shall be null and void and we will at no time make use of it, either ourselves or through a third party…

(63) IT IS ACCORDINGLY OUR WISH AND COMMAND that the English Church

shall be free, and that men in our kingdom shall have and keep all these liberties, rights, and concessions, well and peaceably in their fullness and entirety for them and their heirs, of us and our heirs, in all things and all places for ever.

Both we and the barons have sworn that all this shall be observed in good faith and without deceit. Witness the abovementioned people and many others.

Given by our hand in the meadow that is called Runnymede, between Windsor and Staines, on the fifteenth day of June in the seventeenth year of our reign.

PARLIAMENT OF ENGLAND

An Act Declaring the Rights and Liberties of the Subject and Settling the Succession of the Crown

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW

February 13, 1689
Parliament | London, England

BACKGROUND

Following a civil war, revolution, the Cromwell Protectorate, and a second, bloodless revolution, the English Parliament enacted this law in 1689.

ANNOTATIONS

An Act Declaring the Rights and Liberties of the Subject and Settling the Succession of the Crown.

Whereas the Lords Spiritual and Temporal and Commons assembled at Westminster, lawfully, fully and freely representing all the estates of the people of this realm, did upon the thirteenth day of February in the year of our Lord one thousand six hundred eighty-eight present unto their Majesties, then called and known by the names and style of William and Mary, prince and princess of Orange, being present in their proper persons, a certain declaration in writing made by the said Lords and Commons in the words following, viz.:

Whereas the late King James the Second, by the assistance of diverse evil counsellors, judges and ministers employed by him, did endeavor to subvert and extirpate the Protestant religion and the laws and liberties of this kingdom;

Copyright © 2022 Hillsdale College. All Rights Reserved.
By assuming and exercising a power of dispensing with and suspending of laws and the execution of laws without consent of Parliament…

By levying money for and to the use of the Crown by pretense of prerogative for other time and in other manner than the same was granted by Parliament;

By raising and keeping a standing army within this kingdom in time of peace without consent of Parliament, and quartering soldiers contrary to law;

By causing several good subjects being Protestants to be disarmed at the same time when papists were both armed and employed contrary to law;

By violating the freedom of election of members to serve in Parliament;

By prosecutions in the Court of King's Bench for matters and causes cognizable only in Parliament, and by diverse other arbitrary and illegal courses;

And whereas of late years partial corrupt and unqualified persons have been returned and served on juries in trials, and particularly diverse jurors in trials for high treason which were not freeholders;

And excessive bail hath been required of persons committed in criminal cases to elude the benefit of the laws made for the liberty of the subjects;

And excessive fines have been imposed;

And illegal and cruel punishments inflicted;

And several grants and promises made of fines and forfeitures before any conviction or judgment against the persons upon whom the same were to be levied;

All which are utterly and directly contrary to the known laws and statutes and freedom of this realm;
And whereas the said late King James the Second having abdicated the government and the throne being thereby vacant, his Highness the prince of Orange (whom it hath pleased Almighty God to make the glorious instrument of delivering this kingdom from popery and arbitrary power) did (by the advice of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal and diverse principal persons of the Commons) cause letters to be written to the Lords Spiritual and Temporal being Protestants, and other letters to the several counties, cities, universities, boroughs and cinque ports, for the choosing of such persons to represent them as were of right to be sent to Parliament, to meet and sit at Westminster upon the two and twentieth day of January in this year one thousand six hundred eighty and eight [old style date], in order to such an establishment as that their religion, laws and liberties might not again be in danger of being subverted, upon which letters elections having been accordingly made;

And thereupon the said Lords Spiritual and Temporal and Commons, pursuant to their respective letters and elections, being now assembled in a full and free representative of this nation, taking into their most serious consideration the best means for attaining the ends aforesaid, do in the first place (as their ancestors in like case have usually done) for the vindicating and asserting their ancient rights and liberties declare

That the pretended power of suspending the laws or the execution of laws by regal authority without consent of Parliament is illegal;

That the pretended power of dispensing with laws or the execution of laws by regal authority, as it hath been assumed and exercised of late, is illegal…

That levying money for or to the use of the Crown by pretence of prerogative, without grant of Parliament, for longer time, or in other manner than the same is or shall be granted, is illegal;

That it is the right of the subjects to petition the king, and all commitments and prosecutions for such petitioning are illegal;
That the raising or keeping a standing army within the kingdom in time of peace, unless it be with consent of Parliament, is against law;

That the subjects which are Protestants may have arms for their defense suitable to their conditions and as allowed by law;

That election of members of Parliament ought to be free;

That the freedom of speech and debates or proceedings in Parliament ought not to be impeached or questioned in any court or place out of Parliament;

That excessive bail ought not to be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted;

That jurors ought to be duly impaneled and returned, and jurors which pass upon men in trials for high treason ought to be freeholders;

That all grants and promises of fines and forfeitures of particular persons before conviction are illegal and void;

And that for redress of all grievances, and for the amending, strengthening and preserving of the laws, Parliaments ought to be held frequently.

…Having therefore an entire confidence that his said Highness the prince of Orange will perfect the deliverance so far advanced by him, and will still preserve them from the violation of their rights which they have here asserted, and from all other attempts upon their religion, rights and liberties, the said Lords Spiritual and Temporal and Commons assembled at Westminster do resolve that William and Mary, prince and princess of Orange, be and be declared king and queen of England, France and Ireland and the dominions thereunto belonging, to hold the crown and royal dignity of the said kingdoms and dominions to them, the said prince and princess, during their lives and the life of the survivor to them, and that the sole and full exercise of the regal power be only in and executed by the said prince of Orange in the names of the said prince and princess during their joint lives, and after their deceases the said crown and royal dignity of the same kingdoms and dominions to be to the heirs of the body of the said princess, and for default of such issue to the Princess Anne of Denmark and the heirs of her body, and for default of such issue to the heirs of the body of the said prince of Orange. And the Lords Spiritual and Temporal and Commons do pray the said prince and princess to accept the same accordingly...

…Now in pursuance of the premises the said Lords Spiritual and Temporal and Commons in Parliament assembled, for the ratifying, confirming and establishing the said declaration and the articles, clauses, matters and things therein contained by the force of law made in due form by authority of Parliament, do pray that it may be declared and enacted that all and singular the rights and liberties asserted and claimed in the said declaration are the true, ancient and indubitable rights and liberties of the people of this kingdom, and so shall be esteemed, allowed, adjudged, deemed and taken to be; and that all and every the particulars aforesaid shall be firmly and strictly holden and observed as they are expressed in the said declaration, and all officers and ministers whatsoever shall serve their Majesties and their successors according to the same in all time to come…And for preventing all questions and divisions in this realm by reason of any pretended titles to the crown, and for preserving a certainty in the succession thereof, in and upon which the unity, peace, tranquility and safety of this nation doth under God wholly consist and depend, the said Lords Spiritual and Temporal and Commons do beseech their Majesties that it may be enacted, established and declared, that the crown and regal government of the said kingdoms and dominions, with all and singular the premises thereunto belonging and appertaining, shall be and continue to their said Majesties and the survivor of them during their lives and the life of the survivor of them, and that the entire, perfect and full exercise of the regal power and government be only in and executed by his Majesty in the names of both their Majesties during their joint lives; and after their deceases the said crown and premises shall be and remain to the heirs of the body of her Majesty…and thereunto the said Lords Spiritual and Temporal and Commons do in the name of all the people aforesaid most humbly and faithfully submit themselves, their heirs and posterities for ever, and do faithfully promise that they will stand to, maintain and defend their said Majesties, and also the limitation and succession of the crown herein specified and contained, to the utmost of their powers with their lives and estates against all persons whatsoever that shall attempt anything to the contrary. And whereas it hath been found by experience that it is inconsistent with the safety and welfare of this Protestant kingdom to be governed by a popish prince, or by any king or queen marrying a papist, the said Lords Spiritual and Temporal and Commons do further pray that it may be enacted, that all and every person and persons that is, are or shall be reconciled to or shall hold communion with the see or Church of Rome, or shall profess the popish religion, or shall marry a papist, shall be excluded and be for ever incapable to inherit, possess or enjoy the crown and government of this realm and Ireland and the dominions thereunto belonging or any part of the same, or to have, use or exercise any regal power, authority or jurisdiction within the same…

…Provided that no charter or grant or pardon granted before the three and twentieth day of October in the year of our Lord one thousand six hundred eighty-nine shall be any ways impeached or invalidated by this Act, but that the same shall be and remain of the same force and effect in law and no other than as if this Act had never been made.
BACKGROUND

English doctor and political thinker John Locke published this work on government during the time of Glorious Revolution in England, which was read and influential among colonial leaders in the British North American colonies during the following century.

GUIDING QUESTIONS

1. Why do men form political societies according to Locke?

2. What are the two powers man possesses in the state of nature?

123. If man in the state of nature be so free, as has been said; if he be absolute lord of his own person and possessions, equal to the greatest, and subject to nobody, why will he part with his freedom? Why will he give up his empire, and subject himself to the dominion and control of any other power? To which it is obvious to answer, that though in the state of nature he hath such a right, yet the enjoyment of it is very uncertain, and constantly exposed to the invasion of others; for all being kings as much as he, every man his equal, and the greater part no strict observers of equity and justice, the enjoyment of the property he has in this state is very unsafe, very unsecure. This makes him willing to quit a condition, which, however free, is full of fears and continual dangers: and it is not without reason, that he seeks out, and is willing to join in society with others, who are already united, or have a mind to unite, for the mutual preservation of their lives, liberties, and estates, which I call by the general name, property.

124. The great and chief end, therefore, of men’s uniting into commonwealths, and putting themselves under government, is the preservation of their property. To which in the state of nature there are many things wanting. First, There wants an established, settled, known law, received and allowed by common consent to be the standard of right and wrong, and the common measure to decide all controversies between them: for though the law of nature be plain and intelligible to all rational creatures; yet men being biased by their interest, as well as ignorant for want of studying it, are not apt to allow of it as a law binding to them in the application of it to their particular cases.

125. Secondly, In the state of nature there wants a known and indifferent judge, with authority to determine all differences according to the established law: for every one in that state being both judge and executioner of the law of nature, men being partial to themselves, passion and revenge is very apt to carry them too far, and with too much heat, in their own cases; as well as negligence, and unconcernedness, to make them too remiss in other men’s.
126. Thirdly, In the state of nature there often wants power to back and support the sentence when right, and to give it due execution. They who by any injustice offend, will seldom fail, where they are able, by force to make good their injustice; such resistance many times makes the punishment dangerous, and frequently destructive, to those who attempt it.

127. Thus mankind, notwithstanding all the privileges of the state of nature, being but in an ill condition, while they remain in it, are quickly driven into society. Hence it comes to pass that we seldom find any number of men live any time together in this state. The inconveniencies that they are therein exposed to, by the irregular and uncertain exercise of the power every man has of punishing the transgressions of others, make them take sanctuary under the established laws of government, and therein seek the preservation of their property. It is this makes them so willingly give up every one his single power of punishing, to be exercised by such alone, as shall be appointed to it amongst them; and by such rules as the community, or those authorized by them to that purpose, shall agree on. And in this we have the original right of both the legislative and executive power, as well as of the governments and societies themselves.

128. For in the state of nature, to omit the liberty he has of innocent delights, a man has two powers. The first is to do whatsoever he thinks fit for the preservation of himself and others within the permission of the law of nature: by which law, common to them all, he and all the rest of mankind are one community, make up one society, distinct from all other creatures. And, were it not for the corruption and viciousness of degenerate men, there would be no need of any other; no necessity that men should separate from this great and natural community, and by positive agreements combine into smaller and divided associations. The other power a man has in the state of nature, is the power to punish the crimes committed against that law. Both these he gives up, when he joins in a private, if I may so call it, or particular politic society, and incorporates into any commonwealth, separate from the rest of mankind.
129. The first power, viz. “of doing whatsoever he thought fit for the preservation of himself,” and the rest of mankind, he gives up to be regulated by laws made by the society, so far forth as the preservation of himself and the rest of that society shall require; which laws of the society in many things confine the liberty he had by the law of nature.

130. Secondly, The power of punishing he wholly gives up, and engages his natural force, (which he might before employ in the execution of the law of nature, by his own single authority, as he thought fit) to assist the executive power of the society, as the law thereof shall require: for being now in a new state, wherein he is to enjoy many conveniencies, from the labor, assistance, and society of others in the same community, as well as protection from its whole strength; he is to part also, with as much of his natural liberty, in providing for himself, as the good, prosperity, and safety of the society shall require; which is not only necessary, but just, since the other members of the society do the like....
UNIT 2
The American Founding
1763–1789

UNIT PREVIEW

Structure

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>LESSON 1</th>
<th>1763–1776</th>
<th>Self-Government or Tyranny</th>
<th>9-10 classes</th>
<th>p. 7</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>LESSON 2</td>
<td>1776</td>
<td>The Declaration of Independence</td>
<td>4-5 classes</td>
<td>p. 14</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LESSON 3</td>
<td>1776–1783</td>
<td>The War of Independence</td>
<td>6-7 classes</td>
<td>p. 21</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LESSON 4</td>
<td>1783–1789</td>
<td>The United States Constitution</td>
<td>9-10 classes</td>
<td>p. 28</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>APPENDIX A</td>
<td>Study Guides, Tests, and Writing Assignment</td>
<td></td>
<td>p. 39</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>APPENDIX B</td>
<td>Primary Sources</td>
<td></td>
<td>p. 63</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Why Teach the American Founding

The beginning is the most important part of any endeavor, for a small change at the beginning will result in a very different end. How much truer this is of the most expansive of human endeavors: founding and sustaining a free country. The United States of America has achieved the greatest degree of freedom and prosperity for the greatest proportion of any country’s population in the history of humankind. How is it that the common American’s pursuit of happiness has resulted in such exceptional outcomes over time? This phenomenon compels mindful young Americans to seek to understand how their nation has achieved such results. And America’s youth could find no greater source of understanding than the history of their country’s founding, starting with their forefathers’ ideas, words, and deeds.
Enduring Ideas from This Unit

1. The United States is unprecedented in establishing its existence not on grounds of racial origin nor family privilege but on ideas asserted to be true of all people at all times: namely, on the equal human dignity of each person.

2. America was founded on the view that government should be controlled by the people themselves and limited to the purpose of protecting each person’s natural rights and fostering the common good.

3. Regular, ordinary Americans of everyday means sacrificed their security and very lives to defend these truths about human beings and civic life against a tyranny of the most powerful nation of its day.

4. The United States Constitution’s chief quality is that it allows the people to govern themselves with respect for the dignity of each person while both channeling and restraining the natural ambition of human beings to gain power and recognition.

5. The Constitution is a carefully wrought and considered document, and its original intent and structure should be honored both for the sake of our forebears, to whom we and the world owe our freedom and prosperity, and because the events of the last two hundred years have proven the Constitution’s remarkable achievements time and time again.

What Teachers Should Consider

The United States of America is unprecedented in many ways in the course of human history, but most significantly in the opportunity all its citizens have to pursue unmatched conditions of freedom, security, and prosperity. The country owes its unprecedented success to an unprecedented founding, a beginning forged and canonized in the Declaration of Independence, the War of Independence, and the U.S. Constitution.

And yet, never have so many Americans known so little about this founding. As for love of country, one cannot love (or even consider loving) what one does not know.

The teaching of the American founding is perhaps the most necessary series of lessons a teacher can share with his or her students if those students intend to enjoy the benefits of living in America for the duration of their lives.

With this in mind, a teacher ought to take special care to learn the history and ideas of the American founding. Ambiguity in the teacher’s own understanding, or assumptions derived from anywhere but careful scholarship and a deep reading of America’s founding documents, will leave him or her unprepared to help students understand this history accurately.

The teacher might best open the unit with lessons aimed at understanding why the colonists declared independence in the first place. It was not to avoid paying taxes or about wanting to preserve slavery. (These are misconceptions at best, distortions at worst.) It was to choose—between liberty under self-government and servitude under tyranny. Class may proceed at a brisk pace through the years 1763–1776, touching on the many acts of the British and respective colonial responses to those acts. Spend time on the conflicts and battles; students should chart the gradual shift in public sentiment toward independence.
The Declaration of Independence itself deserves careful study. Such lessons may begin with stories of the writing of the Declaration. Students should read the whole document, and teachers can foster extensive conversations about what it says, what it means, and why it says it. The majority of the conversation should dwell on the first, second, and final paragraphs of the Declaration. Understanding what is meant by those words is pivotal to understanding American history, what makes America an exceptional nation, and the responsibilities every American citizen has. The list of grievances should be discussed in light of the previous history that led to the Declaration.

The American War of Independence should be taught so as to fill the moral imaginations of students with images of the heroic characters and actions of its American participants. Strategy, battles, and the general arc of the war should be taught in detail, punctuated with accounts of the key moments and figures who contributed to America’s ultimate victory. The ideas for which the War of Independence was fought are matched in the American memory only by the stories of those who fought for them.

When teaching the aftermath of the War of Independence up to the Constitutional Convention, teachers should make clear that America’s foray into governing itself entirely independent of Great Britain initially trended toward abject failure. The Articles of Confederation ordered public affairs in a reactionary rather than prudent manner. Students should understand that the Constitutional Convention, in many respects, saved the country from another sort of tyranny: majority tyranny.

Finally, the Constitutional Convention and the Constitution itself should be studied in tandem and in detail. A major aid in doing so is to read selections of the Federalist Papers. Students should consider carefully both the structure of the Constitution and the Framers’ intentions in so constructing it. Students should understand that nothing in the Constitution was haphazardly decided. Given the unprecedented long-term success of the Constitution, students should appreciate that any changes to the Constitution warrant careful and complete understanding of why the Framers crafted it the way they did, as explained in their own words.

How Teachers Can Learn More

TEXTS

The Glorious Cause, Robert Middlekauff
We Still Hold These Truths, Matthew Spalding
The Political Theory of the American Founding, Thomas West
The Constitutional Convention, James Madison
African Founders, David Hackett Fischer
No Property in Man, Sean Wilentz
The American Heritage: A Reader, ed. Hillsdale College History Faculty
The U.S. Constitution: A Reader, ed. Hillsdale College Politics Faculty (ConstitutionReader.com)
ONLINE COURSES | Online.Hillsdale.edu

The Great American Story
Civil Rights in American History
Introduction to the Constitution
Constitution 101
The Federalist Paper
Lesson Planning Resources

TEACHER RESOURCES

- Land of Hope, Wilfred McClay
- The Story of the Thirteen Colonies and the Great Republic, H.A. Guerber
- A Short History of the American Revolution, James Stokesbury

STUDENT RESOURCES

- Land of Hope Young Reader’s Edition, Wilfred McClay

PRIMARY SOURCES

- “Give Me Liberty or Give Me Death!,” Patrick Henry
- Common Sense, Thomas Paine
- Declaration of Independence, Draft
- Declaration of Independence
- Resignation Speech, George Washington
- The United States Constitution
- The Bill of Rights
LESSON PLANS, ASSIGNMENTS, AND FORMATIVE QUIZZES
Lesson 1 — Self-Government or Tyranny

LESSON OBJECTIVE

Students learn how new British exertions of authority over the colonists led to the Declaration of Independence.

TEACHER PREPARATION

Create a note outline based on the following:

Student Texts
- Land of Hope Young Reader's Edition Chapter 5
- Primary Sources See below.

Teacher Texts
- Land of Hope Pages 42–48
- The Story of the Thirteen Colonies and the Great Republic Pages 68–80
- A Teacher's Guide to Land of Hope Pages 29–43

Online.Hillsdale.edu
- The Great American Story Lecture 3

STUDENT PREPARATION

Assignment 1: Students read Land of Hope Young Reader’s Edition, chapter 5, and prepare for a reading quiz (provided below).

Assignment 2: Students read and annotate excerpts from Paine’s Common Sense and answer guiding reading questions (provided in appendix).

CORE CONTENT IN THIS LESSON

Geography & Places
- Boston
- Philadelphia
- Independence Hall
- Lexington and Concord
- Fort Ticonderoga

Persons
- George III
- Charles Townshend
- George Washington
- John Hancock
- Crispus Attucks
- Paul Revere
- Samuel Adams
- Benjamin Franklin
Patrick Henry  Ethan Allen
John Adams  Thomas Paine
Abigail Adams  Thomas Jefferson

Terms and Topics
- salutary neglect
- self–government
- representation
- consent
- French and Indian War
- Proclamation of 1763
- Stamp Act
- Sons of Liberty
- mob
- tar and feather
- Declaratory Act
- Townshend Acts
- non–importation agreements
- Boston Massacre
- Committees of Correspondence
- Boston Tea Party
- Intolerable Acts
- First Continental Congress
- Minutemen
- Battles of Lexington & Concord
- Siege of Fort Ticonderoga
- Second Continental Congress
- Continental Army
- Battle of Bunker Hill
- Olive Branch Petition
- Liberation of Boston

Primary Sources
- “Give Me Liberty or Give Me Death!,” Patrick Henry
- Common Sense, Thomas Paine

To Know by Heart
- “Appeal to Heaven”
- “Don’t Tread On Me”
- “Join or Die”
- “Give me liberty or give me death!” — Patrick Henry
- “The shot heard round the world.”
- “Don’t fire till you see the whites of their eyes!” — Israel Putnam, William Prescott, or legend

Timeline
- 1754–1763  French and Indian War
- 1763  Proclamation Line
- 1770  Boston Massacre
- 1773  Boston Tea Party
- 1774  Intolerable Acts
- 1775  Lexington and Concord, Ticonderoga, Bunker Hill
- July 4, 1776  Declaration of Independence signed

Images
- Historical figures and events
- Revolutionary era flags
- Non–importation agreement example
- Paul Revere’s Engraving of Boston Harbor under occupation

Copyright © 2022 Hillsdale College. All Rights Reserved.
Paul Revere’s Engraving of the Boston Massacre
Independence Hall (exterior and interior)
Battle maps and battle scene depictions
Uniforms and arms of the Minutemen, the Continental Army soldiers, and the Redcoats
Medical equipment

STORIES FOR THE AMERICAN HEART

- Biographies and the roles of George Washington, Benjamin Franklin, John Adams, Samuel Adams, Patrick Henry, Thomas Paine, and Thomas Jefferson up through 1776
- Boston Massacre
- John Adams fair-mindedly representing the British soldiers after the Boston Massacre
- Boston Tea Party
- Patrick Henry’s “Give me liberty or give me death!” speech
- Paul Revere’s Ride
- Minutemen at the Battles of Lexington and Concord
- Ethan Allen, Henry Knox, and the Green Mountain Boys capturing the guns from Fort Ticonderoga
- Letters of John and Abigail Adams
- John Adams’s nomination of George Washington to command the Continental Army
- Battle of Bunker Hill
- Liberation of Boston
- John Adams’s nomination of Thomas Jefferson to draft the Declaration of Independence

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

- Why had the colonies been mostly left to their own devices? Why was this “neglect” “salutary”?
- How did the British situation following the French and Indian War lead the British to exert more authority over the colonists?
- In what ways did the British begin to exert control over the colonists without their consent?
- What did the Proclamation Act of 1763 attempt to do? What change did it reveal in the relationship between Parliament and the colonists? How did the colonists respond?
- To what extent were Americans justified in claiming the rights of Englishmen?
- What did the Stamp Act do? Why did this act in particular undermine the principle of self-government and consent? How did the colonists respond?
- What is self-government? In what ways was the colonists’ freedom to govern themselves threatened and curtailed by the British between 1763 and 1776?
- What is the relationship between this question of representative self-government and that of liberty and tyranny?
- What were the two oftentimes competing approaches the colonists took to addressing Parliament’s actions?
- How did the Boston Massacre change public opinion among the colonists? How did John Adams successfully preserve the rule of law?
- Why did Parliament pass the Intolerable Acts? What did they do (5 actions)?
- How did the Continental Congress respond to the Coercive (Intolerable) Acts?
• Was war inevitable? Was independence?
• In what ways did Thomas Paine’s Common Sense influence public opinion?
• What actions by the British in the spring of 1776 prompted Richard Henry Lee of Virginia to introduce a motion for independence?
• To what extent was the American Revolution not made but prevented? To what extent was it revolutionary?
• Questions from the U.S. Civics Test:
  - Question 77: Name one reason why the Americans declared independence from Britain.
  - Question 85: Benjamin Franklin is famous for many things. Name one.
  - Question 86: George Washington is famous for many things. Name one.

Keys to the Lesson

For more than 150 years, the British colonists of North America rarely quarreled with their countrymen on the other side of the Atlantic. Then in 1763, the British began to claim new control over the colonists. What followed were thirteen years of increased tension and sometimes violent clashes leading to outright war in 1775 and, in 1776, the declaring of independence by the colonists and the formation of a new country separate from British power. This decade and a half gave birth to the nation each American citizen calls home. It is imperative that American students know the people, actions, and stories that led to the founding of their country. The chief aim of teaching these fourteen years, therefore, is to help students to understand the actions by both Great Britain and the colonists that compelled the Americans to such a separation and to found a new, unprecedented kind of country.

Teachers might best plan and teach Self-Government or Tyranny with emphasis on the following approaches:

• Have students consider the issues the British in North America faced following the French and Indian War (in Europe, the Seven Years’ War), namely, the risk of further conflict (and associated costs) with Native Americans as colonists moved westward, and the massive debt that Great Britain had accumulated in the late war.
• Show how Great Britain’s attempted solutions to these problems (prohibiting colonial expansion and the sudden enforcement of lax tax laws) marked the first shift in the relationship between Great Britain and the colonists and heralded the end of the period of “salutary neglect,” during which American colonists had grown accustomed to practicing self-government.
• Help students see the pattern that this initial shift would grow into: attempts by the British (Parliament and, to a certain extent, King George III) to exert more control, alternating with American resistance to what they argued were infringements on their rights as Englishmen.
• Teach about each of the British acts: what they were, why they were passed, how the colonists resisted, and what happened next as a consequence.
• Consider at length that self-government, or representative self-government, was at the heart of the issue. Emphasize that this was not merely a nice-sounding phrase. Instead, the colonists gradually came to recognize the following as a question of liberty or tyranny: whether they were self-governed through their elected representatives or were dictated to and controlled by a distant government in which they had no consent. Make clear that this was the question: not merely whether the colonists would have representation in Parliament (it was impractical) nor whether they had to pay taxes, but whether or not people must be controlled by the will of others in government without their free consent.

- Explain how the Americans organized themselves to engage with and resist the British, a capacity born of decades of practice in self-government and a trait of American citizens for subsequent generations. In due course, the Boston Massacre impressed on public opinion the British position’s semblance to tyranny.

- Emphasize for students how there were often two competing approaches to responding to British actions: one that attempted deliberation and petition, and another that resorted to destruction of property and even tarring and feathering. In the end, the former approach prevailed, resorting to arms only as necessary to defend their assertion of rights, self-government, and liberty.

- Highlight that it was the Boston Tea Party, however, that brought issues to a head, prompting the British to respond to various actions in Massachusetts with the Intolerable Acts. Help students to consider that in five separate, odious ways, these acts show how preventing a people from governing themselves in even something as simple as a tax on paper and tea can lead to tyranny if not effectively recognized and resisted.

- Spend time illustrating how it was really across 1774–75, in response to the execution of the Intolerable Acts, that specific Founding Fathers marshaled their talents and ideas, eventually leading to declaring independence and forming a new nation by summer 1776.

- Read aloud with students Patrick Henry’s “Give Me Liberty or Give Me Death!” Speech.

- Teach in some detail the open armed conflicts at Lexington and Concord, Fort Ticonderoga, and Bunker Hill. Students should learn how these battles bolstered the patriot cause and transformed public opinion in these final two years of British rule.

- Have students read as a preparatory homework assignment excerpts from Thomas Paine’s Common Sense. In class, have a seminar conversation on the text. Target questions at helping students to see how and why Paine’s pamphlet proved decisive in shifting public opinion at the start of 1776. Questions on pages 42–43 of A Teacher’s Guide to Land of Hope may be helpful.

- Finally, emphasize how the news in the spring of 1776—that the British had hired German mercenary soldiers to deploy against British-Americans, and were now selectively encouraging slave rebellions in the colonies, while the Continental Congress recommended that the colonies begin forming their own governments—were key factors in moving a majority of the state delegates at the Second Continental Congress to commission a committee to draft a potential declaration of independence.

Strengthening Understanding: Post-Lesson Assignments

Assignment 1: Explain the key questions and moments between 1763 and 1776 that led the colonists to declare independence (2–3 paragraphs).

Assignment 2: Explain how the Americans believed they were preserving self-government against British tyranny (1–2 paragraphs).
Reading Quiz

The American Founding | Lesson 1
Land of Hope Young Reader’s Edition, Chapter 5

DIRECTIONS: Answer each question.

1. What mountain range did the Royal Proclamation of 1763 attempt to prevent the colonists from crossing?

2. To whom did the Quartering Act force the colonial legislatures to provide lodging and food?

3. What did the Declaratory Act declare about Parliament’s authority over the colonists?

4. What did a group of colonists dump into Boston Harbor in 1773 that resulted in a tyrannical retaliation by the British?

5. Name one of the battles you read about that occurred prior to the Declaration of Independence?
DIRECTIONS: Answer each question in at least one complete sentence.

1. Why had the colonies been mostly left to their own devices? Why was this “neglect” “salutary”?

2. What did the Stamp Act do? Why did this act in particular undermine the principle of self-government and consent?

4. In which ways did Thomas Paine’s Common Sense influence public opinion?

5. Which actions by the British in the spring of 1776 prompted Richard Henry Lee of Virginia to introduce a motion for independence?
Lesson 2 – The Declaration of Independence

LESSON OBJECTIVE

Students learn about the movement in favor of independence and about the drafting and signing of the Declaration of Independence. They also read the Declaration of Independence and engage in a seminar conversation about its contents and ideas.

TEACHER PREPARATION

Create a note outline based on the following:

Student Texts

- Land of Hope Young Reader's Edition  Chapter 5
- Primary Sources  See below.

Teacher Texts

- Land of Hope  Pages 48–51
- The Story of the Thirteen Colonies and the Great Republic  Pages 81–82

Online.Hillsdale.edu

- The Great American Story  Lecture 3
- Introduction to the Constitution  Lectures 1, 2, 3
- Constitution 101  Lecture 2
- Civil Rights in American History  Lectures 1, 2, 3

STUDENT PREPARATION

Assignment 1: Students read and annotate the Declaration of Independence and answer guiding reading questions (provided in appendix).

CORE CONTENT IN THIS LESSON

Geography & Places

- Philadelphia
- Independence Hall

Persons

- Benjamin Franklin
- Thomas Jefferson
- John Adams
Terms and Topics

Laws of Nature and of Nature’s God
self-evident
natural rights
equality
unalienable liberty license
consent of the governed list of grievances
slavery
self-government
representation
Liberty Bell
pursuit of happiness

Primary Sources

Declaration of Independence, First Draft
Declaration of Independence

To Know by Heart

First two paragraphs of the Declaration of Independence

“And for the support of this Declaration, with a firm reliance on the protection of divine Providence, we mutually pledge to each other our Lives, our Fortunes and our sacred Honor.” — Final sentence of the Declaration of Independence

Timeline

July 2, 1776
Second Continental Congress votes for independence
July 4, 1776
Declaration of Independence signed

Images

Thomas Jefferson, Benjamin Franklin, and John Adams
Independence Hall (exterior and interior)
Photos or facsimiles of original Declaration of Independence
National Archives Building and Rotunda
Jefferson Memorial
Statue of Thomas Jefferson (Hillsdale College campus)

Stories for the American Heart

- The first public reading of the Declaration of Independence at the State House Yard, the tolling of the Liberty Bell, and the removal of the royal coat of arms

Questions for the American Mind

- What were the various audiences that the Declaration of Independence sought to address?
- In its opening lines, what is the Declaration claiming to be doing and what does it want its audience to do in response?
- What are “the Laws of Nature and of Nature’s God”?
- What is a “self-evident” truth?
What does it mean that “all men are created equal”?
What is a right?
According to the Declaration of Independence, from where do natural rights come?
What does it mean to say that men are “endowed by their creator” with the rights?
What does “unalienable” mean?
What is liberty according to the Founders? How is it distinct from license?
Why did Jefferson use “the pursuit of happiness” instead of “property”?
What is the purpose of government?
From where does government derive its just powers?
What are the people free—and even obligated—to do if the government fails or violates its purpose?
Ought it to be easy or frequent for a people to overthrow and replace its government? If not, under which circumstances may they do so?
In which ways did Benjamin Franklin, John Adams, and the Second Continental Congress alter Thomas Jefferson’s first draft of the Declaration of Independence? What were the reasons for these various changes?
Why did Thomas Jefferson’s first draft of the Declaration of Independence include condemnations of King George for perpetuating the Atlantic slave trade?
Why did northern delegates, who were opposed to slavery and wanted it abolished, believe that compromising with southern delegates by omitting the issue of slavery from the Declaration’s list of grievances would be more likely to lead to the abolition of slavery than splitting with the southern colonies over the issue in 1776?
How does the fact that America was founded with the words of the Declaration of Independence make America the exception in the history of nations, even exceptional?
America is a country whose existence and purpose for existing rests on belief in and commitment to certain ideas its Founders asserted to be objectively true. What are these truths?
Questions from the U.S. Civics Test:
  - Question 8: Why is the Declaration of Independence important?
  - Question 9: What founding document said the American colonies were free from Britain?
  - Question 10: Name two important ideas from the Declaration of Independence and the U.S. Constitution.
  - Question 11: The words “Life, Liberty, and the pursuit of Happiness” are in what founding document?
  - Question 75: What group of people was taken and sold as slaves?
  - Question 77: Name one reason why the Americans declared independence from Britain.
  - Question 78: Who wrote the Declaration of Independence?
  - Question 79: When was the Declaration of Independence adopted?
  - Question 81: There were 13 original states. Name five.
  - Question 85: Benjamin Franklin is famous for many things. Name one.
  - Question 87: Thomas Jefferson is famous for many things. Name one.
  - Question 125: What is Independence Day?
  - Question 126: Name three national U.S. holidays.
KEYS TO THE LESSON

The Declaration of Independence was not merely a renunciation of dependence on Great Britain. It was, in fact, generative. It created an entity—a nation—that stood on its own, had its own existence, and was independent of other nations. Even today, it offers guiding principles that continue to shape our arguments about the nature and limits of political authority. In brief, the Declaration of Independence created and still defines the United States of America.

Like an organizational mission statement, the Declaration is an indication of the Founders’ intention, a guiding star for our political life, and a benchmark for measuring our public institutions. Americans should consider all questions concerning the public sphere in light of the truths asserted in the Declaration. The Declaration of Independence should be both the beginning and end for students’ understanding of their country, their citizenship, and the benefits and responsibilities of being an American.

Referring questions of our common life to the Declaration of Independence does not mean that Americans should be forced or manipulated to believe the ideas of the Declaration to be true. But this unit asks students at least to consider whether the Declaration’s claims are true. Indeed, Thomas Jefferson and the delegates at the Second Continental Congress addressed the Declaration of Independence not only to Americans in 1776 but also to the critical judgment of American students in the 21st Century, for, as they stated, “a decent respect to the opinions of mankind requires that they should declare the causes which impel them to the separation” [emphasis added]. The last ing claim of the Declaration is that there are certain truths about all men having unalienable rights. As a historical matter, as well, students should think seriously about how the American founding—and the continuation of the American experiment—has succeeded or failed against its stated objectives.

Students should take it upon themselves to study and consider seriously the Declaration of Independence as the foundation and even the heart of their country’s existence. While a more extensive study of the Declaration should occur in a separate government class, including consideration of the thinkers who influenced the Founders, the historical treatment of the American Revolution deserves several class periods of conversation on the text of the Declaration.

Teachers might best plan and teach the Declaration of Independence with emphasis on the following approaches:

- Help students to see that the Founders intended to speak to them, to posit truths for their consideration and ultimate judgment. “[A] decent respect to the opinions of mankind” means that the Declaration was not merely intended as an argument about the unique situation of the colonists in 1776; the Founders submitted their claims to the judgment of all people in all times because they were asserting truths about all people in all times. This especially includes future Americans and, in this case, American students.
- Lead students through a complete reading of the Declaration of Independence in the course of a seminar conversation. Pause frequently to ask students questions on the various parts of the text, especially the first two paragraphs. Questions on pages 47–52 of A Teacher’s Guide to Land of Hope may be helpful.
Help students to consider that the Founders are making assertions of the existence of objective truth by referencing “the Laws of Nature and of Nature’s God” and by describing the truths as “self-evident.” This abides by the first law of logic, that of contradiction, which is the basis of all reasoning and of our capacity to make sense of reality: i.e., that something cannot both be and not be at the same time in the same way. The use of the words “the Laws of Nature and of Nature’s God” ties truth to an external reality (nature) with fixed and reliable features (laws). “Self-evident” ties truth to fixed definitions—a “self-evident” claim is one that is true by definition of the idea in question, like the claim that a triangle has three sides. A “self-evident” truth is not merely a matter of perspective; it can be known and understood by anyone at any time.

Note that for the Founders, the “Laws…of Nature’s God” implied that this understanding of nature was consistent with the Christian tradition within which the American founding occurred. Other references to divine sources of truth in the Declaration include that men are “endowed by their Creator” and its appeals to “the Supreme Judge of the world” and to “the protection of divine Providence.”

Ask students what the Declaration means by “all men are created equal.” For one thing, “men” means human being not males as opposed to females. Based on the totality of their writings available, the principal authors of the Declaration meant that men and women share equally in human dignity and in possession of natural rights or freedoms that are simply part of being human. A consistent application of equality would make slavery impossible—and the Second Continental Congress could scarcely have missed this point. This meaning of equality did not suggest equality in talent, property, or other accidentals to one’s humanity, qualities that are unique to a particular person and circumstance.

Note that the mere articulation that all men are created equal was revolutionary. Compared to the degree and universality of equality we take for granted today, such a statement and contemporary limits on the principle in practice leave the Founders open to much potential criticism. For example, in general, women, men without land, and African Americans were not able to vote. But the mere fact that most men were able to vote was a significant departure from what was normal in the rest of the world. And even though civil equality was not universal, the statement about inherent and equal dignity of all people was unheard of at the time. Many Founders believed (and the centuries since have proven them correct) that this founding principle would allow for ever greater realizations of equality through history. In brief, were it not for the Founders’ assertion of human equality, albeit imperfectly put into practice, the kind of equality we are used to today likely would never have arisen, or certainly not from American shores.

Ask students what the Declaration states to be the purpose of government. Students should understand the Declaration’s argument that government is created to secure the natural rights of each person.

Ask students about the source of a government’s power. The Declaration explains that government power comes from the free consent of the people. Students should also consider the Declaration’s argument that people do not receive their rights from government, nor do they surrender their fundamental rights to it. Instead, the rights to “life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness” are natural—they are inherent in being human—and government is delegated power by the sovereign people to secure their rights and pursue the common good. Rather than surrendering their rights to government, people create government to protect their rights. The Declaration describes these rights as “unalienable,” meaning that they cannot be relinquished or taken away, though they may be forfeited when a person violates the rights of another person, (e.g., the penalty for taking someone else’s life or liberty might be to lose your own life or liberty).

- Help students to understand what is meant by self-government: legitimate government exists to secure rights and derives its “just powers from the consent of the governed,” that is, from the citizen body. The fundamental purpose of government is clear and its powers are limited. As a result, and by design, the people have the liberty to govern themselves in most aspects of their daily lives.

- Read the list of grievances and ask students to connect each grievance to the historical events they studied in the previous lesson. Then ask students to explain how those events violate the statements made in the first two paragraphs of the Declaration.

- Provide students with a copy of the first draft of the Declaration of Independence that tracks the edits made by the Second Continental Congress. Ask students why specific changes were made. Spend time especially with the sections that addressed slavery and were removed.

- When discussing compromises between the principled claims of the Declaration and the brutal matter of slavery, be mindful of the following:
  - Slavery was one of the few matters of disagreement among the colonial revolutionaries in their otherwise generally united challenge to England. Those who opposed slavery as well as those who favored it agreed about the growing threat of British tyranny.
  - Many of the American Founders, especially those from northern colonies, strongly opposed slavery but nevertheless accepted a temporary compromise on the issue, believing that an independent and united country would provide the best prospect for actually abolishing slavery. Without unity between northern and southern colonies, either the colonists would have lost the war, in which case slavery would simply be continued by Great Britain, or the southern colonies would have formed their own separate country, in which case the North would have no power over the South to abolish slavery. The key for the American Founders, especially those who opposed slavery, would be to continue efforts against slavery as a united country—united around the principles of the Declaration of Independence.
  - The idea that a country can be founded on a principle—rather than merely on claims of territory, tribe, or military power—is uniquely American. America’s founding principle that “all men are created equal and that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights” was unprecedented. Almost all recognized that the statement of the principles, despite a compromise that allowed for the pre-existing institution’s continuing existence, undermined the legitimacy of slavery.
  - Many northern Founders and even some slaveholding Founders recognized the hypocrisy of claiming the principle of equality in spite of the continuing institution of slavery. Nevertheless, some southern Founders did not believe this phrase to be true for slaves and therefore did not believe it was hypocritical.
  - Many have understood the principle of equality as the enduring object or goal of American political life, with each generation seeking further to expand the conditions of political equality. This was the view of many Founders, as well as of Abraham Lincoln, abolitionists like Frederick Douglass, and civil rights leaders like Martin Luther King Jr., who called the Declaration a “promissory note to which every American was to fall heir” in his 1963 “I Have a Dream” speech.
Slavery and the subsequent inequality and violations of the rights of the descendants of slaves, as well as of women and certain immigrants, are glaring ways in which the country has fallen short of its founding idea.

The Declaration’s principle of equality—and the persistence and bravery of Americans of all origins to sacrifice and even die insisting that the nation should live up to the principle—has led to unprecedented achievements of human equality and the protection of equal rights.

STRENGTHENING UNDERSTANDING: POST-LESSON ASSIGNMENTS

Assignment 1: Explain the meaning of key lines, phrases, and ideas in the first two paragraphs of the Declaration of Independence (1–2 paragraphs).

Assignment 2: Recite by heart the first two paragraphs and the final paragraph of the Declaration of Independence.

Assignment 3: Explain why the Americans believed they had more than “light and transient” causes to justify their revolution (1–2 paragraphs).
Lesson 3 — The War of Independence

1776–1783

6–7 classes

LESSON OBJECTIVE

Students learn about the major figures, common soldiers, strategy, and specific battles of the American War of Independence.

TEACHER PREPARATION

Create a note outline based on the following:

Student Text

- Land of Hope Young Reader’s Edition Chapter 6
- Primary Sources See below.

Teacher Texts

- Land of Hope Pages 52–58
- The Story of the Thirteen Colonies and the Great Republic Pages 83–102
- A Short History of the American Revolution As helpful
- A Teacher’s Guide to Land of Hope Pages 63–68

Online.Hillsdale.edu

- The Great American Story Lecture 4

STUDENT PREPARATION

Assignment 1: Students read Land of Hope Young Reader’s Edition, chapter 6, and prepare for a reading quiz (provided below).

CORE CONTENT IN THIS LESSON

Geography & Places

- Delaware River
- Saratoga
- Fort West Point
- Valley Forge
- Yorktown

Persons

- George Washington
- Phillis Wheatley
- John Adams
- Abigail Adams
- Ethan Allen
- Henry Knox
- John Paul Jones
- Horatio Gates
- Marquis de Lafayette
- Tadeusz Kościuszko
Baron von Steuben
Nathanael Greene
Benedict Arnold

John Burgoyne
Charles Cornwallis
Alexander Hamilton

Terms and Topics
Patriot/Revolutionary
Tory/Loyalist
Articles of Confederation
Continental Army
privateer
Brown Bess Musket
volley Battle of New York mercenary
Hessians
Crossing of the Delaware

Battle of Trenton
Betsy Ross Flag
Yankee Doodle
Battle of Saratoga
guerrilla warfare
French Treaty of Alliance
Battle of Yorktown
Newburgh Conspiracy
American Cincinnatus
Treaty of Paris

Primary Sources
Resignation Speech, George Washington
“Liberty and Peace,” Phillis Wheatley

To Know by Heart
“These are the times that try men’s souls.” — Thomas Paine, The Crisis
Yankee-Doodle, first stanza

Timeline
(1775) 1776–1783 War of Independence
July 4, 1776 Declaration of Independence signed
Christmas, 1776 Battle of Trenton
1777 Battle of Saratoga
1777–78 Winter Quarters at Valley Forge
1781 (Fall) Battle of Yorktown; Cornwallis Surrenders
1783 Treaty of Paris

Images
Historical figures
Landscape pictures of geographic places featured in this lesson
Depictions of figures at various scenes, moments, and in battle
"Washington Crossing the Delaware" painting
Betsy Ross Flag and other flags
Maps: overall strategies, specific battles
Relevant forts
Medical equipment
Reenactment photos
Washington Monument
Statue of George Washington (Hillsdale College campus)
Images and uniforms of British and American officers and soldiers

STORIES FOR THE AMERICAN HEART

- The fates of the signers of the Declaration of Independence
- David Bushnell’s submarine attack
- Maryland 400 and the Battle of Brooklyn
- Retreat from Manhattan
- Washington’s Crossing of the Delaware
- The American farmers joining the Battle of Saratoga
- Washington encouraging his men at Valley Forge
- Stories of Margaret Corbin, Molly Pitcher, Abigail Adams, and Martha Washington during the war
- Washington on horseback at the Battle of Monmouth
- The playing of the “World Turned Upside Down” after Yorktown (possibly legend)
- Washington’s dismissal of the Newburgh Conspiracy
- George III’s comments on Washington resigning his command (possibly legend)
- Washington’s resignation

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

- What were the advantages and disadvantages that the Americans and British each faced at the outset of the war?
- What was the style of warfare in the War of Independence, including battlefield strategy, weapons, ammunition, medical care, etc.?
- What were the overall strategies that each side pursued in the course of the war?
- What were the major contributions and moments in George Washington’s generalship during the war?
- How did each of the following battles begin, what happened in them, and what was their significance: Bunker Hill, Trenton, and Yorktown?
- Why was the situation so dire in winter 1776?
- Why was the Battle of Saratoga so significant? What did the Americans gain from its newfound ally?
- What happened at Valley Forge over the winter of 1777–78?
- What important contribution did Baron von Steuben make to the Continental Army?
- What were the most significant moments in the War of Independence?
- What factors, figures, moments, etc., led the Americans to victory?
- What were the terms of the Treaty of Paris?
- Why were soldiers on the verge of mutiny in 1783? How did George Washington resolve the crisis?
- Questions from the U.S. Civics Test:
  - Question 76: What war did the Americans fight to win independence from Britain?
  - Question 80: The American Revolution had many important events. Name one.
  - Question 86: George Washington is famous for many things. Name one.
  - Question 89: Alexander Hamilton is famous for many things. Name one.
  - Question 121: Why does the flag have 13 stripes?
Question 122: Why does the flag have 50 stars?

Question 124: The Nation’s first motto was “E Pluribus Unum.” What does that mean?

KEYS TO THE LESSON

The American Revolution was truly a “David and Goliath” clash: a fledging strand of remote colonies loosely cooperating as one through a continental, mostly citizen army, fought and won independence from the greatest military power in the world. Students should appreciate this about the war of their forefathers. They should also know key stories of the heroic actions of the leaders and the many common folk in that struggle, understand the strategies employed in general and in specific battles, and consider the key moments and factors that led the Americans to victory.

Teachers might best plan and teach the War of Independence with emphasis on the following approaches:

- Discuss how the new states organized themselves in the Articles of Confederation. Students do not need to know the inner workings of this first constitution, as they will learn more about it in the next lesson. Students should understand, however, the general contours of power and how it operated. They should also understand the ways in which many of its weaknesses were intentional, weaknesses that would manifest themselves as serious problems at various points during the war.
- Ask students to identify and compare the various advantages and disadvantages of each side at the outset of the war and how these shifted over the years. Having students take simple notes as a “T-Chart” can be effective for this part of the lesson.
- Introduce students to the contemporary style of warfare by using images, maps, and artifacts. This approach will provide a foundation for their subsequent study of battles, help them to understand what happens in battle, and allow them to appreciate the bravery of soldiers fighting on both sides.
- Help students to empathize with the common Continental Army soldier and perceive the risk facing all the colonists, especially the leaders. Conditions were truly awful at many points in the war. The prospect of imminent defeat and the dire consequences for all involved weighed heavily upon the colonists throughout the war. The leaders—the men we now consider the American Founders—would most certainly have been shot or hanged if they were captured or the war was lost. In spite of the risks, they risked everything and sacrificed much for the cause of freedom and self-government. Students should appreciate the great debt we owe them.
- Explain each side’s strategy at various stages of the war and the tactics and battle plans employed in specific battles.
- Teach major battles in detail. Students should understand how the battles came to be, the key stories, factors, and moments from the battles themselves, and the significance of their various outcomes on subsequent events. Employ battle maps often. A Short History of the American Revolution is a great aid for teaching these battles; students may enjoy reading select accounts of these battles from this work, too.
- As with any conflict, draw attention to the key contributions of both leaders and common soldiers in the war. George Washington should be especially considered, not so much in his battle tactics as in his overall strategy for the war and his stirring leadership of his soldiers. Read aloud
Washington’s resignation speech, presenting it as vividly as possible and helping students appreciate the significance of Washington’s character and example.

- Explain how the principles of the Declaration of Independence were already effecting change among the Americans even prior to the resolution of the war. By the end of the war, every northern state except for New York and New Jersey had explicitly outlawed slavery, and some New England colonies had allowed African Americans to vote. Students should also learn of the outsized contributions of African American soldiers in the war, with five thousand serving in the Continental Army over the course of the war and, by some accounts, African Americans composing nearly a quarter of the American forces at Yorktown.

STRENGTHENING UNDERSTANDING: POST-LESSON ASSIGNMENTS

Assignment 1: Explain the reasons why the Americans won the War of Independence (1–2 paragraphs).

Assignment 2: Retell the history of the War of Independence (2–3 paragraphs).
Reading Quiz

DIRECTIONS: Answer each question.

1. What was one disadvantage that the United States had in the Revolutionary War?

2. What was one advantage that the United States had in the Revolutionary War?

3. Who was the general of the Continental Army?

4. Which country allied with the Americans following the Battle of Saratoga?

5. What was the final major battle of the war in which the Americans defeated the British and General Charles Cornwallis surrendered?
Unit 2 — Formative Quiz 2

Covering Lesson 3
10-15 minutes

DIRECTIONS: Answer each question in at least one complete sentence.

1. What were the overall strategies that each side pursued in the course of the war?

2. Why was the situation so dire in winter 1776?

3. What happened at Valley Forge over the winter of 1777–78?

4. What important contribution did Baron von Steuben make to the Continental Army?

5. What were the terms of the Treaty of Paris?
Lesson 4 — The United States Constitution

LESSON OBJECTIVE

Students learn about the drafting of the Constitution, the debates within the Constitutional Convention and its ratification by the states, the political thought undergirding the Constitution, and the basic structure and powers of the federal government.

TEACHER PREPARATION

Create a note outline based on the following:

Student Texts
- Land of Hope Young Reader’s Edition
- Primary Sources

Teacher Texts
- Land of Hope
- The Story of the Thirteen Colonies and the Great Republic
- A Teacher’s Guide to Land of Hope

Online.Hillsdale.edu
- The Great American Story
- Constitution 101
- Civil Rights in American History
- The Federalist Papers

STUDENT PREPARATION

Assignment 1: Students read Land of Hope Young Reader’s Edition, chapter 7, and prepare for a reading quiz (provided below).

Assignment 2: Students read Land of Hope Young Reader’s Edition, chapter 8, and prepare for a reading quiz (provided below).

CORE CONTENT IN THIS LESSON

Geography & Places
- Northwest Territory
- Independence Hall
- Philadelphia
Persons
James Madison
Gouvernour Morris
James Wilson
George Washington

Alexander Hamilton
John Jay
Publius
Benjamin Banneker

Terms and Topics
Articles of Confederation
Land Ordinance of 1785
township
debt cancellation laws
Shays’ Rebellion
Northwest Ordinance
Constitutional Convention
Father of the Constitution
Constitution
natural rights
equality
consent of the governed
self–government
faction
majority tyranny ambition
representation
republicanism extended sphere
federalism
limited government
enumerated powers
separation of powers
checks and balances
Virginia Plan
New Jersey Plan
Great Compromise
Three–Fifths Clause
legislative power
Congress

bicameralism
House of Representatives
Senate budget impeachment
executive powers
Electoral College
cabinet
Commander–in–Chief veto power
judicial powers
Marbury v. Madison
judicial review
Article IV, Section 2
amendment
The Federalist
Anti–Federalists
Article I, Section 9 ratifying conventions
Bill of Rights
freedom of religion
free exercise
establishment clause
freedom of speech
freedom of the press
right to assembly
right to keep and bear arms
due process

Primary Sources
The United States Constitution
The Bill of Rights

To Know by Heart
“Religion, morality, and knowledge, being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, schools and the means of education shall forever be encouraged.”
— Northwest Ordinance of 1787, Article 3
Preamble to the U.S. Constitution
“A republic, if you can keep it.” — Benjamin Franklin
“If men were angels, no government would be necessary.” — Federalist 10
First Amendment
Second Amendment

Timeline
1781 Articles of Confederation take effect
September 17, 1787 Constitutional Convention concludes (Constitution Day)
1789 Constitution takes effect; George Washington elected president

Images
Paintings of historical figures and events
Depictions of scenes from the Constitutional Convention
Photographs of Independence hall (exterior and interior)
Photos or facsimiles of the original Articles of Confederation, Northwest Ordinance, Constitution, The Federalist Papers, and Bill of Rights
The Signing of the American Constitution painting, Samuel Knecht
Statue of James Madison (Hillsdale College campus)
National Archives Building and the Rotunda for the Charters of Freedom
Paintings by Barry Faulkner in the Rotunda for the Charters of Freedom

Stories for the American Heart

- Delegates meeting in City Tavern in Philadelphia to discuss the Constitution–in–making “after hours”
- Benjamin Franklin’s story about the sun on George Washington’s chair being a sunrise for the country
- Benjamin Franklin’s reply to a woman’s question about what the Constitutional Convention had created: “A republic, if you can keep it,” and what this means
- The correspondence between Thomas Jefferson and Benjamin Banneker

Questions for the American Mind

- What did the Land Ordinance of 1785 do, especially with respect to public vs. private ownership of land and public education?
- What did the Northwest Ordinance of 1787 do, especially with respect to the future of western lands, public education, and preventing the expansion of slavery?
- What were the specific problems of the Articles of Confederation? What issues did they permit to arise and fester?
- Which event especially impressed on the Founders, particularly James Madison and George Washington, the need to revisit the Articles of Confederation?
- Who was the intellectual leader among the many very talented men at the Philadelphia convention, known as the “Father of the Constitution”?
- What is the relationship between the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution?
- What was The Federalist, what was its purpose, and why do we still read it?
- What did The Federalist argue about each of the following:
  - human nature
  - faction
  - majority tyranny
  - republicanism
- What were the major disagreements at the Constitutional Convention?
- What are the various ways that the Constitution addresses the issue of faction?
- What is federalism? Why is it important?
- What is separation of powers? Why is it a principle for the arrangement of government power, and how does the Constitution achieve this?
- What are the offices and main powers of each branch of government?
- What are checks and balances how can each branch check the power of the others?
- Contrast the character of the House of Representatives to that of the Senate, explaining the purpose for these differences and how their features (method of selection, qualifications, term lengths, percentage of each house up for election at a given time, etc.) contribute to their respective purposes.
- How does a bill become a law?
- What is the Electoral College, how did it originally work, and what is its purpose?
- What was the nature of the Founders’ compromise with slavery at the time of the founding for the sake of the union? Would it have been possible to abolish slavery in the southern colonies without union?
- Why did many in the founding generation expect that slavery would eventually die out so long as it was not allowed to expand?
- What efforts did some founders make to abolish slavery?
- What are the three clauses related to slavery in the Constitution? Explain each.
- How was the Three-Fifth Compromise a partial victory for slaveholders and a partial victory for abolitionists?
- Why does the Constitution make it so hard for it to be amended?
- What were the different views towards the Constitution during the ratification debate?
- What do each of the following amendments in the Bill of Rights guarantee and why: 1st, 2nd, 9th, and 10th?
- What is due process? Why is it such an important legal guarantor of freedom?
- To whom are elected officials and the Constitution itself ultimately subject?
- Questions from the U.S. Civics Test:
  - Question 1: What is the form of government of the United States?
  - Question 2: What is the supreme law of the land?
  - Question 3: Name one thing the U.S. Constitution does.
  - Question 4: The U.S. Constitution starts with the words “We the People.” What does “We the People” mean?
  - Question 6: What does the Bill of Rights protect?
  - Question 10: Name two important ideas from the Declaration of Independence and the U.S. Constitution.
  - Question 13: What is the rule of law?
  - Question 14: Many documents influenced the U.S. Constitution. Name one.
  - Question 82: What founding document was written in 1787?
Question 83: The Federalist Papers supported the passage of the U.S. Constitution. Name one of the writers.

Question 84: Why were the Federalist Papers important?

Question 86: George Washington is famous for many things. Name one.

Question 88: James Madison is famous for many things. Name one.

Question 89: Alexander Hamilton is famous for many things. Name one.

KEYS TO THE LESSON

“It seems to have been reserved to the people of this country, by their conduct and example, to decide the important question, whether societies of men are really capable or not of establishing good government from reflection and choice, or whether they are forever destined to depend for their political constitutions on accident and force.” Thus wrote Alexander Hamilton in the opening paragraph of Federalist 1 in support of the newly proposed United States Constitution. Indeed, it is the Constitution that gives institutional form to the principles of the Declaration of Independence. It is, as Abraham Lincoln would later express it, the “frame of silver” meant to adorn and, most importantly, to protect the “apple of gold” that is the Declaration of Independence and the truths it asserts. The Constitution is the vehicle for the American experiment in self-government.

Study of the Constitution and of the history of its creation shows students how and that human beings are able to govern themselves in freedom, securing the equal protection of rights and the dignity of each person through reflection, deliberation, and choice. This is a significant thing for students to grasp, for if a constitution cannot achieve these ends, then force and violence are the only alternatives left to mankind.

Students need not study all of the political philosophy that undergirded the Constitutional Convention and the Constitution itself, nor need they understand all the details of the function of government; they will study these facets to the Constitution extensively in separate American Civics lessons. They should, however, understand the main principles and structure of the Constitution and the government it established, and know the stories from the Constitutional Convention and the ratification debates. Selections from The Federalist for the teacher as well as the Bill of Rights for the students will be helpful to accomplish these purposes.

Teachers might best plan and teach the Constitution with emphasis on the following approaches. While the length of this advice is larger than advice for other lessons, it is owing to the ease with which so many features of the Constitution can be taught incorrectly, with significant consequences. Therefore, this advice includes many corrections to common misconceptions that can be quickly addressed in class. As mentioned, the vast majority of the political philosophy and mechanics of the Constitution are reserved for separate civics lessons.

- Consider the two major legislative achievements under the Articles of Confederation, the Land Ordinance of 1785 and the Northwest Ordinance of 1787. Students should understand the historic emphasis the Founders placed on public education, private land ownership, and preventing the spread of slavery, as evident in these laws.

- Revisit the structure of the Articles of Confederation and the issues that emerged under such a structure during the War of Independence, namely: the debt cancellation laws by states (a clear example of majority tyranny), varieties of currencies, interstate trade barriers, separate agreements between states and foreign powers, the inability to enforce the Treaty of Paris against the British with respect to western territories, and Shays’ Rebellion.

- Lead students through the process of the Constitutional Convention. Help them see that the Convention was arranged to ensure that all the states were able to speak and be represented. Through stories of the various debates and compromises, explain the difficulty of establishing a government that would satisfy all parties.

- Describe the environment and people of the Constitutional Convention, as well as the history and tone of the ratification debate that followed.

- Share with students the main arguments in Federalist 9, 10, and 51. These key documents should afford the teacher a review of the principles of the Declaration of Independence and the problems of the Articles of Confederation and also illustrate the purposes of the Constitution. The form of the Constitution follows its function with respect to human nature and the purposes for which governments are established, per the Declaration of Independence. The Federalist explains both of these functions and the nature of men.

- Read, annotate, and discuss the Constitution with particular attention to the Preamble, the structure of government that the Constitution establishes, and the reasons for this structure. Questions on pages 56–62 of A Teacher’s Guide to Land of Hope may be helpful.

- Clarify that the Constitution establishes a republic, not a democracy. In a pure democracy the people make all legislative decisions by direct majority vote; in a republic, the people elect certain individuals to represent their interests in deliberating and voting. The deliberations and voting record of representatives should usually reflect but should also be more refined than that of the entire people voting directly. Sometimes this distinction is described in terms of direct democracy vs. representative democracy.

- Explain the importance of the principles of separation of powers and federalism, and why these ideas are central to the Constitution’s safeguards against the corrupting tendency of power.

- Consider how the Constitution repeatedly structures federal institutions to refine and enlarge the will of the people.

- Explain how the House of Representatives is meant to be a more dynamic and immediate expression of the people’s will, while the Senate is meant to be more deliberative and circumspect.

- Emphasize that the Framers of the Constitution were chiefly concerned with allowing the will of the majority to rule—thereby guaranteeing the consent of the governed—while still preserving the rights of the minority and thereby securing justice.

- Describe the American Founders’ understanding of human nature. They understood human nature to be fixed and unchanging, good but also flawed and tending toward corrupting power. In response to human nature, government must guard against the opposite dangers of lawlessness and tyranny, accounting for the realities of human nature and rejecting the possibility of utopia.

- Show how the Constitution does not deny, demonize, or elevate human nature, but rather seeks to channel the powers of human beings into constructive institutions while mitigating man’s baser tendencies. In brief, the Constitution is constructed on a deep and accurate understanding of fixed human nature born of the Founders’ knowledge of history, their own experience, and their prudence.

- Ask about the source and purpose of a government’s power. Review how the Declaration of Independence claims that government power comes from the free consent of the people, and ask students to identify whether and how the Constitution accomplishes that goal.
- Distinguish the focus of the federal government compared to the state governments.
- Teach the structure, makeup, and powers of each branch of government and explain why the Founders made them so. Students should understand how each branch works, how they work together, and how the branches check and balance one another.
- Clarify how the Electoral College works and why the Founders chose this process for electing the president. One of the original reasons was to provide a way for the people’s representatives, the electors, to prevent a tyrannical or fraudulent choice, but most states abandoned this purpose when they enacted laws binding electors to the state’s popular vote. Another reason was to ensure that presidential candidates would pay attention to the interests of those to whom it was harder or less politically efficient to travel geographically. This has forced presidential candidates to address the concerns not merely of large population centers like cities but also of rural and more remote populations. Together with equal representation among states in the Senate, the Electoral College has discouraged a majority tyranny of urban interests.
- Take the time to consider, read, and discuss the ways in which slavery was addressed in the Constitution, including the extents to which the Constitution both left slavery in place and also placed new national limits on it. As Frederick Douglass and Abraham Lincoln would later acknowledge, the Declaration’s principle of equality and the Constitution’s arrangements gave the Founders the belief that they had placed slavery on the path to eventual extinction. This of course does not excuse the fact that many of these founders still held African Americans in slavery during their lifetimes.
- Clarify for students the arguments of northerners and southerners concerning the Three-Fifths Clause. The clause was not about the humanity of slaves; it was strictly about how much representation slave-owning states would receive in Congress and the Electoral College. The great hypocrisy of the slaveholders was that while they refused to call a slave a human being, they insisted that each slave be counted as a whole person for purposes of representation. In fact, it was the anti-slavery Founders who did not want slaves counted at all in the Constitution for the purposes of representation. The fact that slaves were only counted as three-fifths for the purposes of representation was a disappointment for southern states, as they had demanded they be counted as a whole person. It was a partial victory for northern opponents to slavery, as it would give the slaveholding states less influence in lawmaking than they wished. Additionally, students should understand that in the mind of those opposed to slavery, this compromise was the only politically viable route if they were to secure southern support for the Constitution, without which the country would become disunited, with the South able to perpetuate slavery indefinitely as their own country without northern abolitionists. Students need not agree with the tenets of the compromise, but they must understand it as the founders themselves understood it.
- Remind students that the slave trade was not formally limited in the states (the Continental Congress had temporarily banned the practice in 1774) until the passage of the Constitution, which allowed for it to be outlawed nationwide in 1808 (which it was) and for Congress to discourage it by imposing tariffs on the slave trade in the meantime. Students should understand that without the compromise that allowed this twenty-year delay, the power to abolish the slave trade would not have been granted by the slaveholding interest in the first place.
- Consider with students the significance of the Constitution not using the word “slave” and instead using “person.” Refusing to use the word “slave” avoided giving legal legitimacy to slavery. Even Article IV, Section 2, Clause 3 emphasizes that slavery was legal based on certain state, not federal, laws. The use of the word “person” forced even slaveholders to recognize the humanity of the slave: that he or she was in fact a human person, not property. There would be no federally-recognized “property in man.”

- Point out for students that clauses that were not about slavery but which slaveholding interests could use to their benefit were not therefore deliberately pro-slavery clauses. Such a logical fallacy would implicate as morally evil anything hijacked for use in committing a wrong act, for example, a road used by bank robbers in their getaway would be “pro-robbery.”

- Consider with students the sectional nature of views on slavery during the founding. The majority of northerners and northern founders (e.g., John Adams, Benjamin Franklin, Benjamin Rush, Gouverneur Morris, and John Jay) spoke and wrote extensively on the immorality of slavery and its need to be abolished. Some northern founders, such as John Jay, Alexander Hamilton, and Benjamin Franklin, founded or served in abolitionist societies.

- Consider also that even among the southern founders who supported slavery or held slaves, several leading founders expressed regret and fear of divine retribution for slavery in America, such as Thomas Jefferson, James Madison, and George Washington. Some freed their slaves as well, such as George Washington, who by the end of his life freed the slaves in his family estate. And many, like Thomas Jefferson, nevertheless maintained that slaves were men in full possession of the natural rights of all men. Making these observations does not diminish the inhumaneness of slavery or dismiss the wrong of racism by certain colonists or other individual Americans living in other generations.

- Ask students how to judge the Founders who owned slaves and yet supported the Declaration of Independence and Constitution. Students should consider their public and private lives as well as their words and deeds. Taken altogether, students should recognize the difficulty in assigning an absolute moral judgment that a person is entirely bad or entirely good while still being able to pass judgment on specific actions.

- Have students also consider the distinction between judging character absolutely versus judging individual actions. When they do, students will encounter figures who did both much that was good and also some that was bad, and that this contradiction runs through the heart of every person.

- Be careful with the phrase “consider the times,” as this phrase can easily give the impression that truth and morality (good and evil) are merely relative to one’s viewpoint or historical time period. Instead, help students understand that “to consider the times” in which the American colonists and Founders lived is not to excuse moral injustices or to justify relativism. We should consider the circumstances at the time and weigh them against principles that transcend time. It is not whitewashing or rewriting history. It is recognizing the reality of history and honestly assessing how figures at the time acted within their circumstances in light of the truth.

- Note the belief of many Founders, based on the evidence at the time, that slavery was naturally on the way to extinction. Public opinion had steadily grown against it; the principles of the Declaration of Independence and Revolution would continue to be a force toward realizing equality; and the Constitution had further restricted slavery, permitted further restrictions by holding the union together, and kept slavery on its path to extinction.

- Teach students about the Anti-Federalists’ concerns with the Constitution, the arguments for and against a Bill of Rights, and how the Federalists ultimately convinced states to ratify the Constitution (provided that a Bill of Rights was included).

- Read aloud with students the Bill of Rights. Pause frequently to ask students questions on various parts of the text. Questions on pages 79–84 of A Teacher’s Guide to Land of Hope may be helpful.
• Help students understand why each of the rights found in the Bill of Rights corresponds to the preservation of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, and how these rights answer some of the grievances in the Declaration of Independence as well as the problems under the Articles of Confederation. Especially consider the 1st, 2nd, 5th, and 10th Amendments.
• Explain that the Founders did not believe the Bill of Rights encompassed all the rights of men in society, nor that these rights came from government. Some of the rights enumerated in the Bill of Rights are natural rights. Many are derivative civil rights through which the constitutional process abides by and secures underlying natural rights. Between the Bill of Rights, the limited purposes of government, and the enumerated powers, emphasize for students how America has a limited government.
• Finally, tell about the first elections, meetings of the Electoral College, and George Washington’s inauguration in 1789. If students have already studied the French Revolution, remind them that just a few short months later the French Revolution would commence, leading to a far different outcome than the American Revolution and Constitution.

STRENGTHENING UNDERSTANDING: POST-LESSON ASSIGNMENTS

Assignment 1: Explain how the Constitution distributes power among the three branches of government (1–2 paragraphs).

Assignment 2: Explain what separation of powers and federalism each are and how they guard against the tendency governments to use power to become tyrannical (1–2 paragraphs).

Assignment 3: Explain why the Framers believed it should be relatively difficult to change the Constitution. Explain why they made an exception by including the Bill of Rights as the first ten amendments (1–2 paragraphs).
Name_____________________________  Date________________

Reading Quiz

DIRECTIONS: Answer each question.

1. Are we sure that the band at Yorktown played “The World Turned Upside Down”?

2. What was the name of the first constitution and government under which the United States attempted to govern itself?

3. The Northwest Ordinance prohibited what from the territories of what is now much of the Great Lakes region of the Midwest?

4. What did the farmer and war veteran Daniel Shays do?

5. In which city did delegates meet to draft a new Constitution?
Name_________________________ Date________________

Reading Quiz

The American Founding | Lesson 4

Land of Hope Young Reader’s Edition, Chapter 8

DIRECTIONS: Answer each question.

1. Who presided over the Constitutional Convention?

2. Who was known as “the Father of the Constitution”?

3. Although the convention was held in secrecy, how do we know so much about what happened?

4. Which powerful new office was created in the Constitution?

5. The compromise between representation by population or representation by state that decided to do both through a two-house Congress is known as the _____________ Compromise.
APPENDIX A

Study Guides

Tests

Writing Assignment
Study Guide — Unit 2, Test 1

Lesson 1 | Self-Government or Tyranny
Lesson 2 | The Declaration of Independence

Test on ____________

TIMELINE

When given chronological dates, match events from a list to the years or dates that they happened.

1754–1763 French & Indian War
1763 Proclamation Line
1770 Boston Massacre
1773 Boston Tea Party
1774 Intolerable Acts
1775 Battles of Lexington and Concord and of Bunker Hill
July 4, 1776 Declaration of Independence signed

GEOGRAPHY AND PLACES

Identify each on a map and/or tell where it is and explain its significance.

Boston Independence Hall Ticonderoga
Philadelphia Lexington and Concord

PERSONS

Identify each, provide biographical details, and explain what he or she thought or did in specific periods or events.

George III Samuel Adams Ethan Allen
George Washington Benjamin Franklin Thomas Paine
John Hancock Patrick Henry Thomas Jefferson
Crispus Attucks John Adams Henry Knox
Paul Revere Abigail Adams

TERMS AND TOPICS

Identify each and explain its significance to the period of history studied.

salutary neglect Sons of Liberty Intolerable Acts self-government mob Minutemen representation tar and feather Second Continental Congress
French and Indian War Declaratory Act Continental Army
Proclamation of 1763 Boston Massacre Olive Branch Petition
Stamp Act Boston Tea Party
Laws of Nature and of Nature's God: self–evident natural rights; equality unalienable liberty; pursuit of happiness consent of the governed slavery; Patriot/Revolutionary Tory/Loyalist

Major Conflicts

Explain how each battle began, narrate what happened in it and how, and explain the significance of the battle's outcome.

- French and Indian War
- Fort Ticonderoga
- Lexington & Concord
- Bunker Hill

Primary Sources

Based on annotations and notes from seminar conversations, be able to answer questions on each primary source. While you will not necessarily be asked why each primary source was created, what it did or argued, and what its effects were, being able to answer these kinds of questions will make you well prepared.

- Common Sense, Thomas Paine
- Declaration of Independence

To Know By Heart

Be prepared to fill in missing words and/or identify the speaker and context.

- “Give me liberty or give me death!” — Patrick Henry
- First two paragraphs of the Declaration of Independence

Stories for the American Heart

In your own words, retell each episode in narrative form. Consider your audience to be 3rd grade students.

- Biographies and the roles of George Washington, Benjamin Franklin, John Adams, and Thomas Jefferson up through 1776
- Boston Massacre
- Boston Tea Party
- Minutemen at the Battles of Lexington and Concord
- Ethan Allen, Henry Knox, and the Green Mountain Boys capturing the guns from Fort Ticonderoga
- Battle of Bunker Hill
- Liberation of Boston
QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

Based on notes from lessons and seminar conversations, answer each of the following.

Lesson 1 | Self-Government or Tyranny

□ Why had the colonies been mostly left to their own devices? Why was this “neglect” “salutary”?
□ How did the British situation following the French and Indian War lead the British to exert more authority over the colonists?
□ In what ways did the British begin to exert control over the colonists without their consent?
□ What is self-government? In what ways was the colonists’ freedom to govern themselves threatened and curtailed by the British between 1763 and 1776?
□ What were the two oftentimes competing approaches the colonists took to addressing Parliament’s actions?
□ How did the Boston Massacre change public opinion among the colonists?
□ Why did Parliament pass the Intolerable Acts? What did they do (five actions)?
□ In what ways did Thomas Paine’s Common Sense influence public opinion?
□ What actions by the British in the spring of 1776 prompted Richard Henry Lee of Virginia to introduce a motion for independence?

Lesson 2 | The Declaration of Independence

□ What are “the Laws of Nature and of Nature’s God”?
□ What is a “self-evident” truth?
□ What does it mean that “all men are created equal”?
□ What is a right?
□ According to the Declaration of Independence, from where do natural rights come?
□ What does “unalienable” mean?
□ What is liberty according to the Founders?
□ Why did Jefferson use “the pursuit of happiness” instead “of property”?
□ What is the purpose of government?
□ From where does a government derive its just powers?
□ What are the people free—and even obligated—to do if the government fails or violates its purpose?
□ Why did northern delegates, who were opposed to slavery and wanted it abolished, believe that compromising with southern delegates by omitting the issue of slavery from the Declaration’s list of grievances would be more likely to lead to the abolition of slavery than splitting with the southern colonies over the issue in 1776?
□ How does the fact that America was founded with the words of the Declaration of Independence make America the exception in the history of nations, even exceptional?
The American Founding — Test 1

Lesson 1 | Self-Government or Tyranny
Lesson 2 | The Declaration of Independence

TIMELINE

Write the letter of each event next to the date or years it took place.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1754–63</td>
<td>A. Battles of Lexington &amp; Concord and Bunker Hill</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1763</td>
<td>B. Boston Massacre</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1770</td>
<td>C. Boston Tea Party</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1773</td>
<td>D. Declaration of Independence signed</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1774</td>
<td>E. French and Indian War</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1775</td>
<td>F. Intolerable Acts</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>July 4, 1776</td>
<td>G. Proclamation Line</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

GEOGRAPHY AND PLACES

1. Draw a line indicating the border that the Proclamation of 1763 attempted to establish.

2. Label with dots the locations of Lexington & Concord, Fort Ticonderoga, and Philadelphia.

Map courtesy of A Teachers Guide to Land of Hope.
PERSONS, TERMS, AND TOPICS

Fill in the blank with the letter of the correct answer.

A. Benjamin Franklin
B. Boston Massacre
C. Boston Tea Party
D. Declaration of Independence
E. First Continental Congress
F. Intolerable Acts
G. Lexington and Concord
H. Patrick Henry
I. Proclamation Line
J. salutary neglect
K. Sons of Liberty
L. Thomas Jefferson
M. Thomas Paine

3. After acquiring lands from France following the French and Indian War, many British colonists hoped they would finally be able to settle further westward. In order to avoid additional conflict with the Native Americans and the related expenses of defense, the British enacted the __________________________ which declared that no American was allowed to move west of the Appalachians, and those already there must move back east.

4. This action by the British signaled the end of __________________, or the tradition of allowing the colonists to govern themselves largely independent of Parliament that had made the colonists practiced in self–government.

5. In 1774, Parliament passed the Sugar Act. It did not create a new tax; rather it halved the previous sugar tax but, for the first time, actually tried to enforce it. No group found these new taxes so disagreeable as the __________________________ led by Samuel Adams in Boston.

6. In 1770, British redcoats, abused and provoked by a mob, fired on a crowd of civilians. Though judged in court to be innocent of any wrong-doing, the event known as the __________________________ changed public opinion and increased the tension between the British and the British colonists.

7. Tensions had seemed to ease by late 1773. But by then the British Parliament had granted the East India Trading Company a monopoly for selling tea in the American colonies. In response to yet another piece of British legislation not consented to by the colonial assemblies, colonists threw three shiploads of tea into Boston harbor in an event today known as the __________________________.

8. Parliament responded to this event by passing a series of acts known as the __________________________ Acts. These acts included closing Boston harbor and, perhaps most alarmingly, disbanding the colonial government in Massachusetts. These actions, moreover, were to be enforced by sending more armed soldiers and the British navy to the colonies.

9. Delegates from twelve colonies assembled at the __________________________ in response to these extraordinary acts of Parliament.

10. The final push for Revolution came in the years of 1775 and 1776. In April of 1775, the first shots of the war were fired in the battles of __________________________ when British soldiers attempted to seize a colonial armory, officially beginning a revolution many were still trying to avoid.
11. Following these battles, ________________ gave a rousing speech in the Virginia House of Burgesses crying the words, “Give me liberty! Or give me death!”

12. Public opinion shifted sharply against the British in early 1776 when ________________ published Common Sense in January of that year.

13. The rejection of offers of conciliation and the news that the British had hired Hessian mercenaries against their own people led delegates to the Second Continental Congress to vote for and sign the ________________ to dissolve the “political bands” connecting the American states with Great Britain.

14. This document was written by a committee composed of _________________. John Adams, and its main author, _________________.

MAJOR CONFLICTS

Explain how each battle began, narrate what happened in it and how, and explain the significance of the battle’s outcome.

15. Bunker Hill
KNOWN BY HEART

Fill in missing words using the correct letters and identify the source.

| A. abolish | E. governments | I. secure |
| B. destructive | F. happiness | J. self-evident |
| C. equal | G. liberty | K. truths |
| D. governed | H. life | L. unalienable rights |

16. “We hold these ___________________ to be ________________, that all men are ________________, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain ________________, that among these are ____________________, ________________, and the pursuit of ________________.—That to ________________ these rights, ________________ are instituted among Men, deriving their just powers from the ________________,—That whenever any Form of Government becomes ____________________ of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or to ________________ it, and to institute new Government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their Safety and Happiness.”

Source: ______________________________

STORIES FOR THE AMERICAN HEART

In your own words, retell each episode in narrative form. Consider your audience to be 3rd grade students.

17. Tell the story of the Boston Massacre.

18. Tell the story of the battles of Lexington and Concord.
QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

Answer each of the following. Complete sentences are not necessary, but correct spelling and writing should be employed and responses must fully answer each question.

19. What is self-government? In what ways was the colonists’ freedom to govern themselves threatened and curtailed by the British between 1763 and 1776?

20. What were the two oftentimes competing approaches the colonists took to addressing Parliament’s actions?

21. What are “the Laws of Nature and of Nature’s God”?

22. What is a “self-evident” truth?

23. What does it mean that “all men are created equal”?

24. What is the purpose of government?

25. Why did northern delegates, who were opposed to slavery and wanted it abolished, believe that compromising with southern delegates by omitting the issue of slavery from the Declaration’s list of grievances would be more likely to lead to the abolition of slavery than splitting with the southern colonies over the issue in 1776?
Study Guide — Unit 2, Test 2

Lesson 3 | The War of Independence
Lesson 4 | The Constitution

Test on ____________

TIMELINE

When given chronological dates, match events from a list to the years or dates that they happened.

(1775) 1776–1783 War of Independence
1775 Battles of Lexington and Concord and of Bunker Hill
July 4, 1776 Declaration of Independence signed
1776 (Christmas) Battle of Trenton
1777 Battle of Saratoga
1777–78 Winter Quarters at Valley Forge
1781 Battle of Yorktown; Cornwallis Surrenders
1783 Treaty of Paris
September 17, 1787 Constitutional Convention concludes (Constitution Day)
1789 Constitution takes effect; George Washington elected president

GEOGRAPHY AND PLACES

Identify each on a map and/or tell where it is and explain its significance.

Boston Fort Ticonderoga Yorktown
Philadelphia Delaware River Northwest Territory Independence Hall Saratoga
Lexington and Concord Valley Forge

PERSONS

Identify each, provide biographical details, and explain what he or she thought or did in specific periods or events.

George III Horatio Gates Charles Cornwallis
George Washington George Rogers Clark Alexander Hamilton
Benjamin Franklin Marquis de Lafayette James Madison
John Adams Baron von Steuben John Jay
Ethan Allen Nathanael Greene Publius
Henry Knox Benedict Arnold
TERMS AND TOPICS

Identify each and explain its significance to the period of history studied.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Term</th>
<th>Term</th>
<th>Term</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Patriot/Revolutionary</td>
<td>Father of the Constitution</td>
<td>executive powers</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tory/Loyalist</td>
<td>Constitution</td>
<td>Electoral College</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Articles of Confederation</td>
<td>faction</td>
<td>Commander-in-Chief</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Continental Army</td>
<td>majority tyranny</td>
<td>veto power</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>privateer</td>
<td>republicanism</td>
<td>judicial powers</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brown Bess Musket</td>
<td>extended sphere</td>
<td>judicial review</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>volley</td>
<td>federalism</td>
<td>amendment</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>mercenary</td>
<td>limited government</td>
<td>The Federalist</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hessians</td>
<td>enumerated powers</td>
<td>Anti–Federalists</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Betsy Ross Flag</td>
<td>separation of powers</td>
<td>Bill of Rights</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Yankee Doodle</td>
<td>checks and balances</td>
<td>freedom of religion</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>guerilla warfare</td>
<td>Virginia Plan</td>
<td>free exercise</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>French Treaty of Alliance</td>
<td>New Jersey Plan</td>
<td>establishment clause</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Newburgh Conspiracy</td>
<td>Great Compromise</td>
<td>freedom of speech</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>American Cincinnatus</td>
<td>Three-Fifths Compromise</td>
<td>freedom of the press</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Treaty of Paris</td>
<td>legislative power</td>
<td>right to assembly</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>debt cancellation laws</td>
<td>Congress</td>
<td>right to bear arms</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Shays’ Rebellion</td>
<td>bicameralism</td>
<td>due process</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Northwest Ordinance</td>
<td>House of Representatives</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Constitutional Convention</td>
<td>Senate</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

MAJOR CONFLICTS

Explain how each battle began, narrate what happened in it and how, and explain the significance of the battle’s outcome.

- Lexington & Concord
- Fort Ticonderoga
- Bunker Hill
- Yorktown
- New York
- Trenton
- Saratoga

PRIMARY SOURCES

Based on annotations and notes from seminar conversations, be able to answer questions on each primary source. While you will not necessarily be asked why each primary source was created, what it did or argued, and what its effects were, being able to answer these kinds of questions will make you well prepared.

- The United States Constitution
- The Bill of Rights
TO KNOW BY HEART

Be prepared to fill in missing words and/or identify the speaker and context.

“These are times that try men’s souls.” — Thomas Paine, The Crisis
“Religion, morality, and knowledge, being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, schools and the means of education shall forever be encouraged.” — Northwest Ordinance of 1787, Article 3
Preamble to the U.S. Constitution
“A republic, if you can keep it.” — Benjamin Franklin
First Amendment
Second Amendment

STORIES FOR THE AMERICAN HEART

In your own words, retell each episode in narrative form. Consider your audience to be 3rd grade students.

- Biography of George Washington between 1776 and 1789
- Minutemen at the Battles of Lexington and Concord
- Ethan Allen, Henry Knox, and the Green Mountain Boys capturing the guns from Fort Ticonderoga
- Battle of Bunker Hill
- Liberation of Boston
- Washington’s Crossing of the Delaware
- The American farmers joining the Battle of Saratoga
- Washington encouraging his men at Valley Forge
- Stories of Margaret Corbin, Molly Pitcher, Abigail Adams, and Martha Washington during the war
- Washington’s dismissal of the Newburgh Conspiracy
- Washington’s resignation
- Benjamin Franklin’s reply to a woman’s question about what the Constitutional Convention had created: “A republic, if you can keep it,” and what this means

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

Based on notes from lessons and seminar conversations, answer each of the following.

Lesson 3 | The War of Independence

□ What were the advantages and disadvantages that the Americans and British each faced at the outset of the war?
□ What were the overall strategies that each side pursued in the course of the war?
□ What were the major contributions and moments in George Washington’s generalship during the war?
□ Why was the Battle of Saratoga so significant? What did the Americans gain from their newfound ally?
□ What important contribution did Baron von Steuben make to the Continental Army?
What factors, figures, moments, etc., led the Americans to victory?

Why were soldiers on the verge of mutiny in 1783? How did George Washington resolve the crisis?

Lesson 4 | The U.S. Constitution

What did the Northwest Ordinance of 1787 do, especially with respect to the future of western lands, public education, and preventing the expansion of slavery?

What were the specific problems of the Articles of Confederation? What issues did they permit to arise and fester?

What is the relationship between the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution?

What did The Federalist argue about each of the following:
- human nature
- faction
- majority tyranny
- morality

What were the major disagreements at the Constitutional Convention?

What was the great issue regarding representation? How was it resolved?

What are the various ways that the Constitution addresses the issue of faction?

What is federalism? Why is it important?

What is separation of powers, why is it a principle for the arrangement of government power, and how does the Constitution achieve this?

Contrast the character of the House of Representatives to that of the Senate, explaining the purpose for these differences and how their features (method of selection, qualifications, term lengths, percentage of each house up for election at a given time, etc.) contribute to their respective purposes.

What is the Electoral College, how did it originally work, and what is its purpose?

What was the nature of the Founders’ compromise with slavery at the time of the founding for the sake of the union? Would it have been possible to abolish slavery in the southern colonies without union?

Why did many in the founding generation expect that slavery would eventually die out so long as it was not allowed to expand?

What efforts did some founders make to abolish slavery?

How was the Three-Fifth Compromise a partial victory for slaveholders and a partial victory for abolitionists?

Why does the Constitution make it so hard for it to be amended?

What do each of the following amendments in the Bill of Rights guarantee and why: 1st, 2nd, 9th, and 10th?

To whom are elected officials and the Constitution itself ultimately subject?
The American Founding — Test 2

Lesson 3 | The War of Independence
Lesson 4 | The Constitution

TIMELINE

Write the letter of each event next to the date or years it took place.

(1775) 1776–83 War of Independence

A. Battle of Saratoga
B. Battle of Trenton
C. Battle of Yorktown; Cornwallis Surrenders
D. Battles of Lexington and Concord and of Bunker Hill
E. Constitutional Convention concludes (Constitution Day)
F. Constitution takes effect; Washington inaugurated
G. Declaration of Independence signed
H. Treaty of Paris
I. Winter quarters at Valley Forge

GEOGRAPHY AND PLACES

1. Label with dots the locations of Trenton, Saratoga, Valley Forge, and Yorktown.

Map courtesy of A Teachers Guide to Land of Hope.
PERSONS, TERMS, AND TOPICS

Fill in the blank with the letter of the correct answer.

A. Articles of Confederation  G. federalism  M. separation of powers
B. Baron von Steuben  H. Federalists  N. Shays’ Rebellion
C. bicameral  I. Newburgh Conspiracy  O. slavery
D. Bill of Rights  J. Northwest Ordinance  P. Yorktown
E. Constitutional Convention  K. Patriots
F. Continental Army  L. Presidency

2. The United States of America at the beginning of the War for Independence were far from a united people. Two groups existed in the country: Tories who remained loyal to the King, and ____________ who fought for the cause of independence.

3. The American forces, known as the ________________, consisted of a variety of militia and other enlistments who were often poorly supplied and rarely paid. Due to the miserable conditions, it was no surprise that 20% of the men deserted the army each winter and went home.

4. Throughout the course of the war, the Americans were aided by a number of persons. Among these pro–American Europeans was the Prussian drill officer, the ________________ who provided the American army with professional training at Valley Forge.

5. In October of 1781, the British General Cornwallis found himself surrounded by the French Navy on the waters and 17,000 French and American troops on land in the Battle of ________________. The surrender of 8,000 British troops convinced the British to make peace.

6. After the final battle of the war but prior to formal peace being arranged, unrest in the Continental Army almost led to an overthrow of the Congress. This movement towards overthrow was called the ________________, and was only ended by a dramatic officer’s meeting called by George Washington.

7. One of the greatest acts passed in America’s first government was the ________________ which banned slavery in the territories and promoted religion and knowledge through a system of public supported schools.

8. Amidst the war, the founders had formed the ________________ which established the first American government. It lacked, however, any real executive power and thus floundered throughout its ten years of existence.

9. In 1786, an American Revolution veteran led an uprising of farmers against banks which were foreclosing homes and imprisoning debtors. The initial inability of the government to put down what was known as ________________ led many founders to believe the government needed serious revisions.
10. In 1787, delegates appointed by state legislatures met in Philadelphia at the ____________ to revise the existing government. The delegates opted instead to begin from scratch and worked to draft a new Constitution.

11. An important principle of the Constitution was the ____________ where power is divided between three branches of government that then have the ability to check and balance each other, thus preventing the accumulation of power in one person or branch, what some founders called the very definition of tyranny.

12. Power was also divided between national, state, and local governments, a system known as ____________, which again prevented power from being dangerously centralized.

13. At this convention, delegates had to compromise on several points. One of which, known as the Great Compromise, created a ____________ legislature, one house of which determined representation by state population while the other gave each state equal representation.

14. Major additions to the government formed by the Constitution was a united and energetic executive branch called the ____________ and an independent judiciary called the Supreme Court.

15. While the Constitution compromised on the issue of ____________ in the Constitution, the Constitution place new national restrictions on slavery while still preserving the Union, which many abolitionists believed would be the only way to end the institution.

16. Those who supported the ratification of the Constitution were called ____________ while those who were opposed were known as Anti–Federalists.

17. Although the Founders included many measures intended to prevent national government tyranny, many states demanded the first Congress pass a ____________ which explicitly lists the rights belonging to citizens that government may not infringe upon.

MAJOR CONFLICTS

Explain how each battle began, narrate what happened in it and how, and explain the significance of the battle’s outcome.

18. Saratoga
19. Yorktown

KNOWN BY HEART

Fill in missing words using the correct letters and identify the source.

A. assemble
B. Blessings of Liberty
C. Constitution
D. Justice
E. more perfect Union
F. People
G. press
H. religion
I. speech

20. “We the _____________ of the United States, in Order to form a ________________, establish _____________, insure domestic Tranquility, provide for the common defence, promote the general Welfare, and secure the ________________ to ourselves and our Posterity, do ordain and establish this _________________ for the United States of America.”

Source: ______________________

21. “Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of _____________ or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of _________________, or of the __________; or the right of the people peaceably to _________________, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.”

Source: ______________________

STORIES FOR THE AMERICAN HEART

In your own words, retell each episode in narrative form. Consider your audience to be 3rd grade students.

23. Tell the story of the winter quarters at Valley Forge.

Questions for the American Mind

Answer each of the following. Complete sentences are not necessary, but correct spelling and writing should be employed and responses must fully answer each question.

24. What were the advantages and disadvantages that the Americans and British each faced at the outset of the War of Independence?

25. What factors, figures, moments, etc., led the Americans to victory?

26. What is the relationship between the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution?

27. What did The Federalist argue about human nature and majority tyranny?

28. Why did the Founders expect that slavery would eventually die out?

29. What does the Second Amendment in the Bill of Rights guarantee and why?

30. What does the Ninth Amendment in the Bill of Rights guarantee and why?
Writing Assignment — The American Founding

DIRECTIONS

Citing events and primary sources in your argument, write a 4–5 paragraph essay answering the question:

How and on what principles was America founded?
APPENDIX B

Primary Sources

Patrick Henry

Thomas Paine

Thomas Jefferson

The Second Continental Congress

George Washington

The American People
Patrick Henry, Delegate to the Second Virginia Convention

On the Resolution for a State of Defense

Speech

March 23, 1775

St. John’s Episcopal Church | Richmond, Virginia

Give Me Liberty or Give Me Death

Background

Just weeks before the battles of Lexington and Concord in Massachusetts, Patrick Henry delivered this speech in support of raising a company of cavalry or infantry in every Virginian county.

Guiding Questions

1. Why does Patrick Henry think reconciliation with Great Britain is impossible?
2. What are the only alternatives to war with Great Britain?

Mr. President:

No man thinks more highly than I do of the patriotism, as well as abilities, of the very worthy gentlemen who have just addressed the House. But different men often see the same subject in different lights; and, therefore, I hope it will not be thought disrespectful to those gentlemen if, entertaining as I do opinions of a character very opposite to theirs, I shall speak forth my sentiments freely and without reserve. This is no time for ceremony.

The question before the House is one of awful moment to this country. For my own part, I consider it as nothing less than a question of freedom or slavery; and in proportion to the magnitude of the subject ought to be the freedom of the debate. It is only in this way that we can hope to arrive at truth, and fulfill the great responsibility which we hold to God and our country. Should I keep back my opinions at such a time, through fear of giving offense, I should consider myself as guilty of treason towards my country, and of an act of disloyalty toward the Majesty of Heaven, which I revere above all earthly kings.

Mr. President, it is natural to man to indulge in the illusions of hope. We are apt to shut our eyes against a painful truth, and listen to the song of that siren till she transforms us into beasts. Is this the part of wise men, engaged in a great and arduous struggle for liberty? Are we disposed to be of the number of those who, having eyes, see not, and, having ears, hear not, the things which so nearly concern their temporal salvation? For my part, whatever anguish of spirit it may cost, I am willing to know the whole truth; to know the worst, and to provide for it.

I have but one lamp by which my feet are guided, and that is the lamp of experience. I know of no way of judging of the future but by the past. And judging by the past, I wish to know what there has been in the conduct of the British ministry for the last ten years to justify those hopes with which gentlemen have been pleased to solace themselves and the House. Is it that insidious smile with which our petition has been lately received? Trust it not, sir; it will prove a snare to your feet. Suffer not yourselves to be betrayed with a kiss.
Ask yourselves how this gracious reception of our petition comports with those warlike preparations which cover our waters and darken our land. Are fleets and armies necessary to a work of love and reconciliation? Have we shown ourselves so unwilling to be reconciled that force must be called in to win back our love? Let us not deceive ourselves, sir. These are the implements of war and subjugation; the last arguments to which kings resort.

I ask gentlemen, sir, what means this martial array, if its purpose be not to force us to submission? Can gentlemen assign any other possible motive for it? Has Great Britain any enemy, in this quarter of the world, to call for all this accumulation of navies and armies? No, sir, she has none. They are meant for us: they can be meant for no other. They are sent over to bind and rivet upon us those chains which the British ministry have been so long forging.

And what have we to oppose to them? Shall we try argument? Sir, we have been trying that for the last ten years. Have we anything new to offer upon the subject? Nothing. We have held the subject up in every light of which it is capable; but it has been all in vain. Shall we resort to entreaty and humble supplication? What terms shall we find which have not been already exhausted? Let us not, I beseech you, sir, deceive ourselves longer.

Sir, we have done everything that could be done to avert the storm which is now coming on. We have petitioned; we have remonstrated; we have supplicated; we have prostrated ourselves before the throne, and have implored its interposition to arrest the tyrannical hands of the ministry and Parliament. Our petitions have been slighted; our remonstrances have produced additional violence and insult; our supplications have been disregarded; and we have been spurned, with contempt, from the foot of the throne!

In vain, after these things, may we indulge the fond hope of peace and reconciliation. There is no longer any room for hope. If we wish to be free—if we mean to preserve inviolate those inestimable privileges for which we have been so long contending—if we mean not basely to abandon the noble struggle in which we have been so long engaged, and which we have pledged ourselves never to abandon until the glorious object of our contest shall be obtained—we must fight! I repeat it, sir, we must fight! An appeal to arms and to the God of hosts is all that is left us!
Give Me Liberty or Give Me Death
Patrick Henry

They tell us, sir, that we are weak; unable to cope with so formidable an adversary. But when shall we be stronger? Will it be the next week, or the next year? Will it be when we are totally disarmed, and when a British guard shall be stationed in every house? Shall we gather strength by irresolution and inaction? Shall we acquire the means of effectual resistance by lying supinely on our backs and hugging the delusive phantom of hope, until our enemies shall have bound us hand and foot?

Sir, we are not weak if we make a proper use of those means which the God of nature hath placed in our power. Three millions of people, armed in the holy cause of liberty, and in such a country as that which we possess, are invincible by any force which our enemy can send against us.

Besides, sir, we shall not fight our battles alone. There is a just God who presides over the destinies of nations, and who will raise up friends to fight our battles for us. The battle, sir, is not to the strong alone; it is to the vigilant, the active, the brave. Besides, sir, we have no election. If we were base enough to desire it, it is now too late to retire from the contest. There is no retreat but in submission and slavery! Our chains are forged! Their clanking may be heard on the plains of Boston! The war is inevitable—and let it come! I repeat it, sir, let it come.

It is in vain, sir, to extenuate the matter. Gentlemen may cry, peace, peace—but there is no peace. The war is actually begun! The next gale that sweeps from the north will bring to our ears the clash of resounding arms! Our brethren are already in the field! Why stand we here idle? What is it that gentlemen wish? What would they have? Is life so dear, or peace so sweet, as to be purchased at the price of chains and slavery?

Forbid it, Almighty God! I know not what course others may take; but as for me, give me liberty or give me death!
THOMAS PAINE

Common Sense

PAMPHLET EXCERPT

January 10, 1776
Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

BACKGROUND

After outright conflict the previous year at Lexington and Concord and Bunker Hill, and with Boston occupied by the British army and navy, Thomas Paine wrote this pamphlet on the relationship between the British and the American colonists.

GUIDING QUESTIONS

1. What event has convinced Paine of the necessity of independence?

2. Why does Paine criticize the protection that Great Britain provided the American colonies?

3. How does the colonies’ connection to Great Britain negatively impact the colonists economically?

4. How does Paine believe the Americans should organize themselves?

Introduction

PERHAPS the sentiments contained in the following pages are not yet sufficiently fashionable to procure them general favor. A long habit of not thinking a thing wrong gives it a superficial appearance of being right, and raises at first a formidable outcry in defense of custom. But tumult soon subsides. Time makes more converts than reason.

As a long and violent abuse of power is generally the means of calling the right of it in question (and in matters too which might never have been thought of, had not the sufferers been aggravated into the inquiry), and as the King of England hath undertaken in his own Right to support the Parliament in what he calls Theirs, and as the good people of this country are grievously oppressed by the combination, they have an undoubted privilege to inquire into the pretensions of both, and equally to reject the usurpation of either.

The cause of America is in a great measure the cause of all mankind. Many circumstances hath and will arise which are not local, but universal, and through which the principles of all Lovers of Mankind are affected, and in the event of which their Affections are interested.

The laying a Country desolate with Fire and Sword, declaring War against the natural rights of all Mankind, and extirpating the Defenders thereof from the Face of the Earth, is the Concern of every Man to whom Nature hath given the Power of feeling; of which Class, regardless of Party Censure, is the AUTHOR.

Thoughts on the Present State of American Affairs.

In the following pages I offer nothing more than simple facts, plain arguments, and common sense: and have no other preliminaries to settle with the reader, than that he will divest himself of prejudice and prepossession, and suffer his reason and his feelings to determine for themselves: that he will put on, or rather that he will not put off, the true character of a man, and generously enlarge his views beyond the present day.

Now is the seed-time of Continental union, faith and honour. The least fracture now will be like a name engraved with the point of a pin on the tender rind of a young oak; the wound would enlarge with the tree, and posterity read it in full grown characters.
By referring the matter from argument to arms, a new æra for politics is struck—a new method of thinking hath arisen. All plans, proposals, &c. prior to the nineteenth of April, i.e. to the commencement of hostilities, are like the almanacks of the last year; which tho’ proper then, are superceded and useless now….

I have heard it asserted by some, that as America has flourished under her former connection with Great-Britain, the same connection is necessary towards her future happiness, and will always have the same effect. Nothing can be more fallacious than this kind of argument. We may as well assert that because a child has thrived upon milk, that it is never to have meat, or that the first twenty years of our lives is to become a precedent for the next twenty. But even this is admitting more than is true; for I answer roundly, that America would have flourished as much, and probably much more, had no European power taken any notice of her. The commerce by which she hath enriched herself are the necessaries of life, and will always have a market while eating is the custom of Europe.

But she has protected us, say some. That she hath engrossed us is true, and defended the Continent at our expense as well as her own, is admitted; and she would have defended Turkey from the same motive, viz. for the sake of trade and dominion.

Alas! we have been long led away by ancient prejudices and made large sacrifices to superstition. We have boasted the protection of Great Britain, without considering, that her motive was interest not attachment; and that she did not protect us from our enemies on our account; but from her enemies on her own account, from those who had no quarrel with us on any other account, and who will always be our enemies on the same account. Let Britain waive her pretensions to the Continent, or the Continent throw off the dependance, and we should be at peace with France and Spain, were they at war with Britain. The miseries of Hanover last war ought to warn us against connections….

I challenge the warmest advocate for reconciliation to show a single advantage that this continent can reap by being connected with Great Britain. I repeat the challenge; not a single advantage is derived. Our corn will fetch its price in any market in Europe, and our imported goods must be paid for buy them where we will…
It is the good fortune of many to live distant from the scene of present sorrow; the evil is not sufficiently brought to their doors to make them feel the precariousness with which all American property is possessed. But let our imaginations transport us a few moments to Boston; that seat of wretchedness will teach us wisdom, and instruct us for ever to renounce a power in whom we can have no trust. The inhabitants of that unfortunate city who but a few months ago were in ease and affluence, have now no other alternative than to stay and starve, or turn out to beg. Endangered by the fire of their friends if they continue within the city, and plundered by the soldiery if they leave it, in their present situation they are prisoners without the hope of redemption, and in a general attack for their relief they would be exposed to the fury of both armies…

No man was a warmer wisher for a reconciliation than myself, before the fatal nineteenth of April, 1775, but the moment the event of that day was made known, I rejected the hardened, sullen-tempered Pharaoh of England for ever; and disdain the wretch, that with the pretended title of FATHER OF HIS PEOPLE can unfeelingly hear of their slaughter, and composedly sleep with their blood upon his soul.

But admitting that matters were now made up, what would be the event? I answer, the ruin of the Continent. And that for several reasons.

First. The powers of governing still remaining in the hands of the King, he will have a negative over the whole legislation of this Continent. And as he hath shown himself such an inveterate enemy to liberty, and discovered such a thirst for arbitrary power, is he, or is he not, a proper person to say to these colonies, You shall make no laws but what I please!? And is there any inhabitant of America so ignorant as not to know, that according to what is called the present constitution, this Continent can make no laws but what the king gives leave to; and is there any man so unwise as not to see, that (considering what has happened) he will suffer no law to be made here but such as suits his purpose? We may be as effectually enslaved by the want of laws in America, as by submitting to laws made for us in England….

Secondly. That as even the best terms which we can expect to obtain can amount to no more than a temporary expedient, or a kind of government by guardianship, which can last no longer than till the Colonies come of age, so the general face and state of things in the interim will be unsettled and unpromising. Emigrants of property will not choose to come to a country whose form of government hangs but by a thread, and who is every day tottering on the brink of commotion and disturbance; and numbers of the present inhabitants would lay hold of the interval to dispose of their effects, and quit the Continent.

But the most powerful of all arguments is, that nothing but independance, i. e. a Continental form of government, can keep the peace of the Continent and preserve it inviolate from civil wars. I dread the event of a reconciliation with Britain now, as it is more than probable that it will be followed by a revolt some where or other, the consequences of which may be far more fatal than all the malice of Britain....

Besides, the general temper of the Colonies, towards a British government will be like that of a youth who is nearly out of his time; they will care very little about her: And a government which cannot preserve the peace is no government at all, and in that case we pay our money for nothing; and pray what is it that Britain can do, whose power will be wholly on paper, should a civil tumult break out the very day after reconciliation?...

If there is any true cause of fear respecting independance, it is because no plan is yet laid down. Men do not see their way out. Wherefore, as an opening into that business I offer the following hints; at the same time modestly affirming, that I have no other opinion of them myself, than that they may be the means of giving rise to something better. Could the straggling thoughts of individuals be collected, they would frequently form materials for wise and able men to improve into useful matter.

Let the assemblies be annual, with a president only. The representation more equal, their business wholly domestic, and subject to the authority of a Continental Congress.

Let each Colony be divided into six, eight, or ten, convenient districts, each district to send a proper number of Delegates to Congress, so that each Colony send at least thirty. The whole number in Congress will be at least 390. Each congress to sit and to choose a President by the following method. When the Delegates are met, let a Colony be taken from the whole thirteen Colonies by lot, after which let the Congress choose (by ballot) a president from out of the Delegates of that Province. In the next Congress, let a Colony be taken by lot from twelve only, omitting that Colony from which the president was taken in the former Congress, and so proceeding on till the whole thirteen shall have had their proper rotation. And in order that nothing may pass into a law but what is satisfactorily just, not less than three fifths of the Congress to be called a majority. He that will promote discord, under a government so equally formed as this, would have joined Lucifer in his revolt.

But as there is a peculiar delicacy from whom, or in what manner, this business must first arise, and as it seems most agreeable and consistent that it should come from some intermediate body between the governed and the governors, that is, between the Congress and the People, let a Continental Conference be held in the following manner, and for the following purpose,

A Committee of twenty six members of congress, viz. Two for each Colony. Two Members from each House of Assembly, or Provincial Convention; and five Representatives of the people at large, to be chosen in the capital city or town of each Province, for, and in behalf of the whole Province, by as many qualified voters as shall think proper to attend from all parts of the Province for that purpose; or, if more convenient, the Representatives may be chosen in two or three of the most populous parts thereof. In this conference, thus assembled, will be united the two grand principles of business, knowledge and power. The Members of Congress, Assemblies, or Conventions, by having had experience in national concerns, will be able and useful counsellors, and the whole, being impowered by the people, will have a truly legal authority.

The conferring members being met, let their business be to frame a Continental Charter, or Charter of the United Colonies; (answering to what is called the Magna Charta of England) fixing the number and manner of choosing Members of Congress, Members of Assembly, with their date of sitting; and drawing the line of business and jurisdiction between them: Always remembering, that our strength is Continental, not Provincial. Securing freedom and property to all men, and above all things, the free exercise of religion, according to the dictates of conscience; with such other matter as it is necessary for a charter to contain. Immediately after which, the said conference to dissolve, and the bodies which shall be chosen conformable to the said charter, to be the Legislators and Governors of this Continent for the time being: Whose peace and happiness, may GOD preserve. AMEN…

A government of our own is our natural right: and when a man seriously reflects on the precariousness of human affairs, he will become convinced, that it is infinitely wiser and safer, to form a constitution of our own in a cool deliberate manner, while we have it in our power, than to trust such an interesting event to time and chance …

O! ye that love mankind! Ye that dare oppose not only the tyranny but the tyrant, stand forth! Every spot of the old world is overrun with oppression. Freedom hath been hunted round the Globe. Asia and Africa have long expelled her. Europe regards her like a stranger, and England hath given her warning to depart. O! receive the fugitive, and prepare in time an asylum for mankind.
A DECLARATION By the REPRESENTATIVES of the UNITED STATES of AMERICA, in «GENERAL» CONGRESS ASSEMBLED

When in the Course of human Events it becomes necessary for one People to dissolve the Political Bands which have connected them with another, and to assume among the Powers of the Earth the separate & equal Station to which the Laws of Nature and of Nature’s God entitle them, a decent Respect to the Opinions of Mankind requires that they should declare the causes which impel them to the Separation.

We hold these Truths to be self-evident, that all Men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with inherent and unalienable Rights, that among these are Life,

Liberty, & the Pursuit of Happiness: —That to secure these Rights, Governments are instituted among Men, deriving their just Powers from the Consent of the governed; that whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these Ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or abolish it, & to institute new Government, laying it's Foundation on such Principles, & organizing it's Powers in such Form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their Safety & Happiness. Prudence indeed will dictate that Governments long established should not be changed for light & transient Causes; and accordingly all Experience hath shown that Mankind are more disposed to suffer, while Evils are sufferable, than to right themselves by abolishing the Forms to which they are accustomed. But when a long Train of Abuses & Usurpations begun at a distinguished period and pursuing invariably the same Object, evinces a Design to reduce them under absolute Despotism, it is their Right, it is their Duty to throw off such Government, & to provide new Guards for their future Security. Such has been the patient Sufferance of these Colonies; & such is now the Necessity which constrains them to expunge «alter» their former Systems of Government. The History of the present King of Great-Britain is a History of unremitting «repeated» Injuries & Usurpations, among which appears no solitary fact to contradict the uniform tenor of the rest but all have «all having» in direct Object the Establishment of an absolute Tyranny over these States. To prove this, let facts be submitted to a candid World for the truth of which we pledge a faith yet unsullied by falsehood.

He has refused his Assent to Laws, the most wholesome & necessary for the public Good.

He has dissolved Representative Houses repeatedly, & continually for opposing with manly Firmness his Invasions on the Rights of the People.

He has refused for a long Time, after such Dissolutions, to cause others to be elected, whereby the Legislative Powers, incapable of Annihilation, have returned to the People at large for their exercise; the State remaining in the meantime exposed to all the Dangers of Invasion from without, & Convulsions within.
He has endeavored to prevent the Population of these states; for that Purpose obstructing the laws for Naturalization of Foreigners; refusing to pass others to encourage their Migrations hither, & raising the Conditions of new Appropriations of Lands.

He has made our Judges dependent on his Will alone, for the Tenure of their Offices, & the Amount & payment of their Salaries.

He has erected a Multitude of new Offices by a self assumed power and sent hither Swarms of new Officers to harass our People and eat out their Substance.

He has kept among us in Times of Peace, Standing Armies, and ships of war without the consent of our Legislatures.

He has affected to render the Military independent of, & superior to the Civil power.

He has combined with others to subject us to a Jurisdiction foreign to our Constitution, & unacknowledged by our Laws; giving his Assent to their Acts of pretended Legislation:
For quartering large Bodies of Armed Troops among us:
For protecting them, by a mock-Trial, from Punishment for any Murders which they should commit on the Inhabitants of these States:
For cutting off our Trade with all Parts of the World:
For imposing Taxes on us without our consent:
For depriving us «, in many Cases,» of the Benefits of Trial by Jury:
For transporting us beyond Seas to be tried for pretended Offences:
For abolishing the free System of English Laws in a neighboring Province, establishing therein an arbitrary Government, and enlarging it's Boundaries, so as to render it at once an Example and fit Instrument for introducing the same absolute Rule into these states «Colonies»:
For taking away our Charters, abolishing our most valuable Laws, and altering fundamentally the Forms of our Governments:
For suspending our own Legislatures, & declaring themselves invested with Power to legislate for us in all Cases whatsoever.
He has abdicated Government here by withdrawing his governors, and declaring us out of his allegiance & protection «declaring us out of his Protection, and Waging war against us.» He has plundered our Seas, ravaged our Coasts, burnt our towns, & destroyed the Lives of our People.

He is, at this time Transporting large Armies of foreign Mercenaries to complete the works of Death, Desolation & Tyranny, already begun with circumstances of Cruelty and Perfidy «scarcely paralleled in the most barbarous Ages, & totally» unworthy the Head of a civilized Nation. He has constrained our fellow Citizens taken Captive on the high Seas to bear Arms against their Country, to become the Executioners of their Friends & Brethren, or to fall themselves by their Hands. He has «excited domestic Insurrections amongst us, & has» endeavored to bring on the Inhabitants of our Frontiers, the merciless Indian Savages, whose known Rule of Warfare, is an undistinguished Destruction, of all Ages, Sexes, & Conditions of existence. He has incited treasonable insurrections of our fellow citizens, with the allurements of forfeiture & confiscation of our property. He has waged cruel war against human nature itself, violating it's most sacred rights of life and liberty in the persons of a distant people who never offended him, captivating & carrying them into slavery in another hemisphere, or to incur miserable death in their transportation thither. This piratical warfare, the opprobrium of INFIDEL powers, is the warfare of the CHRISTIAN king of Great Britain. Determined to keep open a market where MEN should be bought & sold, he has prostituted his negative for suppressing every legislative attempt to prohibit or to restrain this execrable commerce. And that this assemblage of horrors might want no fact of distinguished die, he is now exciting those very people to rise in arms among us, and to purchase that liberty of which he has deprived them, by murdering the people on whom he also obtruded them: thus paying off former crimes committed against the LIBERTIES of one people, with crimes which he urges them to commit against the LIVES of another. In every stage of these Oppressions we have Petitioned for Redress in the most humble Terms: Our repeated Petitions have been answered only by repeated Injury. A Prince whose Character is thus marked by every act which may define a Tyrant, is unfit to be the Ruler of a «free» People who mean to be free. Future ages will scarcely believe that the hardness of one man adventured, within the short compass of twelve years only, to lay a foundation so broad & so undisguised for tyranny over a people fostered & fixed in principles of freedom.

Nor have we been wanting in Attentions to our British Brethren. We have warned them from Time to Time of Attempts by their Legislature to extend a «an unwarrantable» jurisdiction over these our states «us». We have reminded them of the Circumstances of our Emigration & Settlement here, no one of which could warrant so strange a pretension: that these were effected at the expense of our own blood & treasure, unassisted by the wealth or the strength of Great Britain: that in constituting indeed our several forms of government, we had adopted one common king, thereby laying a foundation for perpetual league & amity with them: but that submission to their parliament was no part of our constitution, nor ever in idea, if history may be credited: and. We have appealed to their native Justice and Magnanimity as well as to «, and we have conjured them by» the Ties of our common Kindred to disavow these Usurpations, which were likely to «, would inevitably» interrupt our Connection and Correspondence. They too have been deaf to the Voice of Justice & of Consanguinity, and when occasions have been given them, by the regular course of their laws, of removing from their councils the disturbers of our harmony, they have, by their free election, re-established them in power. At this very time too they are permitting their chief magistrate to send over not only soldiers of our common blood, but Scotch & foreign mercenaries to invade & destroy us. These facts have given the last stab to agonizing affection, and manly spirit bids us to renounce forever these unfeeling brethren. We must endeavor to forget our former love for them, and hold them as we hold the rest of mankind, enemies in war, in peace friends. We might have been a free and a great people together; but a communication of grandeur & of freedom it seems is below their dignity. Be it so, since they will have it. The road to happiness & to glory is open to us too. We will tread it apart from them, and «. We must therefore» acquiesce in the Necessity which denounces our eternal Separation «, and hold them, as we hold the rest of Mankind, Enemies in War, in Peace, Friends!»

We, therefore, the Representatives of the UNITED STATES OF AMERICA in General Congress Assembled,«appealing to the Supreme Judge of the World for the Rectitude of our Intentions,» do, in the name, & by the Authority of the good People of these states reject and renounce all allegiance and subjection to the kings of Great Britain and all others who may hearafter claim by, through or under them; we utterly dissolve all political connection which may heretofore have subsided between us and the people or parliament of Great Britain: and finally we do assert and declare these colonies to be free and independent states, «Colonies, solemnly Publish and Declare, That these United Colonies are, and are of Right to be, Free and Independent States; that they are absolved from all Allegiance to the British Crown, and that all political Connection between them and the State of Great-Britain is and ought to be totally dissolved;» & that as Free & Independent States, they have full Power to levy War, conclude Peace, contract Alliances, establish Commerce & to do all other Acts & Things which Independent States may of right do. And for the support of this declaration, «with a firm Reliance on the Protection of divine Providence,» we mutually pledge to each other our lives, our Fortunes, & our sacred Honor.
The Thirteen United States of America

The Unanimous Declaration

A Declaration

July 4, 1776
Pennsylvania State House | Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

Declaration of Independence

BACKGROUND

The delegates from each colony at the Second Continental Congress announced their votes to form a new country separate from Great Britain in this statement to mankind that expounds both the principles on which this new country would be founded and the reasons they judged themselves justified to separate.

GUIDING QUESTIONS

1. Why do the United States believe they need to release a statement about their decision to form a country separate from Great Britain?

2. How are all men equal?

3. From where comes their rights?

4. What is the reason why people create governments?

5. From where comes a government’s powers?

6. What may a people do if a government does not fulfill its ends?

7. Although governments should not be changed for small reasons, when should the people change them?

8. Against which person does the Declaration of Independence level its charges?

9. To whom do the representatives appeal for the justness of their intentions?

10. By whose authority do the representatives declare independence?

11. What do each of the representatives pledge to one another?
When in the Course of human events, it becomes necessary for one people to dissolve the political bands which have connected them with another, and to assume among the powers of the earth, the separate and equal station to which the Laws of Nature and of Nature's God entitle them, a decent respect to the opinions of mankind requires that they should declare the causes which impel them to the separation.

We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness.—That to secure these rights, Governments are instituted among Men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed,—That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their Safety and Happiness. Prudence, indeed, will dictate that Governments long established should not be changed for light and transient causes; and accordingly all experience hath shown, that mankind are more disposed to suffer, while evils are sufferable, than to right themselves by abolishing the forms to which they are accustomed. But when a long train of abuses and usurpations, pursuing invariably the same Object evinces a design to reduce them under absolute Despotism, it is their right, it is their duty, to throw off such Government, and to provide new Guards for their future security.—Such has been the patient sufferance of these Colonies; and such is now the necessity which constrains them to alter their former Systems of Government. The history of the present King of Great Britain is a history of repeated injuries and usurpations, all having in direct object the establishment of an absolute Tyranny over these States. To prove this, let Facts be submitted to a candid world.

He has refused his Assent to Laws, the most wholesome and necessary for the public good.

He has forbidden his Governors to pass Laws of immediate and pressing importance, unless suspended in their operation till his Assent should be obtained; and when so suspended, he has utterly neglected to attend to them.
He has refused to pass other Laws for the accommodation of large districts of people, unless those people would relinquish the right of Representation in the Legislature, a right inestimable to them and formidable to tyrants only.

He has called together legislative bodies at places unusual, uncomfortable, and distant from the depository of their public Records, for the sole purpose of fatiguing them into compliance with his measures.

He has dissolved Representative Houses repeatedly, for opposing with manly firmness his invasions on the rights of the people.

He has refused for a long time, after such dissolutions, to cause others to be elected; whereby the Legislative powers, incapable of Annihilation, have returned to the People at large for their exercise; the State remaining in the mean time exposed to all the dangers of invasion from without, and convulsions within.

He has endeavored to prevent the population of these States; for that purpose obstructing the Laws for Naturalization of Foreigners; refusing to pass others to encourage their migrations hither, and raising the conditions of new Appropriations of Lands.

He has obstructed the Administration of Justice, by refusing his Assent to Laws for establishing Judiciary powers.

He has made Judges dependent on his Will alone, for the tenure of their offices, and the amount and payment of their salaries.

He has erected a multitude of New Offices, and sent hither swarms of Officers to harass our people, and eat out their substance.

He has kept among us, in times of peace, Standing Armies without the Consent of our legislatures.
He has affected to render the Military independent of and superior to the Civil power.

He has combined with others to subject us to a jurisdiction foreign to our constitution, and unacknowledged by our laws; giving his Assent to their Acts of pretended Legislation:

For Quartering large bodies of armed troops among us:

For protecting them, by a mock Trial, from punishment for any Murders which they should commit on the Inhabitants of these States:

For cutting off our Trade with all parts of the world:

For imposing Taxes on us without our Consent:

For depriving us in many cases, of the benefits of Trial by Jury:

For transporting us beyond Seas to be tried for pretended offenses:

For abolishing the free System of English Laws in a neighboring Province, establishing therein an Arbitrary government, and enlarging its Boundaries so as to render it at once an example and fit instrument for introducing the same absolute rule into these Colonies:

For taking away our Charters, abolishing our most valuable Laws, and altering fundamentally the Forms of our Governments:

For suspending our own Legislatures, and declaring themselves invested with power to legislate for us in all cases whatsoever.

He has abdicated Government here, by declaring us out of his Protection and waging War against us.
He has plundered our seas, ravaged our Coasts, burnt our towns, and destroyed the lives of our people.

He is at this time transporting large Armies of foreign Mercenaries to complete the works of death, desolation and tyranny, already begun with circumstances of Cruelty and perfidy scarcely paralleled in the most barbarous ages, and totally unworthy the Head of a civilized nation.

He has constrained our fellow Citizens taken Captive on the high Seas to bear Arms against their Country, to become the executioners of their friends and Brethren, or to fall themselves by their Hands.

He has excited domestic insurrections amongst us, and has endeavored to bring on the inhabitants of our frontiers, the merciless Indian Savages, whose known rule of warfare, is an undistinguished destruction of all ages, sexes and conditions.

In every stage of these Oppressions We have Petitioned for Redress in the most humble terms: Our repeated Petitions have been answered only by repeated injury. A Prince whose character is thus marked by every act which may define a Tyrant, is unfit to be the ruler of a free people.

Nor have We been wanting in attentions to our British brethren. We have warned them from time to time of attempts by their legislature to extend an unwarrantable jurisdiction over us. We have reminded them of the circumstances of our emigration and settlement here. We have appealed to their native justice and magnanimity, and we have conjured them by the ties of our common kindred to disavow these usurpations, which, would inevitably interrupt our connections and correspondence. They too have been deaf to the voice of justice and of consanguinity. We must, therefore, acquiesce in the necessity, which denounces our Separation, and hold them, as we hold the rest of mankind, Enemies in War, in Peace Friends.
We, therefore, the Representatives of the united States of America, in General Congress, Assembled, appealing to the Supreme Judge of the world for the rectitude of our intentions, do, in the Name, and by Authority of the good People of these Colonies, solemnly publish and declare, That these United Colonies are, and of Right ought to be Free and Independent States; that they are Absolved from all Allegiance to the British Crown, and that all political connection between them and the State of Great Britain, is and ought to be totally dissolved; and that as Free and Independent States, they have full Power to levy War, conclude Peace, contract Alliances, establish Commerce, and to do all other Acts and Things which Independent States may of right do. And for the support of this Declaration, with a firm reliance on the protection of divine Providence, we mutually pledge to each other our Lives, our Fortunes and our sacred Honor.

Georgia
Button Gwinnett, Lyman Hall, George Walton

North Carolina
William Hooper, Joseph Hewes, John Penn

South Carolina
Edward Rutledge, Thomas Heyward, Jr., Thomas Lynch, Jr., Arthur Middleton

Maryland
Samuel Chase, William Paca, Thomas Stone, Charles Carroll of Carrollton

Virginia
George Wythe, Richard Henry Lee, Thomas Jefferson, Benjamin Harrison, Thomas Nelson, Jr., Francis Lightfoot Lee, Carter Braxton

Pennsylvania
Robert Morris, Benjamin Rush, Benjamin Franklin, John Morton, George Clymer, James Smith, George Taylor, James Wilson, George Ross
Delaware
Caesar Rodney, George Read, Thomas McKean

New York
5 William Floyd, Philip Livingston, Francis Lewis, Lewis Morris

New Jersey
Richard Stockton, John Witherspoon, Francis Hopkinson, John Hart, Abraham Clark

New Hampshire
10 Josiah Bartlett, William Whipple, Matthew Thornton

Massachusetts
John Hancock, Samuel Adams, John Adams, Robert Treat Paine, Elbridge Gerry

Rhode Island
20 Stephen Hopkins, William Ellery

Connecticut
Roger Sherman, Samuel Huntington, William Williams, Oliver Wolcot
GENERAL GEORGE WASHINGTON, COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF OF THE CONTINENTAL ARMY

Address to Congress

SPEECH

December 23, 1783

Old Senate Chamber of the Maryland State House | Annapolis, Maryland

BACKGROUND

George Washington delivered this message to Congress to resign his commission as Commander-in-Chief of the Continental Army.

ANNOTATIONS

The great events on which my resignation depended having at length taken place; I have now the honor of offering my sincere Congratulations to Congress and of presenting myself before them to surrender into their hands the trust committed to me, and to claim the indulgence of retiring from the Service of my Country.

5 Happy in the confirmation of our Independence and Sovereignty, and pleased with the opportunity afforded the United States of becoming a respectable Nation, I resign with satisfaction the Appointment I accepted with diffidence. A diffidence in my abilities to accomplish so arduous a task, which however was superseded by a confidence in the rectitude of our Cause, the support of the Supreme Power of the Union, and the patronage of Heaven.

10 The Successful termination of the War has verified the most sanguine expectations, and my gratitude for the interposition of Providence, and the assistance I have received from my Countrymen, encreases with every review of the momentous Contest.

While I repeat my obligations to the Army in general, I should do injustice to my own feelings not to acknowledge in this place the peculiar Services and distinguished merits of the Gentlemen who have been attached to my person during the War. It was impossible the choice of confidential Officers to compose my family should have been more fortunate.

Permit me Sir, to recommend in particular those, who have continued in Service to the present moment, as worthy of the favorable notice and patronage of Congress.

I consider it an indispensable duty to close this last solemn act of my Official life, by commending the Interests of our dearest Country to the protection of Almighty God, and those who have the superintendence of them, to his holy keeping.

Having now finished the work assigned me, I retire from the great theatre of Action; and bidding an Affectionate farewell to this August body under whose orders I have so long acted, I here offer my Commission, and take my leave of all the employments of public life.
THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

The Constitution

BACKGROUND

Delegates to the Constitutional Convention drafted and the states ratified this Constitution, forming the second national government for the United States of America.

ANNOTATIONS

Preamble

We the People of the United States, in Order to form a more perfect Union, establish Justice, insure domestic Tranquility, provide for the common defense, promote the general Welfare, and secure the Blessings of Liberty to ourselves and our Posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America.

Article I

Section 1. All legislative Powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives.

Section 2. The House of Representatives shall be composed of Members chosen every second Year by the People of the several States, and the Electors in each State shall have the Qualifications requisite for Electors of the most numerous Branch of the State Legislature.

No person shall be a Representative who shall not have attained to the Age of twenty five Years, and been seven Years a Citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected,

---

be an Inhabitant of that State in which he shall be chosen.

Representatives and direct Taxes shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union, according to their respective Numbers, which shall be determined by adding to the whole Number of free Persons, including those bound to Service for a Term of Years, and excluding Indians not taxed, three fifths of all other Persons. The actual Enumeration shall be made within three Years after the first Meeting of the Congress of the United States, and within every subsequent Term of ten Years, in such Manner as they shall by Law direct. The Number of Representatives shall not exceed one for every thirty Thousand, but each State shall have at Least one Representative; and until such enumeration shall be made, the State of New Hampshire shall be entitled to choose three, Massachusetts eight, Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations one, Connecticut five, New-York six, New Jersey four, Pennsylvania eight, Delaware one, Maryland six, Virginia ten, North Carolina five, South Carolina five, and Georgia three.

When vacancies happen in the Representation from any State, the Executive Authority thereof shall issue Writs of Election to fill such Vacancies.

The House of Representatives shall choose their Speaker and other Officers; and shall have the sole Power of Impeachment.

Section 3. The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the Legislature thereof, for six Years; and each Senator shall have one Vote.

Immediately after they shall be assembled in Consequence of the first Election, they shall be divided as equally as may be into three Classes. The Seats of the Senators of the first Class shall be vacated at the Expiration of the second Year, of the second Class at the Expiration of the fourth Year, and of the third Class at the Expiration of the sixth Year, so that one third may be chosen every second Year; and if Vacancies happen by Resignation, or otherwise, during the Recess of the Legislature of any State, the Executive thereof may make temporary Appointments until the next Meeting of the Legislature, which shall then fill such Vacancies.
No Person shall be a Senator who shall not have attained to the Age of thirty Years, and been nine Years a Citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an Inhabitant of that State for which he shall be chosen.

The Vice President of the United States shall be President of the Senate, but shall have no Vote, unless they be equally divided.

The Senate shall choose their other Officers, and also a President pro tempore, in the Absence of the Vice President, or when he shall exercise the Office of President of the United States.

The Senate shall have the sole Power to try all Impeachments. When sitting for that Purpose, they shall be on Oath or Affirmation. When the President of the United States is tried, the Chief Justice shall preside: And no Person shall be convicted without the Concurrence of two thirds of the Members present.

Judgment in Cases of Impeachment shall not extend further than to removal from Office, and disqualification to hold and enjoy any Office of honor, Trust or Profit under the United States: but the Party convicted shall nevertheless be liable and subject to Indictment, Trial, Judgment and Punishment, according to Law.

Section 4. The Times, Places and Manner of holding Elections for Senators and Representatives, shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by Law make or alter such Regulations, except as to the Places of choosing Senators.

The Congress shall assemble at least once in every Year, and such Meeting shall be on the first Monday in December, unless they shall by Law appoint a different Day.

Section 5. Each House shall be the Judge of the Elections, Returns and Qualifications of its own Members, and a Majority of each shall constitute a Quorum to do Business; but a smaller Number may adjourn from day to day, and may be authorized to compel the Attendance of absent Members, in such Manner, and under such Penalties as each House may provide.
Each House may determine the Rules of its Proceedings, punish its Members for disorderly Behavior, and, with the Concurrence of two thirds, expel a Member.

Each House shall keep a Journal of its Proceedings, and from time to time publish the same, excepting such Parts as may in their Judgment require Secrecy; and the Yeas and Nays of the Members of either House on any question shall, at the Desire of one fifth of those Present, be entered on the Journal.

Neither House, during the Session of Congress, shall, without the Consent of the other, adjourn for more than three days, nor to any other Place than that in which the two Houses shall be sitting.

Section 6. The Senators and Representatives shall receive a Compensation for their Services, to be ascertained by Law, and paid out of the Treasury of the United States. They shall in all Cases, except Treason, Felony and Breach of the Peace, be privileged from Arrest during their Attendance at the Session of their respective Houses, and in going to and returning from the same; and for any Speech or Debate in either House, they shall not be questioned in any other Place.

No Senator or Representative shall, during the Time for which he was elected, be appointed to any civil Office under the Authority of the United States, which shall have been created, or the Emoluments whereof shall have been encreased during such time; and no Person holding any Office under the United States, shall be a Member of either House during his Continuance in Office.

Section 7. All Bills for raising Revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives; but the Senate may propose or concur with Amendments as on other Bills.

Every Bill which shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate, shall, before it become a Law, be presented to the President of the United States; If he approve he shall sign it, but if not he shall return it, with his Objections to that House in which it shall have originated, who shall enter the Objections at large on their Journal, and proceed to reconsider it. If after such Reconsideration two thirds of that House shall agree to pass the Bill, it shall be sent, together with the Objections, to the other House, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered, and if approved by two thirds of that House, it shall become a Law. But in all such Cases the Votes of both Houses shall be determined by yeas and Nays, and the Names of the Persons voting for and against the Bill shall be entered on the Journal of each House respectively. If any Bill shall not be returned by the President within ten days (Sundays excepted) after it shall have been presented to him, the Same shall be a Law, in like Manner as if he had signed it, unless the Congress by their Adjournment prevent its Return in which Case it shall not be a Law.

Every Order, Resolution, or Vote to which the Concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary (except on a question of Adjournment) shall be presented to the President of the United States; and before the Same shall take Effect, shall be approved by him, or being disapproved by him, shall be repassed by two thirds of the Senate and House of Representatives, according to the Rules and Limitations prescribed in the Case of a Bill.

Section 8. The Congress shall have Power To lay and collect Taxes, Duties, Imposts and Excises, to pay the Debts and provide for the common Defense and general Welfare of the United States; but all Duties, Imposts and Excises shall be uniform throughout the United States;

To borrow Money on the credit of the United States;

To regulate Commerce with foreign Nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian Tribes;

To establish an uniform Rule of Naturalization, and uniform Laws on the subject of Bankruptcies throughout the United States;

To coin Money, regulate the Value thereof, and of foreign Coin, and fix the Standard of Weights and Measures;

To provide for the Punishment of counterfeiting the Securities and current Coin of the United States;

To establish Post Offices and post Roads;
To promote the Progress of Science and useful Arts, by securing for limited Times to Authors and Inventors the exclusive Right to their respective Writings and Discoveries;

To constitute Tribunals inferior to the supreme Court;

To define and punish Piracies and Felonies committed on the high Seas, and Offenses against the Law of Nations;

To declare War, grant Letters of Marque and Reprisal, and make Rules concerning Captures on Land and Water;

To raise and support Armies, but no Appropriation of Money to that Use shall be for a longer Term than two Years;

To provide and maintain a Navy;

To make Rules for the Government and Regulation of the land and naval Forces;

To provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions;

To provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia, and for governing such Part of them as may be employed in the Service of the United States, reserving to the States respectively, the Appointment of the Officers, and the Authority of training the Militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress;

To exercise exclusive Legislation in all Cases whatsoever, over such District (not exceeding ten Miles square) as may, by Cession of particular States, and the Acceptance of Congress, become the Seat of the Government of the United States, and to exercise like Authority over all Places purchased by the Consent of the Legislature of the State in which the Same shall be, for the Erection of Forts, Magazines, Arsenals, dock-Yards, and other needful Buildings;—And

To make all Laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into Execution the foregoing Powers, and all other Powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any Department or Officer thereof.
Section 9. The Migration or Importation of such Persons as any of the States now existing shall think proper to admit, shall not be prohibited by the Congress prior to the Year one thousand eight hundred and eight, but a Tax or duty may be imposed on such Importation, not exceeding ten dollars for each Person.

5 The Privilege of the Writ of Habeas Corpus shall not be suspended, unless when in Cases of Rebellion or Invasion the public Safety may require it.

No Bill of Attainder or ex post facto Law shall be passed.

No Capitation, or other direct, Tax shall be laid, unless in Proportion to the Census or Enumeration herein before directed to be taken.

10 No Tax or Duty shall be laid on Articles exported from any State.

No Preference shall be given by any Regulation of Commerce or Revenue to the Ports of one State over those of another: nor shall Vessels bound to, or from, one State, be obliged to enter, clear, or pay Duties in another.

No Money shall be drawn from the Treasury, but in Consequence of Appropriations made by Law; and a regular Statement and Account of the Receipts and Expenditures of all public Money shall be published from time to time.

No Title of Nobility shall be granted by the United States: And no Person holding any Office of Profit or Trust under them, shall, without the Consent of the Congress, accept of any present, Emolument, Office, or Title, of any kind whatever, from any King, Prince, or foreign State.

20 Section 10. No State shall enter into any Treaty, Alliance, or Confederation; grant Letters of Marque and Reprisal; coin Money; emit Bills of Credit; make any Thing but gold and silver Coin a Tender in Payment of Debts; pass any Bill of Attainder, ex post facto Law, or Law impairing the Obligation of Contracts, or grant any Title of Nobility.

25 No State shall, without the Consent of the Congress, lay any Imposts or Duties on Imports or Exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing its inspection Laws: and the net Produce of all Duties and Imposts, laid by any State on Imports or Exports, shall be for the Use of the Treasury of the United States; and all such Laws shall be subject to the Revision and Control of the Congress.

No State shall, without the Consent of Congress, lay any duty of Tonnage, keep Troops, or Ships of War in time of Peace, enter into any Agreement or Compact with another State, or with a foreign Power, or engage in War, unless actually invaded, or in such imminent Danger as will not admit of delay.

Article II

Section 1. The executive Power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America. He shall hold his Office during the Term of four Years, and, together with the Vice-President chosen for the same Term, be elected as follows:

Each State shall appoint, in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a Number of Electors, equal to the whole Number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress: but no Senator or Representative, or Person holding an Office of Trust or Profit under the United States, shall be appointed an Elector.

The Electors shall meet in their respective States, and vote by Ballot for two Persons, of whom one at least shall not be an Inhabitant of the same State with themselves. And they shall make a List of all the Persons voted for, and of the Number of Votes for each; which List they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the Seat of the Government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate. The President of the Senate shall, in the Presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the Certificates, and the Votes shall then be counted. The Person having the greatest Number of Votes shall be the President, if such Number be a Majority of the whole Number of Electors appointed; and if there be more than one who have such Majority, and have an equal Number of Votes, then the House of Representatives shall immediately choose by Ballot one of them for President; and if no Person have a Majority, then from the five highest on the List the said House shall in like Manner choose the President. But in choosing the President, the Votes shall be taken by States, the Representation from each State having one Vote; a quorum for this Purpose shall consist of a Member or Members from two thirds of the States, and a Majority of all the States shall be necessary to a Choice. In every Case, after the Choice of the President, the Person having the greatest Number of Votes of the Electors shall be the Vice President. But if there should remain two or more who have equal Votes, the Senate shall choose from them by Ballot the Vice President.

The Congress may determine the Time of choosing the Electors, and the Day on which they shall give their Votes; which Day shall be the same throughout the United States.

No Person except a natural born Citizen, or a Citizen of the United States, at the time of the Adoption of this Constitution, shall be eligible to the Office of President; neither shall any Person be eligible to that Office who shall not have attained to the Age of thirty-five Years, and been fourteen Years a Resident within the United States.

In Case of the Removal of the President from Office, or of his Death, Resignation, or Inability to discharge the Powers and Duties of the said Office, the Same shall devolve on the Vice President, and the Congress may by Law provide for the Case of Removal, Death, Resignation or Inability, both of the President and Vice President, declaring what Officer shall then act as President, and such Officer shall act accordingly, until the Disability be removed, or a President shall be elected.

The President shall, at stated Times, receive for his Services, a Compensation, which shall neither be increased nor diminished during the Period for which he shall have been elected, and he shall not receive within that Period any other Emolument from the United States, or any of them.

Before he enter on the Execution of his Office, he shall take the following Oath or Affirmation:—"I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully execute the Office of President of the United States, and will to the best of my Ability, preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States."

Section 2. The President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and of the Militia of the several States, when called into the actual Service of the United States; he may require the Opinion, in writing, of the principal Officer in each of the executive Departments, upon any subject relating to the Duties of their respective Offices, and he shall have Power to grant Reprieves and Pardons for Offenses against the United States, except in Cases of Impeachment.

He shall have Power, by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate, to make Treaties, provided two thirds of the Senators present concur; and he shall nominate, and by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate, shall appoint Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls, Judges of the supreme Court, and all other Officers of the United States, whose Appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by Law: but the Congress may by Law vest the Appointment of such inferior Officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the Courts of Law, or in the Heads of Departments.

The President shall have Power to fill up all Vacancies that may happen during the Recess of the Senate, by granting Commissions which shall expire at the End of their next Session.

Section 3. He shall from time to time give to the Congress Information of the State of the Union, and recommend to their Consideration such Measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient; he may, on extraordinary Occasions, convene both Houses, or either of them, and in Case of Disagreement between them, with Respect to the Time of Adjournment, he may adjourn them to such Time as he shall think proper; he shall receive Ambassadors and other public Ministers; he shall take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed, and shall Commission all the Officers of the United States.

Section 4. The President, Vice President and all civil Officers of the United States, shall be removed from Office on Impeachment for, and Conviction of, Treason, Bribery, or other high Crimes and Misdemeanors.

Article III

Section 1. The judicial Power of the United States, shall be vested in one supreme Court, and in such inferior Courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The Judges, both of the supreme and inferior Courts, shall hold their Offices during good Behavior, and shall, at stated Times, receive for their Services a Compensation, which shall not be diminished during their Continuance in Office.

Section 2. The judicial Power shall extend to all Cases, in Law and Equity, arising under this Constitution, the Laws of the United States, and Treaties made, or which shall be made, under their Authority;—to all Cases affecting Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls;—to all Cases of admiralty and maritime Jurisdiction; —to Controversies to which the United States shall be a Party; —to Controversies between two or more States; —between a State and Citizens of another State; —between Citizens of different States; —between Citizens of the same State claiming Lands under Grants of different States, and between a State, or the Citizens thereof, and foreign States, Citizens or Subjects.

In all Cases affecting Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls, and those in which a State shall be Party, the supreme Court shall have original Jurisdiction. In all the other Cases before mentioned, the supreme Court shall have appellate Jurisdiction, both as to Law and Fact, with such Exceptions, and under such Regulations as the Congress shall make.

The Trial of all Crimes, except in Cases of Impeachment, shall be by Jury; and such Trial shall be held in the State where the said Crimes shall have been committed; but when not committed within any State, the Trial shall be at such Place or Places as the Congress may by Law have directed.

Section 3. Treason against the United States, shall consist only in levying War against them, or in adhering to their Enemies, giving them Aid and Comfort. No Person shall be convicted of Treason unless on the Testimony of two Witnesses to the same overt Act, or on Confession in open Court.

The Congress shall have Power to declare the Punishment of Treason, but no Attainder of Treason shall work Corruption of Blood, or Forfeiture except during the Life of the Person attainted.
Article IV

Section 1. Full Faith and Credit shall be given in each State to the public Acts, Records, and judicial Proceedings of every other State. And the Congress may by general Laws prescribe the Manner in which such Acts, Records and Proceedings shall be proved, and the Effect thereof.

Section 2. The Citizens of each State shall be entitled to all Privileges and Immunities of Citizens in the several States.

A Person charged in any State with Treason, Felony, or other Crime, who shall flee from Justice, and be found in another State, shall on Demand of the executive Authority of the State from which he fled, be delivered up, to be removed to the State having Jurisdiction of the Crime.

No Person held to Service or Labor in one State, under the Laws thereof, escaping into another, shall, in Consequence of any Law or Regulation therein, be discharged from such Service or Labor, but shall be delivered up on Claim of the Party to whom such Service or Labor may be due.

Section 3. New States may be admitted by the Congress into this Union; but no new State shall be formed or erected within the Jurisdiction of any other State; nor any State be formed by the Junction of two or more States, or parts of States, without the Consent of the Legislatures of the States concerned as well as of the Congress.

The Congress shall have Power to dispose of and make all needful Rules and Regulations respecting the Territory or other Property belonging to the United States; and nothing in this Constitution shall be so construed as to Prejudice any Claims of the United States, or of any particular State.

Section 4. The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a Republican Form of Government, and shall protect each of them against Invasion; and on Application of the Legislature, or of the Executive (when the Legislature cannot be convened) against domestic Violence.
Article V

The Congress, whenever two thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose Amendments to this Constitution, or, on the Application of the Legislatures of two thirds of the several States, shall call a Convention for proposing Amendments, which, in either Case, shall be valid to all Intents and Purposes, as Part of this Constitution, when ratified by the Legislatures of three fourths of the several States, or by Conventions in three fourths thereof, as the one or the other Mode of Ratification may be proposed by the Congress; Provided that no Amendment which may be made prior to the Year One thousand eight hundred and eight shall in any Manner affect the first and fourth Clauses in the Ninth Section of the first Article; and that no State, without its Consent, shall be deprived of its equal Suffrage in the Senate.

Article VI

All Debts contracted and Engagements entered into, before the Adoption of this Constitution, shall be as valid against the United States under this Constitution, as under the Confederation.

This Constitution, and the Laws of the United States which shall be made in Pursuance thereof; and all Treaties made, or which shall be made, under the Authority of the United States, shall be the supreme Law of the Land; and the Judges in every State shall be bound thereby, any Thing in the Constitution or Laws of any State to the Contrary notwithstanding.

The Senators and Representatives before mentioned, and the Members of the several State Legislatures, and all executive and judicial Officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by Oath or Affirmation, to support this Constitution; but no religious Test shall ever be required as a Qualification to any Office or public Trust under the United States.
Article VII

The Ratification of the Conventions of nine States, shall be sufficient for the Establishment of this Constitution between the States so ratifying the Same.

Done in Convention by the Unanimous Consent of the States present the Seventeenth Day of September in the Year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and Eighty seven and of the Independence of the United States of America the Twelfth In witness whereof We have hereunto subscribed our Names.

George Washington—

President and deputy from Virginia

Delaware

George Read, Gunning Bedford, Jr., John Dickinson, Richard Bassett, Jacob Broom

Maryland

James McHenry, Daniel of St. Thomas Jenifer, Daniel Carroll

Virginia

John Blair, James Madison, Jr.

North Carolina

William Blount, Richard Dobbs Spaight, Hugh Williamson

South Carolina

John Rutledge, Charles Cotesworth Pinckney, Charles Pinckney, Pierce Butler
Georgia
William Few, Abraham Baldwin

New Hampshire
John Langdon, Nicholas Gilman

Massachusetts
Nathaniel Gorham, Rufus King

Connecticut
William Samuel Johnson, Roger Sherman

New York
Alexander Hamilton

New Jersey
William Livingston, David Brearley, William Paterson, Jonathan Dayton

Pennsylvania
Benjamin Franklin, Thomas Mifflin, Robert Morris, George Clymer, Thomas FitzSimmons, Jared Ingersoll, James Wilson, Gouverneur Morris

Attest William Jackson Secretary
Amendments to the Constitution of the United States of America

Amendment I

Ratified December 15, 1791

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

Amendment II

Ratified December 15, 1791

A well regulated Militia, being necessary to the security of a free State, the right of the people to keep and bear Arms, shall not be infringed.

Amendment III

Ratified December 15, 1791

No Soldier shall, in time of peace be quartered in any house, without the consent of the Owner, nor in time of war, but in a manner to be prescribed by law.

Amendment IV

Ratified December 15, 1791

The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no Warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by Oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized.
Amendment V

Ratified December 15, 1791

No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the Militia, when in actual service in time of War or public danger; nor shall any person be subject for the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb; nor shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation.

Amendment VI

Ratified December 15, 1791

In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law, and to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation; to be confronted with the witnesses against him; to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor, and to have the Assistance of Counsel for his defense.

Amendment VII

Ratified December 15, 1791

In Suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved, and no fact tried by a jury, shall be otherwise reexamined in any Court of the United States, than according to the rules of the common law.
Amendment VIII

Ratified December 15, 1791

Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted.

Amendment IX

Ratified December 15, 1791

The enumeration in the Constitution, of certain rights, shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people.

Amendment X

Ratified December 15, 1791

The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.

Amendment XI

Ratified February 7, 1795

The Judicial power of the United States shall not be construed to extend to any suit in law or equity, commenced or prosecuted against one of the United States by Citizens of another State, or by Citizens or Subjects of any Foreign State.

Amendment XII

Ratified June 15, 1804

The Electors shall meet in their respective states and vote by ballot for President and Vice-President, one of whom, at least, shall not be an inhabitant of the same state with themselves; they shall name in their ballots the person voted for as President, and in distinct ballots the person voted for as Vice-President, and they shall make distinct lists of all persons voted for as President, and of all persons voted for as Vice-President, and of the number of votes for each, which lists they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the seat of the government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate;—the President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and the votes shall then be counted;—The person having the greatest number of votes for President, shall be the President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of Electors appointed; and if no person have such majority, then from the persons having the highest numbers not exceeding three on the list of those voted for as President, the House of Representatives shall choose immediately, by ballot, the President.

But in choosing the President, the votes shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote; a quorum for this purpose shall consist of a member or members from two-thirds of the states, and a majority of all the states shall be necessary to a choice. And if the House of Representatives shall not choose a President whenever the right of choice shall devolve upon them, before the fourth day of March next following, then the Vice-President shall act as President, as in the case of the death or other constitutional disability of the President.—The person having the greatest number of votes as Vice-President, shall be the Vice-President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of Electors appointed, and if no person have a majority, then from the two highest numbers on the list, the Senate shall choose the Vice-President; a quorum for the purpose shall consist of two-thirds of the whole number of Senators, and a majority of the whole number shall be necessary to a choice. But no person constitutionally ineligible to the office of President shall be eligible to that of Vice-President of the United States.

Amendment XIII

Ratified December 6, 1865

Section 1. Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction.

Section 2. Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.
Amendment XIV

Ratified July 9, 1868

Section 1. All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

Section 2. Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed. But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice-President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the Executive and Judicial officers of a State, or the members of the Legislature thereof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State, being twenty-one years of age, and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion, or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens twenty-one years of age in such State.

Section 3. No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice-President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath, as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability.
Section 4. The validity of the public debt of the United States, authorized by law, including debts incurred for payment of pensions and bounties for services in suppressing insurrection or rebellion, shall not be questioned. But neither the United States nor any State shall assume or pay any debt or obligation incurred in aid of insurrection or rebellion against the United States, or any claim for the loss or emancipation of any slave; but all such debts, obligations and claims shall be held illegal and void.

Section 5. The Congress shall have power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article.

Amendment XV

Ratified February 3, 1870

Section 1. The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

Section 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Amendment XVI

Ratified February 3, 1913

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several States, and without regard to any census or enumeration.

Amendment XVII

Ratified April 8, 1913

The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, elected by the people thereof, for six years; and each Senator shall have one vote. The electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislatures.
When vacancies happen in the representation of any State in the Senate, the executive authority of such State shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies: Provided, That the legislature of any State may empower the executive thereof to make temporary appointments until the people fill the vacancies by election as the legislature may direct.

This amendment shall not be so construed as to affect the election or term of any Senator chosen before it becomes valid as part of the Constitution.

Amendment XVIII

Ratified January 16, 1919

Section 1. After one year from the ratification of this article the manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof for beverage purposes is hereby prohibited.

Section 2. The Congress and the several States shall have concurrent power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Section 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress.

Amendment XIX

Ratified August 18, 1920

The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of sex.

Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.
Amendment XX

Ratified January 23, 1933

Section 1. The terms of the President and the Vice President shall end at noon on the 20th day of January, and the terms of Senators and Representatives at noon on the 3rd day of January, of the years in which such terms would have ended if this article had not been ratified; and the terms of their successors shall then begin.

Section 2. The Congress shall assemble at least once in every year, and such meeting shall begin at noon on the 3rd day of January, unless they shall by law appoint a different day.

Section 3. If, at the time fixed for the beginning of the term of the President, the President elect shall have died, the Vice President elect shall become President. If a President shall not have been chosen before the time fixed for the beginning of his term, or if the President elect shall have failed to qualify, then the Vice President elect shall act as President until a President shall have qualified; and the Congress may by law provide for the case wherein neither a President elect nor a Vice President shall have qualified, declaring who shall then act as President, or the manner in which one who is to act shall be selected, and such person shall act accordingly until a President or Vice President shall have qualified.

Section 4. The Congress may by law provide for the case of the death of any of the persons from whom the House of Representatives may choose a President whenever the right of choice shall have devolved upon them, and for the case of the death of any of the persons from whom the Senate may choose a Vice President whenever the right of choice shall have devolved upon them.

Section 5. Sections 1 and 2 shall take effect on the 15th day of October following the ratification of this article.

Section 6. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States within seven years from the date of its submission.
Amendment XXI

Ratified December 5, 1933

Section 1. The eighteenth article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States is hereby repealed.

Section 2. The transportation or importation into any State, Territory, or possession of the United States for delivery or use therein of intoxicating liquors, in violation of the laws thereof, is hereby prohibited.

Section 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by conventions in the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress.

Amendment XXII

Ratified February 27, 1951

Section 1. No person shall be elected to the office of the President more than twice, and no person who has held the office of President, or acted as President, for more than two years of a term to which some other person was elected President shall be elected to the office of President more than once. But this Article shall not apply to any person holding the office of President when this Article was proposed by the Congress, and shall not prevent any person who may be holding the office of President, or acting as President, during the term within which this Article becomes operative from holding the office of President or acting as President during the remainder of such term.

Section 2. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States within seven years from the date of its submission to the States by the Congress.
Amendment XXIII

Ratified March 29, 1961

Section 1. The District constituting the seat of Government of the United States shall appoint in such manner as the Congress may direct:

A number of electors of President and Vice President equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives in Congress to which the District would be entitled if it were a State, but in no event more than the least populous State; they shall be in addition to those appointed by the States, but they shall be considered, for the purposes of the election of President and Vice President, to be electors appointed by a State; and they shall meet in the District and perform such duties as provided by the twelfth article of amendment.

Section 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Amendment XXIV

Ratified January 23, 1964

Section 1. The right of citizens of the United States to vote in any primary or other election for President or Vice President, for electors for President or Vice President, or for Senator or Representative in Congress, shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or any State by reason of failure to pay any poll tax or other tax.

Section 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Amendment XXV

Ratified February 10, 1967

Section 1. In case of the removal of the President from office or of his death or resignation, the Vice President shall become President.

Section 2. Whenever there is a vacancy in the office of the Vice President, the President shall nominate a Vice President who shall take office upon confirmation by a majority vote of both Houses of Congress.
Section 3. Whenever the President transmits to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives his written declaration that he is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office, and until he transmits to them a written declaration to the contrary, such powers and duties shall be discharged by the Vice President as Acting President.

Section 4. Whenever the Vice President and a majority of either the principal officers of the executive departments or of such other body as Congress may by law provide, transmit to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives their written declaration that the President is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office, the Vice President shall immediately assume the powers and duties of the office as Acting President.

Thereafter, when the President transmits to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives his written declaration that no inability exists, he shall resume the powers and duties of his office unless the Vice President and a majority of either the principal officers of the executive department or of such other body as Congress may by law provide, transmit within four days to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives their written declaration that the President is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office. Thereupon Congress shall decide the issue, assembling within forty-eight hours for that purpose if not in session.

If the Congress, within twenty-one days after receipt of the latter written declaration, or, if Congress is not in session, within twenty-one days after Congress is required to assemble, determines by two-thirds vote of both Houses that the President is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office, the Vice President shall continue to discharge the same as Acting President; otherwise, the President shall resume the powers and duties of his office.
Amendment XXVI

Ratified July 1, 1971

Section 1. The right of citizens of the United States, who are eighteen years of age or older, to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of age.

Section 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Amendment XXVII

Ratified May 7, 1992

No law varying the compensation for the services of the Senators and Representatives shall take effect, until an election of Representatives shall have intervened.
FIRST CONGRESS

Proposed Amendments to the Constitution

JOIN RESOLUTION EXCERPT

September 25, 1789

Federal Hall | City of New-York, New York

Bill of Rights

BACKGROUND

As part of a compromise to secure the ratification of the Constitution, Federalists introduced in the first Congress a Bill of Rights as twelve amendments to the new Constitution. Below are the ten amendments that were ultimately ratified.

ANNOTATIONS

Amendment I

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

Amendment II

A well regulated Militia, being necessary to the security of a free State, the right of the people to keep and bear Arms shall not be infringed.

Amendment III

No Soldier shall, in time of peace be quartered in any house, without the consent of the Owner, nor in time of war, but in a manner to be prescribed by law.

NOTES & QUESTIONS

Amendment IV

The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no Warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by Oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized.

Amendment V

No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the Militia, when in actual service in time of War or public danger; nor shall any person be subject for the same offence to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb; nor shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation.

Amendment VI

In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law, and to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation; to be confronted with the witnesses against him; to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor, and to have the Assistance of Counsel for his defence.

Amendment VII

In Suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved, and no fact tried by a jury, shall be otherwise re-examined in any Court of the United States, than according to the rules of the common law.
Amendment VIII

Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted.

Amendment IX

The enumeration in the Constitution, of certain rights, shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people.

Amendment X

The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.
UNIT 4
The American Civil War
1848–1877

UNIT PREVIEW

Structure

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Lesson</th>
<th>1848–1854</th>
<th>The Expansion of Slavery</th>
<th>6-7 classes</th>
<th>p. 7</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Lesson 2</td>
<td>1854–1861</td>
<td>Toward Civil War</td>
<td>6-7 classes</td>
<td>p. 15</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lesson 3</td>
<td>1861–1865</td>
<td>The Civil War</td>
<td>9-10 classes</td>
<td>p. 20</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lesson 4</td>
<td>1865–1877</td>
<td>Reconstruction</td>
<td>4-5 classes</td>
<td>p. 30</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Appendix A</td>
<td>Study Guides, Tests, and Writing Assignment</td>
<td>p. 37</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Appendix B</td>
<td>Primary Sources</td>
<td>p. 59</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Why Teach the American Civil War

"Four score and seven years ago our fathers brought forth on this continent, a new nation, conceived in Liberty, and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal. Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that nation, or any nation so conceived and so dedicated, can long endure."

These famous opening lines from President Abraham Lincoln at Gettysburg express why the Civil War was fought. Whether America, founded in liberty and equality, could long endure depended on whether the nation’s original contradiction, slavery, could be abolished while still preserving the country’s existence as a union. American students must know how the ideas at the heart of their country were undermined by slavery; but they must also learn how heroic Americans committed to America’s founding ideas made great sacrifices and sometimes gave their lives, so that these ideas of liberty and equality might prevail over the dehumanizing tyranny of slavery. And students must learn that, like those in Lincoln’s audience, it is up to each American to oppose tyranny and dehumanization to ensure that “government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth.”

Enduring Ideas from this Unit

1. That slavery was the original contradiction in America, and that slavery is immoral, unjust, dehumanizing, and in violation of the inherent dignity and equal possession of natural rights of each person, as are any ways in which one person or group of people is favored over another due to the color of their skin.

2. That at its heart, the Civil War was fought over the issue of slavery: first, whether slavery would expand in America; next, whether it would be permitted at all; and last, whether the half of the country that opposed slavery would let the country be divided and the injustice to continue elsewhere, instead of fighting to preserve a union that would guarantee liberty and abolish slavery.

3. That President Abraham Lincoln exemplified American statesmanship as he piloted the nation toward fulfillment of its founding ideas, ended the barbarous and tyrannical institution of slavery, and nevertheless abided by the rule of law in doing so.

4. That the period of Reconstruction following the Civil War witnessed a realization of civil rights for freedmen, producing greater degrees of justice and equality that would nevertheless be challenged both during Reconstruction and in following decades.

What Teachers Should Consider

The American Civil War is one of the most important events in American history if only for its attempt to prove, with the blood of hundreds of thousands of Americans, that a people may freely govern themselves and organize themselves to preserve the liberty and equal natural rights of all.

Many students may not know that America was founded on these ideas. Fewer, perhaps, know that America even succeeded in proving these ideas true, striving to live up to them for twenty years, before such progress was eclipsed after Reconstruction. Although subsequent decades would manifest different kinds of failures to guarantee the equal protection of natural rights in certain parts of the country, the Civil War demonstrated that some statesmen and a considerable portion of Americans were committed to carrying out America’s founding promise to the point of bloodshed.

Teachers will greatly benefit from studying not only the war itself but also the thoughts, words, and deeds of the statesman who conducted the war for the Union: President Abraham Lincoln. Lincoln’s ideas and speeches, and his political actions, should constitute for students a model of prudence, both in the public arena and in their own lives. His understanding of the issue of slavery, not merely in the abstract but as it existed in America, can teach students much about their country and its history.
This unit should begin, therefore, with an understanding of slavery as it was found in America in 1848. The teacher should especially emphasize the changes in the status and practice of slavery since the founding in 1776. The teacher should also emphasize changes in legal and public opinion toward the institution since the Constitution went into effect in 1789. In brief, both had entrenched slavery instead of keeping it on the gradual path to extinction, where the founding generation had arguably placed it.

Abraham Lincoln saw these legal and public opinion shifts most clearly, and he saw that such changes struck directly at the ideas on which America was founded. In brief, his entire public career as well as the founding of the Republican Party were devoted to checking this change, to returning slavery to the path of extinction, and to fulfilling the founding ideas of constitutional self-government. Lincoln’s arguments to these ends dominate the crescendo leading to war in spring of 1861. At its heart, this is what the Civil War was about.

The teacher will be able to enrich his or her students by cultivating their imaginations with the events, battles, and images of the Civil War, the bloodiest conflict in which Americans have ever been involved. Strategy, battles, and the general history of the war should be taught in detail. The teacher should learn and share accounts and images of the important moments and figures who contributed to Union victory in 1865. Meanwhile, Lincoln’s careful yet effective maneuverings—both to preserve the Union and to seize the constitutional opportunity afforded him to emancipate the slaves—should be followed in detail.

The unit best concludes with a study of the period known as Reconstruction. Perhaps never in history was so much hoped for, achieved, and mismanaged in so short a period of time with respect to liberty and equality under the law. Students should learn to appreciate both the sacrifices of the Civil War and its immediate achievements during Reconstruction. Nevertheless, students should also learn about the emergence of different kinds of injustice, especially for African Americans living in the former rebel states: injustices that would be perpetuated for a century.

How Teachers Can Learn More

TEXTS

No Property in Man, Sean Wilentz
Battle Cry of Freedom, James McPherson
Abraham Lincoln, Lord Charnwood
Lincoln and the American Founding, Lucas Morel
The Essential Douglass: Selected Writings and Speeches, Frederick Douglass
The Columbian Orator, ed. David Blight
Crisis of the House Divided, Harry Jaffa
A New Birth of Freedom, Harry Jaffa
Reconstruction, Allen Guelzo
The American Heritage: A Reader, ed. Hillsdale College History Faculty
The U.S. Constitution: A Reader, ed. Hillsdale College Politics Faculty (ConstitutionReader.com)
ONLINE COURSES | Online.Hillsdale.edu

The Great American Story
Civil Rights in American History
Constitution 101

Lesson Planning Resources

TEACHER RESOURCES

Land of Hope, Wilfred McClay
A Teacher’s Guide to Land of Hope, Wilfred McClay and John McBride
The Story of the Thirteen Colonies and the Great Republic, H.A. Guerber
A Short History of the Civil War, James Stokesbury

STUDENT RESOURCES

Land of Hope Young Reader’s Edition, Wilfred McClay

PRIMARY SOURCES

Narrative of the Life of Frederick Douglass, Frederick Douglass
Peoria Speech on the Kansas–Nebraska Act, Abraham Lincoln
“House Divided” speech, Abraham Lincoln
Fragment on the Constitution and Union, Abraham Lincoln
First inaugural address, Abraham Lincoln
Emancipation Proclamation, Abraham Lincoln
Gettysburg Address, Abraham Lincoln
Second inaugural address, Abraham Lincoln
13th Amendment
14th Amendment
15th Amendment
Black Code from Opelousas, Louisiana
LESSON PLANS, ASSIGNMENTS, AND FORMATIVE QUIZZES
Lesson 1 — The Expansion of Slavery

1848–1854

6-7 classes

LESSON OBJECTIVE

Students learn how the defenders of slavery began to assert that slavery was a “positive good” that ought to be expanded throughout the country instead of an existing evil that should be contained and kept on the path to extinction.

TEACHER PREPARATION

Create a note outline based on the following:

Student Texts

Land of Hope Young Reader’s Edition
Chapters 19 and 20

Primary Sources
See below.

Teacher Texts

Land of Hope
Pages 156–162

The Story of the Thirteen Colonies and the Great Republic
Pages 150–159

A Teacher’s Guide to Land of Hope
Pages 157–162

Online.Hillsdale.edu

The Great American Story
Lecture 9

Civil Rights in American History
Lecture 3

Constitution 101
Lecture 6

STUDENT PREPARATION

Assignment 1: Students read Land of Hope Young Reader’s Edition, chapters 19 (second half) and 20, and prepare for a reading quiz (provided below).

Assignment 2: Students read and annotate excerpts from Narrative of the Life of Frederick Douglass and answer guiding reading questions (provided in appendix).

CORE CONTENT IN THIS LESSON

Geography & Places

Mason–Dixon Line
California

Mexico
Kansas–Nebraska Territory
Persons
Henry Clay                      Sojourner Truth
John C. Calhoun                Harriet Beecher Stowe
Abraham Lincoln                Harriet Tubman
Zachary Taylor                 William Lloyd Garrison
Millard Fillmore               Franklin Pierce
Frederick Douglass             Stephen Douglas

Terms and Topics
“positive good”                Narrative of the Life of King Cotton                    Frederick Douglass antebellum                      Uncle Tom’s Cabin Gold Rush                       Underground Railroad
secession                       Kansas–Nebraska Act Compromise of 1850              popular sovereignty
Fugitive Slave Law
abolitionism

Primary Sources
Narrative of the Life of Frederick Douglass, Frederick Douglass
Peoria speech on the Kansas-Nebraska Act, Abraham Lincoln

To Know by Heart
“Knowledge makes a man unfit to be a slave.” — Frederick Douglass
"So you're the little woman who wrote the book that started this great war.” — Abraham Lincoln to Harriet Beecher Stowe upon their meeting

Timeline
1846–48            Mexican–American War
1849                California Gold Rush
1850                Compromise of 1850
1854                Kansas–Nebraska Act

Images
Historical figures and events
Photographs and depictions of the life of slaves and the horrors of slavery
Maps of the free versus slave-state breakdown when changes occur
Pictures of first–edition copies of Narrative of the Life of Frederick Douglass and Uncle Tom’s Cabin
Statue of Frederick Douglass (on the Hillsdale College campus)
Copy of newspaper in which Lincoln’s Peoria speech was first printed
STORIES FOR THE AMERICAN HEART

- Biographies and the roles of Frederick Douglass, Harriet Tubman, and Abraham Lincoln prior to the Civil War
- Childhood biography of Abraham Lincoln
- Scenes from Narrative of the Life of Frederick Douglass and Uncle Tom’s Cabin
- Frederick Douglass’s letter to his former master, Thomas Auld, 1848
- Actions of Harriet Tubman and the Underground Railroad
- Frederick Douglass’s letter to Harriet Tubman, 1868

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

- What general prediction about the future of slavery did the Framers of the Constitution make?
- What technology invented in 1793, four years after the Constitution went into effect, revolutionized the cotton industry, resulting in a revived demand for slave labor and undermining the Founders’ predictions regarding slavery?
- What was life like for slaves in the South? What was a slave auction like?
- What was John C. Calhoun’s idea that slavery was a “positive good”? How would Frederick Douglass have replied to John C. Calhoun’s assertions?
- How did the idea of slavery as a “positive good” challenge the Constitution’s stance on slavery and the path on which the Founding generation had set slavery?
- How did John C. Calhoun reject the ideas of the Declaration of Independence in arguing for slavery?
- Why, politically, did the question of the expansion of slavery become so important for southern states?
- What were the terms of the Compromise of 1850? Was it really a “compromise”? Why or why not?
- What were the various kinds of abolitionist activities engaged in by Northern abolitionists?
- What roles did Frederick Douglass, William Lloyd Garrison, Harriet Tubman, and Harriet Beecher Stowe play in the abolitionist movement?
- How did the Underground Railroad work?
- What was the Kansas–Nebraska Act do?
- What was the idea of “popular sovereignty”? Where did the idea come from and why?
- Question from the U.S. Civics Test:
  - Question 75: What group of people was taken and sold as slaves?

KEYS TO THE LESSON

The status of slavery in 1848 was markedly different than it was when the Founders crafted the Constitution in 1787. The gradual decline in the profitability of slavery, evident during the founding, was forecast to continue—but this trend reversed direction upon the invention of the cotton gin in 1793. From then on, the demand for slave labor in the Southern states rapidly compounded. But the free population in the South was vastly outstripped by the burgeoning population of the North. If nothing changed, demographics and geography would eventually give Americans living in the North the power to limit slavery through law and perhaps even abolish it entirely through a constitutional amendment. Slaveholders in the South needed to change this trajectory by expanding slavery westward into the territories. Students need to understand that to justify such expansion, slavery advocates in the South had to change the opinion of Northerners: either to believe slavery to be morally beneficial or, at the very least, to view slavery as merely another option to be decided by the majority, what Stephen Douglas called “popular sovereignty.” Moral relativism, the idea that “might makes right,” and a belief in unfettered democracy through the vote of the majority were the slaveholders’ pillars in arguing to preserve slavery. Students should understand that Abraham Lincoln favored government “of the people, by the people, and for the people” but also saw how popular sovereignty’s neutrality concerning slavery violated both equality and consent, as well as liberty itself. Lincoln went about waging an oratorical war in defense of objective standards of truth and justice, of good and evil. They should also learn how abolitionists, of both African and European descent, continued to publicize the horrors of slavery for Americans in Northern states far removed from witnessing slavery firsthand. Abolitionists also shepherded escaped slaves to freedom in the Northern states and Canada.

Teachers might best plan and teach the Expansion of Slavery with emphasis on the following approaches:

- Have students consider the status of slavery over the initial decades of the country’s history. At the founding, slavery was generally either openly condemned by those in the North or defended by those in the South. Its toleration by northern delegates and others who were opposed to slavery at the time of the founding was for the sake of a unity that even many abolitionists believed was the only eventual path toward abolition. The Declaration of Independence established the country on principles of equality that could and would be cited to demand the end of slavery, the Northwest Ordinance had prohibited the expansion of slavery, the Constitution refused to give legal standing to the institution, and many states had restricted or abolished slavery outright. Lastly, many leading Founders, including those who held slaves, believed that the profitability of slavery was gradually but decisively waning and that slavery would die out on its own in a relatively short period of time. However, the invention of the cotton gin by Eli Whitney four years after the adoption of the Constitution greatly increased the profitability of slavery in the cotton-growing states of the South and thereby create a significant (and regional) interest in perpetuating the institution of slavery. The new economics of slavery that would grow out of the cotton gin and the vast cotton industry questioned the assumption and changed the projection of the founding generation concerning the viability and eventual demise of slavery.

- Help students to imagine and understand the dehumanizing and brutal tyranny of slavery. Although students should understand that the ways in which various slaveholders treated their slaves varied, from the downright barbaric to more familial—in order to see how many slavery apologists tried to justify slavery—they must nevertheless understand that the sheer fact that some people owned other human beings is and always will be morally reprehensible. Moreover, as Frederick Douglass argued, slavery actually dehumanized the master as well as the slave.

- Explain to students how the growth in population in the North compared to the South would eventually allow Northern states to restrict slavery further and perhaps even abolish it with a constitutional amendment. Slaveholders recognized that they had to expand the number of slave states if they were to prohibit such actions by Northerners. The challenge, however, was that they needed Northern states to acquiesce to such expansion. To do so, they appealed to the argument that slavery was a positive good, as articulated in the writings of John C. Calhoun. Calhoun explicitly rejected the American founding principles as captured in the Declaration of Independence.

- Teach students that despite this attempted defense of slavery, the institution almost certainly weakened the South as a whole while supporting the lifestyle of the elite few. For all other Southerners, slavery depreciated the value and wages of labor by non-slaves, limited innovation, and thwarted economic development in the South. The Civil War would reveal the weakness of the position in which Southerners’ insistence on slavery had placed them.

- Consider with students that much of the tremendous wealth and prosperity that America has generated throughout its history is not founded on the economics of slavery. Any degree of prosperity generated by slavery is dwarfed by that produced from Americans’ unprecedented freedom to innovate and invest, the ability to patent ideas and inventions, the protection of private property rights, and above all the productive work of citizens within a free marketplace governed by the rule of law and consent of the governed. The great achievements of individual families through the Homestead Act of 1862 demonstrates the point, both for immigrants to America and for the freedmen who would also take advantage of such freedom and opportunity after the Civil War. In brief, the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution are the catalysts for allowing human beings to unleash the most prosperous and technologically advanced economy in history. A simple comparison of the Northern to the Southern economy, infrastructure, and society before and during the Civil War illustrates the case. To make this observation of course does not mean there were not businesses and individuals in the North who profited handsomely from slavery.

- Teach students how the slavery issue nearly resulted in civil war over the question of expanding slavery into the territories acquired from Mexico after the Mexican-American War, brought to a head when California, after a population surge during the California Gold Rush, applied to become a state without slavery. California’s lone admission as a free state would have increased Northern power in Congress and the Electoral College against Southern states on the issue of slavery.

- Spend some time discussing the Compromise of 1850, which was not really a “compromise” in the real sense of the word. A “compromise” would involve all parties sacrificing something of their position to achieve a common outcome. The Compromise of 1850, however, was not one bill but five separate bills that had five separate lines of voting. Students should understand what each of these acts did, especially the Fugitive Slave Law. This orchestration begun by Henry Clay but completed by Stephen Douglas may have avoided war in the short term, but it only deepened and delayed the divisions tearing at the country over the next ten years.

- Ask students about the effects of the Fugitive Slave Law, which compelled Northerners to assist in capturing escaped slaves and encouraged the practice of abducting free African Americans living in the North and forcing them into slavery.

- Teach students about the various parts of the abolitionist movement and its major figures. Students should learn that there was great diversity among abolitionists, especially in their underlying views about America’s governing principles and the best way to abolish slavery. For instance, William Lloyd Garrison actually agreed with the slaveholder reading of the Constitution while Frederick Douglass moved from this view to that of Abraham Lincoln that the Constitution was pro-freedom. One might read aloud with students some portions of Douglass’s Narrative of the Life of Frederick Douglass and discuss Harriet Beecher Stowe’s Uncle Tom’s Cabin, important works in making Northerners, most of whom had never seen slavery in practice, aware of its moral evil. Other abolitionists, such as Harriet Tubman and those running the Underground Railroad, heroically worked to lead escaped slaves to freedom. In general, most abolitionists appealed to the principles of equality stated in the Declaration of Independence in justifying their cause.
- Tell students the childhood and political biography of Abraham Lincoln, to show how he rose from poverty and obscurity to become arguably America’s greatest president.
- Consider having students learn what the Kansas-Nebraska Act did. Focus specifically on the idea of popular sovereignty as used by Stephen Douglas, and the idea that right and wrong amount to the mere will of the majority opinion, which happens to be what many people today believe constitutes truth and the moral rightness of political decisions.
- Have students read and answer guiding questions on parts of Lincoln’s speech on the Kansas-Nebraska Act in response to the act of this name. Students should understand that Lincoln saw slavery to be, above all, a moral question, and one that every American ought to take seriously as such. Lincoln also believed that moral relativism over the question of slavery, as conveyed in the idea of popular sovereignty, was antithetical to the ideas of the Declaration of Independence, and that slavery was simply a form of majority tyranny, the very danger latent in democracy that the Founders had warned against. Finally, Lincoln condemned the Kansas-Nebraska Act as achieving a complete reversal of the stance the Constitution, the Northwest Ordinance, and the founding generation had toward slavery: that it should be contained until it was abolished and by no means allowed to spread.

Strengthening Understanding: Post-Lesson Assignments

Assignment 1: Explain how the expansion of slavery became a major political issue following the Mexican–American War (1–2 paragraphs).

Assignment 2: Retell the biography of one of the following: Frederick Douglass, Harriet Tubman, or Abraham Lincoln (2–3 paragraphs).
Reading Quiz

DIRECTIONS: Answer each question.

1. The acquisition of western lands following the war with Mexico and the discovery of gold in which present-day state brought the issue of slavery’s expansion to a head in the late 1840s?

2. What was the name of the compromise bill regarding the expansion of slavery that Congress passed in 1850?

3. What happened in the Kansas Territory following the Kansas-Nebraska Act?

4. Which party was created to oppose the expansion of slavery into the territories?

5. Who reentered politics in order to oppose Stephen Douglas’ idea of letting voters decide about expanding slavery in the territories?
Unit 4 — Formative Quiz 1

Covering Lesson 1
10-15 minutes

DIRECTIONS: Answer each question in at least one complete sentence.

1. What technology invented in 1793, four years after the Constitution was adopted, revolutionized the cotton industry, resulting in a revived demand for slave labor and undermining the Founders’ predictions regarding slavery?

2. What was John C. Calhoun’s idea that slavery was a “positive good”?

3. What were the terms of the Compromise of 1850? Was it really a “compromise”? Why or why not?

4. How did the Underground Railroad work?

5. What was the idea of “popular sovereignty”? Where did the idea come from and why?
Lesson 2 — Toward Civil War
1854–1861

6-7 classes

LESSON OBJECTIVE

Students learn how Abraham Lincoln and the new Republican Party’s opposition to the expansion of slavery led Southern states to secede from the Union, resulting in civil war.

TEACHER PREPARATION

Create a note outline based on the following:

Student Texts
- Land of Hope Young Reader’s Edition
- Primary Sources

Teacher Texts
- Land of Hope
- The Story of the Thirteen Colonies and the Great Republic
- A Teacher’s Guide to Land of Hope

Online.Hillsdale.edu
- The Great American Story
- Civil Rights in American History
- Constitution 101

STUDENT PREPARATION

Assignment 1: Students read and annotate Lincoln’s “House Divided” speech and answer guiding reading questions (provided in appendix).

Assignment 2: Students read and annotate Lincoln’s First inaugural address and answer guiding reading questions (provided in appendix).

CORE CONTENT IN THIS LESSON

Geography & Places
- Kansas–Nebraska Territory
- Fort Sumter
- Harpers Ferry

Persons
- Abraham Lincoln
- Stephen Douglas
- Frederick Douglass
- James Buchanan
- Franklin Pierce
- John Brown
Terms and Topics
- Kansas–Nebraska Act
- Bleeding Kansas
- a house divided
- popular sovereignty
- Democratic Party
- Republican Party
- Dred Scott v. Sandford
- Lincoln–Douglas Debates
- objective truth
- “don’t care,” “I care not”
- moral relativism
- majority tyranny
- “apple and frame” metaphor
- Wilberforce University

Primary Sources
- “House Divided” speech, Abraham Lincoln
- “Fragment on the Constitution and Union,” Abraham Lincoln
- First inaugural address, Abraham Lincoln

To Know by Heart
- “A house divided against itself cannot stand.” — Abraham Lincoln, paraphrasing from the words of Jesus of Nazareth in the Bible

Timeline
- 1854 Kansas–Nebraska Act; Republican Party founded
- 1860 Election of Abraham Lincoln; South Carolina secedes
- April 12, 1861 Attack on Fort Sumter

Images
- Historical figures and events
- Depictions of the Lincoln–Douglas Debates
- Campaign materials
- Map of the 1860 election results
- Fort Sumter

Stories for the American Heart
- The breakdown of civil dialogue resulting in Preston Brooks’s attack on Charles Sumner
- What the Lincoln–Douglas Debates were like in terms of setting, format, length, etc., especially compared to civil dialogue and debate today
- The scenes at the nominating conventions for each party in 1860
- John Brown’s letter to his pastor, 1859, and last words before execution
- The young girl who suggested to Abraham Lincoln that he grow a beard
- The first shots fired on Fort Sumter and its surrender
QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

- What was Bleeding Kansas, what was it like, and why did it happen?
- According to Abraham Lincoln, how does Roger Taney’s majority opinion in Dred Scott v. Sandford threaten to make slavery legal anywhere in the union?
- Why did Abraham Lincoln argue that Stephen Douglas’s personal stance of how he does not care (“I care not”) how a state or territory votes on slavery is dangerous and indefensible? How was this connected to Lincoln’s predictions regarding the Dred Scott v. Sandford decision?
- Why did Abraham Lincoln believe popular sovereignty without an argument on the morality of slavery amounted to majority tyranny?
- What question and answer did Abraham Lincoln consider to be the solution to the issue of the expansion of slavery?
- Why did Lincoln see the question of the morality of slavery to be at the heart of America’s founding?
- How did Abraham Lincoln end up winning the 1860 election?
- Explain Abraham Lincoln’s arguments about the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution as explained in his “apple of gold, frame of silver” metaphor.
- How did Abraham Lincoln navigate the period between his election and the first shots at Fort Sumter? How did the country descend into war during this period?
- How was slavery the true cause of the Civil War?
- What was the Southern states’ argument for the constitutionality of secession?
- What was Abraham Lincoln’s argument that secession was unconstitutional, especially as articulated in his First inaugural address?
- What was important about Virginia’s decision to secede? How did it come about?
- What were Abraham Lincoln’s goals with respect to the Union and slavery at the onset of the Civil War? What were his priorities and why?
- Why and how did Abraham Lincoln need to keep the Border States in the Union?
- Question from the U.S. Civics Test:
  - Question 94: Abraham Lincoln is famous for many things. Name one.

KEYS TO THE LESSON

The passage of the Kansas-Nebraska Act in 1854 sparked the little-known Abraham Lincoln to redouble his efforts to engage in the growing national debate over slavery in America. He saw a tremendous threat in the argument put forward by the bill’s sponsor, Stephen Douglas, that slavery was not a moral question but rather one that should simply be decided by the will of the majority. From 1854 to the outbreak of the Civil War in 1861, Lincoln would combat the idea that the morality of slavery was to be determined merely by majority opinion. Students should come to see this arc to Lincoln’s words and deeds. They should understand how he took up and articulated the heart of the matter regarding the morality of slavery and that slavery struck at America’s founding idea that all men are created equal. Roger Taney’s majority opinion in Dred Scott v. Sandford interpreted the Constitution to legitimize slavery, and Lincoln argued against both popular sovereignty and Taney’s position throughout his debates with Douglas. The moral question regarding slavery, manifesting itself in the practical questions of the expansion of slavery, is what a civil war would be fought over. After all, the formal move to secession—a constitutionally debatable claim also at issue in the approach to war—and the war itself was triggered in response to Lincoln being elected president on the position that slavery was wrong and should not be expanded.
Teachers might best plan and teach Toward Civil War with emphasis on the following approaches:

- Emphasize the breakdown in civil dialogue in the several violent episodes related to slavery preceding the Civil War: Bleeding Kansas, Preston Brooks’s attack on Charles Sumner, and John Brown’s raid on the federal armory at Harpers Ferry. Go into some detail to bring these events alive for students. For example, it was Colonel Robert E. Lee who led federal troops to put down Brown’s uprising.

- Clarify the party alignment that was emerging in 1854. The Democratic Party was dividing between those who favored the principle of “popular sovereignty,” in which a state or territory could vote to allow slavery or not, and those who explicitly favored slavery. Meanwhile, the Republican Party was founded in 1854 in opposition to laws encouraging the spread of slavery. The split of the Democratic Party and the consolidation of the Republican Party in 1860 assured the election of Lincoln and significantly contributed to the coming of the Civil War.

- Consider Abraham Lincoln’s arguments against Roger Taney’s majority opinion in Dred Scott v. Sandford that asserted that slaves are not humans but only property, and that the Constitution protects their enslavement just as it does any other property. Lincoln points out that Taney’s ruling rejected the Founders’ view on slavery and would lead, in tandem with Stephen Douglas’s popular sovereignty, to the spread of slavery throughout the country. By extension, this reasoning would also allow for other forms of majority tyranny.

- Help students think through Lincoln’s understanding of the morality of slavery and its relationship to the founding ideas of America: that all men are created equal, have unalienable rights, and that legitimate government is based on the consent of the governed. Students should see that the practical question regarding the expansion of slavery ultimately turned on the moral status of slavery.

- Teach students about the arguments in the Seventh Lincoln-Douglas Debate and discuss them alongside Lincoln’s “House Divided” speech in class. Consider the apparently benign stance that Stephen Douglas takes in his position of popular sovereignty, that he does not care about what a group of people does regarding slavery, so long as the majority opinion decides it. Students should be asked why this is problematic.

- Present the settings and atmosphere of the Lincoln-Douglas Debates as imaginatively as possible.

- Help students to understand the various pressures that were mounting on the Southern states during the 1850s, from increased abolitionist activities to the sheer industrial might of the Northern states to a burgeoning plantation debt as other countries produced more cotton and the price of cotton fell as a result.

- Tell students the stories of Lincoln’s speeches and his reception during these years, including the founding of the Republican Party and the various conventions in 1856 and especially 1860. Students should sense the drama of the times.

- Have students read Abraham Lincoln’s “Fragment on the Constitution and Union.” Help students understand the arguments with respect to the American founding and slavery.

- Provide a clear overview of events between Lincoln’s election and South Carolina’s attack on Fort Sumter in Charleston Harbor. Students should learn both Lincoln and the South’s accounts of what happened.

- There were, of course, other factors and dimensions that impelled each side to fight the Civil War. Students should be familiar with these, as well as the view of most Southerners that the war was about defending what they saw as the rights of their states. This view and Lincoln’s counterview and incumbent duty to preserve the Union and Constitution may have been the occasion for the Civil War, but students should understand that the war was, at its heart, fought over whether slavery would be permitted to spread and so remain indefinitely, or be restricted and returned to the path to extinction on which the founding generation had left it. This question was, in turn, based on the morality of slavery, which Abraham Lincoln would later maintain in his Gettysburg Address was a question about the rejection or fulfillment of the ideas on which America was founded.

STRENGTHENING UNDERSTANDING: POST-LESSON ASSIGNMENTS

Assignment 1: Explain how Abraham Lincoln believed Americans must defend the principles of America by preventing the spread of slavery (1 paragraph).

Assignment 2: Retell the story of how Abraham Lincoln successfully became president and how this led to the outbreak of the Civil War (1–2 paragraphs).
Lesson 3 — The Civil War

1861–1865

9-10 classes

LESSON OBJECTIVE

Students learn about the major figures, common soldiers, strategy, and specific battles of the American Civil War, including a close study of the statesmanship of President Abraham Lincoln.

TEACHER PREPARATION

Create a note outline based on the following:

Student Texts
Land of Hope Young Reader’s Edition
Chapters 21 and 22
Primary Sources
See below.

Teacher Texts
Land of Hope
Pages 173–189
The Story of the Thirteen Colonies and the Great Republic
Pages 170–195
A Short History of the Civil War
As helpful
A Teacher’s Guide to Land of Hope
Pages 179–187

Online.Hillsdale.edu
The Great American Story
Lecture 10
Constitution 101
Lecture 7

STUDENT PREPARATION

Assignment 1: Students read Land of Hope Young Reader’s Edition, chapter 21, and prepare for a reading quiz (provided below).

Assignment 2: Students read Land of Hope Young Reader’s Edition, chapter 22, and prepare for a reading quiz (provided below).

Assignment 3: Students read and annotate Lincoln’s Gettysburg Address and Second inaugural address and answer guiding reading questions (provided in appendix).

CORE CONTENT IN THIS LESSON

Geography & Places
Fort Sumter
Confederacy
Union
Richmond
West Virginia
Border States

Persons

Abraham Lincoln
Jefferson Davis
Robert E. Lee
George McClellan
Thomas “Stonewall” Jackson
Clara Barton

Ulysses S. Grant
William Tecumseh Sherman
Martin Delany
Robert Gould Shaw
John Wilkes Booth

Terms and Topics

secession
“states’ rights”
Confederate States of America
railroads
minié ball
Army of the Potomac
Army of Northern Virginia
American Red Cross
Anaconda Plan
Battle of First Manassas/Bull Run
ironclads
USS Monitor*
CSS Virginia
trench warfare
Peninsula Campaign
abolition
Battle of Antietam
Battle of Fort Wagner
Battle of Vicksburg
Battle of Gettysburg
Pickett’s Charge
54th Massachusetts Regiment
Peace Democrats
scorched earth warfare
Sherman’s “March to the Sea”
Siege of Richmond

Primary Sources

Emancipation Proclamation, Abraham Lincoln
Gettysburg Address, Abraham Lincoln
Second inaugural address, Abraham Lincoln

To Know by Heart

“Battle Hymn of the Republic,” first stanza — Julia Ward Howe
Gettysburg Address — Abraham Lincoln
"So Atlanta is ours, and fairly won.” — William Tecumseh Sherman telegram announcing the fall of Atlanta to Abraham Lincoln
“O Captain! My Captain!” — Walt Whitman

A previous version referred to the USS Merrimack instead of the USS Monitor.
Timeline

1860  Abraham Lincoln elected; South Carolina and six states secede
1861–65  Civil War
   April 12, 1861  Attack on Fort Sumter
   September 22, 1862  Abraham Lincoln announces
                      the Emancipation Proclamation
1863  Emancipation Proclamation takes effect
   July 1–3, 1863  Battle of Gettysburg
1864 (Fall)  Fall of Atlanta
1864  Abraham Lincoln reelected
   April 9, 1865  Robert E. Lee surrenders at Appomattox
   April 14–15, 1865  Abraham Lincoln assassinated;
                      Andrew Johnson becomes president

Images

Historical figures and events
Landscape pictures of geographic places featured in this lesson
Soldier uniforms, weaponry, flags
Depictions and photographs of figures at various scenes and moments and in battle
Maps: overall strategies, specific battles
Relevant forts
Battle scene depictions and photographs
Medical equipment
Reenactment photos
Pictures of the Emancipation Proclamation, Gettysburg Address, etc.
Robert Gould Shaw and the 54th Massachusetts Regiment Memorial
Lincoln Memorial
Statue of Abraham Lincoln (Hillsdale College campus)

STORIES FOR THE AMERICAN HEART

- Biographies and roles of Abraham Lincoln, Jefferson Davis, Robert E. Lee, Ulysses S. Grant, and William Tecumseh Sherman in the Civil War
- Robert E. Lee’s denial of Abraham Lincoln’s offer to command the Union forces
- How Stonewall Jackson got his nickname
- Battle of the ironclads
- William Child’s letter to his wife after the Battle of Antietam, 1862
- Clara Barton’s letter to her cousin, Vira, December 1862
- The killing of Stonewall Jackson by friendly fire
- John Burrill’s letter from Gettysburg to his fiancée, Ell, 1863
- Fighting at Little Round Top and Pickett’s Charge
- George Pickett’s letter from Gettysburg to his fiancée, La Salle Corbell, 1863
- The writing and delivery of the Gettysburg Address
- Robert E. Lee’s surrender to Ulysses S. Grant at Appomattox Court House
- Robert E. Lee’s Farewell Address to his Army, General Order No. 9, 1865
- Abraham Lincoln’s cabinet meeting regarding healing with the South just hours before his assassination
- Assassination of Abraham Lincoln at Ford’s Theatre and subsequent hunt for John Wilkes Booth
- Abraham Lincoln’s funeral train

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

- What were the advantages and disadvantages that the Union and the Confederacy each faced at the outset of the war?
- What was the style of warfare in the Civil War, including battlefield strategy, weapons, ammunition, medical care, etc.?
- What were the overall strategies that each side pursued in the course of the war?
- How did each of the following battles begin, what happened in them, and what was their significance: Antietam, Vicksburg, Gettysburg, Sherman’s March to the Sea?
- What were the problems characteristic of most of the Union’s generals from 1861 until the Battle of Gettysburg in the Virginia and Maryland theater of war?
- How did Abraham Lincoln successfully approach his decision to issue the Emancipation Proclamation?
- What was General Lee’s strategic purpose for taking the war north, into Pennsylvania?
- In summary, what did Abraham Lincoln argue in the Gettysburg Address?
- Why were reelection prospects for Abraham Lincoln so poor for much of 1864?
- What were the most significant moments in the Civil War?
- What factors, figures, moments, etc., led the Union to victory?
- What were Abraham Lincoln’s plans for reconstruction following the Civil War, as outlined in his Second Inaugural Address and from what we know of his private meetings in the war’s final weeks?
- Questions from the U.S. Civics Test:
  - Question 92: Name the U.S. war between the North and the South.
  - Question 93: The Civil War had many important events. Name one.
  - Question 94: Abraham Lincoln is famous for many things. Name one.
  - Question 95: What did the Emancipation Proclamation do?
  - Question 96: What U.S. war ended slavery?

KEYS TO THE LESSON

The American Civil War may be the defining event in American history. The outcome of the Civil War determined whether the nation would live according to the principles of liberty, equality under law, and self-government, or reject those truths in favor of slavery, inequality, and tyrannical rule. Students should appreciate this about the bloodiest conflict in their nation’s history. They should also know the stories of the heroic actions both leaders and of ordinary citizens in that war, understand the strategies employed in general and in specific battles, and consider the key moments and factors that led the Union to ultimate victory. Additionally, students have an unmatched opportunity to understand statesmanship through the careful study of Abraham Lincoln’s thoughts, speeches, and actions as he led the nation through the Civil War.
Teachers might best plan and teach the Civil War with emphasis on the following approaches:

- Have students consider the arguments by the South and by Abraham Lincoln regarding the idea of “states’ rights” and the constitutionality of secession, particularly by reading and discussing Abraham Lincoln’s first inaugural address. Students should understand that there is no such thing as a “state right,” since rights belong only to persons. States (as governments) possess powers (not rights), as outlined in their state and in the federal Constitution, which the states are to use to protect the rights and the common good of their citizens (including from encroachment by the federal government by appealing to the Constitution itself). Lincoln’s first inaugural address presents the case for how secession is unconstitutional and how he, having taken an oath in his office as president, can and must preserve the Constitution and Union.

- Help students to see how the decision by Southern states to secede was largely determined by a small elite or even merely by governors. In Virginia, for example, the governor himself made the decision to secede without consulting the legislature. Moreover, insofar as slavery was the chief interest the South wanted to preserve, only a minority of Southerners owned slaves and even a smaller minority owned a large number of slaves on plantations. The majority of Southerners were not slaveholders and while fighting for their states would preserve slavery, many common Southerners fought for the argument of states’ rights rather than to preserve the institution of slavery.

- Emphasize that the governing state known as the Confederacy was founded on the rejection of the principle of equality from the Declaration of Independence, and on an argument of the inequality of races, as asserted in Alexander Stephens’s “Cornerstone Speech.”

- Teach students about the delicacy with which Abraham Lincoln had to approach the border states (slave states that remained in the Union) and why this delicacy was needed. Have students work with Lincoln’s first inaugural address, one purpose of which was to keep wavering states in the Union.

- Explain that Abraham Lincoln’s first goal in fighting the Civil War was to preserve the Union. It is important that students understand Lincoln’s reasoning. He was against slavery and wanted it abolished, but his constitutional obligation was to preserve the Union. If he acted otherwise, he would violate the Constitution and the rule of law, becoming no better than the seceding states and forfeiting his moral authority as the defender of the rule of law. Students should also know that while Lincoln did not believe he could abolish slavery alone or that abolishing slavery was the purpose for fighting the war, he nonetheless believed, like many of the Founders, that the only way to abolish slavery would be if the Union were preserved.

- Have students think through and compare the various advantages and disadvantages each side had at the outset of the war and how these shifted during the war. Having students take simple notes, as a “T-Chart” can be effective for this part of the lesson.

- Build students’ familiarity with the style of warfare in the mid-19th century, and show them plenty of images to do so. Students need this foundation for their subsequent study of battles. This helps them to imagine and understand what happens in battle and to appreciate the bravery of soldiers fighting on both sides.

- Present to students explanations of each side’s strategy at various stages of the war and the tactics and battle plans employed in specific battles. Of special note are the Union’s Anaconda Plan, James Longstreet’s development of trench warfare, the Mississippi theater of war and the siege and battle of Vicksburg, and Robert E. Lee’s strategy preceding Gettysburg, among others.
- As with any conflict, dwell on the key contributions of both leaders and common soldiers in the war, especially Robert E. Lee, Stonewall Jackson, George McClellan, George Meade, Ulysses S. Grant, and William Tecumseh Sherman.

- Share with students the unity found within the Union ranks in the cause of the United States and eventually the abolition of slavery. 1.3 million Union men of European ancestry fought in the Civil War and 180,000 African American men volunteered for the Union forces, making up nearly 10 percent of the Union army. Of all Union soldiers, 600,000 were wounded and approximately 360,000 Union men were killed.

- Teach the war, especially the major battles and military campaigns, in some detail. Students should understand how the battles came to be, the key stories, factors, and moments from the battle itself, and the significance of their various outcomes on subsequent events. Employ battle maps often and have students track battles and campaigns. A Short History of the Civil War is a great aid for teaching these battles; students may enjoy reading select accounts of these battles from this work, too.

- Help students to note the major themes running through the early years of the war, namely how Confederate commanders carried the day repeatedly despite the North’s growing advantages, and how they exhibited military leadership and decisiveness. Students should also appreciate how unpopular Abraham Lincoln was in the North during much of the war.

- Have students come to know Abraham Lincoln, in his personal life, interior thoughts and troubles, and his great love for his country. Students should also engage frequently with the reasoning and decision-making that marks Lincoln as being perhaps the greatest statesman in American history.

- Based on his writings, words, and deeds, show students how Abraham Lincoln always believed in the equal human dignity of African Americans and grew over the course of his career to see that African Americans were equal socially as well, a growth in understanding that he knew more Americans would need to develop in order for African Americans to be treated truly as equals. As his own experience showed, he believed this would take some time, particularly in slave-holding states.

- Note that Congress (with the support of Lincoln) outlawed slavery in Washington, DC, in 1862, an action made numerically possible with the absence of Southern congressmen.

- Read aloud in class the Emancipation Proclamation and teach students the technicalities Abraham Lincoln navigated in thinking of it, drawing it up, and the timing of its promulgation. He had to retain the border states, abide by the Constitution, achieve victory, and earn the support of public opinion in order for slaves to be effectively freed—and he did it all. Students should understand that Lincoln’s justification for freeing the slaves involved exercising his executive powers as commander-in-chief of the armed forces during an armed rebellion. This is why Lincoln only had the authority to apply the Emancipation Proclamation to those states in actual rebellion, why it could not be applied to slave-holding border states not in rebellion, and why he knew that after the war, an amendment to the Constitution would be necessary to bring emancipation to all the states and make it permanent.

- Have students read and hold a seminar conversation on the Gettysburg Address. It is a magnificent work of oratory, but it also gets at the heart of the American founding and the ideas that maintain the United States. It also shows the importance of defending and advancing those ideas, both in the Civil War and in our own day, as is incumbent on every American citizen. Questions on page 187 of A Teacher’s Guide to Land of Hope may be helpful.
Note the importance of Abraham Lincoln’s choice of Ulysses S. Grant as General-in-Chief of the entire Union Army. Grant’s decisiveness combined with William Tecumseh Sherman’s boldness proved essential in prosecuting the war from late 1863 onward.

Recap the war by considering major statistics, including the number of causalities and deaths on each side. Ask what stance Americans today should have towards those who fought in the Civil War, distinguishing between Northern soldiers and Southern soldiers. When considering Southern soldiers, be sure to note the tragic death of so many Americans, even if they were fighting for a confederate government dedicated to preserving slavery. As noted previously, most of those doing the actual fighting for the South did not own slaves and believed that they were fighting for their country as well.

Read and have a seminar conversation about Abraham Lincoln’s second inaugural address. Lincoln addresses many topics within the speech, both reflecting on the war and outlining a plan for after the war. In some respects, this speech is “part two” of what Lincoln began to assert in the Gettysburg Address. One of the main ideas Lincoln suggests, however, is that the Civil War was a punishment for the whole nation. This punishment was not necessarily for the mere existence of slavery but because, unlike the founding generation, the nation had in the time since the founding not continued to work for the abolition of the evil of slavery. While no country will ever be perfect, a people should work to make sure its laws do not promote the perpetuation of a practice that violates the equal natural rights of its fellow citizens.

To set up the following unit, outline for students Abraham Lincoln’s preliminary plans for reconstruction, and impress upon students the immense historical consequences of Lincoln’s assassination.

STRENGTHENING UNDERSTANDING: POST-LESSON ASSIGNMENTS

Assignment 1: By considering his speeches and the Emancipation Proclamation, explain how Abraham Lincoln expanded the purposes of the Civil War from preserving the Union and preventing the spread of slavery to abolishing slavery itself (1–2 paragraphs).

Assignment 2: Recite by heart the Gettysburg Address.

Assignment 3: Retell the history of the Civil War (3–4 paragraphs).
Reading Quiz

DIRECTIONS: Answer each question.

1. Why was it important that the South fired the first shots of the Civil War?

2. For which reasons did the Union have the overall advantage at the beginning of the war?

3. What was the “Anaconda plan” that Union General Winfield Scott developed (named after the tropical snake that strangled its prey to death)?

4. Name one Confederate general you read about and one Union general you read about (besides Winfield Scott).

5. What was the name of the order given by President Lincoln that freed the slaves in the rebelling states?
Reading Quiz

DIRECTIONS: Answer each question.

1. Which Confederate general was killed by his own soldiers when they mistook him for an enemy?

2. Which famous and bloody battle in Pennsylvania marked a defeat for the Confederacy that stopped their incursion into Union territory?

3. Who was the key Union general Lincoln found to lead successfully the Union armies from 1864 onward?

4. What did General William Tecumseh Sherman do in Georgia?

5. What happened on April 14, 1865 (Good Friday), at Ford’s Theatre in Washington, DC?
DIRECTIONS: Answer each question in at least one complete sentence.

1. What was the style of warfare in the Civil War, including battlefield strategy, weapons, ammunition, medical care, etc.?

2. What were the problems characteristic of most of the Union’s generals from 1861 until the Battle of Gettysburg in the Virginia and Maryland theatre of war?

3. How did Abraham Lincoln successfully approach his decision to issue the Emancipation Proclamation?

4. Why were reelection prospects for Abraham Lincoln so poor for much of 1864?

5. What were Abraham Lincoln’s plans for reconstruction following the Civil War, as outlined in his Second inaugural address and from what we know of his private meetings in the war’s final weeks?
Lesson 4 — Reconstruction

1865–1877

4-5 classes

LESSON OBJECTIVE

Students learn about the remarkable fulfillment of civil rights for freedmen during Reconstruction despite the objections of some and then the reversal of many of those realizations in for confederate states during Reconstruction and after its end in 1877.

TEACHER PREPARATION

Create a note outline based on the following:

Student Texts

Land of Hope Young Reader’s Edition

Primary Sources

Chapters 23 and 24

See below.

Teacher Texts

Land of Hope

The Story of the Thirteen Colonies and the Great Republic

A Teacher’s Guide to Land of Hope

Pages 190–204

Pages 196–202

Pages 188–199

Online.Hillsdale.edu

The Great American Story

Civil Rights in American History

Lecture 11

Lectures 4 and 5

STUDENT PREPARATION

Assignment 1: Students read Land of Hope Young Reader’s Edition, chapters 23 and 24, and prepare for a reading quiz (provided below).

CORE CONTENT IN THIS LESSON

Geography & Places

Former Confederacy

Persons

Andrew Johnson

Elijah McCoy

Thaddeus Stevens

Lewis Howard Latimer

Hiram Revels

Rutherford B. Hayes

Ulysses S. Grant
Terms and Topics

| Reconstruction | Ku Klux Klan |
| Radical Republicans | lynching |
| freedmen | Ku Klux Klan Acts |
| 13th, 14th, 15th Amendments | Transcontinental Railroad |
| military districts | Seward’s Folly |
| Freedmen’s Bureau | Crédit Mobilier Scandal |
| impeachment | Panic of 1873 |
| sharecropping | Jim Crow |
| black codes | Compromise of 1877 |
| scalawags and carpetbaggers | |

Primary Sources

- 13th Amendment
- 14th Amendment
- 15th Amendment
- Black Code from Opelousas, Louisiana

To Know by Heart

First lines of the 13th, 14th, and 15th Amendments

Timeline

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1865–77</td>
<td>Reconstruction</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1865</td>
<td>Abraham Lincoln assassinated; Andrew Johnson becomes president</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1868</td>
<td>First African American elected to Congress</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1877</td>
<td>Compromise of 1877; Rutherford B. Hayes becomes president</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Images

- Historical figures and events
- Maps showing the gradual re-admittance of Southern states
- Photographs of African Americans in the South, both in freedom and with the heavy restrictions placed on their freedom

Stories for the American Heart

- Frederick Douglass reflecting on the Emancipation Proclamation taking effect
- The swearing in of Hiram Revels to the U.S. Senate
- Completion of the Transcontinental Railroad at Promontory Point, Utah

Questions for the American Mind

- What were the similarities and differences between Abraham Lincoln’s plan for Reconstruction and that of the Radical Republicans, especially concerning means, manner, and ends?
- What were the sources of tension between Andrew Johnson and the Radical Republicans especially?
- What did a Confederate state have to do in order to be readmitted fully into the Union?
- Regarding the 13th, 14th, and 15th Amendments, what did each do?
- What kinds of gains did African Americans attain during Reconstruction after slavery was explicitly abolished via the 13th Amendment?
- In what ways did governments of the former Confederacy attempt to curtail the rights of freedmen during Reconstruction? How did they respond to the actions of Republicans in the North?
- In what ways did Southern states attempt to curtail the rights of freedmen during Reconstruction? How did they respond to the actions of Republicans in the North?
- What did the Freedmen’s Bureau do?
- How can Ulysses S. Grant’s presidency be characterized?
- What did the Ku Klux Klan Acts do?
- What happened in the election of 1876 and subsequent compromise of 1877?
- What were the immediate consequences, especially for African Americans living in the former confederacy, of the end to Reconstruction in 1877?
- Questions from the U.S. Civics Test:
  - Question 63: There are four amendments to the U.S. Constitution about who can vote. Describe one of them.
  - Question 97: What amendment gives citizenship to all persons born in the United States?
  - Question 98: When did all men get the right to vote?
  - Question 126: Name three national U.S. holidays.
  - Question 127: What is Memorial Day?

Keys to the Lesson

Even before the battlefield fighting was over, a new kind of struggle would emerge to determine the status of former slaves now made free. In decisive ways, Abraham Lincoln’s assassination was devastating for the prospects of healing the nation while effectively securing the equal rights of freedmen. Not only was the desire for vengeance that Lincoln attempted to abate unleashed against the South, but the Republicans controlling Congress themselves fought bitterly with President Andrew Johnson over the purpose and method of Reconstruction. While some remarkable gains were made for African Americans in the South, particularly in fulfilling in law the core ideas enunciated in the American founding and fought for by the Union, objections to such fulfillments remained, new injustices were established, and the management of Reconstruction was in disarray. The Compromise of 1877 ended the period of Reconstruction, leaving the protections African Americans had gained without federal protection, resulting in decades of restrictions on their rights and liberties.

Teachers might best plan and teach Reconstruction with emphasis on the following approaches:

- Have students consider the effect of Abraham Lincoln’s assassination on Reconstruction and the future of America, especially as regards civil rights for African Americans. Lincoln’s focus was healing the nation while simultaneously providing for the effective and long-term establishment of equal rights for African Americans. Lincoln was succeeded after his assassination by Vice President Andrew Johnson.
- The transformation of a society away from decades of slavery was no small task. Depict Reconstruction as being tragically undermined and strained by the conflicts between congressional Republicans (who strongly opposed slavery), President Andrew Johnson (a pro-Union Democrat with little sympathy for former slaves), and lawmakers in the Southern states (who mostly wished to restrict the rights of the new freedmen), all of whom operated out of distrust following a painful and bloody Civil War.

- Have students read the three amendments to the Constitution and the laws passed during Reconstruction, especially the Civil Rights Act of 1866, related to the abolition of slavery and citizenship of freedmen. It is important to note the major and meaningful efforts Republicans made to guarantee the rights of African Americans. Questions on pages 197–199 of A Teacher’s Guide to Land of Hope may be helpful.

- Teach students about both the important gains and protections Republicans won for African Americans during Reconstruction as well as the ways in which these were undermined by actions in the former Confederate states and Johnson himself. Students should gain an appreciation of the remarkable speed and degrees to which former slaves were incorporated into the civil body early in Reconstruction, including the thousands of African Americans who would hold office at the local, state, and even federal level. But they should also understand the ways that Johnson resisted equal treatment of African Americans and in doing so encouraged and allowed certain bad policies (such as “black codes” passed by state legislatures and movements such as what would become the Ku Klux Klan) in the former Confederacy. In fact, many of the reversals of reconstruction began during the presidential reconstruction of Johnson, who was decidedly against secession but by no means opposed to slavery. Congress repeatedly had to override his vetoes and enact Constitutional amendments to prevent his defense of inequalities. Such Congressional action, however, also laid the groundwork for the expansion of federal power into and over state law, especially through the 14th Amendment and military government.

- Have students learn about the ways in which many civil rights achievements were thwarted or undone both during and after Reconstruction. For instance, spend time discussing how as Southerners were refranchised, African American officials were voted out of office and how “black codes” would eventually become Jim Crow laws. Discuss how “black codes” limited freedmen’s civil rights and imposed economic restrictions, including making being unemployed illegal, prohibiting landownership, requiring long-term labor contracts, prohibiting assemblies of freedmen only, prohibiting teaching freedmen to read or write, segregating public facilities, prohibiting freedmen from serving on juries, and carrying out corporal punishments for violators, among other restrictions and injustices. Read sample black codes aloud in class and discuss, such as the Black Code from Opelousas, Louisiana. Note also the use of poll taxes and literacy tests to prohibit African Americans from voting.

- Explain how sharecropping made it nearly impossible for freedmen to accumulate enough capital to purchase their own land or set-off on a different pursuit. Moreover, students should be aware of the struggle facing freedmen who were still in a society prejudiced against them, without capital, land, or even the ability to read.

- Explain the emergence of groups such as the Ku Klux Klan and the power that their intimidation of African Americans and Republicans had in diminishing the political participation of freedmen.

- Teach students how Republicans passed and President Ulysses S. Grant signed into law the Ku Klux Klan Acts to prohibit intimidation of freedmen exercising their civil rights. Grant also empowered the president to use the armed forces against those who tried to deny freedmen equal protection under the laws. Nonetheless, such measures were usually sloppily enforced.
• At the same time, note the improvements during Reconstruction in building hospitals, creating a public school system, securing civil rights in principle, and fostering community within the freedmen community, especially in marital and family stability and through vibrant churches.

• Explain that Reconstruction effectively ended with the Compromise of 1877 that settled the disputed election of 1876. Congress (now controlled by the Democratic Party) would allow Republican Rutherford B. Hayes to be declared president in exchange for his withdrawing federal troops in former confederate states. Point out that in the backdrop was both continuing Southern resistance and a gradual waning of Northern zeal for (and political interest in) reform within the South.

• Ask students to consider the tragic nature of Reconstruction: a time of so much hoped for and achieved in applying the principle of equal natural rights was repeatedly undermined and mismanaged, then suddenly ended for political expediency, enabling new forms of injustice in certain areas of the country, after a war to end injustice had consumed the lives of hundreds of thousands of Americans.

• Nevertheless, make sure students do not lose sight of the momentous achievements in liberty, equality, and self-government fulfilled because of the Civil War. Students should appreciate the very significant achievements of Lincoln and the Civil War while looking forward to future generations of Americans who would seek to live up to the fundamental principles of America in their own times.

STRENGTHENING UNDERSTANDING: POST-LESSON ASSIGNMENTS

Assignment 1: Compared to Abraham Lincoln’s plans for Reconstruction, explain the ways in which Reconstruction was successful and the ways in which it was not successful (1–2 paragraphs).

Assignment 2: Retell the civil rights realizations Republicans achieved for freedmen during Reconstruction and the injustices that they were subject to both during and after Reconstruction in the former confederate states (1–2 paragraphs).
Reading Quiz

DIRECTIONS: Answer each question.

1. In general, what was Abraham Lincoln’s plan and tone for Reconstruction?

2. What was the relationship like between President Andrew Johnson and the Republicans? Why?

3. Name one of the things that the three Reconstruction amendments (13th, 14th, and 15th) did?

4. Which military hero was president during much of Reconstruction?

5. What kinds of unjust things happened during and after Reconstruction?
APPENDIX A

Study Guides

Tests

Writing Assignment
Study Guide — Unit 4, Test 1

Lesson 1 | The Expansion of Slavery
Lesson 2 | Toward Civil War

Test on ____________

TIMELINE

When given chronological dates, match events from a list to the years or dates that they happened.

1846–48  Mexican–American War
1849  California Gold Rush
1850  Compromise of 1850
1854  Kansas–Nebraska Act; Republican Party founded
1860  Election of Abraham Lincoln; South Carolina secedes
April 12, 1861  Attack on Fort Sumter

GEOGRAPHY AND PLACES

Identify each on a map and/or tell where it is and explain its significance.

California  Fort Sumter  Border States
Kansas–Nebraska Territory  Union
Harpers Ferry  Confederacy

PERSONS

Identify each, provide biographical details, and explain what he or she thought or did in specific periods or events.

John C. Calhoun  Harriet Beecher Stowe  Stephen Douglas
Abraham Lincoln  Harriet Tubman  Dred Scott
Frederick Douglass  William Lloyd Garrison  James Buchanan
Sojourner Truth  Franklin Pierce  John Brown

TERMS AND TOPICS

Identify each and explain its significance to the period of history studied.

“positive good”  Frederick Douglass  popular sovereignty antebellum  Uncle Tom’s Cabin  Democratic Party secession  Underground Railroad  Republican Party Compromise of 1850  Kansas–Nebraska Act  Dred Scott v. Sandford Fugitive Slave Law  popular sovereignty  Lincoln–Douglas Debates abolitionism  Bleeding Kansas “don’t care”
Narrative of the Life of  “a house divided”  moral relativism majority tyranny  states’ rights  Confederate States of America
“apple and frame” Metaphor

PRIMARY SOURCES

Based on annotations and notes from seminar conversations, be able to answer questions on each primary source. While you will not necessarily be asked why each primary source was created, what it did or argued, and what its effects were, being able to answer these kinds of questions will make you well prepared.

Narrative of the Life of Frederick Douglass, Frederick Douglass
“House Divided” speech, Abraham Lincoln
“Fragment on the Constitution and Union,” Abraham Lincoln
First inaugural address, Abraham Lincoln

TO KNOW BY HEART

Fill in missing words and/or identify the speaker and context.

“A knowledge makes a man unfit to be a slave.” — Frederick Douglass
“A house divided against itself cannot stand.” — Abraham Lincoln

STORIES FOR THE AMERICAN HEART

In your own words, retell each episode in narrative form. Consider your audience to be 3rd grade students.

- Biographies and the roles of Frederick Douglass, Harriet Tubman, and Abraham Lincoln prior to the Civil War
- Childhood biography of Abraham Lincoln
- Scenes from Narrative of the Life of Frederick Douglass and Uncle Tom’s Cabin
- Actions of Harriet Tubman and the Underground Railroad
- The first shots fired on Fort Sumter and its surrender

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

Based on notes from lessons and seminar conversations, answer each of the following.

Lesson 1 | The Expansion of Slavery

☐ What general prediction about the future of slavery did the Framers of the Constitution make?
☐ What technology invented in 1793, four years after the Constitution went into effect, revolutionized the cotton industry, resulting in a revived demand for slave labor and undermining the Founders’ predictions regarding slavery?
☐ What was life like for slaves in the Southern states? What was a slave auction like?
☐ What was John C. Calhoun’s idea that slavery was a “positive good”? Why did he argue this, and how was this a change from previous arguments about slavery?
Compared to the north, how would the south’s society and economy suggest John C. Calhoun was wrong about the supposed economic and social benefits of slavery?

How did John C. Calhoun reject the ideas of the Declaration of Independence in arguing for slavery?

Why, politically, did the question of the expansion of slavery become so important for Southern states?

What were the two most controversial parts of the Compromise of 1850? What were their effects?

What roles did Frederick Douglass, William Lloyd Garrison, Harriet Tubman, and Harriet Beecher Stowe play in the abolitionist movement?

How did the Underground Railroad work?

What did the Kansas–Nebraska Act do?

What was the idea of “popular sovereignty”? Where did the idea come from and why?

Lesson 2 | Toward Civil War

According to Abraham Lincoln, how does Roger Taney’s majority opinion in Dred Scott v. Sandford recast the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution, and the founding ideas of equality?

According to Abraham Lincoln, how does Roger Taney’s majority opinion in Dred Scott v. Sandford threaten to make slavery legal anywhere in the union?

Why did Abraham Lincoln argue that Stephen Douglas’s personal stance of how he does not care (“I care not”) how a state or territory votes on slavery is dangerous and indefensible? How was this connected to Lincoln’s predictions regarding the Dred Scott v. Sandford decision?

Why did Abraham Lincoln believe popular sovereignty without an argument on the morality of slavery amounted to majority tyranny?

Why did Lincoln see the question of the morality of slavery to be at the heart of America’s founding?

Explain Abraham Lincoln’s arguments about the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution as explained in his “apple of gold, frame of silver” metaphor.

How did Abraham Lincoln navigate the period between his election and the first shots at Fort Sumter? How did the country descend into war during this period?

How was slavery the true cause of the Civil War?
The American Civil War — Test 1

Lesson 1 | The Expansion of Slavery
Lesson 2 | Toward Civil War

TIMELINE

Write the letter of each event next to the date or years it took place.

1846–48 ______
1849 ______
1854 ______
1860 ______
April 12, 1861 ______

A. Attack on Fort Sumter
B. California Gold Rush
C. Election of Abraham Lincoln; South Carolina secedes
D. Kansas–Nebraska Act; Republican Party founded
E. Mexican–American War

GEOGRAPHY AND PLACES

1. Outline and label the Union states, border states, and Confederate states.

Map courtesy of A Student Workbook for Land of Hope.
PERSONS, TERMS, AND TOPICS

Fill in the blank with the letter of the correct answer.

A. Border  E.  Frederick Douglass  J. popular sovereignty
B. Compromise of 1850  F. Fugitive Slave Law  K. Republican Party
C. Dred Scott v. Sandford  G. Harriet Tubman  L. South Carolina
D. Fort Sumter  H. John Brown  M. Uncle Tom's Cabin
I. Kansas–Nebraska

2. Henry Clay helped orchestrate the passage of the ___________________, a package of five separate bills which relieved tensions between the North and South over the slavery issue.

3. Included in this package was the ___________________ which required Northerners to actively assist in capturing runaway slaves, thus stirring the ire of many in the north.

4. In the years leading up to the Civil War, various abolitionists worked and wrote against slavery, such as the escaped slave turned writer ___________________, newspaperman William Lloyd Garrison, and Harriet Beecher Stowe whose book, ___________________, did much to reveal the horrors of slavery to Northerners and shift public opinion into action.

5. Escaped slave ___________________ was one of the main conductors on the Underground Railroad that led slaves to freedom in the North and Canada.

6. Congressman Stephen Douglas, who desired to be the new ‘Great Compromiser,’ pushed for a new approach to slavery in the West: ___________________. This approach regarded slavery as a morally neutral practice and allowed each state to decide for themselves if it was permissible within its borders.

7. The infamous ___________________ Act of 1854 contradicted the Missouri Compromise and set up Kansas as a real battleground over the issue of slavery in what became known as “Bleeding Kansas.” It was in response to this act that Abraham Lincoln returned to politics.

8. In 1854, former Whigs, Free Soilers, and abolitionists formed the new ___________________ with the purpose of actively standing against the expansion of slavery.

9. The Supreme Court asserted in the case ___________________ that slaves had no rights as written in the Constitution and that slavery could not be prevented from spreading throughout the Union.

10. In 1859, the abolitionist ___________________ attempted to lead a southern slave insurrection. His efforts were cut short when he was cornered and captured at Harpers Ferry, Virginia.

11. In response to the election of Abraham Lincoln in 1860, ___________________ decided to secede from the Union, followed by a host of southern states, though by the time Lincoln was inaugurated in March 1861, no violence had broken out.
12. Part of Lincoln’s First inaugural address was an attempt to keep Missouri, Kentucky, Maryland, and Delaware, called the ___________ States, loyal to the Union. If these states had seceded, it would have been likely that the South would have had enough strength to win the war.

13. The first shots of the war were fired on the federal fort in Charleston Harbor called ___________. Thus did war begin between the Union and the Confederacy.

KNOWN BY HEART

Fill in missing words and/or identify the speaker.

14. “______________ makes a man unfit to be a _________.” — Frederick Douglass

15. “A house divided against itself cannot stand.” — ________________

STORIES FOR THE AMERICAN HEART

In your own words, retell each episode in narrative form. Consider your audience to be 3rd grade students.

16. Childhood biography of Abraham Lincoln

17. The first shots fired on Fort Sumter and its surrender
QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

Answer each of the following. Complete sentences are not necessary, but correct spelling and writing should be employed and responses must fully answer each question.

18. What had been the Constitution’s framers’ general prediction about the future of slavery?

19. What technology invented in 1793, four years after the Constitution was adopted, revolutionized the cotton industry, resulting in a revived demand for slave labor and undermining the Founders’ predictions regarding slavery?

20. How did John C. Calhoun reject the ideas of the Declaration of Independence in arguing for slavery?

21. Why, politically, did the question of the expansion of slavery become so important for Southern states?

22. According to Abraham Lincoln, how does Roger Taney’s majority opinion in Dred Scott v. Sandford recast the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution, and the founding ideas of equality?

23. Why did Abraham Lincoln argue that Stephen Douglas’s personal stance of how he does not care (“I care not”) how a state or territory votes on slavery is dangerous and indefensible? How was this connected to Lincoln’s predictions regarding the Dred Scott v. Sandford decision?

24. Explain Abraham Lincoln’s arguments about the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution as explained in his “apple of gold, frame of silver” metaphor.

25. What was Abraham Lincoln’s argument that secession was unconstitutional, especially as articulated in his First Inaugural Address?
Study Guide — Unit 4, Test 2

Lesson 3 | The Civil War
Lesson 4 | Reconstruction

Test on ____________

TIMELINE

When given chronological dates, match events from a list to the years or dates that they happened.

1860  Election of Abraham Lincoln; South Carolina secedes
1861–65  Civil War
  April 12, 1861  Attack on Fort Sumter
  1863  Emancipation Proclamation takes effect
  July 1–3, 1863  Battle of Gettysburg
  1864  Abraham Lincoln reelected
April 14–15, 1865  Abraham Lincoln assassinated; Andrew Johnson becomes president
1865–77  Reconstruction
1877  Compromise of 1877; Rutherford B. Hayes president

GEOGRAPHY AND PLACES

Identify each on a map and/or tell where it is and explain its significance.

Fort Sumter  Richmond  Appomattox Court House
Union  West Virginia  Ford’s Theatre
Confederacy  Border States  Former Confederate

PERSONS

Identify each, provide biographical details, and explain what he or she thought or did in specific periods or events.

Abraham Lincoln  Clara Barton  Andrew Johnson
Jefferson Davis  Ulysses S. Grant  Hiram Revels
Robert E. Lee  William Tecumseh Sherman  Ulysses S. Grant
George McClellan  Robert Gould Shaw  Rutherford B. Hayes
Thomas “Stonewall” Jackson  John Wilkes Booth

TERMS AND TOPICS

Identify each and explain its significance to the period of history studied.

states’ rights  minié ball  ironclads
Confederate States of America  Army of the Potomac  USS Monitor America  Army of Northern Virginia  CSS Virginia
abolition
Pickett’s Charge
54th Massachusetts
Sherman’s “March to the Sea”
Reconstruction
Radical Republicans
freedmen

Military Districts
Freedmen’s Bureau
sharecropping
black codes
scalawags and carpetbaggers
Ku Klux Klan lynching

Ku Klux Klan Acts
Transcontinental Railroad
Crédit Mobilier Scandal
Jim Crow
Compromise of 1877

MAJOR CONFLICTS

Explain how each battle began, narrate what happened in it and how, and explain the significance of the battle’s outcome.

First Manassas/Bull Run
Fredericksburg and Gettysburg
Shiloh
Chancellorsville
Sherman’s “March to the Sea”
Peninsula Campaign
Fort Wagner
Antietam
Vicksburg

PRIMARY SOURCES

Based on annotations and notes from seminar conversations, be able to answer questions on each primary source. While you will not necessarily be asked why each primary source was created, what it did or argued, and what its effects were, being able to answer these kinds of questions will make you well prepared.

Emancipation Proclamation, Abraham Lincoln
Gettysburg Address, Abraham Lincoln
Second inaugural address, Abraham Lincoln
Black Code from Opelousas, Louisiana

TO KNOW BY HEART

Be prepared to fill in missing words and/or identify the speaker and context.

Gettysburg Address — Abraham Lincoln
"So Atlanta is ours, and fairly won." — William Tecumseh Sherman telegram announcing the fall of Atlanta to Abraham Lincoln
First lines of the 13th, 14th, and 15th Amendments

STORIES FOR THE AMERICAN HEART

In your own words, retell each episode in narrative form. Consider your audience to be 3rd grade students.

Biographies and roles of Abraham Lincoln, Jefferson Davis, Robert E. Lee, Ulysses S. Grant, and William Tecumseh Sherman in the Civil War
Fighting at Little Round Top and Pickett’s Charge
Robert E. Lee’s surrender to Ulysses S. Grant at Appomattox Court House
Abraham Lincoln’s cabinet meeting regarding healing with the south just hours before his assassination
Assassination of Abraham Lincoln at Ford’s Theatre and subsequent killing of John Wilkes Booth
The swearing in of Hiram Revels to the US Senate

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

Based on notes from lessons and seminar conversations, answer each of the following.

Lesson 3 | The Civil War

□ What was Abraham Lincoln’s argument that secession was unconstitutional, especially as articulated in his First inaugural address?
□ What were Jefferson Davis’s arguments on the morality and expansion of slavery, the North, and states’ rights and secession?
□ What was important about Virginia’s decision to secede? How did it come about?
□ What were Abraham Lincoln’s goals with respect to the Union and slavery at the onset of the Civil War? What were his priorities and why?
□ Why and how did Abraham Lincoln need to keep the border states in the Union?
□ What were the advantages and disadvantages that the Union and the Confederacy each faced at the outset of the war?
□ What was the style of warfare in the Civil War, including battlefield strategy, weapons, ammunition, medical care, etc.?
□ What were the overall strategies that each side pursued in the course of the war?
□ What were the problems characteristic of most of the Union’s generals from 1861 until the Battle of Gettysburg in the Virginia and Maryland theater of war?
□ How did Abraham Lincoln successfully approach his decision to issue the Emancipation Proclamation?
□ In summary, what did Abraham Lincoln argue in the Gettysburg Address?
□ Why were reelection prospects for Abraham Lincoln so poor for much of 1864?
□ What were the most significant moments in the Civil War?
□ What factors, figures, moments, etc., led the Union to victory?
□ What were Abraham Lincoln’s plans for reconstruction following the Civil War, as outlined in his Second inaugural address and from what we know of his private meetings in the war’s final weeks?

Lesson 4 | Reconstruction

□ What were the two major issues facing Andrew Johnson and Republicans in the North during the early years of Reconstruction?
□ What were the similarities and differences between Abraham Lincoln’s plan for Reconstruction and that of the Radical Republicans, especially concerning means, manner, and ends?
□ What were the sources of tension between Andrew Johnson and the Radical Republicans especially?
□ What did a Confederate state have to do to be readmitted fully into the Union?
□ Regarding the 13th, 14th, and 15th Amendments, what did each do?
□ What kinds of gains did African Americans attain during Reconstruction after slavery was explicitly abolished via the 13th Amendment?
□ In what ways did Southern states attempt to curtail the rights of freedmen during Reconstruction? How did they respond to the actions of Republicans in the North?
□ How can Ulysses S. Grant’s presidency be characterized?
□ What did the Ku Klux Klan Acts do?
□ What happened in the election of 1876 and the subsequent Compromise of 1877?
□ What were the immediate consequences, especially for African Americans living in the South, of the end to Reconstruction in 1877?
The American Civil War — Test 2

Lesson 3 | The Civil War
Lesson 4 | Reconstruction

TIMELINE

Write the letter of each event next to the date or years it took place.

1860
1861–65
April 12, 1861 ______
1863
July 1–3, 1863 ______
1864
April 14–15, 1865 ______
1865–77
1877

A. Abraham Lincoln assassinated; Andrew Johnson becomes president
B. Abraham Lincoln reelected
C. Attack on Fort Sumter
D. Battle of Gettysburg
E. Civil War
F. Compromise of 1877; Rutherford B. Hayes president
G. Election of Abraham Lincoln; South Carolina secedes
H. Emancipation Proclamation takes effect
I. Reconstruction

GEOGRAPHY AND PLACES

1. Label Fort Sumter, Washington, DC, Richmond, Vicksburg, and Gettysburg.

Map courtesy of A Teachers Guide to Land of Hope.
PERSONS, TERMS, AND TOPICS

Fill in the blank with the letter of the correct answer.

A. 54th Massachusetts  F. Jim Crow  K. Robert E. Lee
B. Appomattox Court House  G. minie ball  L. sharecropping
C. black codes  H. Pickett’s Charge  M. Ulysses S. Grant
D. Ford’s Theatre  I. railroads  N. William Tecumseh
E. ironclads  J. Reconstruction  Sherman

2. One great advantage to the North was in its number of ________________, which allowed for the faster deployment of soldiers, shipping of supplies, and industrial output.

3. Gunshot wounds were so gruesome and limb–endangering due to the ________________, a conical round that shattered bones and left a larger exit wound than entrance resulting in the Civil War’s high amputation rate.

4. The Civil War was the first war which not only saw widespread use of breech–loaded weapons but also the first ________________ ships, the first battle of which was fought between the USS Monitor and the CSS Virginia in the James River.

5. The bloodiest and most pointless attack of the Battle of Gettysburg was the last attack on July 3rd, called ________________ in which over 1,000 Confederate soldiers were killed as they attempted to take the Union position on Cemetery Ridge.

6. The most famous of the United States Colored Troops regiments was the ________________ Regiment, which fought bravely in their tragic attack on Fort Wagner in South Carolina.

7. Having graduated top of his class at West Point and having served the United States faithfully for thirty–two years, ________________’s care for, as he put it, ”my relatives, my children, my home,” outweighed his belief that secession was unconstitutional.

8. Having graduated near the bottom of his class at West Point and having lived a tumultuous life of poverty and drinking, ________________’s repeated, bold, and well–executed successes in the Mississippi–Tennessee Theatre garnered him a promotion to General–in–Chief of the Union forces.

9. The colleague of Ulysses S. Grant, ________________ proved to be one of the Union’s most successful and controversial generals, especially after his “March to the Sea” campaign of scorched earth warfare. He justified it by saying, “War is hell.” Like Grant, he hated war, but wanted the citizens to feel the effects of war (short of hurting them physically) and so hasten peace. Nonetheless, his tactics through Georgia escalated the bitterness between the north and south.

10. The bloodiest conflict in American history ended after four years when General Lee surrendered the Army of Northern Virginia to General Grant’s Army of the Potomac at ________________ in Virginia on April, 9th, 1865.
11. On the night of April 14th at Ford’s Theatre in Washington, D.C., actor and Southern sympathizer _________________ shot Abraham Lincoln, who died the next morning, just six days after the war ended.

12. The era known as _________________ witnessed the realization of many civil rights for freedmen and the efforts and resources of Northern Republicans to protect them, such as through Constitutional Amendments, civil rights acts, and the Ku Klux Klan Act.

13. Although slaves were freed following the Civil War, many Southern governments tried to limit their rights through _________________.

14. Since there was so little non-agrarian work in the south, plantation owners often left freedmen no choice but to resort to _________________, where the plantation owner would lease the freedmen a share of his land to grow crops in exchange for a majority share of the crops that were grown.

15. With the sudden end of Reconstruction in 1877, injustices returned to African Americans in the South in an era characterized by segregation and discrimination in laws known as _________________.

MAJOR CONFLICTS

Explain how each battle began, narrate what happened in it and how, and explain the significance of the battle’s outcome.

16. Antietam

17. Gettysburg
KNOWN BY HEART

Fill in missing words and/or identify the speaker.

18. “…and that government of the ____________________________________________

__________________________________________________________

Source and Speaker – ____________________________

19. “Neither ___________ nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall ____________ within the United States, or any ______ subject to their jurisdiction.”

Source – ____________________________

STORIES FOR THE AMERICAN HEART

In your own words, retell each episode in narrative form. Consider your audience to be 3rd grade students.

20. Robert E. Lee’s surrender to Ulysses S. Grant at Appomattox Court House

21. Assassination of Abraham Lincoln at Ford’s Theatre and subsequent killing of his assassin
QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

Answer each of the following. Complete sentences are not necessary, but correct spelling and writing should be employed and responses must fully answer each question.

22. What were Abraham Lincoln’s goals with respect to the Union and slavery at the onset of the Civil War? What were his priorities and why?

23. What were the advantages and disadvantages that the Union and the Confederacy each faced at the outset of the war?

24. What was the style of warfare in the Civil War, including battlefield strategy, weapons, ammunition, medical care, etc.?

25. How did Abraham Lincoln successfully approach his decision to issue the Emancipation Proclamation?

26. What factors, figures, moments, etc., led the Union to victory?

27. Regarding the 13th, 14th, and 15th amendments, what did each do?

28. What kinds of gains did African Americans attain during Reconstruction after slavery was explicitly abolished via the 13th Amendment?

29. What happened in the election of 1876 and subsequent compromise of 1877?

30. What were the immediate consequences, especially for African Americans living in the South, of the end to Reconstruction in 1877?
Writing Assignment — The American Civil War

DIRECTIONS: Citing events and primary sources in your argument, write a 4–5 paragraph essay answering the question:

What did President Abraham Lincoln argue about the principles of America, the practice of slavery, and the Civil War?
APPENDIX B

Primary Sources

Frederick Douglass

Abraham Lincoln

The American People

E.D. Estillette
BACKGROUND

The former slave and abolitionist Frederick Douglass wrote this autobiography on his life as a slave and his eventual escape and life in freedom.

GUIDING QUESTIONS

1. Who was Douglass’ father?
2. What accounts does Douglass give of his childhood and life as a slave?
3. Why does Douglass go to Baltimore the first time?
4. What happens on Douglass's first escape attempt?
5. How does Douglass feel about being free in the North?

---

Frederick Douglass, Narrative of the Life of Frederick Douglass, An American Slave (Boston: Anti-Slavery Office, 1845).
I WAS born in Tuckahoe, near Hillsborough, and about twelve miles from Easton, in Talbot county, Maryland. I have no accurate knowledge of my age, never having seen any authentic record containing it. By far the larger part of the slaves know as little of their ages as horses know of theirs, and it is the wish of most masters within my knowledge to keep their slaves thus ignorant. I do not remember to have ever met a slave who could tell of his birthday. They seldom come nearer to it than planting-time, harvest-time, cherry-time, spring-time, or fall-time. A want of information concerning my own was a source of unhappiness to me even during childhood. The white children could tell their ages. I could not tell why I ought to be deprived of the same privilege. I was not allowed to make any inquiries of my master concerning it. He deemed all such inquiries on the part of a slave improper and impertinent, and evidence of a restless spirit. The nearest estimate I can give makes me now between twenty-seven and twenty-eight years of age. I come to this, from hearing my master say, some time during 1835, I was about seventeen years old.

My mother was named Harriet Bailey. She was the daughter of Isaac and Betsey Bailey, both colored, and quite dark. My mother was of a darker complexion than either my grandmother or grandfather.

My father was a white man. He was admitted to be such by all I ever heard speak of my parentage. The opinion was also whispered that my master was my father; but of the correctness of this opinion, I know nothing; the means of knowing was withheld from me. My mother and I were separated when I was but an infant—before I knew her as my mother.
It is a common custom, in the part of Maryland from which I ran away, to part children from their mothers at a very early age. Frequently, before the child has reached its twelfth month, its mother is taken from it, and hired out on some farm a considerable distance off, and the child is placed under the care of an old woman, too old for field labor. For what this separation is done, I do not know, unless it be to hinder the development of the child’s affection toward its mother, and to blunt and destroy the natural affection of the mother
for the child. This is the inevitable result.
I never saw my mother, to know her as such, more than four or five times in my life; and each of these times was very short in duration, and at night. She was hired by a Mr. Stewart, who lived about twelve miles from my home. She made her journeys to see me in the night, travelling the whole distance on foot, after the performance of her day’s work. She was a field hand, and a whipping is the penalty of not being in the field at sunrise, unless a slave has special permission from his or her master to the contrary—a permission which they seldom get, and one that gives to him that gives it the proud name of being a kind master. I do not recollect of ever seeing my mother by the light of day. She was with me in the night. She would lie down with me, and get me to sleep, but long before I waked she was gone. Very little communication ever took place between us. Death soon ended what little we could have while she lived, and with it her hardships and suffering.

She died when I was about seven years old, on one of my master’s farms, near Lee’s Mill. I was not allowed to be present during her illness, at her death, or burial. She was gone long before I knew any thing about it. Never have enjoyed, to any considerable extent, her soothing presence, her tender and watchful care, I received the tidings of her death with much the same emotions I should have probably felt at the death of a stranger.

Called thus suddenly away, she left me without the slightest intimation of who my father was. The whisper that my master was my father, may or may not be true; and, true or false, it is of but little consequence to my purpose whilst the fact remains, in all its glaring odiousness, that slaveholders have ordained, and by law established, that the children of slave women shall in all cases follow the condition of their mothers; and this is done too obviously to administer to their own lusts, and make a gratification of their wicked desires profitable as well as pleasurable; for by this cunning arrangement, the slaveholder, in cases not a few, sustains to his slaves the double relation of master and father.

I know of such cases, and it is worthy, of remark that such slaves invariably suffer greater hardships, and have more to contend with, than others. They are, in the first place, a constant offence to their mistress. She is ever disposed to find fault with them; they can seldom do any thing to please her; she is never better pleased than when she sees them under the lash, especially when she suspects her husband of showing to his mulatto children favors which he withholds from his black slaves. The master is frequently compelled to sell this class of his slaves, out of deference to the feelings of his white wife; and, cruel as the deed may strike any one to be, for a man to sell his own children to human flesh-mongers, it is often the dictate of humanity for him to do so; for, unless he does this, he must not only whip them himself, but must stand by and see one white son tie up his brother, of but few shades darker complexion than himself, and ply the gory lash to his naked back; and if he lisp one word of disapproval, “it is set down to his parental partiality, and only makes a bad matter worse, both for himself and the slave whom he would protect and defend.

Every year brings with it multitudes of this class of slaves. It was doubtless in consequence of a knowledge of this fact, that one great statesman of the south predicted the downfall of slavery by the inevitable laws of population. Whether this prophecy is ever fulfilled or not, it is nevertheless plain that a very different-looking class of people are springing up at the south, and are now held in slavery, from those originally brought to this country from Africa; and if their increase will do no other good, it will do away the force of the argument, that God cursed Ham, and therefore American slavery is right. If the lineal descendants of Ham are alone to be scripturally enslaved, it is certain that slavery at the south must soon become unscriptural; for thousands are ushered into the world, annually, who, like myself, owe their existence to white fathers, and those fathers most frequently their own masters.

I have had two masters. My first master’s name was Anthony. I do not remember his first name. He was generally called Captain Anthony—a title which, I presume, he acquired by sailing a craft on the Chesapeake Bay. He was not considered a rich slaveholder. He owned two or three farms, and about thirty slaves. His farms and slaves were under the care of an overseer. The overseer’s name was Plummer. Mr. Plummer was a miserable drunkard, a profane swearer, and a savage monster. He always went armed with a cowskin and a heavy cudgel. I have known him to cut and slash the women’s heads so horribly, that even master would be enraged at his cruelty, and would threaten to whip him if he did not mind himself. Master, however, was not a humane slaveholder. It required extraordinary barbarity on the part of an overseer to affect him. He was a cruel man, hardened by a long life of slaveholding. He would at times seem to take great pleasure in whipping a slave. I have often been awakened at the dawn of day by the most heart-rending shrieks of an own aunt of mine, whom he used to tie up to a joist, and whip upon her naked back till she was literally covered with blood. No words, no tears, no prayers, from his gory victim, seemed to move his iron heart from its bloody purpose. The louder she screamed, the harder he whipped; and where the blood ran fastest, there he whipped longest. He would whip her to make her scream, and whip her to make her hush; and not until overcome by fatigue, would he cease to swing the blood-clotted cowskin. I remember the first time I ever witnessed this horrible exhibition. I was quite a child, but I well remember it. I never shall forget it whilst I remem-ber any thing. It was the first of a long series of such outrages, of which I was doomed to be a witness and a participant. It struck me with awful force. It was the blood-stained gate, the entrance to the hell of slavery, through which I was about to pass. It was a most terrible spectacle. I wish I could commit to paper the feelings with which I beheld it.…

It is partly in consequence of such facts, that slaves, when inquired of as to their condition and the character of their masters, almost universally say they are contented, and that their masters are kind. The slaveholders have been known to send in spies among their slaves, to ascertain their views and feelings in regard to their condition. The frequency of this has had the effect to establish among the slaves the maxim, that a still tongue makes a wise head. They suppress the truth rather than take the consequences of telling it, and in so doing prove themselves a part of the human family. If they have any thing to say of their masters, it is generally in their masters' favor, especially when speaking to an untried man. I have been frequently asked, when a slave, if I had a kind master, and do not remember ever to have given a negative answer; nor did I, in pursuing this course, consider myself as uttering what was absolutely false; for I always measured the kindness of my master by the standard of kindness set up among slaveholders around us. Moreover, slaves are like other people, and imbibe prejudices quite common to others. They think their own better than that of others. Many, under the influence of this prejudice, think their own masters are better than the masters of other slaves; and this, too, in some cases, when the very reverse is true. Indeed, it is not uncommon for slaves even to fall out and quarrel among themselves.
about the relative goodness of their masters, each contending for the superior goodness of his own over that of the others. At the very same time, they mutually execrate their masters when viewed separately. It was so on our plantation. When Colonel Lloyd’s slaves met the slaves of Jacob Jepson, they seldom parted without a quarrel about their masters; Colonel Lloyd’s slaves contending that he was the richest, and Mr. Jepson’s slaves that he was the smartest, and most of a man. Colonel Lloyd’s slaves would boast his ability to buy and sell Jacob Jepson. Mr. Jepson’s slaves would boast his ability to whip Colonel Lloyd. These quarrels would almost always end in a fight between the parties, and those that whipped were supposed to have gained the point at issue. They seemed to think that the greatness of their masters was transferable to themselves. It was considered as being bad enough to be a slave; but to be a poor man’s slave was deemed a disgrace indeed!….

As to my own treatment while I lived on Colonel Lloyd’s plantation, it was very similar to that of the other slave children. I was not old enough to work in the field, and there being little else than field work to do, I had a great deal of leisure time. The most I had to do was to drive up the cows at evening, keep the fowls out of the garden, keep the front yard clean, and run of errands for my old master’s daughter, Mrs. Lucretia Auld. The most of my leisure time I spent in helping Master Daniel Lloyd in finding his birds, after he had shot them. My connection with Master Daniel was of some advantage to me. He became quite attached to me, and was a sort of protector of me. He would not allow the older boys to impose upon me, and would divide his cakes with me.

I was seldom whipped by my old master, and suffered little from any thing else than hunger and cold. I suffered much from hunger, but much more from cold. In hottest summer and coldest winter, I was kept almost naked—no shoes, no stockings, no jacket, no trousers, nothing on but a coarse tow linen shirt, reaching only to my knees. I had no bed. I must have perished with cold, but that, the coldest nights, I used to steal a bag which was used for carrying corn to the mill. I would crawl into this bag, and there sleep on the cold, damp, clay floor, with my head in and feet out. My feet have been so cracked with the frost, that the pen with which I am writing might be laid in the gashes.
We were not regularly allowanced. Our food was coarse corn meal boiled. This was called mush. It was put into a large wooden tray or trough, and set down upon the ground. The children were then called, like so many pigs, and like so many pigs they would come and devour the mush; some with oyster shells, others with pieces of shingle, some with naked hands, and none with spoons. He that ate fastest got most; he that was strongest secured the best place; and few left the trough satisfied. I was probably between seven and eight years old when I left Colonel Lloyd's plantation. I left it with joy. I shall never forget the ecstasy with which I received the intelligence that my old master (Anthony) had determined to let me go to Baltimore, to live with Mr. Hugh Auld, brother to my old master's son-in-law, Captain Thomas Auld. I received this information about three days before my departure. They were three of the happiest days I ever enjoyed. I spent the most part of all these three days in the creek, washing off the plantation scurf, and preparing myself for my departure.

We arrived at Baltimore early on Sunday morning, landing at Smith's Wharf, not far from Bowley's Wharf. We had on board the sloop a large flock of sheep; and after aiding in driving them to the slaughter house of Mr. Curtis on Louden Slater's Hill, I was conducted by Rich, one of the hands belonging on board of the sloop, to my new home in Alliciana Street, near Mr. Gardner's ship-yard, on Fells Point.

Mr. and Mrs. Auld were both at home, and met me at the door with their little son Thomas, to take care of whom I had been given. And here I saw what I had never seen before; it was a white face beaming with the most kindly emotions; it was the face of my new mistress, Sophia Auld. I wish I could describe the rapture that flashed through my soul as I beheld it. It was a new and strange sight to me, brightening up my pathway with the light of happiness. Little Thomas was told, there was his Freddy, - and I was told to take care of little Thomas; and thus I entered upon the duties of my new home with the most cheering prospect ahead.

I look upon my departure from Colonel Lloyd's plantation as one of the most interesting events of my life. It is possible, and even quite probable, that but for the mere circumstance of being removed from that plantation to Baltimore, I should have to-day, instead of being here seated by my own table, in the enjoyment of freedom and the happiness of home, writing this Narrative, been confined in the galling chains of slavery. Going to live at Baltimore laid the foundation, and opened the gateway, to all my subsequent prosperity. I have ever regarded it as the first plain manifestation of that kind providence which ever since attended me, and marked my life with so many favors. I regarded the selection of myself as being somewhat remarkable. There were a number of slave children that might have been sent from the plantation to Baltimore. There were those younger, those older, and those of the same age. I was chosen from among them all, and was the first, last, and only choice.

I may be deemed superstitious, and even egotistical, in regarding this event as a special interposition of divine Providence in my favor. But I should be false to the earliest sentiments of my soul, if I suppressed the opinion. I prefer to be true to myself, even at the hazard of incurring the ridicule of others, rather than to be false, and incur my own abhorrence. From my earliest recollection, I date the entertainment of a deep conviction that slavery would not always be able to hold me within its foul embrace; and in the darkest hours of my career in slavery, this living word of faith and spirit of hope departed not from me, but remained like ministering angels to cheer me through the gloom. This good spirit was from God, and to him I offer thanksgiving and praise.

I often found myself regretting my own existence, and wishing myself dead; and but for the hope of being free, I have no doubt but that I should have killed myself, or done something for which I should have been killed. While in this state of mind, I was eager to hear any one speak of slavery. I was a ready listener. Every little while, I could hear something about the abolitionists. It was some time before I found what the word meant. It was always used in such connections as to make it an interesting word to me. If a slave ran away and succeeded in getting clear, or if a slave killed his master, set fire to a barn, or did any thing very wrong in the mind of a slaveholder, it was spoken of as the fruit of abolition. Hearing the word in this connection very often, I set about learning what it meant. The dictionary afforded me little or no help. I found it was “the act of abolishing;” but then I did not know what was to be abolished. Here I was perplexed. I did not dare to ask any one about its meaning, for
I was satisfied that it was something they wanted me to know very little about. After a patient waiting, I got one of our city papers, containing an account of the number of petitions from the north, praying for the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia, and of the slave trade between the States. From this time I understood the words abolition and abolitionist, and always drew near when that word was spoken, expecting to hear something of importance to myself and fellow-slaves. The light broke in upon me by degrees. I went one day down on the wharf of Mr. Waters; and seeing two Irishmen unloading a scow of stone, I went, unasked, and helped them. When we had finished, one of them came to me and asked me if I were a slave. I told him I was. He asked, “Are ye a slave for life?” I told him that I was. The good Irishman seemed to be deeply affected by the statement. He said to the other that it was a pity so fine a little fellow as myself should be a slave for life. He said it was a shame to hold me. They both advised me to run away to the north; that I should find friends there, and that I should be free. I pretended not to be interested in what they said, and treated them as if I did not understand them; for I feared they might be treacherous. White men have been known to encourage slaves to escape, and then, to get the reward, catch them and return them to their masters. I was afraid that these seemingly good men might use me so; but I nevertheless remembered their advice, and from that time I resolved to run away. I looked forward to a time at which it would be safe for me to escape. I was too young to think of doing so immediately; besides, I wished to learn how to write, as I might have occasion to write my own pass. I consoled myself with the hope that I should one day find a good chance. Meanwhile, I would learn to write.

The idea as to how I might learn to write was suggested to me by being in Durgin and Bailey’s ship yard, and frequently seeing the ship carpenters, after hewing, and getting a piece of timber ready for use, write on the timber the name of that part of the ship for which it was intended. When a piece of timber was intended for the larboard side, it would be marked thus—“L.” When a piece was for the starboard side, it would be marked thus—“S.” A piece for the larboard side forward, would be marked thus—“L. F.” When a piece was for starboard side forward, it would be marked thus—“S. F.” For larboard aft, it would be marked thus—“L. A.” For starboard aft, it would be marked thus—“S. A.” I soon learned the names of these letters, and for what they were intended when placed upon a piece of timber in the ship-yard. I immediately commenced copying them, and in a short time was able to make the four letters named. After that, when I met with any boy who I knew could write, I would tell him I could write as well as he. The next word would be, “I don’t believe you. Let me see you try it.” I would then make the letters which I had been so fortunate as to learn, and ask him to beat that. In this way I got a good many lessons in writing, which it is quite possible I should never have gotten in any other way. During this time, my copy-book was the board fence, brick wall, and pavement; my pen and ink was a lump of chalk. With these, I learned mainly how to write. I then commenced and continued copying the Italics in Webster’s Spelling Book, until I could make them all without looking on the book. By the time, my little Master Thomas had gone to school, and learned how to write, and had written over a number of copy-books. These had been brought home, and shown to some of our near neighbors, and then laid aside. My mistress used to go to class meeting at the Wilk Street meeting-house every Monday afternoon, and leave me to take care of the house. When left thus, I used to spend the time in writing in the spaces left in Master Thomas’s copy-book, copying what he had written. I continued to do this until I could write a hand very similar to that of Master Thomas. Thus after a long tedious effort for years, I finally succeeded in learning to write.…

At the close of the year 1834, Mr. Freeland again hired me of my master, for the year 1835. But, by this time, I began to want to live upon free land as well as with Freeland; and I was no longer content, there fore, to live with him or any other slaveholder. I began, with the commencement of the year, to prepare myself for a final struggle, which should decide my fate one way or the other. My tendency was upward. I was fast approaching manhood, and year after year had passed, and I was still a slave. These thoughts roused me —I must do something. I therefore re solved that 1835 should not pass without witnessing an attempt, on my part, to secure my liberty. But I was not willing to cherish this determination alone. My fellow-slaves were dear to me. I was anxious to have them participate with me in this, my life-giving deter mination. I therefore, though with great prudence, commenced early to ascertain their views and feelings in regard to their condition, and to imbue their minds with thoughts of freedom. I bent myself to devising ways and means for our escape, and meanwhile strove, on all fitting occasions, to impress them with the gross fraud and inhumanity of slavery. I went first to Henry, next to John, then to the others. I found, in them all, warm hearts and noble spirits. They were ready to hear, and ready to act when a feasible plan should be proposed. This was what I wanted. Italked to them of our want of manhood, if we submitted to our enslavement without at least one noble effort to be free. We met often, and consulted frequently, and told our hopes and fears, recounted the difficulties, real and imagined, which we should be called on to meet. At times we were almost disposed to give up, and try to content ourselves with our wretched lot; at others, we were firm and unbending in our determination to go. Whenever we suggested any plan, there was shrinking—the odds were fearful. Our path was beset with the greatest obstacles; and if we succeeded in gaining the end of it, our right to be free was yet questionable—we were yet liable to be returned to bondage. We could see no spot, this side of the ocean, where we could be free. We knew nothing about Canada. Our knowledge of the north did not extend farther than New York; and to go there, and be forever harassed with the frightful liability of being returned to slavery—with the certainty of being treated tenfold worse than before—the thought was truly a horrible one, and one which it was not easy to overcome. The case sometimes stood thus: At every gate through which we were to pass, we saw a watchman—at every ferry a guard—on every bridge a sentinel—and in every wood a patrol. We were hemmed in upon every side. Here were the difficulties, real or imagined—the good to be sought, and the evil to be shunned. On the one hand, there stood slavery, a stern reality, glaring frightfully upon us,—its robes already crimsoned with the blood of millions, and even now feasting itself greedily upon our own flesh. On the other hand, away back in the dim distance, under the flickering light of the north star, behind some craggy hill or snow-covered mountain, stood a doubtful freedom—half frozen—beckoning us to come and share its hospitality. This in itself was sometimes enough to stagger us; but when we permitted ourselves to survey the road, we were frequently appalled. Upon either side we saw grim death, assuming the most horrid shapes. Now it was starvation, causing us to eat our own flesh;—now we were contending with the waves, and were drowned;—now we were over taken, and torn to pieces by the fangs of the terrible bloodhound. We were stung by scorpions, chased by wild beasts, bitten by snakes, and finally, after having nearly reached the desired spot, — after swimming rivers, encountering wild beasts, sleeping in the woods, suffering hunger and nakedness, -we were overtaken by our pursuers, and, in our resistance, we were shot dead upon the spot! I say, this picture sometimes appalled us, and made us “rather bear those ills we had, Than fly to others, that we knew not of.” In coming to a fixed determination to run away, we did more than Patrick Henry, when he resolved upon liberty or death. With us it was a doubtful liberty at most, and almost certain death if we failed. For my part, I should prefer death to hopeless bondage.

Sandy, one of our number, gave up the notion, but still encouraged us. Our company then consisted of Henry Harris, John Harris, Henry Bailey, Charles Roberts, and myself. Henry Bailey was my uncle, and belonged to my master. Charles married my aunt: he belonged to my master’s father-in-law, Mr. William Hamilton.

The plan we finally concluded upon was, to get a large canoe belonging to Mr. Hamilton, and upon the Saturday night previous to Easter holidays, paddle directly up the Chesapeake Bay. On our arrival at the head of the bay, a distance of seventy or eighty miles from where we lived, it was our purpose to turn our canoe adrift, and follow the guidance of the north star till we got beyond the limits of Maryland. Our reason for taking the water route was, that we were less liable to be suspected as runaways; we hoped to be regarded as fishermen;
whereas, if we should take the land route, we should be subjected to interruptions of almost every kind. Any one having a white face, and being so disposed, could stop us, and subject us to examination.

The week before our intended start, I wrote several protections, one for each of us. As well as I can remember, they were in the following words, to wit: “THIS is to certify that I, the undersigned, have given the bearer, my servant, full liberty to go to Baltimore, and spend the Easter holidays. Written with mine own hand, &c., 1835. - “WILLIAM HAMILTON, “Near St. Michael’s, in Talbot county, Maryland.”

We were not going to Baltimore; but, in going up the bay, we went toward Baltimore, and these protections were only intended to protect us while on the bay.
As the time drew near for our departure, our anxiety became more and more intense. It was truly a matter of life and death with us. The strength of our determination was about to be fully tested. At this time, I was very active in explaining every difficulty, removing every doubt, dispelling every fear, and inspiring all with the firmness indispensable to success in our undertaking; assuring them that half was gained the instant we made the move; we had talked long enough; we were now ready to move; if not now, we never should be; and if we did not intend to move now, we had as well fold our arms, sit down, and acknowledge ourselves fit only to be slaves. This, none of us were prepared to acknowledge. Every man stood firm; and at our last meeting, we pledged ourselves afresh, in the most solemn manner, that, at the time appointed, we would certainly start in pursuit of freedom. This was in the middle of the week, at the end of which we were to be off. We went, as usual, to our several fields of labor, but with bosoms highly agitated with thoughts of our truly hazardous undertaking. We tried to conceal our feelings as much as possible; and I think we succeeded very well.

After a painful waiting, the Saturday morning, whose night was to witness our departure, came. I hailed it with joy, bring what of sadness it might. Friday night was a sleepless one for me. I probably felt more anxious than the rest, because I was, by common consent, at the head of the whole affair. The responsibility of success or failure lay heavily upon me. The glory of the one, and the confusion of the other, were alike mine. The first two hours of that morning were such as I never experienced before, and hope never to again. Early in the morning, we went, as usual, to the field. We were spreading manure; and all at once, while thus engaged, I was overwhelmed with an indescribable feeling, in the fulness of which I turned to Sandy, who was near by, and said, “We are betrayed!” “Well,” said he, “that thought has this moment struck me.” We said no more. I was never more certain of any thing.

The horn was blown as usual, and we went up from the field to the house for breakfast. I went for the form, more than for want of any thing to eat that morning. Just as I got to the house, in looking out at the lane gate, I saw four white men, with two colored men. The white men were on horseback, and the colored ones were walking behind, as if tied. I watched them a few moments till they got up to our lane gate. Here they halted, and tied the colored men to the gate-post. I was not yet certain as to what the matter was. In a few moments, in rode Mr. Hamilton, with a speed betokening great excitement. He came to the door, and inquired if Master William was in. He was told he was at the barn. Mr. Hamilton, with out dismounting, rode up to the barn with extraordinary speed. In a few moments, he and Mr. Freeland returned to the house. By this time, the three constables rode up, and in great haste dismounted, tied their horses, and met Master William and Mr. Hamilton returning from the barn; and after talking awhile, they all walked up to the kitchen door.
There was no one in the kitchen but myself and John. Henry and Sandy were up at the barn.

Mr. Freeland put his head in at the door, and called me by name, saying, there were some gentlemen at the door who wished to see me. I stepped to the door, and inquired what they wanted. They at once seized me, and, without giving me any satisfaction, tied me —lashing my hands closely together. I insisted upon knowing what the matter was. They at length said, that they had learned I had been in a "scrape," and that I was to be examined before my master; and if their information proved false, I should not be hurt.

In a few moments, they succeeded in tying John. They then turned to Henry, who had by this time returned, and commanded him to cross his hands. "I won't!" said Henry, in a firm tone, indicating his readiness to meet the consequences of his refusal. "Won't you?" said Tom Graham, the constable. "No, I won't!" said Henry, in a still stronger tone. With this, two of the constables pulled out their shining pistols, and swore, by their Creator, that they would make him cross his hands or kill him. Each cocked his pistol, and, with fingers on the trigger, walked up to Henry, saying, at the same time, if he did not cross his hands, they would blow his damned heart out. "Shoot me, shoot me!" said Henry; "you can't kill me but once. Shoot, shoot, —and be damned I won't be tied!" This he said in a tone of loud defiance; and at the same time, with a motion as quick as lightning, he with one single stroke dashed the pistols from the hand of each constable. As he did this, all hands fell upon him, and, after beating him some time, they finally over powered him, and got him tied.

During the scuffle, I managed, I know not how, to get my pass out, and, without being discovered, put it into the fire. We were all now tied; and just as we were to leave for Easton jail, Betsy Freeland, mother of William Freeland, came to the door with her hands full of biscuits, and divided them between Henry and John. She then delivered herself of a speech, to the following effect:—addressing herself to me, she said, “You devil / You yellow devil it was you that put it into the heads of Henry and John to run away. But for you, you long-legged mulatto devil! Henry nor John would never have thought of such a thing.” I made no reply, and was immediately hurried off towards St. Michael’s. Just a moment previous to the scuffle with Henry, Mr. Hamilton suggested the propriety of making a search for the protections which he had understood Frederick had written for himself and the rest. But, just at the moment he was about carrying his proposal into effect, his aid was needed in helping to tie Henry; and the excitement attending the scuffle caused them either to forget, or to deem it unsafe, under the circumstances, to search. So we were not yet convicted of the intention to run away.

When we got about half way to St. Michael’s, while the constables having us in charge were looking ahead, Henry inquired of me what he should do with his pass. I told him to eat it with his biscuit, and own nothing; and we passed the word around, “Own nothing;” and “Own nothing!” said we all. Our confidence in each other was unshaken. We were resolved to succeed or fail together, after the calamity had befallen us as much as before. We were now prepared for anything. We were to be dragged that morning fifteen miles behind horses, and then to be placed in the Easton jail. When we reached St. Michael’s, we underwent a sort of examination. We all denied that we ever intended to run away. We did this more to bring out the evidence against us, than from any hope of getting clear of being sold; for, as I have said, we were ready for that. The fact was, we cared but little where we went, so we went together. Our greatest concern was about separation. We dreaded that more than anything this side of death. We found the evidence against us to be the testimony of one person; our master would not tell who it was; but we came to a unanimous decision among ourselves as to who their informant was. We were sent off to the jail at Easton. When we got there, we were delivered up to the sheriff, Mr. Joseph Graham, and by him placed in jail. Henry, John, and myself, were placed in one room together—Charles, and Henry Bailey, in another. Their object in separating us was to hinder concert.
We had been in jail scarcely twenty minutes, when a swarm of slave traders, and agents for slave traders, flocked into jail to look at us, and to ascertain if we were for sale. Such a set of beings I never saw before I felt myself surrounded by so many fiends from perdition. A band of pirates never looked more like their father, the devil. They laughed and grinned over us, saying, “Ah, my boys! we have got you, haven’t we?” And after taunting us in various ways, they one by one went into an examination of us, with intent to ascertain our value. They would impudently ask us if we would not like to have them for our masters. We would make them no answer, and leave them to find out as best they could. Then they would curse and swear at us, telling us that they could take the devil out of us in a very little while, if we were only in their hands.....

I now come to that part of my life during which planned, and finally succeeded in making, my escape from slavery. But before narrating any of the peculiar circumstances, I deem it proper to make known my intention not to state all the facts connected with the transaction. My reasons for pursuing this course may be understood from the following: First, were I to give a minute statement of all the facts, it is not only possible, but quite probable, that others would thereby be involved in the most embarrassing difficulties. Secondly, such a statement would most undoubtedly induce greater vigilance on the part of slave holders than has existed heretofore among them; which would, of course, be the means of guarding a door whereby some dear brother bondman might escape his galling chains. I deeply regret the necessity that impels me to suppress any thing of importance connected with my experience in slavery. It would afford me great pleasure indeed, as well as materially add to the interest of my narrative, were I at liberty to gratify a curiosity, which I know exists in the minds of many, by an accurate statement of all the facts pertaining to my most fortunate escape. But I must deprive myself of this pleasure, and the curious of the gratification which such a statement would afford. I would allow myself to suffer under the greatest imputations which evil-minded men might suggest, rather than exculpate myself, and thereby run the hazard of closing the slightest avenue by which a brother slave might clear himself of the chains and fetters of slavery.
I have never approved of the very public manner in which some of our western friends have conducted what they call the underground railroad, but which, I think, by their open declarations, has been made most emphatically the upperground railroad. I honor those good men and women for their noble daring, and applaud them for willingly subjecting themselves to bloody persecution, by openly avowing their participation in the escape of slaves. I, however, can see very little good resulting from such a course, either to themselves or the slaves escaping; while, upon the other hand, I see and feel assured that those open declarations are a positive evil to the slaves remaining, who are seeking to escape. They do nothing towards enlightening the slave, whilst they do much towards enlightening the master. They stimulate him to greater watchfulness, and enhance his power to capture his slave.

We owe something to the slaves south of the line as well as to those north of it; and in aiding the latter on their way to freedom, we should be careful to do nothing which would be likely to hinder the former from escaping from slavery. I would keep the merciless slaveholder profoundly ignorant of the means of flight adopted by the slave. I would leave him to imagine himself surrounded by myriads of invisible tormentors, ever ready to snatch from his infernal grasp his trembling prey. Let him be left to feel his way in the dark; let darkness commensurate with his crime hover over him; and let him feel that at every step he takes, in pursuit of the flying bondman, he is running the frightful risk of having his hot brains dashed out by an invisible agency. Let us render the tyrant no aid; let us not hold the light by which he can trace the footprints of our flying brother. But enough of this. I will now proceed to the statement of those facts, connected with my escape, for which I am alone responsible, and for which no one can be made to suffer but myself.

Things went on without very smoothly indeed, but within there was trouble. It is impossible for me to describe my feelings as the time of my contemplated start drew near. I had a number of warm-hearted friends in Baltimore, — friends that I loved almost as I did my life, — and the thought of being separated from them forever was painful beyond expression. It is my opinion that thousands would escape from slavery, who now remain, but for the strong cords of affection that bind them to their friends. The thought of leaving my friends was decidedly the most painful thought with which I had to contend. The love of them was my tender point, and shook my decision more than all things else. Besides the pain of separation, the dread and apprehension of a failure exceeded what I had experienced at my first attempt. The appalling defeat I then sustained returned to torment me. I felt assured that, if I failed in this attempt, my case would be a hopeless one — it would seal my fate as a slave forever. I could not hope to get off with anything less than the severest punishment, and being placed beyond the means of escape. It required no very vivid imagination to depict the most frightful scenes through which I should have to pass, in case I failed. The wretchedness of slavery, and the blessedness of freedom, were perpetually before me. It was life and death with me. But I remained firm, and, according to my resolution, on the third day of September, 1838, I left my chains, and succeeded in reaching New York without the slightest interruption of any kind. How I did so, - what means I adopted, - what direction I travelled, and by what mode of conveyance, — I must leave unexplained, for the reasons before mentioned.

I have been frequently asked how I felt when I found myself in a free State. I have never been able to answer the question with any satisfaction to myself. It was a moment of the highest excitement I ever experienced. I suppose I felt as one may imagine the unarmed mariner to feel when he is rescued by a friendly man-of-war from the pursuit of a pirate. In writing to a dear friend, immediately after my arrival at New York, I said I felt like one who had escaped a den of hungry lions. This state of mind, however, very soon subsided; and I was again seized with a feeling of great insecurity and loneliness. I was yet liable to be taken back, and subjected to all the tortures of slavery. This in itself was enough to damp the ardor of my enthusiasm. But the loneliness overcame me. There I was in the midst of thousands, and yet a perfect stranger; without home and without friends, in the midst of thousands of my own brethren — children of a common Father, and yet I dared not to unfold to any one of them my sad condition. I was afraid to speak to any one for fear of speaking to the wrong one, and thereby falling into the hands of money-loving kidnappers, whose business it was to lie in wait for the panting fugitive, as the ferocious beasts of the forest lie in wait for their prey. The motto which I adopted when I started from slavery was this—“Trust no man!” I saw in every white man an enemy, and in almost every colored man cause for distrust. It was a most painful situation; and, to understand it, one must needs experience it, or imagine himself in similar circumstances. Let him be a fugitive slave in a strange land—a land given up to be the hunting-ground for slaveholders—whose inhabitants are legalized kidnappers—where he is every moment subjected to the terrible liability of being seized upon by his fellow men, as the hideous crocodile seizes upon his prey! I say, let him place himself in my situation—without home or friends—without money or credit—wanting shelter, and no one to give it—wanting bread, and no money to buy it, -and at the same time let him feel that he is pursued by merciless men-hunters, and in total darkness as to what to do, where to go, or where to stay, -perfectly helpless both as to the means of defence and means of escape, -in the midst of plenty, yet suffering the terrible gnawings of hunger, — in the midst of houses, yet having no home, —among fellow-men, yet feeling as if in the midst of wild beasts, whose greediness to swallow up the trembling and half-famished fugitive is only equalled by that with which the monsters of the deep swallow up the helpless fish upon which they subsist, —I say, let him be placed in this most trying situation, —the situation in which I was placed, -then, and not till then, will he fully appreciate the hardships of, and know how to sympathize with, the toil-worn and whip-scarred fugitive slave.
ABRAHAM LINCOLN

Speech at Peoria

SPEECH EXCERPT

October 16, 1854

Lawn of the Peoria County Courthouse | Peoria, Illinois

On the Kansas-Nebraska Act

BACKGROUND

Abraham Lincoln responded to the passage of the Kansas-Nebraska Act and its principal proponent, Stephen A. Douglas, with this address at Peoria.

GUIDING QUESTIONS

1. Is Lincoln in favor or against self-governance?

2. In what way can the right of self-governance be abused according to Lincoln?

3. What principles does Lincoln take to be more essential than the right to self-governance?

4. What are the results of the violation of the Missouri Compromise both in the north and in the south?

5. How does Lincoln think the founders viewed slavery?

The repeal of the Missouri Compromise, and the propriety of its restoration, constitute the subject of what I am about to say....

I trust I understand, and truly estimate the right of self-government. My faith in the proposition that each man should do precisely as he pleases with all which is exclusively his own, lies at the foundation of the sense of justice there is in me. I extend the principles to communities of men, as well as to individuals. I so extend it, because it is politically wise, as well as naturally just; politically wise, in saving us from broils about matters which do not concern us. Here, or at Washington, I would not trouble myself with the oyster laws of Virginia, or the cranberry laws of Indiana.

The doctrine of self-government is right—absolutely and eternally right—but it has no just application, as here attempted. Or perhaps I should rather say that whether it has such just application depends upon whether a negro is not or is a man. If he is not a man, why in that case, he who is a man may, as a matter of self-government, do just as he pleases with him. But if the negro is a man, is it not to that extent, a total destruction of self-government, to say that he too shall not govern himself? When the white man governs himself that is self-government; but when he governs himself, and also governs another man, that is more than self-government—that is despotism. If the negro is a man, why then my ancient faith teaches me that “all men are created equal;” and that there can be no moral right in connection with one man’s making a slave of another....

What I do say is, that no man is good enough to govern another man, without that other’s consent. I say this is the leading principle—the sheet anchor of American republicanism. Our Declaration of Independence says:

“We hold these truths to be self evident: that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed.”
I have quoted so much at this time merely to show that according to our ancient faith, the just powers of governments are derived from the consent of the governed. Now the relation of masters and slaves is, pro tanto, a total violation of this principle. The master not only governs the slave without his consent; but he governs him by a set of rules altogether different from those which he prescribes for himself. Allow all the governed an equal voice in the government, and that, and that only is self-government....

This same generation of men, and mostly the same individuals of the generation, who declared this principle—who declared independence—who fought the war of the revolution through—who afterwards made the constitution under which we still live—these same men passed the ordinance of ’87, declaring that slavery should never go to the north-west territory. I have no doubt Judge Douglas thinks they were very inconsistent in this. It is a question of discrimination between them and him. But there is not an inch of ground left for his claiming that their opinions—their example—their authority—are on his side in this controversy....

I have done with this mighty argument, of self-government. Go, sacred thing! Go in peace....

The Missouri Compromise ought to be restored. For the sake of the Union, it ought to be restored. We ought to elect a House of Representatives which will vote its restoration. If by any means, we omit to do this, what follows? Slavery may or may not be established in Nebraska. But whether it be or not, we shall have repudiated—discarded from the councils of the Nation—the spirit of compromise; for who after this will ever trust in a national compromise? The spirit of mutual concession—that spirit which first gave us the constitution, and which has thrice saved the Union—we shall have strangled and cast from us forever. And what shall we have in lieu of it? The South flushed with triumph and tempted to excesses; the North, betrayed, as they believe, brooding on wrong and burning for revenge. One side will provoke; the other resent. The one will taunt, the other defy; one agrees, the... other retaliates. Already a few in the North, defy all constitutional restraints, resist the execution of the fugitive slave law, and even menace the institution of slavery in the States where it exists.

Already a few in the South, claim the constitutional right to take to and hold slaves in the free states—demand the revival of the slave trade; and demand a treaty with Great Britain by which fugitive slaves may be reclaimed from Canada. As yet they are but few on either side. It is a grave question for the lovers of the Union, whether the final destruction of the Missouri Compromise, and with it the spirit of all compromise will or will not embolden and embitter each of these, and fatally increase the numbers of both....

I particularly object to the new position which the avowed principle of this Nebraska law gives to slavery in the body politic. I object to it because it assumes that there can be moral right in the enslaving of one man by another. I object to it as a dangerous dalliance for a few people—a sad evidence that, feeling prosperity we forget right—that liberty, as a principle, we have ceased to revere. I object to it because the fathers of the republic eschewed, and rejected it. The argument of “Necessity” was the only argument they ever admitted in favor of slavery; and so far, and so far only as it carried them, did they ever go. They found the institution existing among us, which they could not help; and they cast blame upon the British King for having permitted its introduction. Before the constitution, they prohibited its introduction into the north-western Territory—the only country we owned, then free from it. At the framing and adoption of the constitution, they forbore to so much as mention the word “slave” or “slavery” in the whole instrument. In the provision for the recovery of fugitives, the slave is spoken of as a “person held to service or labor.” In that prohibiting the abolition of the African slave trade for twenty years, that trade is spoken of as “The migration or importation of such persons as any of the States now existing, shall think proper to admit,” etc. These are the only provisions alluding to slavery. Thus, the thing is hid away, in the constitution, just as an afflicted man hides away a wen or a cancer, which he dares not cut out at once, lest he bleed to death; with the promise, nevertheless, that the cutting may begin at the end of a given time. Less than this our fathers could not do; and now they would not do. Necessity drove them so far, and farther, they would not go. But this is not all. The earliest Congress, under the constitution, took the same view of slavery. They hedged and hemmed it in to the narrowest limits of necessity.

In 1794, they prohibited an out-going slave-trade—that is, the taking of slaves from the United States to sell.

5 In 1798, they prohibited the bringing of slaves from Africa, into the Mississippi Territory—this territory then comprising what are now the States of Mississippi and Alabama. This was ten years before they had the authority to do the same thing as to the States existing at the adoption of the constitution.

In 1800 they prohibited American citizens from trading in slaves between foreign countries—as, for instance, from Africa to Brazil.

10 In 1803 they passed a law in aid of one or two State laws, in restraint of the internal slave trade.

In 1807, in apparent hot haste, they passed the law, nearly a year in advance, to take effect the first day of 1808—the very first day the constitution would permit—prohibiting the African slave trade by heavy pecuniary and corporal penalties.

15 In 1820, finding these provisions ineffectual, they declared the trade piracy, and annexed to it, the extreme penalty of death. While all this was passing in the general government, five or six of the original slave States had adopted systems of gradual emancipation; and by which the institution was rapidly becoming extinct within these limits.

Thus we see, the plain unmistakable spirit of that age, towards slavery, was hostility to the principle, and toleration, only by necessity....

Our republican robe is soiled, and trailed in the dust. Let us repurify it. Let us turn and wash it white, in the spirit, if not the blood, of the Revolution. Let us turn slavery from its claims of “moral right,” back upon its existing legal rights, and its arguments of “necessity.”

20 Let us return it to the position our fathers gave it; and there let it rest in peace. Let us re-adopt the Declaration of Independence, and with it, the practices, and policy, which harmonize with it. Let north and south—let all Americans—let all lovers of liberty everywhere—join in the great and good work. If we do this, we shall not only have saved the Union; but we shall have so saved it, as to make, and to keep it, forever worthy of the saving.

5 We shall have so saved it, that the succeeding millions of free happy people, the world over, shall rise up, and call us blessed, to the latest generations....
ABRAHAM LINCOLN (R-IL)
To the Illinois Republican Party Convention
SPEECH EXCERPTS
June 16, 1858
House of Representatives Chamber at the Illinois State Capitol | Springfield, Illinois
A House Divided

BACKGROUND
Abraham Lincoln delivered this speech upon his nomination by the Illinois Republican Party to be its candidate for U.S. Senate in Illinois.

GUIDING QUESTIONS

1. To what, in particular, is Lincoln referring when he quotes the Gospel of Matthew, "A house divided against itself cannot stand"?

2. What are the three "working points" of "machinery" resulting from Dred Scott and Stephen Douglas's policy, and why does Lincoln think they are constitutionally problematic?

Mr. President and Gentlemen of the Convention:

If we could first know where we are, and whither we are tending, we could then better judge what to do, and how to do it.

We are now far into the fifth year, since a policy was initiated, with the avowed object, and confident promise, of putting an end to slavery agitation.

Under the operation of that policy, that agitation has not only, not ceased, but has constantly augmented.

In my opinion, it will not cease, until a crisis shall have been reached, and passed.

"A house divided against itself cannot stand."

I believe this government cannot endure, permanently half slave and half free.

I do not expect the Union to be dissolved—I do not expect the house to fall—but I do expect it will cease to be divided.

It will become all one thing, or all the other.

Either the opponents of slavery, will arrest the further spread of it, and place it where the public mind shall rest in the belief that it is in the course of ultimate extinction; or its advocates will push it forward, till it shall become alike lawful in all the States, old as well as new—North as well as South.

The several points of the Dred Scott decision, in connection with Senator Douglas' "care not" policy, constitute the piece of machinery, in its present state of advancement. This was the third point gained.

The working points of that machinery are:
First, that no negro slave, imported as such from Africa, and no descendant of such slave can ever be a citizen of any State, in the sense of that term as used in the Constitution of the United States.

This point is made in order to deprive the negro, in every possible event, of the benefit of this provision of the United States Constitution, which declares that—

"The citizens of each State shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States."

Secondly, that "subject to the Constitution of the United States," neither Congress nor a Territorial Legislature can exclude slavery from any United States territory.

This point is made in order that individual men may fill up the territories with slaves, without danger of losing them as property, and thus to enhance the chances of permanency to the institution through all the future.

Thirdly, that whether the holding a negro in actual slavery in a free State, makes him free, as against the holder, the United States courts will not decide, but will leave to be decided by the courts of any slave State the negro may be forced into by the master.

This point is made, not to be pressed immediately; but, if acquiesced in for a while, and apparently endorsed by the people at an election, then to sustain the logical conclusion that what Dred Scott’s master might lawfully do with Dred Scott, in the free State of Illinois, every other master may lawfully do with any other one, or one thousand slaves, in Illinois, or in any other free State.

Auxiliary to all this, and working hand in hand with it, the Nebraska doctrine, or what is left of it, is to educate and mold public opinion, at least Northern public opinion, not to care whether slavery is voted down or voted up.

This shows exactly where we now are; and partially also, whither we are tending....
We can not absolutely know that all these exact adaptations are the result of preconcert. But when we see a lot of framed timbers, different portions of which we know have been gotten out at different times and places and by different workmen—Stephen, Franklin, Roger and James, for instance—and when we see these timbers joined together, and see they exactly make the frame of a house or a mill, all the tenons and mortices exactly fitting, and all the lengths and proportions of the different pieces exactly adapted to their respective places, and not a piece too many or too few—not omitting even scaffolding—or, if a single piece be lacking, we can see the place in the frame exactly fitted and prepared to yet bring such piece in—in such a case, we find it impossible to not believe that Stephen and Franklin and Roger and James all understood one another from the beginning, and all worked upon a common plan or draft drawn up before the first lick was struck....
PRESIDENT-ELECT ABRAHAM LINCOLN (R-IL)

On the Constitution and Union

UNPUBLISHED WRITING FRAGMENT

January 1861

BACKGROUND

Abraham Lincoln scrawled these words on the relationship between the Constitution and the Declaration of Independence, potentially as part of his drafts for his First Inaugural Address, though they were not used in the final speech nor in any other public comments.

ANNOTATIONS

All this is not the result of accident. It has a philosophical cause. Without the Constitution and the Union, we could not have attained the result; but even these, are not the primary cause of our great prosperity. There is something back of these, entwining itself more closely about the human heart. That something, is the principle of "Liberty to all"—the principle that clears the path for all—gives hope to all—and, by consequence, enterprise, and industry to all.

The expression of that principle, in our Declaration of Independence, was most happy, and fortunate. Without this, as well as with it, we could have declared our independence of Great Britain; but without it, we could not, I think, have secured our free government, and consequent prosperity. No oppressed, people will fight, and endure, as our fathers did, without the promise of something better, than a mere change of masters.

The assertion of that principle, at that time, was the word, "fitly spoken" which has proved an "apple of gold" to us. The Union, and the Constitution, are the picture of silver, subsequently framed around it. The picture was made, not to conceal, or destroy the apple; but to adorn, and preserve it. The picture was made for the apple—not the apple for the picture.

Notes & Questions

So let us act, that neither picture, or apple shall ever be blurred, or bruised or broken.

That we may so act, we must study, and understand the points of danger.
BACKGROUND

Abraham Lincoln delivered this speech at his inauguration amidst declarations of secession by southern states.

GUIDING QUESTIONS

1. How does Lincoln try to assuage the fears of Southerners?
2. Why does Lincoln believe that the Union is perpetual?
3. What is "the only substantial dispute," and what are its possible resolutions as Lincoln sees them?

Fellow citizens of the United States:

In compliance with a custom as old as the government itself, I appear before you to address you briefly, and to take, in your presence, the oath prescribed by the Constitution of the United States, to be taken by the President "before he enters on the execution of his office."

I do not consider it necessary, at present for me to discuss those matters of administration about which there is no special anxiety, or excitement.

Apprehension seems to exist among the people of the Southern States, that by the accession of a Republican Administration, their property, and their peace, and personal security, are to be endangered. There has never been any reasonable cause for such apprehension. Indeed, the most ample evidence to the contrary has all the while existed, and been open to their inspection. It is found in nearly all the published speeches of him who now addresses you. I do but quote from one of those speeches when I declare that "I have no purpose, directly or indirectly, to interfere with the institution of slavery in the States where it exists. I believe I have no lawful right to do so, and I have no inclination to do so." Those who nominated and elected me did so with full knowledge that I had made this, and many similar declarations, and had never recanted them. And more than this, they placed in the platform, for my acceptance, and as a law to themselves, and to me, the clear and emphatic resolution which I now read:

"Resolved, That the maintenance inviolate of the rights of the States, and especially the right of each State to order and control its own domestic institutions according to its own judgment exclusively, is essential to that balance of power on which the perfection and endurance of our political fabric depend; and we denounce the lawless invasion by armed force of the soil of any State or Territory, no matter under what pretext, as among the gravest of crimes."
I now reiterate these sentiments: and in doing so, I only press upon the public attention the most conclusive evidence of which the case is susceptible, that the property, peace and security of no section are to be in anywise endangered by the now incoming Administration. I add too, that all the protection which, consistently with the Constitution and the laws, can be given, will be cheerfully given to all the States when lawfully demanded, for whatever cause—as cheerfully to one section, as to another.

There is much controversy about the delivering up of fugitives from service or labor. The clause I now read is as plainly written in the Constitution as any other of its provisions:

"No person held to service or labor in one State, under the laws thereof, escaping into another, shall, in consequence of any law or regulation therein, be discharged from such service or labor, but shall be delivered up on claim of the party to whom such service or labor may be due."

It is scarcely questioned that this provision was intended by those who made it, for the reclaiming of what we call fugitive slaves; and the intention of the law-giver is the law. All members of Congress swear their support to the whole Constitution—to this provision as much as to any other. To the proposition, then, that slaves whose cases come within the terms of this clause, "shall be delivered up," their oaths are unanimous. Now, if they would make the effort in good temper, could they not, with nearly equal unanimity, frame and pass a law, by means of which to keep good that unanimous oath?

There is some difference of opinion whether this clause should be enforced by national or by state authority; but surely that difference is not a very material one. If the slave is to be surrendered, it can be of but little consequence to him, or to others, by which authority it is done. And should any one, in any case, be content that his oath shall go unkept, on a merely unsubstantial controversy as to how it shall be kept?

Again, in any law upon this subject, ought not all the safeguards of liberty known in civilized and humane jurisprudence to be introduced, so that a free man be not, in any case, surrendered as a slave? And might it not be well, at the same time, to provide by law for the enforcement of that clause in the Constitution which guarantees that "The citizens of each State shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States?"

I take the official oath today, with no mental reservations, and with no purpose to construe the Constitution or laws, by any hypercritical rules. And while I do not choose now to specify particular acts of Congress as proper to be enforced, I do suggest, that it will be much safer for all, both in official and private stations, to conform to, and abide by, all those acts which stand unrepealed, than to violate any of them, trusting to find impunity in having them held to be unconstitutional.

It is seventy-two years since the first inauguration of a President under our national Constitution. During that period fifteen different and greatly distinguished citizens, have, in succession, administered the executive branch of the government. They have conducted it through many perils; and, generally, with great success. Yet, with all this scope for precedent, I now enter upon the same task for the brief constitutional term of four years, under great and peculiar difficulty. A disruption of the Federal Union heretofore only menaced, is now formidably attempted.

I hold, that in contemplation of universal law, and of the Constitution, the Union of these States is perpetual. Perpetuity is implied, if not expressed, in the fundamental law of all national governments. It is safe to assert that no government proper, ever had a provision in its organic law for its own termination. Continue to execute all the express provisions of our national Constitution, and the Union will endure forever—it being impossible to destroy it, except by some action not provided for in the instrument itself.

Again, if the United States be not a government proper, but an association of States in the nature of contract merely, can it, as a contract, be peaceably unmade, by less than all the parties who made it? One party to a contract may violate it—break it, so to speak; but does it not require all to lawfully rescind it?
Descending from these general principles, we find the proposition that, in legal contemplation, the Union is perpetual, confirmed by the history of the Union itself. The Union is much older than the Constitution. It was formed in fact, by the Articles of Association in 1774. It was matured and continued by the Declaration of Independence in 1776. It was further matured and the faith of all the then thirteen States expressly plighted and engaged that it should be perpetual, by the Articles of Confederation in 1778. And finally, in 1787, one of the declared objects for ordaining and establishing the Constitution, was “to form a more perfect union.”

But if destruction of the Union, by one, or by a part only, of the States, be lawfully possible, the Union is less perfect than before the Constitution, having lost the vital element of perpetuity.

It follows from these views that no State, upon its own mere motion, can lawfully get out of the Union,—that resolves and ordinances to that effect are legally void; and that acts of violence, within any State or States, against the authority of the United States, are insurrectionary or revolutionary, according to circumstances.

I therefore consider that, in view of the Constitution and the laws, the Union is unbroken; and, to the extent of my ability, I shall take care, as the Constitution itself expressly enjoins upon me, that the laws of the Union be faithfully executed in all the States. Doing this I deem to be only a simple duty on my part; and I shall perform it, so far as practicable, unless my rightful masters, the American people, shall withhold the requisite means, or, in some authoritative manner, direct the contrary. I trust this will not be regarded as a menace, but only as the declared purpose of the Union that it will constitutionally defend, and maintain itself.

In doing this there needs to be no bloodshed or violence; and there shall be none, unless it be forced upon the national authority. The power confided to me, will be used to hold, occupy, and possess the property, and places belonging to the government, and to collect the duties and imposts; but beyond what may be necessary for these objects, there will be no invasion—no using of force against, or among the people anywhere. Where hostility to the United States, in any interior locality, shall be so great and so universal, as to prevent competent resident citizens from holding the Federal offices, there will be no attempt to force obnoxious strangers among the people for that object. While the strict legal right may exist in the government to enforce the exercise of these offices, the attempt to do so would be so irritating, and so nearly impracticable with all, that I deem it better to forego, for the time, the uses of such offices.

The mails, unless repelled, will continue to be furnished in all parts of the Union. So far as possible, the people everywhere shall have that sense of perfect security which is most favorable to calm thought and reflection. The course here indicated will be followed, unless current events, and experience, shall show a modification, or change, to be proper; and in every case and exigency, my best discretion will be exercised, according to circumstances actually existing, and with a view and a hope of a peaceful solution of the national troubles, and the restoration of fraternal sympathies and affections.…

One section of our country believes slavery is right, and ought to be extended, while the other believes it is wrong, and ought not to be extended. This is the only substantial dispute.

The fugitive slave clause of the Constitution, and the law for the suppression of the foreign slave trade, are each as well enforced, perhaps, as any law can ever be in a community where the moral sense of the people imperfectly supports the law itself. The great body of the people abide by the dry legal obligation in both cases, and a few break over in each. This, I think, cannot be perfectly cured; and it would be worse in both cases after the separation of the sections, than before. The foreign slave trade, now imperfectly suppressed, would be ultimately revived without restriction, in one section; while fugitive slaves, now only partially surrendered, would not be surrendered at all, by the other.
Physically speaking, we cannot separate. We cannot remove our respective sections from each other, nor build an impassable wall between them. A husband and wife may be divorced, and go out of the presence, and beyond the reach of each other; but the different parts of our country cannot do this. They cannot but remain face to face; and intercourse, either amicable or hostile, must continue between them. Is it possible then to make that intercourse more advantageous, or more satisfactory, after separation than before? Can aliens make treaties easier than friends can make laws? Can treaties be more faithfully enforced between aliens, than laws can among friends? Suppose you go to war, you cannot fight always; and when, after much loss on both sides, and no gain on either, you cease fighting, the identical old questions, as to terms of intercourse, are again upon you.

This country, with its institutions, belongs to the people who inhabit it. Whenever they shall grow weary of the existing government, they can exercise their constitutional right of amending it, or their revolutionary right to dismember, or overthrow it. I can not be ignorant of the fact that many worthy, and patriotic citizens are desirous of having the national constitution amended. While I make no recommendation of amendments, I fully recognize the rightful authority of the people over the whole subject, to be exercised in either of the modes prescribed in the instrument itself; and I should, under existing circumstances, favor, rather than oppose, a fair opportunity being afforded the people to act upon it.…

My countrymen, one and all, think calmly and well, upon this whole subject. Nothing valuable can be lost by taking time. If there be an object to hurry any of you, in hot haste, to a step which you would never take deliberately, that object will be frustrated by taking time; but no good object can be frustrated by it. Such of you as are now dissatisfied, still have the old Constitution unimpaired, and, on the sensitive point, the laws of your own framing under it; while the new administration will have no immediate power, if it would, to change either. If it were admitted that you who are dissatisfied, hold the right side in the dispute, there still is no single good reason for precipitate action. Intelligence, patriotism, Christianity, and a firm reliance on Him, who has never yet forsaken this favored land, are still competent to adjust, in the best way, all our present difficulty.
In your hands, my dissatisfied fellow countrymen, and not in mine, is the momentous issue of civil war. The government will not assail you. You can have no conflict, without being yourselves the aggressors. You have no oath registered in Heaven to destroy the government, while I shall have the most solemn one to "preserve, protect and defend it."

I am loath to close. We are not enemies, but friends. We must not be enemies. Though passion may have strained, it must not break our bonds of affection. The mystic chords of memory, stretching from every battle-field, and patriot grave, to every living heart and hearthstone, all over this broad land, will yet swell the chorus of the Union, when again touched, as surely they will be, by the better angels of our nature.
PRESIDENT ABRAHAM LINCOLN (R-IL)

A Proclamation

AN ORDER

January 1, 1863

Executive Mansion | Washington, D.C.

Emancipation Proclamation

BACKGROUND

On September 22, 1862 after the Union victory in the Battle of Antietam, Abraham Lincoln announced this order concerning property in slaves in the rebelling states, which took effect January 1, 1863.

GUIDING QUESTIONS

1. Whom did the proclamation free?

2. In which places did this order apply?

3. By what authority did Lincoln issue this order?

4. What military purpose did the order serve?

5. What did Lincoln implore of slaves freed by the order?

By the President of the United States of America: A Proclamation.

Whereas, on the twenty-second day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-two, a proclamation was issued by the President of the United States, containing, among other things, the following, to wit:

"That on the first day of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-three, all persons held as slaves within any State or designated part of a State, the people whereof shall then be in rebellion against the United States, shall be then, thenceforward, and forever free; and the Executive Government of the United States, including the military and naval authority thereof, will recognize and maintain the freedom of such persons, and will do no act or acts to repress such persons, or any of them, in any efforts they may make for their actual freedom.

"That the Executive will, on the first day of January aforesaid, by proclamation, designate the States and parts of States, if any, in which the people thereof, respectively, shall then be in rebellion against the United States; and the fact that any State, or the people thereof, shall on that day be, in good faith, represented in the Congress of the United States by members chosen thereto at elections wherein a majority of the qualified voters of such State shall have participated, shall, in the absence of strong countervailing testimony, be deemed conclusive evidence that such State, and the people thereof, are not then in rebellion against the United States."

Now, therefore I, Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States, by virtue of the power in me vested as Commander-in-Chief, of the Army and Navy of the United States in time of actual armed rebellion against authority and government of the United States, and as a fit and necessary war measure for suppressing said rebellion, do, on this first day of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-three, and in accordance with my purpose so to do publicly proclaimed for the full period of one hundred days, from the day first above mentioned, order and designate as the States and parts of States wherein
The Emancipation Proclamation
Abraham Lincoln

the people thereof respectively, are this day in rebellion against the United States, the following, to wit:

Arkansas, Texas, Louisiana, (except the Parishes of St. Bernard, Plaquemines, Jefferson, St. Johns, St. Charles, St. James, Ascension, Assumption, Terrebonne, Lafourche, St. Mary, St. Martin, and Orleans, including the City of New Orleans) Mississippi, Alabama, Florida, Georgia, South-Carolina, North-Carolina, and Virginia, (except the forty-eight counties designated as West Virginia, and also the counties of Berkley, Accomac, Northampton, Elizabeth-City, York, Princess Ann, and Norfolk, including the cities of Norfolk and Portsmouth); and which excepted parts are, for the present, left precisely as if this proclamation were not issued.

And by virtue of the power, and for the purpose aforesaid, I do order and declare that all persons held as slaves within said designated States, and parts of States, are, and henceforward shall be free; and that the Executive government of the United States, including the military and naval authorities thereof, will recognize and maintain the freedom of said persons.

And I hereby enjoin upon the people so declared to be free to abstain from all violence, unless in necessary self-defense; and I recommend to them that, in all cases when allowed, they labor faithfully for reasonable wages.

And I further declare and make known, that such persons of suitable condition, will be received into the armed service of the United States to garrison forts, positions, stations, and other places, and to man vessels of all sorts in said service.

And upon this act, sincerely believed to be an act of justice, warranted by the Constitution, upon military necessity, I invoke the considerate judgment of mankind, and the gracious favor of Almighty God.
In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington, this first day of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-three, and of the Independence of the United States of America the eighty-seventh.

By the President:

Abraham Lincoln

William H. Seward, Secretary of State.
BACKGROUND

Abraham Lincoln delivered these remarks at the dedication of the Union cemetery for those soldiers killed in the Battle of Gettysburg in the summer of 1863.

GUIDING QUESTIONS

1. For Lincoln, what is the central idea of the American Founding?

2. For what cause did the soldiers buried in Gettysburg give their lives?

3. What were they fighting to defend?

4. To what cause does Lincoln wish for listeners to dedicate themselves?
Four score and seven years ago our fathers brought forth, on this continent, a new nation, conceived in Liberty, and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal.

Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that nation, or any nation so conceived, and so dedicated, can long endure. We are met on a great battle-field of that war. We have come to dedicate a portion of that field, as a final resting-place for those who here gave their lives, that that nation might live. It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this.

But, in a larger sense, we can not dedicate—we can not consecrate—we can not hallow—this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here, have consecrated it far above our poor power to add or detract. The world will little note, nor long remember what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here. It is for us the living, rather, to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus far so nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us—that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they here gave the last full measure of devotion—that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain—that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom—and that government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth.
PRESIDENT ABRAHAM LINCOLN (R)
Second Inaugural Address

SPEECH

March 4, 1865
U.S. Capitol | Washington, D.C.

BACKGROUND

Having been reelected and with the end of the Civil War in sight, Abraham Lincoln delivered this speech at his inauguration to a second term as president.

GUIDING QUESTIONS

1. According to Lincoln, who caused the Civil War?

2. What role in the war does Lincoln ascribe to God?

3. How does Lincoln think the North should treat the South when the war ends?

Fellow Countrymen:

At this second appearing to take the oath of the presidential office, there is less occasion for an extended address than there was at the first. Then a statement, somewhat in detail, of a course to be pursued, seemed fitting and proper. Now, at the expiration of four years, during which public declarations have been constantly called forth on every point and phase of the great contest which still absorbs the attention, and engrosses the energies of the nation, little that is new could be presented. The progress of our arms, upon which all else chiefly depends, is as well known to the public as to myself; and it is, I trust, reasonably satisfactory and encouraging to all. With high hope for the future, no prediction in regard to it is ventured.

On the occasion corresponding to this four years ago, all thoughts were anxiously directed to an impending civil-war. All dreaded it—all sought to avert it. While the inaugural address was being delivered from this place, devoted altogether to saving the Union without war, insurgent agents were in the city seeking to destroy it without war—seeking to dissolve the Union, and divide effects, by negotiation. Both parties deprecated war; but one of them would make war rather than let the nation survive; and the other would accept war rather than let it perish. And the war came.

One eighth of the whole population were colored slaves, not distributed generally over the Union, but localized in the Southern part of it. These slaves constituted a peculiar and powerful interest. All knew that this interest was, somehow, the cause of the war. To strengthen, perpetuate, and extend this interest was the object for which the insurgents would rend the Union, even by war; while the government claimed no right to do more than to restrict the territorial enlargement of it. Neither party expected for the war, the magnitude, or the duration, which it has already attained. Neither anticipated that the cause of the conflict might cease with, or even before, the conflict itself should cease. Each looked for an easier triumph, and a result less fundamental and astounding. Both read the same Bible, and pray to the same God; and each invokes His aid against the other. It may seem strange that any men should dare to ask a just God's assistance in wringing their bread from the sweat of other men’s faces; but let us judge not that we be not judged. The prayers of both could not be answered; that of neither has been answered fully. The Almighty has His own purposes.
"Woe unto the world because of offenses! for it must needs be that offenses come; but woe to that man by whom the offense cometh!" If we shall suppose that American Slavery is one of those offenses which, in the providence of God, must needs come, but which, having continued through His appointed time, He now wills to remove, and that He gives to both North and South, this terrible war, as the woe due to those by whom the offense came, shall we discern therein any departure from those divine attributes which the believers in a Living God always ascribe to Him? Fondly do we hope—fervently do we pray—that this mighty scourge of war may speedily pass away. Yet, if God wills that it continue, until all the wealth piled by the bond-man’s two hundred and fifty years of unrequited toil shall be sunk, and until every drop of blood drawn with the lash, shall be paid by another drawn with the sword, as was said three thousand years ago, so still it must be said "the judgments of the Lord, are true and righteous altogether."

With malice toward none; with charity for all; with firmness in the right, as God gives us to see the right, let us strive on to finish the work we are in; to bind up the nation’s wounds; to care for him who shall have borne the battle, and for his widow, and his orphan—to do all which may achieve and cherish a just, and a lasting peace, among ourselves, and with all nations.
U.S. CONGRESS AND STATES

Thirteenth Amendment to the Constitution

AMENDMENT

December 18, 1865
United States of America

BACKGROUND

The U.S. Congress passed and three-quarters of states ratified the Thirteenth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution by December 6, 1865, and the amendment was acknowledged as effective by Secretary of State William Seward on December 18, 1865.

ANNOTATIONS

Section 1. Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction.

Section 2. Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

The House Joint Resolution proposing the 13th amendment to the Constitution, January 31, 1865; Enrolled Acts and Resolutions of Congress, 1789-1999; General Records of the United States Government; Record Group 11; National Archives.
U.S. CONGRESS AND STATES

Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution

BACKGROUND

The U.S. Congress passed and three-quarters of states ratified the Fourteenth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution by July 21, 1868, and the amendment was acknowledged as effective by Secretary of State William Seward on July 28, 1868.

ANNOTATIONS

Section 1. All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

Section 2. Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed. But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice-President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the Executive and Judicial officers of a State, or the members of the Legislature thereof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State, being twenty-one years of age, and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion, or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of

NOTES & QUESTIONS

The House Joint Resolution proposing the 14th amendment to the Constitution, June 16, 1866; Enrolled Acts and Resolutions of Congress, 1789-1999; General Records of the United States Government; Record Group 11; National Archives.
such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens twenty-one years of age in such State.

Section 3. No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice-President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath, as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability.

Section 4. The validity of the public debt of the United States, authorized by law, including debts incurred for payment of pensions and bounties for services in suppressing insurrection or rebellion, shall not be questioned. But neither the United States nor any State shall assume or pay any debt or obligation incurred in aid of insurrection or rebellion against the United States, or any claim for the loss or emancipation of any slave; but all such debts, obligations and claims shall be held illegal and void.

Section 5. The Congress shall have power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article.
U.S. Congress and States

Fifteenth Amendment to the Constitution

BACKGROUND

The U.S. Congress passed and three-quarters of states ratified the Fifteenth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution by February 3, 1870, and the amendment was acknowledged as effective by Secretary of State Hamilton Fish on March 30, 1870.

ANNOTATIONS

Section 1. The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

Section 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

NOTES & QUESTIONS

The House Joint Resolution proposing the 15th amendment to the Constitution, December 7, 1868; Enrolled Acts and Resolutions of Congress, 1789-1999; General Records of the United States Government; Record Group 11; National Archives.
E.D. ESTILLETTE, PRESIDENT OF THE BOARD OF POLICE

To the Police of Recently Emancipated Negroes

ORDINANCE

July 3, 1865
Opelousas, Louisiana

BACKGROUND

As slavery was outlawed and African Americans were freed in southern states, many communities created new laws and regulations to infringe upon the newfound freedom of former slaves. This is one example of such a “black code” from a town in Louisiana in the first months after the Civil War.

ANNOTATIONS

Whereas the relations formerly subsis[ti]ng between master and slave have b[e]come changed by the action of the controlling authorities; and whereas it i[s] necessary to provide for the proper police and government of the recently emancipated negroes or freedmen, in their new relations to the municipal authorities;

Sect. 1. Be it therefore ordained by [t]he Board of Police of the Town of Ope[l]ousas: That no negro or freedman shall be allowed to come within the limits of the Town of Opelousas, without special permission from his employer, specifying the object of his visit, and the time necessary for the accomplishment of the same. Whoever shall violate this provision, shall suffer imprisonment and two days work on the public streets, or shall pay a fine of two dollars and fifty cents.

Sect. 2. Be it further ordained that every negro or freedman who shall be found on the streets of Opelousas, after 10 o’clock at night, without a written pass or permit from his employer, shall be imprisoned and compelled to work five days on the public streets, or pay a fine of five dollars.

Sect. 3. No negro or freedman shall be permitted to rent or keep a house within the limits of the town under any circumstances, and any one thus offending, shall be ejected and compelled to find an employer, or leave the town within twenty-four hours. The lessor or furnisher of the house leased or kept as above, shall pay a fine of ten dollars for each offense.

Sect. 4. No negro or freedman shall reside within the limits of the Town of Opelousas, who is not in the regular service of some white person or former owner, who shall be held responsible for the conduct of said freedman. But said employer or former owner may permit said freedman to hire his time, by special permission in writing, which permission shall not extend over twenty-four hours at any one time. Any one violating the provisions of this section, shall be imprisoned and forced to work for two days on the public streets.

Sect. 5. No public meetings or congregations of negroes or freedmen, shall be allowed within the limits of the Town of Opelousas, under any circumstances or for any purpose, without the permission of the Mayor or President of the Board. This prohibition is not intended, however, to prevent freedmen from attending the usual Church services conducted by established ministers of religion. Every freedman violating this law shall be imprisoned and made to work five days on the public streets.

Sect. 6. No negro or freedman shall be permitted to preach, exhort or otherwise declaim, to congregations of colored people, without a special permission from the Mayor or President of the Board of Police, under the penalty of a fine of ten dollars or twenty days work on the public streets.

Sect. 7. No freedman, who is not in the military service, shall be allowed to carry fire-arms or any kind of weapons, within the limits of the Town of Opelousas, without the special permission of his employer in writing, and approved by the Mayor or President of the Board of Police. Any one thus offending shall forfeit his weapons and shall be imprisoned and made to work five days on the public streets, or pay a fine of five dollars in lieu of said work.
Sect. 8. No freedman shall sell, barter or exchange any articles of merchandise or traffic, within the limits of Opelousas, without permission in writing from his employer or the Mayor or President of the Board, under the penalty of the forfeiture of said articles, and imprisonment and one day's labor, or a fine of one dollar in lieu of said work.

Sect. 9. Any freedman found drunk within the limits of the town shall be imprisoned and made to labor five days on the public streets, or pay five dollars in lieu of said labor.

Sect. 10. Any freedman not residing in Opelousas, who shall be found within its corporate limits after the hour of 3 o'clock P.M. on Sunday, without a special written permission from his employer or the Mayor, shall be arrested and imprisoned and made to work two days on the public streets, or pay two dollars in lieu of said work.

Sect. 11. All the foregoing provisions apply to freed men and freed women, or both sexes.

Sect. 12. It shall be the special duty of the Mayor or President of the Board, to see that all the provisions of this ordinance are faithfully executed.

Sect. 13. Be it further ordained, That this ordinance to take effect from [and] after its first publication.

Ordained the 3d day of July, 1865,

E. D. ESTILLETTE

President of the Board of Police.

JOS. D. RICHARD, Clerk.
American Civics

Course Overview

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Unit 1</th>
<th>The Declaration of Independence</th>
<th>12–15 classes</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Lesson 1</td>
<td>The Human Person</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lesson 2</td>
<td>Government</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lesson 3</td>
<td>The Citizen and Self-Government</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Unit 2</th>
<th>The United States Constitution</th>
<th>12–17 classes</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Lesson 1</td>
<td>The Principles of the Constitution</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lesson 2</td>
<td>The Congress</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lesson 3</td>
<td>The Presidency</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lesson 4</td>
<td>The Judiciary</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lesson 5</td>
<td>The Bill of Rights</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Unit 3 | Politics and Policy

LESSON 1  Parties, Elections, and Campaigns
LESSON 2  Civic Participation
LESSON 3  Placeholder: State and Local Government
LESSON 4  Domestic Policy
LESSON 5  National Security and Foreign Policy

Unit 4 | Challenging and Defending America’s Principles

LESSON 1  The Founding: The Exception to the Rule
LESSON 2  Abolitionism vs. Slavery
LESSON 3  Progressive Government
LESSON 4  Civil Rights vs. Discriminatory Laws
UNIT 1
The Declaration of Independence

40-50-minute classes | 12-15 classes

UNIT PREVIEW

Structure

LESSON 1 The Human Person 2-3 classes p. 7
LESSON 2 Government 2-3 classes p. 11
LESSON 3 The Citizen and Self-Government 3-4 classes p. 15
APPENDIX A Study Guide, Test, Writing Assignment p. 19
APPENDIX B Primary Sources p. 29

Why Teach the Declaration of Independence

The Declaration of Independence was not merely a renunciation of dependence on Great Britain. It was, in fact, generative. It created an entity—a nation—that stood on its own, had its own existence, and was independent of other nations. Even today, it offers guiding principles that continue to shape our arguments about the nature and limits of political authority. In brief, the Declaration of Independence created and still defines the United States of America. Like an organizational mission statement, the Declaration is an indication of the Founders’ intention, a guiding star for our political life, and a benchmark for measuring our public institutions. Americans should consider all questions concerning the public sphere in light of the truths asserted in the Declaration. The Declaration of Independence should be both the beginning and end for students’ understanding of their country, their citizenship, and the benefits and responsibilities of being an American. In order to judge prudently in matters of public interest in the present day, students must learn about the philosophical principles upon which the American Founders created the United States of America. These include the assertion of self-evident, objective truths about natural rights, morality, and self-government, which find their best expression in the document that founded America.
What Teachers Should Consider

Americans in general—but especially American students—take a lot for granted about their way of life in this country. This is not surprising, given human nature and the wide achievements of American society. But it does indicate one of the primary roles of the teacher of American civics and history: to help students to understand the arguments and the actions, the sacrifices and accomplishments, that led to the way of life they enjoy today.

To that end, teachers themselves must not take life in America for granted and teach history backwards. That means recognizing what America shares with other countries, especially today, but then also looking back at history and comparing the development of United States to life and government in contemporary civilizations. This is a great feat of the imagination that takes great effort on the part of the teacher.

The key starting point for putting America in perspective is its very unique founding. As reflected in its government and institutions, the country was founded as a republic. The people themselves determine what their government will do by choosing from among their fellow citizens those who will represent their interest in government decisions. Compared to monarchies and tyrannies, aristocracies and oligarchies, establishing a republic was an extraordinary exception in the 1700s, especially given its poor historical record of success dating back to the ancient world.

But what was truly unprecedented about America is that it was founded based not merely on borders and not on ethnicity, but on an idea, namely that “all men are created equal,” a truth for all peoples at all times. To found a political community and government on an explicit idea about human beings was truly unheard of in history.

The sources of this truth were as old as the ancients, but their particular articulation in the Declaration of Independence and their assertion as the foundation of just government were altogether novel attempts in political history. “[T]he Laws of Nature and of Nature’s God” served as the foundation for America, where nature indicated the truth of reality and of human nature. These truths stood outside of the will of any human being.

And so within the specific circumstances of the colonists’ struggle with the British government in the 18th century the founders posited in the Declaration of Independence the “abstract truth, applicable to all men and all times,” as Abraham Lincoln put it, that “all men are created equal” and that the purpose of government is to “secure these rights.”

These principles are what made the founding of America truly exceptional, and an exception in human history.
How Teachers Can Learn More

TEXTS

The U.S. Constitution: A Reader, ed. Hillsdale College Politics Faculty  Chapters 1–3
We Still Hold These Truths, Matthew Spalding  Chapters 1–4
The Constitutional Convention, James Madison  Chapters 1 and 4
American Government and Politics, Joseph Bessette and John Pitney

ONLINE COURSES | Online.Hillsdale.edu

Introduction to the Constitution

Constitution 101

Primary Sources Studied in This Unit

The Declaration of Independence
The Mayflower Compact
Thanksgiving Proclamation, George Washington
Letter to the Massachusetts Militia, John Adams
Farewell Address, George Washington
Report of the Commissioners for the University of Virginia, Thomas Jefferson & James Madison
First Annual Address to Congress, George Washington
The Northwest Ordinance, Article III
“Property,” James Madison
The Examination Number No. 7, Alexander Hamilton
LESSON PLANS, ASSIGNMENTS, AND FORMATIVE QUIZ
Lesson 1 — The Human Person

LESSON OBJECTIVE

Students learn the Founders’ understanding and assertions about the human person and human nature, understandings that are the starting point for all considerations of political order and on which the United States is established.

ONLINE COURSES FOR TEACHERS | Online.Hillsdale.edu

- Introduction to the Constitution Lectures 1, 2, 3, and 4
- Constitution 101 Lectures 1 and 2

PRIMARY SOURCES

Students may read and annotate the following primary source(s), either at home or together in class. Using their annotations and the below questions, lead students through a seminar conversation on each text.

-The Declaration of Independence

TERMS AND TOPICS

- history
- polis
- politics
- power
- Laws of Nature and of Nature’s God
- nature
- natural law
- objective truth
- self-evident
- principles
- morality
- equality
- natural rights
- unalienable
- life
- liberty
- pursuit of happiness

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

- What is the “Course of human events”?
- What is politics?
- According to the text itself, why are the colonists issuing a Declaration of Independence?
- What are “the Laws of Nature and of Nature’s God”?
- What is a “self–evident” truth?
- What does human equality mean in the statement, “all men are created equal”?
- What are natural rights and why do human beings have them?
- According to the Declaration of Independence, from where do natural rights come?
- What does it mean to say that men are “endowed by their Creator” with the rights?
What does “unalienable” mean?

Questions from the U.S. Civics Test:
- Question 8: Why is the Declaration of Independence important?
- Question 9: What founding document said the American colonies were free from Britain?
- Question 10: Name two important ideas from the Declaration of Independence and the U.S. Constitution.
- Question 11: The words “Life, Liberty, and the pursuit of Happiness” are in what founding document?
- Question 78: Who wrote the Declaration of Independence?
- Question 79: When was the Declaration of Independence adopted?
- Question 81: There were 13 original states. Name five.
- Question 85: Benjamin Franklin is famous for many things. Name one.
- Question 87: Thomas Jefferson is famous for many things. Name one.
- Question 125: What is Independence Day?
- Question 126: Name three national U.S. holidays.

Keys to the Lesson

America is like other nations in that it has a people, a geographic location, and laws that govern it. But America is also very different. It was founded at a particular time on the basis of particular ideas. In the end, America is not bound by an ethnic character, a common religion, or even a shared history as much as by a set of principles held to true and universal and established as the basis for this particular nation. These principles bind America’s extraordinarily diverse people into one nation through a shared belief and commitment to these principles. Students must understand this unique quality about their country and know what these principles are, beginning with the Founders’ assertions about the human person: that there are self-evident truths, that all are equal and equally possess rights by nature, and that chief among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

Teachers might best plan and teach the Human Person with emphasis on the following approaches:

- Teachers would benefit from familiarizing themselves with non-American thinkers who, while disagreeing in many ways, were at least united in conversation around what human nature is and what it means for the civic body. These would include those who contributed to the western philosophical tradition and experience in government up to and during the American founding, such as Plato, Aristotle, Cicero, Niccolò Machiavelli, Thomas Hobbes, and Adam Smith; those who more directly informed the Founders, such as John Locke, Algernon Sidney, William Blackstone, and Montesquieu; and the relevant political histories of ancient civilizations (e.g., Babylonians, Hebrews, Greeks, Romans), medieval society, the Enlightenment, England, and the British North American colonies. Being able to summarize and point students to these figures, ideas, and histories where appropriate may be helpful in teaching the first two units of this course.
- Outline with students (or if they have already studied early American history, review) the key historical circumstances in which the Founding occurred, especially the following:
  - The colonists who settled in British North America came from many nations (chiefly but not exclusively those of Europe) for many different reasons, but one thing they did not bring with them were the class distinctions that defined the aristocratic and monarchical nations they left behind. These individuals (except for their British governors) were common people who immigrated to America seeking their freedom and to better their station in life.

Religious faith strongly defined colonial culture, largely because so many came to America to escape the religious persecutions of the old world. From the pilgrims and the Puritans to Roman Catholics and Jews, a wide variety of denominations (mostly Christian) are found throughout colonial settlements. This diversity fostered religious liberty and toleration at the same time that it strengthened a common morality rooted in religious faith and practice, which was widespread and imbued colonial society.

Colonial America was highly literate and the leading members of colonial society and government were educated in classical thought, ancient and contemporary history, and philosophy and politics (including thinkers of the moderate Enlightenment).

- Have students read and annotate the introduction and first part of the preamble to the Declaration of Independence.
- Begin by considering history (as in the “Course of human events”) and politics. Briefly sketch its origins in the ancient world and what virtues it demands of those who would practice it well, particularly that cardinal virtue of prudence.
- Help students to consider that the Founders were making assertions about the existence of objective truth by referencing “the Laws of Nature and of Nature’s God” and by describing the truths as self-evident. This line of thinking adheres to the first law of logic, that of contradiction, which is the basis of all reasoning and of our capacity to make sense of reality: i.e., that something cannot both be and not be at the same time in the same way. The use of the words “the Laws of Nature and of Nature’s God” ties truth to an external reality (nature) with fixed and reliable features (laws). “Self-evident” ties truth to fixed definitions—a “self-evident” claim is one that is true by definition of the idea in question, like the claim that a triangle has three sides. A “self-evident” truth is not merely a matter of perspective; it can be known and understood by anyone at any time.
- Note that for the Founders, the “Laws…of Nature’s God” implied that this understanding of nature was consistent with the Christian tradition within which the American founding occurred. Other references to divine sources of truth in the Declaration include that men are “endowed by their Creator” and its appeals to “the Supreme Judge of the world” and to “the protection of divine Providence.”
- Emphasize with students the importance of an understanding of “nature,” particularly human nature. “Nature” here means not the physical world but the purpose of things, that toward which a thing’s very existence aims: why something exists. The feature of human nature that distinguishes people from animals is man’s ability to think, communicate, and live together. This means that humans can speak, debate, and agree on certain things. Since man has the ability to deliberate and choose, he is responsible morally for his actions and is also capable of liberty. When we consider human beings living with other human beings, the ends of politics are determined by human nature. That is, the justness of one’s actions or the actions of a people depend on what it means to be human, and should comport with truth.
- Ask students what the Declaration means by “all men are created equal.” The meaning of equality in the Declaration refers to universal human dignity and to the equal possession by each person of natural rights, freedoms that are simply part of being human. Individuals are obviously different by almost any measure. Yet, by nature, human beings are all the same in that they are human, have a human nature, and therefore have the same natural rights.

- Have students consider whether women and slaves were included in this understanding of equality. For one thing, in traditional usage, man, or in this case men, used without an article itself refers to the species or to humanity (mankind) as a whole, not male as opposed to female. Based on the totality of their writings available, the Founders meant that men and women share equally in human dignity and in possession of natural rights or freedoms that are simply part of being human. A consistent application of equality would make slavery, for instance, impossible.

- Consider with students how many have understood the principle of equality as the enduring object or goal of American political life, with each generation seeking further to expand the conditions of political equality. This was the view of many Founders, as well as of Abraham Lincoln, abolitionists like Frederick Douglass, and civil rights leaders like Martin Luther King Jr., who called the Declaration a “promissory note to which every American was to fall heir” in his 1963 “I Have a Dream” speech. The Declaration’s principle of equality—and the persistence and bravery of Americans of all origins to sacrifice and even die insisting that the nation should live up to the principle—has led to unprecedented achievements of human equality and the protection of equal rights.

- Spend time with the rights to life, to liberty, and to the pursuit of happiness. While not exhaustive, these natural rights are the most important and comprehensive freedoms that each human person possesses by nature. All are necessary for each person to fulfill his or her purpose as a human being.

Strengthening Understanding: Post-Lesson Assignment

Assignment: Based on the Declaration of Independence, what was the Founders’ understanding of the human person? Why is this view, and founding a country based on this belief, so extraordinary? (1–2 paragraphs)
Lesson 2 — Government

2-3 classes

LESSON OBJECTIVE

Students learn what the Founders understood to be the purpose and composition of government based on the nature of the human person asserted in the Declaration of Independence.

ONLINE COURSES FOR TEACHERS | Online.Hillsdale.edu

| Introduction to the Constitution | Lectures 1, 2, 3, and 4 |
| Constitution 101 | Lectures 1 and 2 |

PRIMARY SOURCES

Students may read and annotate the following primary source(s), either at home or together in class. Using their annotations and the below questions, lead students through a seminar conversation on each text.

The Declaration of Independence
The Mayflower Compact

TERMS AND TOPICS

natural rights    rule of law power            limited government consent of the governed    state of nature sovereignty    social contract self-government    liberalism equality        tyranny justice        revolution

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

- What is the purpose of government and it powers?
- How do natural rights limit the government?
- What is meant by “limited government”?
- From where does government derive its just powers?
- Who are the governed?
- What does consent mean?
- What is self-government?
- What is the connection between consent, equality, and justice?
- What is the relationship between the state of nature, the social contract, and consent of the governed?
- What are the people free—and even obligated—to do if the government fails or violates its purpose?
- Ought it to be easy or frequent for a people to overthrow and replace its government? If not, under which circumstances may they do so?
- What is tyranny?
- How does the fact that America was founded with the words of the Declaration of Independence make America the exception in the history of nations, even exceptional?
- America is a country whose existence and purpose for existing rests on belief in and commitment to certain ideas its Founders asserted to be objectively true. What are these truths?
- Questions from the U.S. Civics Test:
  - Question 8: Why is the Declaration of Independence important?
  - Question 9: What founding document said the American colonies were free from Britain?
  - Question 10: Name two important ideas from the Declaration of Independence and the U.S. Constitution.
  - Question 13: What is the rule of law?
  - Question 77: Name one reason why the Americans declared independence from Britain.
  - Question 78: Who wrote the Declaration of Independence?
  - Question 79: When was the Declaration of Independence adopted?
  - Question 85: Benjamin Franklin is famous for many things. Name one.
  - Question 87: Thomas Jefferson is famous for many things. Name one.
  - Question 125: What is Independence Day?
  - Question 126: Name three national U.S. holidays.

Keys to the Lesson

Having established the understanding of the human person that the Founders’ held, the unit may progress through the Declaration of Independence to consider the nature of government power based on this understanding of human beings. The reason people join together to form a government is to secure their rights and preserve their safety and happiness. Students should know this purpose to their government and consider the ways in which we determine whether the government is just, through both consent and the extent to which it fulfills its purpose. Students should also learn about what ought to be done when a government becomes an unjust tyranny and under what circumstances the people should take such actions.

The list of grievances in the remainder of the Declaration of Independence offers a case study in such tyrannical circumstances.

Teachers might best plan and teach Government with emphasis on the following approaches:

- Ask students what the Declaration states to be the purpose of government. Students should be able to see in the Declaration that the purpose of government is to secure the natural rights of each person.
- Ask students about the source of a government’s legitimate power. The basis of rule in the American regime is the sovereignty of the people: since all are equal by nature, no one is born to rule or to be ruled. Legitimate government can only arise out of the consent of those governed. The powers of government are defined when they are delegated by agreement of those who possess rights. Thus, the principle of natural rights both empowers government at the same time that it limits it to these specific purposes.
Consider with students that, according to the Declaration, rights do not come from government. Rights are inherent in nature, that is, they come with being a human person. Likewise, individuals do not give up their rights by forming government. People may give to government their individual power to secure those rights in certain circumstances in order that the government might use that power to protect the rights of all. But the natural rights possessed by each individual cannot be given up, or taken away unless one has violated the rights of another. This is what is meant by “unalienable.”

Ask students how the establishment and recognition of equal natural rights guards against discrimination based on class, religion, or race, and against the factions and civil divisions that often result from such unjust distinctions. Upholding equal natural rights preserves the humanity of each person, encourages all to recognize that humanity in others despite differences, and reminds all to be mindful that one’s own dignity is protected insofar as others also hold to the belief in natural rights.

Help students to understand what is meant by self-government in the political body, i.e., that government derives its “just powers from the consent of the governed,” that is, from the people themselves. Consent requires the people, directly or indirectly, to be involved in making the laws. It also implies participation in the activities of governing (office holding, voting, serving as jurors, etc.). As a result, and by design, the people have the liberty to govern themselves in most aspects of their daily lives.

Connect these parts of the Declaration of Independence to the Mayflower Compact. Read the list of grievances and ask students to connect each grievance to the historical events they studied in the previous lesson. Then ask students to explain how those events violate the statements made in the first two paragraphs of the Declaration.

Consider with students the colonists’ “appeal to heaven.” King George III was neither securing the rights of the colonists nor providing for the protection. In fact, he and the British Parliament were doing many things that denied the colonists’ rights. When a government fails to protect fundamental rights, the people may alter or abolish the current government and form a new one at assure their safety and happiness. This is called the right of revolution.

Strengthening Understanding: Post-Lesson Assignment

Assignment: According to the Declaration of Independence, how and why do a people form a government? What are the people to do should that government become ineffective or hostile to the purpose for which the people created it? Using the list of grievances, what are some examples of government abandoning or violating its purpose? (2–3 paragraphs).
Unit 1 — Formative Quiz

Covering Lessons 1-2
10-15 minutes

DIRECTIONS: Answer each question in at least one complete sentence.

1. According to the text itself, why are the colonists issuing a Declaration of Independence?

2. What does human equality mean in the statement, “all men are created equal”?

3. What are natural rights and why do human beings have them?

4. What is the purpose of government and its powers?

5. What are the people free—and even obligated—to do if the government fails or violates its purpose?
Lesson 3 — The Citizen and Self-Government

LESSON OBJECTIVE

Students learn about the conditions necessary, both in society and in the characters of most citizens, for the flourishing and perpetuation of freedom and self-government.

ONLINE COURSES FOR TEACHERS | Online.Hillsdale.edu

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Course</th>
<th>Lectures</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Introduction to the Constitution</td>
<td>Lectures 7 and 9</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Constitution 101</td>
<td>Lectures 3 and 5</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

PRIMARY SOURCES

The following primary sources are potential readings for students. Teachers should use their discretion based on grade level ability in deciding which texts to share with students. The texts may be assigned for homework, read together in class, or simply read aloud by the teacher. Some texts include guiding reading questions to assist students in the event that the text is assigned for homework. Students should annotate the texts either in preparation for or during a seminar conversation. Teachers should not feel it necessary to assign all of the texts, especially in light of grade level considerations.

- Thanksgiving Proclamation, George Washington
- Letter to the Massachusetts Militia, John Adams
- Farewell Address, George Washington
- Report of the Commissioners for the University of Virginia, Thomas Jefferson & James Madison
- First Annual Address to Congress, George Washington
- The Northwest Ordinance, Article III
- “Property,” James Madison
- The Examination Number No. 7, Alexander Hamilton

TERMS AND TOPICS

- self-government
- morality
- virtue
- liberal education
- property
- commercial republic
- religion
- free exercise of religion
- freedom of speech
- public policy
- economics
- taxation
- property rights
- immigration
- marriage and family law
QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

- What are the virtues and character necessary for freedom and self-government?
- How did the Founders promote morality?
- Why is self-reliance important for a free people?
- How is liberal education necessary for freedom and self-government?
- How does religion help promote morality and freedom?
- What is the free exercise of religion and why is it important?
- What is freedom of speech and why is it so crucial to freedom and self-government?
- What is the significance of property rights and work?
- What is the commercial republic and how does it shape character?
- How did the Founders think about the following:
  - economics
  - taxation
  - the protection of property
  - war and diplomacy
  - immigration
  - marriage and family
- Why were the Founders worried about partisanship? How did they attempt to overcome it?
- How did partisanship nonetheless arise?
- Questions from the U.S. Civics Test:
  - Question 6: What does the Bill of Rights protect?
  - Question 12: What is the economic system of the United States?
  - Question 13: What is the rule of law?
  - Question 65: What are three rights of everyone living in the United States?
  - Question 67: Name two promises that new citizens make in the Oath of Allegiance.
  - Question 69: What are two examples of civic participation in the United States?
  - Question 70: What is one way Americans can serve their country?

KEYS TO THE LESSON

Benjamin Franklin, on departing the Constitutional Convention, was asked what the convention’s delegates had proposed. Franklin responded, “A republic, if you can keep it.” The American system of self-government rests ultimately on the capacity of Americans to govern themselves in political terms and to exercise personal self-government (good character) in their own lives. American students ought to understand thoroughly this necessity to life in the American republic. The key facets to preserving free government involve citizens being knowledgeable, morally upright, spirited, and free to use their minds, voices, and possessions to maintain liberty and the rule of law. Schools, religion, civic organizations, and the family are the key institutions by which citizens are formed to be able to govern themselves. The public and private contributions of the vast majority of citizens who govern their own lives as such is the determining factor in the health of the American republic and in the experiment in free self-government. Should these falter or fail in the individual lives of citizens, the preservation of liberty and equal human dignity will not long last.

Teachers might best plan and teach the Citizen and Self-Government with emphasis on the following approaches:

- Read with students George Washington’s Thanksgiving Proclamation, his Farewell Address, and John Adams’ letter to the Massachusetts militia. Have students consider the Founders’ arguments for the necessity of religion in fostering morality, virtue, and character. While opinions varied on religious belief and the extent to which government should endorse a single church, specifically at the state-level, there was general consensus that the instruction in moral conduct, duty, and charity in religion warranted at least the encouragement of religious practice by governments. They should see that the free exercise of religion was simultaneously of utmost importance.

- Read the University of Virginia’s Board of Commissioners report and George Washington’s First Annual Address and highlight the important and broad role education would play in the formation of a free citizenry.

- Teach students about the two major achievements of Congress under the Articles of Confederation: the Land Ordinance of 1785 and the Northwest Ordinance of 1787. Students should understand the historic emphasis the Founders placed on public education and private land ownership as evident in these laws. The Northwest Ordinance in particular articulates principles that would later be reflected in the Constitution, namely, consent of the governed, private property, and the liberty of individuals. Each of these, the Founders argued, would be indispensable if freedom and self-government were to succeed in the United States.

- Consider with students George Washington’s observation in his First Inaugural that “the foundations of our national policy will be laid in the pure and immutable principles of private morality” and in his Farewell Address that “Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports” and that “let us with caution indulge the supposition that morality can be maintained without religion.”

- Emphasize with students the most famous line from Article III of the Northwest Ordinance: “Religion, morality, and knowledge being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, schools and the means of education shall forever be encouraged.” Make clear for students the significance of knowledge and character as fostered by education. Public (meaning taxpayer-funded) support for education, both secular and religious, was present in colonial Massachusetts for decades prior to the founding and would continue through the Land Ordinance of 1785 and the Northwest Ordinance. The township system portioned out land reserved for education explicitly. America was a trailblazer in allocating so many resources exclusively for education. In addition to instruction in knowledge, character-building and the development of patriotic and dutiful citizens were chief purposes of these public schools.

- Read with students James Madison’s “Property.” Rights to hold and preserve property are intimately tied to one’s right to defend oneself and to better one’s condition. The “pursuit of happiness” aims at and recognizes goods higher than mere material prosperity. The right to property, if not sufficient to human happiness, is most certainly necessary to the individual liberty to pursue such happiness. Moreover, the free allocation of scarce resources through commerce ensures that all can have what they most need at the times in which they most need it while contributing to ideas and positive activity conducive to the general improvement of human life.

- Talk with students about how the Founders saw the economic role of government as being to uphold the rule of law, enforce contracts, protect property, and permit economic activity that did not violate natural rights. This ensured broad latitude to the liberty of private individuals to trade with one another freely with only minimal regulation. Taxation at the federal level was limited largely to matters of national defense.

- Read aloud with students in class Alexander Hamilton’s Examination No. 7 on the need for a citizenry that holds certain principles and habits of conduct conducive to respecting the rights of fellow citizens. In a nation as diverse as the United States and that is not bound by blood, understanding of, adherence to, and practice in these principles of self-government become all the more important. Immigration policy for Hamilton, therefore, sought to encourage as much immigration as was possible while still achieving these prerequisites to maintaining free government. In brief, an immigrant had to understand and be willing and able to practice the responsibilities of self-government.

- Consider with students the Founders’ positions on the preservation of morality and the role of the family. While freedom of speech was given broad interpretation, the public utterance and promotion of obscenity was understood to undermine the moral habits of the citizenry, especially the young, and government thus had an interest in restricting such speech to private quarters. The primacy of the family was also significant, as the security, material support, education, sense of duty, and work ethic cultivated first in the family were all equally important to a self-governing citizenry.

- Explain to students how strongly the Founders sought to resist the rise of factions and partisanship. It should be made clear, however, that the Founders’ resistance to partisanship was not in some general idea of bipartisanship for bipartisanship’s sake. Instead, the Founders believed that if all Americans held to the ideas of the American founding, then there were few disagreements so fundamental as to justify separate and permanent parties. The Founders had no qualms, however, with resisting movements and ideas that rejected the principles of the founding, mainly because such a rejection was, in their view, a rejection of objective truth and justice themselves. Such a rejection of these founding principles was thought irrational and almost certainly to lead to tyranny.

STRENGTHENING UNDERSTANDING: POST-LESSON ASSIGNMENT

Assignment: Why did the American Founders argue that education, religion, and private property were necessary in a citizenry in order for freedom and self-government to exist? (1–2 paragraphs)
Appendix A

Study Guide

Test

Writing Assignment
Study Guide — The Declaration of Independence Test

TERMS AND TOPICS

Explain each of the following and the context in which it was discussed during this unit's lessons.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>politics</th>
<th>liberty</th>
<th>virtue</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>power</td>
<td>pursuit of happiness</td>
<td>liberal education</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Laws of Nature and of Nature's God</td>
<td>consent of the governed</td>
<td>property</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>nature</td>
<td>self-government</td>
<td>property rights</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>self-evident</td>
<td>justice</td>
<td>commercial republic</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>principles</td>
<td>rule of law</td>
<td>free exercise of religion</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>morality</td>
<td>limited government</td>
<td>freedom of speech</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>equality</td>
<td>state of nature</td>
<td>economics</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>natural rights</td>
<td>social contract</td>
<td>taxation</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>unalienable</td>
<td>liberalism</td>
<td>immigration</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>life</td>
<td>tyranny</td>
<td>family</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>revolution</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

PRIMARY SOURCES

Explain the main arguments in each of the following sources and their significance to our understanding of the Declaration of Independence and the necessities for self-government.

The Declaration of Independence
The Mayflower Compact
Farewell Address, George Washington
The Northwest Ordinance, Article III
“Property,” James Madison

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

Based on notes from lessons and seminar conversations, answer each of the following.

Lesson 1 | The Human Person

☐ What is the “Course of human events”?
☐ What is politics?
☐ According to the text itself, why are the colonists issuing a Declaration of Independence?
☐ What are “the Laws of Nature and of Nature’s God”?
☐ What is a “self-evident” truth?
☐ What does human equality mean in the statement, “all men are created equal”?
☐ What are natural rights and why do human beings have them?
Lesson 2 | The Government

- What is the purpose of government and its powers?
- How do natural rights limit the government?
- What is meant by “limited government”?
- From where does government derive its just powers?
- Who are the governed?
- What does consent mean?
- What is self-government?
- What is the connection between consent, equality, and justice?
- What is the relationship between the state of nature, the social contract, and consent of the governed?
- What are the people free—and even obligated—to do if the government fails or violates its purpose?
- Ought it to be easy or frequent for a people to overthrow and replace its government? If not, under which circumstances may they do so?
- What is tyranny?
- How does the fact that America was founded with the words of the Declaration of Independence make America the exception in the history of nations, even exceptional?
- America is a country whose existence and purpose for existing rests on belief in and commitment to certain ideas its Founders asserted to be objectively true. What are these truths?

Lesson 3 | The Citizen and Self-Government

- What are the virtues and character necessary for freedom and self-government?
- How did the Founders promote morality?
- Why is self-reliance important for a free people?
- How is liberal education necessary for freedom and self-government?
- How does religion help promote morality and freedom?
- What is the free exercise of religion and why is it important?
- What is freedom of speech and why is it so crucial to freedom and self-government?
- What is the significance of property rights and work?
- What is the commercial republic and how does it shape character?
- How did the Founders think about the following:
  - economics
  - taxation
  - the protection of property
  - war and diplomacy
  - immigration
  - marriage and family
- Why were the Founders worried about partisanship? How did they attempt to overcome it?
- How did partisanship nonetheless arise?
Test — The Declaration of Independence

TERMS AND TOPICS

Explain each of the following and the context in which it was discussed during this unit’s lessons.

1. Laws of Nature and of Nature’s God

2. self-evident

3. morality

4. unalienable

5. self-government

6. rule of law

7. tyranny

8. freedom of speech
PRIMARY SOURCES

Explain the main arguments in each of the following sources and their significance to our understanding of the Declaration of Independence and the necessities for self-government.

9. Farewell Address, George Washington

10. The Northwest Ordinance

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

Answer each of the following. Complete sentences are not necessary, but correct spelling and writing should be employed, and responses must fully answer each question.

11. What does human equality mean in the statement, “all men are created equal”?

12. What are natural rights and why do human beings have them?
13. According to the Declaration of Independence, from where do natural rights come?

14. What does it mean to say that men are “endowed by their Creator” with the rights?

15. What is the purpose of government and its powers?

16. From where does government derive its just powers?

17. What are the people free—and even obligated—to do if the government fails or violates its purpose?

18. How does the fact that America was founded with the words of the Declaration of Independence make America the exception in the history of nations, even exceptional?

19. What is the free exercise of religion and why is it important?

20. What is the significance of property rights and work?
Writing Assignment — The Declaration of Independence

DIRECTIONS

Citing primary sources and conversations from class in your argument, write a 4–5 paragraph essay answering the question:

According to the Founders, what do people need to understand about themselves, about government, and about the kind of people they need to be in order to freely govern themselves?
APPENDIX B

Primary Sources

The Second Continental Congress

The Pilgrims

George Washington

John Adams

Thomas Jefferson

James Madison

The United States Congress

Alexander Hamilton
The thirteen United States of America

The Unanimous Declaration

A Declaration

July 4, 1776

Pennsylvania State House | Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

BACKGROUND

The delegates from each colony at the Second Continental Congress announced their votes to form a new country separate from Great Britain in this statement to mankind that expounds both the principles on which this new country would be founded and the reasons they judged themselves justified to separate.

GUIDING QUESTIONS

1. Why do the United States believe they need to release a statement about their decision to form a country separate from Great Britain?

2. What do they consider about the truths they posit?

3. How are all men equal?

4. From where comes their rights?

5. What is the reason why people create governments?

6. From where comes a government’s powers?

7. What may a people do if a government does not fulfill its ends?

8. Although governments should not be changed for small reasons, when should the people change them?

9. Against which person does the Declaration of Independence level its charges?

10. What actions involving the military has this person carried out against the colonists?

11. What legal practices has this person violated?

12. What efforts have the colonists made to seek redress and reconciliation with Great Britain?

13. To whom do the representatives appeal for the justness of their intentions?

14. By whose authority do the representatives declare independence?

15. What do each of the representatives pledge to one another?
When in the Course of human events, it becomes necessary for one people to dissolve the political bands which have connected them with another, and to assume among the powers of the earth, the separate and equal station to which the Laws of Nature and of Nature's God entitle them, a decent respect to the opinions of mankind requires that they should declare the causes which impel them to the separation.

We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness. — That to secure these rights, Governments are instituted among Men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed, — That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their Safety and Happiness. Prudence, indeed, will dictate that Governments long established should not be changed for light and transient causes; and accordingly all experience hath shown, that mankind are more disposed to suffer, while evils are sufferable, than to right themselves by abolishing the forms to which they are accustomed. But when a long train of abuses and usurpations, pursuing invariably the same Object evinces a design to reduce them under absolute Despotism, it is their right, it is their duty, to throw off such Government, and to provide new Guards for their future security. — Such has been the patient sufferance of these Colonies; and such is now the necessity which constrains them to alter their former Systems of Government. The history of the present King of Great Britain is a history of repeated injuries and usurpations, all having in direct object the establishment of an absolute Tyranny over these States. To prove this, let Facts be submitted to a candid world.

He has refused his Assent to Laws, the most wholesome and necessary for the public good.

He has forbidden his Governors to pass Laws of immediate and pressing importance, unless suspended in their operation till his Assent should be obtained; and when so suspended, he has utterly neglected to attend to them.
He has refused to pass other Laws for the accommodation of large districts of people, unless those people would relinquish the right of Representation in the Legislature, a right inestimable to them and formidable to tyrants only.

He has called together legislative bodies at places unusual, uncomfortable, and distant from the depository of their public Records, for the sole purpose of fatiguing them into compliance with his measures.

He has dissolved Representative Houses repeatedly, for opposing with manly firmness his invasions on the rights of the people.

He has refused for a long time, after such dissolutions, to cause others to be elected; whereby the Legislative powers, incapable of Annihilation, have returned to the People at large for their exercise; the State remaining in the mean time exposed to all the dangers of invasion from without, and convulsions within.

He has endeavored to prevent the population of these States; for that purpose obstructing the Laws for Naturalization of Foreigners; refusing to pass others to encourage their migrations hither, and raising the conditions of new Appropriations of Lands.

He has obstructed the Administration of Justice, by refusing his Assent to Laws for establishing Judiciary powers.

He has made Judges dependent on his Will alone, for the tenure of their offices, and the amount and payment of their salaries.

He has erected a multitude of New Offices, and sent hither swarms of Officers to harass our people, and eat out their substance.

He has kept among us, in times of peace, Standing Armies without the Consent of our legislatures.
He has affected to render the Military independent of and superior to the Civil power.

He has combined with others to subject us to a jurisdiction foreign to our constitution, and unacknowledged by our laws; giving his Assent to their Acts of pretended Legislation:

For Quartering large bodies of armed troops among us:

For protecting them, by a mock Trial, from punishment for any Murders which they should commit on the Inhabitants of these States:

For cutting off our Trade with all parts of the world:

For imposing Taxes on us without our Consent:

For depriving us in many cases, of the benefits of Trial by Jury:

For transporting us beyond Seas to be tried for pretended offenses:

For abolishing the free System of English Laws in a neighboring Province, establishing therein an Arbitrary government, and enlarging its Boundaries so as to render it at once an example and fit instrument for introducing the same absolute rule into these Colonies:

For taking away our Charters, abolishing our most valuable Laws, and altering fundamentally the Forms of our Governments:

For suspending our own Legislatures, and declaring themselves invested with power to legislate for us in all cases whatsoever.

He has abdicated Government here, by declaring us out of his Protection and waging War against us.
He has plundered our seas, ravaged our Coasts, burnt our towns, and destroyed the lives of our people.

He is at this time transporting large Armies of foreign Mercenaries to complete the works of death, desolation and tyranny, already begun with circumstances of Cruelty and perfidy scarcely paralleled in the most barbarous ages, and totally unworthy the Head of a civilized nation.

He has constrained our fellow Citizens taken Captive on the high Seas to bear Arms against their Country, to become the executioners of their friends and Brethren, or to fall themselves by their Hands.

He has excited domestic insurrections amongst us, and has endeavored to bring on the inhabitants of our frontiers, the merciless Indian Savages, whose known rule of warfare, is an undistinguished destruction of all ages, sexes and conditions.

In every stage of these Oppressions We have Petitioned for Redress in the most humble terms: Our repeated Petitions have been answered only by repeated injury. A Prince whose character is thus marked by every act which may define a Tyrant, is unfit to be the ruler of a free people.

Nor have We been wanting in attentions to our British brethren. We have warned them from time to time of attempts by their legislature to extend an unwarrantable jurisdiction over us. We have reminded them of the circumstances of our emigration and settlement here. We have appealed to their native justice and magnanimity, and we have conjured them by the ties of our common kindred to disavow these usurpations, which, would inevitably interrupt our connections and correspondence. They too have been deaf to the voice of justice and of consanguinity. We must, therefore, acquiesce in the necessity, which denominates our Separation, and hold them, as we hold the rest of mankind, Enemies in War, in Peace Friends.
We, therefore, the Representatives of the united States of America, in General Congress, Assembled, appealing to the Supreme Judge of the world for the rectitude of our intentions, do, in the Name, and by Authority of the good People of these Colonies, solemnly publish and declare, That these United Colonies are, and of Right ought to be Free and Independent States; that they are Absolved from all Allegiance to the British Crown, and that all political connection between them and the State of Great Britain, is and ought to be totally dissolved; and that as Free and Independent States, they have full Power to levy War, conclude Peace, contract Alliances, establish Commerce, and to do all other Acts and Things which Independent States may of right do. And for the support of this Declaration, with a firm reliance on the protection of divine Providence, we mutually pledge to each other our Lives, our Fortunes and our sacred Honor.

Georgia
Button Gwinnett, Lyman Hall, George Walton

North Carolina
William Hooper, Joseph Hewes, John Penn

South Carolina
Edward Rutledge, Thomas Heyward, Jr., Thomas Lynch, Jr., Arthur Middleton

Maryland
Samuel Chase, William Paca, Thomas Stone, Charles Carroll of Carrollton

Virginia
George Wythe, Richard Henry Lee, Thomas Jefferson, Benjamin Harrison, Thomas Nelson, Jr., Francis Lightfoot Lee, Carter Braxton

Pennsylvania
Robert Morris, Benjamin Rush, Benjamin Franklin, John Morton, George Clymer, James Smith, George Taylor, James Wilson, George Ross
The Declaration of Independence

Delaware
Caesar Rodney, George Read, Thomas McKean

New York
William Floyd, Philip Livingston, Francis Lewis, Lewis Morris

New Jersey
Richard Stockton, John Witherspoon, Francis Hopkinson, John Hart, Abraham Clark

New Hampshire
Josiah Bartlett, William Whipple, Matthew Thornton

Massachusetts
John Hancock, Samuel Adams, John Adams, Robert Treat Paine, Elbridge Gerry

Rhode Island
Stephen Hopkins, William Ellery

Connecticut
Roger Sherman, Samuel Huntington, William Williams, Oliver Wolcot
THE UNDERSIGNED SUBJECTS OF KING JAMES

Agreement Between the Settlers of New Plymouth

LAW

November 11, 1620

Mayflower | Off the Coast of Cape Cod

BACKGROUND

The settlers who traveled to the British possession of Virginia on the Mayflower drafted and signed this agreement pertaining to their governance before disembarking in the New World.

ANNOTATIONS

IN THE NAME OF GOD, AMEN. We, whose names are underwritten, the Loyal Subjects of our dread Sovereign Lord King James, by the Grace of God, of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. Having undertaken for the Glory of God, and Advancement of the Christian Faith, and the Honour of our King and Country, a Voyage to plant the first Colony in the northern Parts of Virginia; Do by these Presents, solemnly and mutually, in the Presence of God and one another, covenant and combine ourselves together into a civil Body Politick, for our better Ordering and Preservation, and Furtherance of the Ends aforesaid: And by Virtue hereof do enact, constitute, and frame, such just and equal Laws, Ordinances, Acts, Constitutions, and Officers, from time to time, as shall be thought most meet and convenient for the general Good of the Colony; unto which we promise all due Submission and Obedience.

NOTES & QUESTIONS

IN WITNESS whereof we have hereunto subscribed our names at Cape-Cod the eleventh of November, in the Reign of our Sovereign Lord King James, of England, France, and Ireland, the eighteenth, and of Scotland the fifty-fourth, Anno Domini; 1620.

PRESIDENT GEORGE WASHINGTON

Thanksgiving Proclamation

PROCLAMATION

October 3, 1789

Federal Hall | New York City, New York

BACKGROUND

President George Washington established a day of thanksgiving to God for peaceably establishing a new form of government, to be observed around the one-year anniversary of the new Constitution.

ANNOTATIONS

By the President of the United States of America, a Proclamation.

Whereas it is the duty of all Nations to acknowledge the providence of Almighty God, to obey his will, to be grateful for his benefits, and humbly to implore his protection and favor—and whereas both Houses of Congress have by their joint Committee requested me “to recommend to the People of the United States a day of public thanksgiving and prayer to be observed by acknowledging with grateful hearts the many signal favors of Almighty God especially by affording them an opportunity peaceably to establish a form of government for their safety and happiness.”

Now therefore I do recommend and assign Thursday the 26th day of November next to be devoted by the People of these States to the service of that great and glorious Being, who is the beneficent Author of all the good that was, that is, or that will be—That we may then all unite in rendering unto him our sincere and humble thanks—for his kind care and protection of the People of this Country previous to their becoming a Nation—for the signal and manifold mercies, and the favorable interpositions of his Providence which we experienced in the course and conclusion of the late war—for the great degree of tranquillity, union, and plenty, which we have since enjoyed—for the peaceable and rational manner, in which we have been enabled to establish constitutions of government for our safety and happiness, and particularly the national One now lately instituted—for the civil and religious liberty with which we are blessed; and the means we have of acquiring and diffusing useful knowledge; and in general for all the great and various favors which he hath been pleased to confer upon us.

---

And also that we may then unite in most humbly offering our prayers and supplications to the great Lord and Ruler of Nations and beseech him to pardon our national and other transgressions—to enable us all, whether in public or private stations, to perform our several and relative duties properly and punctually—to render our national government a blessing to all the people, by constantly being a Government of wise, just, and constitutional laws, discreetly and faithfully executed and obeyed—to protect and guide all Sovereigns and Nations (especially such as have shewn kindness unto us) and to bless them with good government, peace, and concord—To promote the knowledge and practice of true religion and virtue, and the encrease of science among them and us—and generally to grant unto all Mankind such a degree of temporal prosperity as he alone knows to be best.

Given under my hand at the City of New-York the third day of October in the year of our Lord 1789.

George Washington
PRESIDENT JOHN ADAMS (FEDERALIST)
To the Officers of the Militia of Massachusetts

LETTER

October 11, 1798
Quincy, Massachusetts

BACKGROUND

President John Adams responds to a message sent to him from the militia of his home state of Massachusetts.

ANNOTATIONS

To the Officers of the first Brigade of the third Division of the Militia of Massachusetts

Quincy October 11, 1798

Gentlemen

I have received from Major General Hull and Brigadier General Walker your unanimous Address from Lexington, animated with a martial Spirit and expressed with a military Dignity, becoming your Characters and the memorable Plains, in which it was adopted.

While our Country remains untainted with the Principles and manners, which are now producing desolation in so many Parts of the World: while she continues Sincere and incapable of insidious and impious Policy: We shall have the Strongest Reason to rejoice in the local destination assigned Us by Providence. But should the People of America, once become capable of that deep simulation towards one another and towards foreign nations, which assumes the Language of Justice and moderation while it is practicing Iniquity and Extravagance; and displays in the most captivating manner the charming Pictures of Candour frankness & sincerity while it is rioting in rapine and Insolence: this Country will be

To the Officers of the Militia of Massachusetts
John Adams

An Address so unanimous and firm from the officers commanding two thousand Eight hundred Men, consisting of such substantial Citizens as are able and willing at their own Expence, compleatly to arm, And cloath themselves in handsome Uniforms does honor to that Division of the Militia which has done so much honor to their Country. Oaths, in this Country, are as yet universally considered as Sacred Obligations. That which you have taken and so solemnly repeated on that venerable Spot is an ample Pledge of your sincerity, and devotion to your Country and its Government.

John Adams
George Washington wrote this letter to the American people announcing his retirement from the Presidency after his second term. At the time, there were no term limits on the presidency.

...For this you have every inducement of sympathy and interest. Citizens by birth or choice, of a common country, that country has a right to concentrate your affections. The name of American, which belongs to You, in your national capacity, must always exalt the just pride of Patriotism, more than any appellation derived from local discriminations. With slight shades of difference, you have the same Religion, Manners, Habits and political Principles. You have in a common cause fought and triumphed together. The independence and liberty you possess are the work of joint councils, and joint efforts; of common dangers, sufferings and successes....

...[Y]ou have improved upon your first essay, by the adoption of a Constitution of Government, better calculated than your former for an intimate Union, and for the efficacious management of your common concerns. This government, the offspring of our own choice uninfluenced and unawed, adopted upon full investigation and mature deliberation, completely free in its principles, in the distribution of its powers, uniting security with energy, and containing within itself a provision for its own amendment, has a just claim to your confidence and your support. Respect for its authority, compliance with its Laws, acquiescence in its measures, are duties enjoined by the fundamental maxims of true Liberty. The basis of our political systems is the right of the people to make and to alter their Constitutions of Government. But the Constitution which at any time exists, ’til changed by an exlicit and authentic act of the whole People, is sacredly obligatory upon all. The very idea of the power and the right of the People to establish Government presupposes the duty of every Individual to obey the established Government.…

I have already intimated to you the danger of Parties in the State, with particular reference to the founding of them on Geographical discriminations. Let me now take a more comprehensive view, and warn you in the most solemn manner against the baneful effects of the Spirit of Party, generally.

This spirit, unfortunately, is inseparable from our nature, having its root in the strongest passions of the human Mind. It exists under different shapes in all Governments, more or less stifled, controlled, or repressed; but, in those of the popular form, it is seen in its greatest rankness and is truly their worst enemy.

The alternate domination of one faction over another, sharpened by the spirit of revenge natural to party dissention, which in different ages and countries has perpetrated the most horrid enormities, is itself a frightful despotism. But this leads at length to a more formal and permanent despotism. The disorders and miseries, which result, gradually incline the minds of men to seek security and repose in the absolute power of an Individual; and sooner or later the chief of some prevailing faction more able or more fortunate than his competitors, turns this disposition to the purposes of his own elevation, on the ruins of Public Liberty.

Without looking forward to an extremity of this kind (which nevertheless ought not to be entirely out of sight) the common and continual mischiefs of the spirit of Party are sufficient to make it the interest and the duty of a wise People to discourage and restrain it.

It serves always to distract the Public Councils and enfeeble the Public administration. It agitates the Community with ill-founded jealousies and false alarms, kindles the animosity of one part against another, foments occasionally riot and insurrection. It opens the door to foreign influence and corruption, which find a facilitated access to the government itself through the channels of party passions. Thus the policy and the will of one country, are subjected to the policy and will of another.

There is an opinion that parties in free countries are useful checks upon the Administration of the government and serve to keep alive the spirit of Liberty. This within certain limits is probably true, and in Governments of a Monarchical cast Patriotism may look with indulgence, if not with favor, upon the spirit of party. But in those of the popular character, in Governments purely elective, it is a spirit not to be encouraged. From their natural tendency, it is certain there will always be enough of that spirit for every salutary purpose. And there being constant danger of excess, the effort ought to be, by force of public opinion to mitigate and assuage it. A fire not to be quenched; it demands a uniform vigilance to prevent its bursting into a flame, lest instead of warming, it should consume.

It is important, likewise, that the habits of thinking in a free Country should inspire caution in those entrusted with its administration, to confine themselves within their respective Constitutional spheres; avoiding in the exercise of the powers of one department to encroach upon another. The spirit of encroachment tends to consolidate the powers of all the departments in one, and thus to create whatever the form of government, a real despotism. A just estimate of that love of power, and proneness to abuse it, which predominates in the human heart is sufficient to satisfy us of the truth of this position. The necessity of reciprocal checks in the exercise of political power; by dividing and distributing it into different depositories, and constituting each the Guardian of the Public Weal against invasions by the others, has been evinced by experiments ancient and modern, some of them in our country and under our own eyes. To preserve them must be as necessary as to institute them. If in the opinion of the People, the distribution or modification of the Constitutional powers be in any particular wrong, let it be corrected by an amendment in the way which the Constitution designates. But let there be no change by usurpation; for though this, in one instance, may be the instrument of good, it is the customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed. The precedent must always greatly overbalance in permanent evil any partial or transient benefit which the use can at any time yield.
Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, Religion and morality are indispensable supports. In vain would that man claim the tribute of Patriotism, who should labor to subvert these great Pillars of human happiness, these firmest props of the duties of Men and citizens. The mere Politician, equally with the pious man ought to respect and to cherish them. A volume could not trace all their connections with private and public felicity. Let it simply be asked where is the security for property, for reputation, for life, if the sense of religious obligation desert the oaths, which are the instruments of investigation in Courts of Justice? And let us with caution indulge the supposition, that morality can be maintained without religion. Whatever may be conceded to the influence of refined education on minds of peculiar structure, reason and experience both forbid us to expect that National morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principle.

'Tis substantially true, that virtue or morality is a necessary spring of popular government. The rule indeed extends with more or less force to every species of free Government. Who that is a sincere friend to it, can look with indifference upon attempts to shake the foundation of the fabric.

Promote then as an object of primary importance, Institutions for the general diffusion of knowledge. In proportion as the structure of a government gives force to public opinion, it is essential that public opinion should be enlightened....
BACKGROUND

Thomas Jefferson and James Madison had a role in forming these ideas on education and the public support thereof as members of the Board of Commissioners for the University of Virginia.

ANNOTATIONS

…The objects of this primary education determine its character and limits. These objects would be,

To give to every citizen the information he needs for the transaction of his own business;

To enable him to calculate for himself, and to express and preserve his ideas, his contracts and accounts, in writing;

To improve, by reading, his morals and faculties;

To understand his duties to his neighbors and country, and to discharge with competence the functions confided to him by either;

To know his rights; to exercise with order and justice those he retains; to choose with discretion the fiduciary of those he delegates; and to notice their conduct with diligence, with candor, and judgment;

And, in general, to observe with intelligence and faithfulness all the social relations under which he shall be placed.

To instruct the mass of our citizens in these, their rights, interests and duties, as men and citizens, being then the objects of education in the primary schools, whether private or public, in them should be taught reading, writing and numerical arithmetic, the elements of mensuration, (useful in so many callings,) and the outlines of geography and history.

And this brings us to the point at which are to commence the higher branches of education, of which the Legislature require the development; those, for example, which are,

To form the statesmen, legislators and judges, on whom public prosperity and individual happiness are so much to depend;

To expound the principles and structure of government, the laws which regulate the intercourse of nations, those formed municipally for our own government, and a sound spirit of legislation, which, banishing all arbitrary and unnecessary restraint on individual action, shall leave us free to do whatever does not violate the equal rights of another;

To harmonize and promote the interests of agriculture, manufactures and commerce, and by well informed views of political economy to give a free scope to the public industry;

To develop the reasoning faculties of our youth, enlarge their minds, cultivate their morals, and instill into them the precepts of virtue and order;

To enlighten them with mathematical and physical sciences, which advance the arts, and administer to the health, the subsistence, and comforts of human life;

And, generally, to form them to habits of reflection and correct action, rendering them examples of virtue to others, and of happiness within themselves.
These are the objects of that higher grade of education, the benefits and blessings of which the Legislature now propose to provide for the good and ornament of their country, the gratification and happiness of their fellow-citizens, of the parent especially, and his progeny, on which all his affections are concentrated.
PRESIDENT GEORGE WASHINGTON

Annual Message to Congress

SPEECH EXCERPTS

January 8, 1790

Senate Chamber, Federal Hall | New York City, New York

BACKGROUND

President George Washington gave this address as the first annual message to Congress on the state of the Union, as required per the Constitution.

ANNOTATIONS

Fellow Citizens of the Senate, and House of Representatives…

Among the many interesting objects which will engage your attention, that of providing for the common defence will merit particular regard. To be prepared for war is one of the most effectual means of preserving peace.…

Nor am I less persuaded, that you will agree with me in opinion, that there is nothing which can better deserve your patronage, than the promotion of Science and Literature. Knowledge is in every country the surest basis of publick happiness. In one, in which the measures of government receive their impression so immediately from the sense of the community, as in our’s, it is proportionately essential. To the security of a free Constitution it contributes in various ways: By convincing those who are entrusted with the publick administration, that every valuable end of government is best answered by the enlightened confidence of the people: And by teaching the people themselves to know, and to value their own rights; to discern and provide against invasions of them; to distinguish between oppression and the necessary exercise of lawful authority; between burthens proceeding from a disregard to their convenience, and those resulting from the inevitable exigencies of society; to discriminate the spirit of liberty from that of licentiousness, cherishing the first, avoiding the last, and uniting a speedy, but temperate vigilance against encroachments, with an inviolable respect to the laws.

Whether this desirable object will be best promoted by affording aids to seminaries of learning already established, by the institution of a national university, or by any other expedients, will be well worthy of a place in the deliberations of the Legislature….
THE U.S. CONGRESS OF THE CONFEDERATION

An Ordinance for the Government of the Territory of the United States Northwest of the River Ohio

LAW EXCERPT

July 13, 1787
Federal Hall | New York City, New York

BACKGROUND

Congress passed the Northwest Ordinance to provide the governing structure for all of the territories of the young United States, lands that would later become the states of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, and Wisconsin.

ANNOTATIONS

Article III

Religion, morality, and knowledge being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, schools and the means of education shall forever be encouraged. The utmost good faith shall always be observed towards the Indians; their lands and property shall never be taken from them without their consent; and in their property, rights, and liberty they never shall be invaded or disturbed unless in just and lawful wars authorized by Congress; but laws founded in justice and humanity shall, from time to time, be made, for preventing wrongs being done to them, and for preserving peace and friendship with them….

REPRESENTATIVE JAMES MADISON (VA)

“Property”

E S S A Y

March 27, 1792

The National Gazette | Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

BACKGROUND

James Madison included this essay as part of a series of articles he wrote for The National Gazette in the early years of American government under the Constitution.

GUIDING QUESTIONS

1. What are the two senses of the word "property" according to Madison?

2. In what way can man’s rights, opinions, and the use of his faculties be his property?

3. According to Madison, what must a government do to secure the various senses of property?

This term in its particular application means “that dominion which one man claims and exercises over the external things of the world, in exclusion of every other individual.”

In its larger and juster meaning, it embraces every thing to which a man may attach a value and have a right; and which leaves to every one else the like advantage.

In the former sense, a man’s land, or merchandise, or money is called his property.

In the latter sense, a man has a property in his opinions and the free communication of them.

He has a property of peculiar value in his religious opinions, and in the profession and practice dictated by them.

He has a property very dear to him in the safety and liberty of his person.

He has an equal property in the free use of his faculties and free choice of the objects on which to employ them.

In a word, as a man is said to have a right to his property, he may be equally said to have a property in his rights.

Where an excess of power prevails, property of no sort is duly respected. No man is safe in his opinions, his person, his faculties, or his possessions.

Where there is an excess of liberty, the effect is the same, though from an opposite cause.

Government is instituted to protect property of every sort; as well that which lies in the various rights of individuals, as that which the term particularly expresses. This being the end of government, that alone is a just government, which impartially secures to every man, whatever is his own.

According to this standard of merit, the praise of affording a just securing to property, should be sparingly bestowed on a government which, however scrupulously guarding the possessions of individuals, does not protect them in the enjoyment and communication of their opinions, in which they have an equal, and in the estimation of some, a more valuable property.

More sparingly should this praise be allowed to a government, where a man’s religious rights are violated by penalties, or fettered by tests, or taxed by a hierarchy. Conscience is the most sacred of all property; other property depending in part on positive law, the exercise of that, being a natural and unalienable right. To guard a man’s house as his castle, to pay public and enforce private debts with the most exact faith, can give no title to invade a man’s conscience which is more sacred than his castle, or to withhold from it that debt of protection, for which the public faith is pledged, by the very nature and original conditions of the social pact.

That is not a just government, nor is property secure under it, where the property which a man has in his personal safety and personal liberty, is violated by arbitrary seizures of one class of citizens for the service of the rest. A magistrate issuing his warrants to a press gang, would be in his proper functions in Turkey or Indostan, under appellations proverbial of the most complete despotism.

That is not a just government, nor is property secure under it, where arbitrary restrictions, exemptions, and monopolies deny to part of its citizens that free use of their faculties, and free choice of their occupations, which not only constitute their property in the general sense of the word; but are the means of acquiring property strictly so called. What must be the spirit of legislation where a manufacturer of linen cloth is forbidden to bury his own child in a linen shroud, in order to favor his neighbour who manufactures woolen cloth; where the manufacturer and wearer of woolen cloth are again forbidden the economical use of buttons of that material, in favor of the manufacturer of buttons of other materials!

A just security to property is not afforded by that government, under which unequal taxes oppress one species of property and reward another species: where arbitrary taxes invade the domestic sanctuaries of the rich, and excessive taxes grind the faces of the poor; where the keenness and competitions of want are deemed an insufficient spur to labor, and taxes are again applied, by an unfeeling policy, as another spur; in violation of that sacred property, which Heaven, in decreeing man to earn his bread by the sweat of his brow, kindly reserved to him, in the small repose that could be spared from the supply of his necessities.

If there be a government then which prides itself in maintaining the inviolability of property; which provides that none shall be taken directly even for public use without indemnification to the owner, and yet directly violates the property which individuals have in their opinions, their religion, their persons, and their faculties; nay more, which indirectly violates their property, in their actual possessions, in the labor that acquires their daily subsistence, and in the hallowed remnant of time which ought to relieve their fatigues and soothe their cares, the influence will have been anticipated, that such a government is not a pattern for the United States.

If the United States mean to obtain or deserve the full praise due to wise and just governments, they will equally respect the rights of property, and the property in rights: they will rival the government that most sacrely guards the former; and by repelling its example in violating the latter, will make themselves a pattern to that and all other governments.
LUCIUS CRASSUS (ALEXANDER HAMILTON)

The Examination Number VII

ARTICLE

January 7, 1802

New-York Evening Post | New York City, New York

BACKGROUND

Alexander Hamilton wrote this article examining President Thomas Jefferson's message to Congress at the beginning of his presidency.

GUIDING QUESTIONS

1. According to Hamilton, what are the several principles that ought to govern immigration?

---

The next exceptionable feature in the Message, is the proposal to abolish all restriction on naturalization, arising from a previous residence. In this the President is not more at variance with the concurrent maxims of all commentators on popular governments, than he is with himself. The Notes on Virginia are in direct contradiction to the Message, and furnish us with strong reasons against the policy now recommended. The passage alluded to is here presented: Speaking of the population of America, Mr. Jefferson there says, “Here I will beg leave to propose a doubt. The present desire of America, is to produce rapid population, by as great importations of foreigners as possible. But is this founded in good policy?” “Are there no inconveniences to be thrown into the scale, against the advantage expected from a multiplication of numbers, by the importation of foreigners? It is for the happiness of those united in society, to harmonize as much as possible, in matters which they must of necessity transact together. Civil government being the sole object of forming societies, its administration must be conducted by common consent. Every species of government has its specific principles: Ours, perhaps, are more peculiar than those of any other in the universe. It is a composition of the freest principles of the English Constitution, with others, derived from natural right and reason. To these, nothing can be more opposed than the maxims of absolute monarchies. Yet from such, we are to expect the greatest number of emigrants. They will bring with them the principles of the governments they leave, imbibed in their early youth; or if able to throw them off, it will be in exchange for an unbounded licentiousness, passing as is usual, from one extreme to another. It would be a miracle were they to stop precisely at the point of temperate liberty. Their principles with their language, they will transmit to their children. In proportion to their numbers, they will share with us in the legislation. They will infuse into it their spirit, warp and bias its direction, and render it a heterogeneous, incoherent, distracted mass. I may appeal to experience, during the present contest, for a verification of these conjectures: but if they be not certain in event, are they not possible, are they not probable? Is it not safer to wait with patience for the attainment of any degree of population desired or expected? May not our government be more homogeneous, more peaceable, more durable? Suppose 20 millions of republican Americans, thrown all of a sudden into France, what would be the condition of that kingdom? If it would be more turbulent, less happy, less strong, we may believe that the addition of half a million of foreigners, to our present numbers, would produce a similar effect here.” Thus wrote Mr. Jefferson in 1781….

…The impolicy of admitting foreigners to an immediate and unreserved participation in the right of suffrage, or in the sovereignty of a Republic, is as much a received axiom as any thing in the science of politics, and is verified by the experience of all ages. Among other instances, it is known, that hardly any thing contributed more to the downfall of Rome, than her precipitate communication of the privileges of citizenship to the inhabitants of Italy at large. And how terribly was Syracuse scourged by perpetual seditions, when, after the overthrow of the tyrants, a great number of foreigners were suddenly admitted to the rights of citizenship? Not only does ancient but modern, and even domestic history furnish evidence of what may be expected from the dispositions of foreigners, when they get too early footing in a country. Who wields the sceptre of France, and has erected a Despotism on the ruins of a Republic? A foreigner. Who rules the councils of our own ill-fated, unhappy country? And who stimulates persecution on the heads of its citizens, for daring to maintain an opinion, and for exercising the rights of suffrage? A foreigner! Where is the virtuous pride that once distinguished Americans? Where the indignant spirit which in defence of principle, hazarded a revolution to attain that independence now insidiously attacked?

LUCIUS CRASSUS
UNIT 2
The United States Constitution

UNIT PREVIEW

Structure

| LESSON 1          | The Principles of the Constitution | 3–4 classes | p. 7 |
| LESSON 2          | The Congress                        | 2–3 classes | p. 14 |
| LESSON 3          | The Presidency                      | 2–3 classes | p. 18 |
| LESSON 4          | The Judiciary                       | 1–2 classes | p. 23 |
| LESSON 5          | The Bill of Rights                  | 2–3 classes | p. 26 |
| APPENDIX A        | Study Guide, Test, Writing Assignment |          | p. 31 |
| APPENDIX B        | Primary Sources                     |            | p. 43 |

Why Teach the United States Constitution

“[I]t seems to have been reserved to the people of this country, by their conduct and example, to decide the important question, whether societies of men are really capable or not of establishing good government from reflection and choice, or whether they are forever destined to depend for their political constitutions on accident and force.” Thus wrote Alexander Hamilton in the opening paragraph of Federalist 1 in support of the newly proposed United States Constitution. Indeed, it is the Constitution that gives institutional form to the principles of the Declaration of Independence. The Constitution is the vehicle for the American experiment in self-government. Study of the Constitution therefore shows students how and that human beings are able to govern themselves in freedom, securing the equal protection of rights and the dignity of... each person through reflection, deliberation, and choice. This is a significant thing for students to grasp, for if the Constitution cannot achieve these ends, then force and violence are the only alternatives left to humankind. It is important for students to understand how and why the Framers formed the three branches and how they were intended to operate. This unit also covers the added safeguards to freedom in the first ten amendments to the Constitution: The Bill of Rights.

What Teachers Should Consider

The idea and presence of a constitution is so ubiquitous to Americans that we forget how it was really the U.S. Constitution that made constitutions so common and expected. With this familiarity comes a lack of consideration of the uniqueness of the U.S. Constitution not only for being the first and oldest written constitution, but especially of the carefully discerned principles on which it rests.

The first of these is the rule of law, a principle that was not new but that was restored from antiquity through the Magna Carta and the English law tradition. The American colonists inherited this legal tradition and practiced it in the colonies for a century and a half in the colonies. Violations of the rule of law were at the heart of the colonists’ complaints against the British.

After the Revolution, it was of great significance to construct a government that would preserve the rule of law and create structures and processes that would ward against its violations.…

After treating of the main principles that the framers brought to bear on the Constitution, it passes next to examine the actual text of the Constitution. The different articles lay out the structure, selection, and powers of each branch of the federal government. It is here that students come to see how the principles of the Constitution informed the way that the federal government is structured and how it functions.

The chief goal behind every clause to the Constitution is to allow the people to govern but to do so justly, that is, without violating the rights of the minority. The importance of representation, therefore, underlies every consideration. Students should be asked to identify this principle as it functions within each branch of the government and how certain requirements of the Constitution seek to foster good representation.

At the same time, the Constitution limits the power of each branch and official. In the event that good representatives gain power—but given the nature of human beings with respect to power—the Constitution sets guardrails for how much power a branch can accumulate and how that power is wielded. Ultimately, every government decision comes back to the will of the people through elections.

In addition to making these connections between principles and practice, students must learn the simple facts of how the federal government is composed and how it functions. This information is necessary to being a well-informed citizen. Fortunately, students’ background knowledge in the principles of the Constitution lend such straightforward study an additional degree of understanding and appreciation. The facts of governing through the Constitution are significant because they were carefully determined, the product of reflective thought and experience. Their historical success, moreover, is a testimony to how well conceived they turned out to be.
Finally, the addition of the Bill of Rights is worthy of careful study on the part of students. Contentious at the time of the ratification debates, the Bill of Rights has proven to be a bulwark against government violations of rights. Students should examine them closely and tie their inclusion both to historical situations which the framers had recently experienced and to the principles of the Declaration of Independence.

How Teachers Can Learn More

TEXTS

- The U.S. Constitution: A Reader, ed. Hillsdale College Politics Faculty
  Chapters 4–6
- We Still Hold These Truths, Matthew Spalding
  Chapters 5–7
  Chapters 2, 3, 12, 13, 15
- American Government and Politics, Joseph Bessette and John Pitney
  Chapters 2, 3, 12, 13

ONLINE COURSES | Online.Hillsdale.edu

- Introduction to the Constitution
- Constitution 101
- The Federalist Papers

Primary Sources Studied in This Unit

- The U.S. Constitution
- Federalist 10
- Federalist 51
- The Bill of Rights
LESSON PLANS, ASSIGNMENTS, AND FORMATIVE QUIZ
Lesson 1 — The Principles of the Constitution

LESSON OBJECTIVE

Students learn about the main ideas and principles that the Founders had in mind when they organized the government through the Constitution.

ONLINE COURSES FOR TEACHERS | Online.Hillsdale.edu

- Introduction to the Constitution
  Lectures 4, 5, 6, 7, 8
- Constitution 101
  Lectures 1, 3, 4
- The Federalist Papers
  Lecture 1, 2, 3, 4, 5

PRIMARY SOURCES

The following primary sources are potential readings for students. Teachers should use their discretion based on grade level ability in deciding which texts to share with students. The texts may be assigned for homework, read together in class, or simply read aloud by the teacher. Some texts include guiding reading questions to assist students in the event that the text is assigned for homework. Students should annotate the texts either in preparation for or during a seminar conversation. Teachers should not feel it necessary to assign all of the texts, especially in light of grade level considerations.

- The U.S. Constitution
- The Federalist, Nos. 10 and 51

TERMS AND TOPICS

- Articles of Confederation
- Constitution
- power
- union
- republic
- representation
- representative democracy
- direct democracy
- extended sphere
- human nature
- interest
- faction
- parties
- majority tyranny
- federalism
- local government
- state government
- federal government
- township
- republic
- enumerated powers
- separation of powers
- branch
- checks and balances
QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

- In light of the weaknesses and failures of the Articles of Confederation, why did the Federalists believe a Constitution was necessary?
- What is the relationship between the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution?
- What was The Federalist and what was its purpose?
- How is representative democracy distinct from direct democracy?
- How is representation supposed to lead to the creation of better laws?
- According to The Federalist, what are the virtues and limitations of human nature?
- What did the Framers think about the tendencies of power?
- What is the danger with factions and parties?
- Why did The Federalist believe a larger country would help prevent the danger of majority tyranny from factions?
- What is federalism? What are its advantages?
- What are the distinctions among the local, state, and federal governments?
- What are your state and local governments?
- What is separation of powers? Why does the Constitution separate the powers of government?
- What are checks and balances? What is their purpose?
- How did the Constitution balance freedom (majority rule) and justice (preserving minority rights)?
- Questions from the U.S. Civics Test:
  - Question 1: What is the form of government of the United States?
  - Question 2: What is the supreme law of the land?
  - Question 3: Name one thing the U.S. Constitution does.
  - Question 4: The U.S. Constitution starts with the words “We the People.” What does “We the People” mean?
  - Question 10: Name two important ideas from the Declaration of Independence and the U.S. Constitution.
  - Question 13: What is the rule of law?
  - Question 14: Many documents influenced the U.S. Constitution. Name one.
  - Question 15: There are three branches of government. Why?
  - Question 16: Name the three branches of government.
  - Question 58: Name one power that is only for the federal government.
  - Question 59: Name one power that is only for the states.
  - Question 82: What founding document was written in 1787?
  - Question 83: The Federalist Papers supported the passage of the U.S. Constitution. Name one of the writers.
  - Question 84: Why were the Federalist Papers important?
  - Question 86: George Washington is famous for many things. Name one.
  - Question 88: James Madison is famous for many things. Name one.
  - Question 89: Alexander Hamilton is famous for many things. Name one.
KEYS TO THE LESSON

The Constitution should be studied in two steps. The first explores the principles the framers had in mind when they were crafting the form of government. This is essential for understanding the Constitution, for without the underlying principles the form seems conventional and just one of many constitutions in history. The second part to instruction involves learning about the actual structure and function of the government under the Constitution. This lesson is concerned first with the principles and how exceptional and carefully the framers considered them.

Teachers might best plan and teach the Principles of the Constitution with emphasis on the following approaches.

- Survey with students the various main forms of government from which America is distinct, including pure democracy, monarchy, aristocracy, oligarchy, theocracy, autocracy, socialist, communist, fascist, etc.
- Review with students the structure of the Articles of Confederation and the issues that emerged under such a structure. The Articles were drafted by Americans wary of a strong central government in light of their experience with the British. They wanted to keep the states as independent as possible. To prevent the national government from becoming too powerful, the second Article asserted the sovereignty of each state except in case when a power is explicitly delegated to the United States Congress. While united on some matters of foreign policy, the Articles would prove to be ineffective as a federal government charter, because they did not provide a strong and unified executive, and they had no power to enforce laws or levy taxes to pay for the expenses of government.
- Proceed to considering the issues that dominated the 1780s, especially the debt cancellation laws by states (a clear example of majority tyranny) and the event that impressed upon George Washington and James Madison the importance of reforming the Articles: Shays’ Rebellion.
- Review with students their history knowledge concerning past experiments with democratic government. Democracies and republics had historically been short-lived because of two primary faults. The first was the tyranny of the majority, when the rights of the minority are trampled by the majority. Second was the ineptitude of democratic governments. Such a government was usually inefficient, weak, divided, and susceptible to the passions of the mob. Factions divided the institutions of such a regime. The result was civil war or conquest by an outside nation. The Constitution intended to form a government that would preserve the benefits of republicanism while guarding against its defects.
- Note for students the senses in which the Framers believed they were in the best position to achieve a free, self-governing republic in 1787, as opposed to previous times. The Framers argued that certain experiences and intelligent thinkers had helped mankind learn from past failures and improve the science of politics. This improved science of politics included the principles of the separation of powers, the office of an independent judiciary serving lifetime appointments, representatives selected by the people, and the extended sphere of a nation’s geographic size. This did not mean that they believed human nature changed or improved or that people and governments naturally evolve to become better over time. Human nature, as with all natures, was and is unchanging and therefore would always be prone to certain faults in character and intellect. So, too, would governments, as people are those who govern.
Help students to appreciate the difficulty of what the delegates to the Constitutional Convention were attempting to do. They had to account, above all, for human nature, mitigating its negative tendencies while channeling its neutral and good tendencies toward constructive governance. Simultaneously, the delegates had to account for the myriad interests and situations of the various states. The issue of how the people and the states would be represented was a chief contention, one that resulted in a bicameral legislature with different means of representation. Other results were strong debates and compromises over the question of slavery.

Introduce students briefly to the origins and purpose of The Federalist, including the backgrounds and roles of their principal authors, James Madison and Alexander Hamilton. It is worth noting that each would disagree strongly with one another on future issues, but on the Constitution, they found common ground, a good model for civil dialogue today.

Consider with students the main arguments in Federalist 10 and 51. These key documents should afford a review of the principles of the Declaration of Independence and the problems of the Articles of Confederation while also illustrating the purposes of the Constitution. The form of the Constitution follows its function with respect to human nature and the purposes for which governments are established, per the Declaration of Independence. The Federalist explains both of these functions and the nature of men.

Make sure students are mindful of the overall goals toward which the Founders directed every decision: freedom and self-government. In other words, they needed to arrange the government and distribute powers so as to enable representatives chosen by the people to protect the rights of the people while avoiding tyranny, either by the one, the few, or the many.

Spend some time considering the Preamble to the Constitution. It is remarkable in stating two things: first, what the purposes of the government established by the Constitution are to be, and second, that it is the people who are establishing it for these purposes. Students should be able to relate everything mentioned in the Constitution to both of these elements of the Preamble: how does each arrangement achieve these stated purposes of government; and how does it reflect the consent of the governed?

Ask about the source and purpose of a government’s power. Review how the Declaration of Independence claims that government power comes from the free consent of the people, and ask students to identify whether and how the Constitution accomplishes that goal.

Clarify that the Constitution establishes a republic, not a democracy. In a pure democracy the people make all legislative decisions by direct majority vote; in a republic, the people elect certain individuals to represent their interests in deliberating and voting. The deliberations and voting record of representatives should usually reflect but should also be more refined than that of the entire people voting directly. Sometimes this distinction is described in terms of direct democracy vs. representative democracy.

Describe the American Founders’ understanding of human nature. They understood human nature to be fixed and unchanging, good but also flawed and tending toward corrupting power. In response to human nature, government must guard against the opposite dangers of lawlessness and tyranny, accounting for the realities of human nature and rejecting the possibility of utopia.

Show how the Constitution does not deny, demonize, or elevate human nature, but rather seeks to channel the powers of human beings into constructive institutions while mitigating man’s baser tendencies. In brief, the Constitution is constructed on a deep and accurate understanding of fixed human nature born of the Founders’ knowledge of history, their own experience, and their prudence.
Emphasize for students the reality of majority tyranny. There is a straightforward though mistaken belief nowadays that justice is the rule of the majority and that 51 percent of the people have a moral right to impose whatever they wish on the 49 percent. The Founders rejected this idea of democracy and morality as “might makes right.” They asserted objective standards of right and wrong by which government must abide in protecting rights if it is to be a just government. The Framers of the Constitution were chiefly concerned with allowing the will of the majority to rule—thereby guaranteeing the consent of the governed—while still preserving the rights of the minority and thereby securing justice.

Note with students how powers are enumerated, thus limiting the scope of government activity afforded by the Constitution, a key feature of limited government.

Consider how the Constitution repeatedly structures federal institutions to refine and enlarge the will of the people.

Explain to students how the extended territory under American rule was thought to prevent majority tyranny by taking in a wider array of opinions and interests, many of which depended on geography, with the ties of occupation, culture, and religious beliefs that are connected to a certain location. To achieve a majority in government the representatives would have to achieve a broad consensus on the issues, meaning that only the most universally held positions would be possible to enact.

Explain the importance of the principles of federalism and the separation of powers, and why these ideas are central to the Constitution’s safeguards against the corrupting tendency of power.

Distinguish the focus of the federal government compared to the state governments.

Highlight how the separation of powers (along with checks and balances between the branches) is the key “mechanism” of the Constitution. Remind students that the separation of powers is not an arbitrary design, but serves two purposes: 1) it upholds the rule of law (and good government) by focusing government on its core functions of making law, enforcing law, and adjudicating law; and 2) it preserves liberty (and limited government) by preventing the accumulation of power in the hands of any one branch, which Madison defines as the very definition of tyranny. The system of checks and balances encourages each branch to protect its own powers and to do its assigned duty. The separation of powers coupled with checks and balances was intended to prevent the defects of republican government (namely, the tyrannical rule of a majority faction) while retaining what was good: the consent of the governed under the constitutional rule of law.

Have students converse about the importance of the rule of law. With deep historical roots (especially British constitutional history and particular events such as the Magna Carta), the rule of law is a general concept of government that is straightforward but extremely important and historically rare. First, it states that all of the governed abide by the law and are equally protected by the law; and second, that even those who govern must abide by the same law. It means that everyone—citizens and government officials alike—should be governed by agreed-upon rules that apply equally to everyone, rather than by the arbitrary judgment of government officials applying one set of rules to the governed and a separate set to themselves. The law is above any one person or group of people and their interests, and everyone is equally accountable to the law. John Adams put it simply when he described the purpose of a constitution government as “a government of laws, not of men.”
STRENGTHENING UNDERSTANDING: POST-LESSON ASSIGNMENT

Assignment: What are the main ideas the Framers kept in mind as they designed the government through the Constitution? (1–2 paragraphs).
Lesson 2 — The Congress

LESSON OBJECTIVE

Students learn how the Constitution structures the federal legislature to ensure that the will of the people is both expressed as well as refined and enlarged by the people’s representatives to effect good government.

ONLINE COURSES FOR TEACHERS | Online.Hillsdale.edu

The Federalist Papers
Lecture 6

Congress
Lectures 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12

PRIMARY SOURCES

Students may read and annotate the following primary source(s), either at home or together in class. Using their annotations and the below questions, lead students through a seminar conversation on each text.

The U.S. Constitution, Articles I and IV

TERMS AND TOPICS

- legislature
- legislative power
- Virginia Plan
- New Jersey Plan
- Great Compromise
- bill
- Congress
- bicameralism
- House of Representatives
- Senate
- term
- refine and enlarge
- majority/minority leader
- lame duck
- filibuster
- Speaker of the House
- 17th Amendment

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

- Which purposes and powers does Congress have?
- How does the Constitution place and structure the legislative power in the Congress?
- What is bicameralism, and what are its advantages?
- What are the similarities and differences between the structure of the House of Representatives and the Senate?
- What are the requirements for becoming a Representative or Senator? Why are they different?
- How does one become Representative or Senator?
- What are the chief characteristics of the House of Representatives, and why?
- What are the chief characteristics of the Senate, and why?
- How does representation itself and the differences between the House of Representatives and the Senate combine to refine and enlarge the will of the people?
- How does a bill become a law?
- How can Congress check and balance the power of the president?
- How can Congress check and balance the power of the judiciary?
- Questions from the U.S. Civics Test:
  - Question 18: What part of the federal government writes laws?
  - Question 19: What are the two parts of the U.S. Congress?
  - Question 20: Name one power of the U.S. Congress.
  - Question 21: How many U.S. senators are there?
  - Question 22: How long is a term for a U.S. senator?
  - Question 24: How many voting members are in the House of Representatives?
  - Question 25: How long is a term for a member of the House of Representatives?
  - Question 26: Why do U.S. representatives serve shorter terms than U.S. senators?
  - Question 27: How many senators does each state have?
  - Question 28: Why does each state have two senators?
  - Question 31: Who does a U.S. senator represent?
  - Question 32: Who elects U.S. senators?
  - Question 33: Who does a member of the House of Representatives represent?
  - Question 34: Who elects members of the House of Representatives?
  - Question 35: Some states have more representatives than other states. Why?

KEYS TO THE LESSON

The legislative power and the Congress that holds it are the most quintessentially American facets to government in the United States. Composed of the elected representatives of the American people, Congress embodies self-government in America. Hence it is listed first among the three equal branches of government. Its bicameral structure satisfied both large and small states and has proven to be a bulwark against the accumulation of power and against momentary passions that sweep through the country while carrying out government’s core function of making law. While representation in and of itself seeks to elevate the will of the majority through relatively talented and mindful Representatives, the further refinement and broadening of legislation through the Senate brings an additional safeguard. Prudent and effective legislation supported by a broad legislative consensus was the goal the Framers had in mind when forming the Congress. For all of these reasons, over much of American history, the Congress has operated as the core representative branch—and thus the heart—of American constitutional government. Historically, its power had been great and intentionally so. The two houses had brought and, to lesser extent, continue to bring their unique characters together to form laws most representative of the American citizenry. The structure and functions of Congress are manifold but also inspiring, for it is the clearest expression of the people governing themselves. Students should come away from this unit knowing both the mechanics and functions of Congress today and how they have changed from the original intentions of the Founders.

Teachers might best plan and teach the Congress with emphasis on the following approaches:
Throughout this lesson, have students consider how the Constitution repeatedly structures the government to refine and enlarge public opinion so as to reflect their consent through the rule of law.

Help students to understand the very meaningful words legislative, executive, judicial, and power. All four words are not merely conventions but are full of significance. In fact, they are true to the very nature of the rule of law. They connote the act of lawmaking, the act of enforcing the law made, and the act of determining whether the law has been violated, either by an individual against a specific law, or by a law itself against the Supreme Law of the Land, the Constitution.

Clarify for students that under the Constitution the United States is not a democracy but rather a republic. The main distinction is that in a pure democracy, everyone votes on actually making every law, and the only factor to consider in enacting a law is 51 percent of the people. In a republic, the people elect certain of the fellow citizens to represent their views and interests in deliberating and making decisions. The deliberations and voting record of representatives should not only reflect the opinions of the people they represent but also their settled concerns and common good as understood by the representative. How well they have represented the opinions and good of their constituents is determined by election of those being represented. Other terms relevant to these distinctions are direct democracy versus representative democracy.

Ask students why the Constitution begins by describing the legislative power and legislative branch. The reason is Congress is most connected with the people at large. Lawmaking is the chief governing act, and in a democratic republic, it is the representatives of the people who do the lawmaking. Students should understand how very different the locus of lawmaking and power is today when one considers the present executive, judiciary, and bureaucracy.

Have students discuss and understand the purpose of the main legislative powers granted to Congress. Students should be able to connect each of these powers with the purposes of the Constitution as outlined in the Preamble. The structure, character, and operation of Congress are designed in the way most fitting to the function of lawmaking, that is, to exercise the power of making law on behalf of (or as representatives of) the people. Make clear that the legislative power is vested uniquely in the legislative branch, not in the federal government as a whole or in another branch.

Have students understand clearly the requirements for holding office in the House of Representatives and the Senate and the terms of office. Students should be able to account for the differences and what it means for the purposes and manner of legislating in each body: namely, that the House is more reflective and responsive to the people, while the Senate is more deliberative and refining of the majority will.

Teach about the House of Representatives in light the appropriateness of the quantity of representatives that the Constitution had originally set and the quality required of such representatives, including the ways in which the Constitution seeks to ensure such individuals are more likely to be elected. The teacher may review Federalist Nos. 55 and 57 in preparation.

Teach about the Senate, paying special attention to how the Senate is structured and chosen, and how these features provide stability and wisdom to the legislature while strengthening federalism and the role of states in the federal government structure. The teacher may review Federalist Nos. 62 and 63 in preparation. It is worth noting how the 17th Amendment in 1913 altered this arrangement and changed the role played by the Senate.

Outline in general some of the more prominent offices and committees within Congress and the process of how laws are made.
- Explain how Congressmen and Congresswomen address constituent relations.
- Spend time on the unique powers each house has, why they have those powers, and how the powers are carried out, for example, the confirmation of appointees, ratification of treaties, introducing appropriations bills, and impeaching and conducting impeachment trials.

STRENGTHENING UNDERSTANDING: POST-LESSON ASSIGNMENT

Assignment: Explain the overall powers of Congress and why Congress, as opposed to other branches, has these powers (1–2 paragraphs).
Lesson 3 — The Presidency

LESSON OBJECTIVE

Students learn how the Constitution arranges the executive power in the presidency and the purposes and powers of the office.

ONLINE COURSES FOR TEACHERS | Online.Hillsdale.edu

| The Federalist Papers       | Lecture 7 |
| The Presidency and the Constitution | Lectures 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9 |

PRIMARY SOURCES

Students may read and annotate the following primary source(s), either at home or together in class. Using their annotations and the below questions, lead students through a seminar conversation on each text.

The U.S. Constitution, Article II

TERMS AND TOPICS

- executive power
- presidency
- Electoral College
- term
- veto power
- impeachment
- cabinet
- Commander-in-Chief
- presidential oath
- bully pulpit
- State of the Union address
- foreign policy
- vice president
- War Powers Resolution
- pardoning power
- impeachment
- 12th, 20th, 22nd, and 25th Amendments

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

- What were the debates about the presidency at the Constitutional Convention?
- What is the executive power? Why do we need a president?
- What purposes and powers does the presidency have?
- What are the requirements for becoming president?
- How does one become president?
- What are the chief characteristics of the presidency, and why?
- What is the Electoral College, how did it originally work, and what is its purpose?
- What was the purpose of the State of the Union address?
- How has the role of the president changed as political parties have changed?
- Explain the role of the president in relation to foreign policy. What powers does he have and not have?
- How can the president check and balance the power of the Congress?
- How can the president check and balance the power of the judiciary?
- Questions from the U.S. Civics Test:
  - Question 17: The President of the United States is in charge of which branch of government?
  - Question 36: The President of the United States is elected for how many years?
  - Question 37: The President of the United States can serve only two terms. Why?
  - Question 38: What is the name of the President of the United States now?
  - Question 39: What is the name of the Vice President of the United States now?
  - Question 40: If the president can no longer serve, who becomes president?
  - Question 41: Name one power of the president.
  - Question 42: Who is Command in Chief of the U.S. military?
  - Question 43: Who signs bills to become laws?
  - Question 44: Who vetoes bills?
  - Question 45: Who appoints federal judges?
  - Question 46: The executive branch has many parts. Name one.
  - Question 47: What does the President’s cabinet do?
  - Question 48: What are two Cabinet-level positions?
  - Question 49: Why is the Electoral College important?

Keys to the Lesson

The office of president demonstrated some of the most significant changes the Framers put into the Constitution, compared to the Articles of Confederation. The Framers saw the need of a stronger executive, especially in the area of representing the United States on the world stage and in providing for the nation’s security and carrying out its foreign policy. The president’s first responsibility, however, was simply to enforce the laws passed by Congress. The Constitution states the bounds of this authority with respect to Congress in the Constitution’s charge that the president “take care that the laws be faithfully executed.” In this sense, the president is beholden to the legislature and to the law. It is his job to carry out the law as it is created by the legislature. This means he is neither to create laws nor fail to enforce them. His main check on the legislative power is his veto, and even that may be overridden by Congress. Once a law is passed, and only once it has been passed, does the president simply make sure people follow the law. In American history, the presidency has acquired an outsized regard for its importance and prestige. This is owing partly to the talents of exceptional presidents, partly to later reinventions of the office, and partly to America’s growth into a superpower in which foreign policy and the head of state have played a more prominent role in the world. Still, students should understand that the original intention for the office was to execute laws passed by Congress, uphold the rule of law, and defend the Constitution. The executive office has a character of its own: law enforcement, which ultimately means that the president exists to provide the necessary force behind law, which does not come about naturally. Students should understand these features of executive power as well as how the presidency functions.

Teachers might best plan and teach the Presidency with emphasis on the following approaches:
Consider with students the nature of executive power and its ultimate reliance on a fear of losing liberty, property, or even life, should appeals to virtue and right conduct fail to elicit an adherence to the law by citizens.

Examine with students Publius’s arguments for the presidency and the necessity of an energetic executive, especially the unity (one person) that is necessary for “decision, activity, secrecy, and dispatch” in executive actions. The teacher may review Federalist 70 in preparation.

Share with students that the office of the president was crafted by the Framers with both hindsight and foresight. On one hand, they had learned that the legitimate concern of the Articles of Confederation to prevent executive tyranny resulted in a weak if non-existent executive with no independent power to enforce the laws or conduct foreign policy. The Constitution defined the proper ground by creating the president vested with the executive power to enforce the law and administer the affairs of government at home and abroad while also preventing and checking executive tyranny. On the other hand, the Founders created the office with the knowledge that George Washington—who had already relinquished his military authority as general—would assuredly be the first president to exercise these powers and in doing so set precedents for the future. They were confident he would do so with vigor but also with prudence and justice for the sake of establishing the Constitution.

Note for students that the president’s executive power in Article II is a general grant of power, not “herein granted” or enumerated as in Article I. While Congress has great powers to control and influence the means of the president, especially through its control of the budget, the presidency is designed to embody the executive power of government, primarily enforcing all the laws enacted by Congress but also maintaining the rule of law, seeing to the nation’s security, and conducting the nation’s foreign policy.

Make sure students know the requirements for being president and the kind of individual the Framers believed would be best for the office.

Explain the circumstances under which the president can exercise the powers of Commander-in-Chief. Students should be aware that, as the most popular branch, only Congress has the power to declare war, while the president has the power to carry out that declaration and otherwise direct the armed forces in circumstances of military necessity. Emphasize for students how a unique trait of the American armed forces is that they are under civilian control, in particular a civilian, elected president, checked by Congress (and a Supreme Court), subservient to the Constitution and the rule of law.

Read aloud and discussion with students the president’s unique oath of office, found in Article II, Section 1, Clause 8: “I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully execute the Office of President of the United States, and will to the best of my Ability, preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States.”

Clarify with students how the Electoral College works and why the Founders decided on this process for choosing the president. The first original reason was to provide a way for the people’s representatives in the states to check against a tyrannical or fraudulent choice of the president, a purpose which most states abandoned when they enacted laws tying a state’s choice of electors to the state’s popular vote and then usually requiring those electors to be faithful to the state’s popular vote. The second reason was to ensure that presidential candidates would have to pay attention to the interests and opinions of all the states and their populations. This prevented regional and encourage national candidates, and forced presidential candidates to address the concerns not merely of large population centers like cities but also of rural and more remote populations. Together with the equal representation among states in the Senate, the Electoral College has discouraged majority tyranny in favor of a broader and more settled national consensus. Explain the Electoral College system as intended by the Founders and as it functions today.

- Make sure students understand how the presidency operates in the twenty-first century, with its various personnel and the responsibilities and roles the White House has acquired over the years. Spend time discussing the cabinet, the armed forces, and the bureaucratic agencies. Consider the president’s role in foreign policy and in appointing members of the judiciary.
- Survey and discuss with students the various amendments to the Constitution that have changed the role and functioning of the president and the executive branch, namely the 12th, 20th, 22nd, and 25th Amendments. Students should consider the merits and consequences of each change to the presidency.

STRENGTHENING UNDERSTANDING: POST-LESSON ASSIGNMENT

Assignment: Explain the overall powers of the presidency and why the presidency, as opposed to other branches, has these powers (1–2 paragraphs).
Unit 3 — Formative Quiz

DIRECTIONS: Answer each question in at least one complete sentence.

1. How is representative democracy distinct from direct democracy?

2. What did the Framers think about the tendencies of power?

3. What is federalism? What are its advantages?

4. What is separation of powers? Why does the Constitution separate the powers of government?

5. What are the chief characteristics of the House of Representatives, and why?

6. What are the chief characteristics of the Senate, and why?

7. What are the chief characteristics of the presidency, and why?
Lesson 4 — The Judiciary

Lesson Objective

Students learn about the judicial power in the Constitution and about the Supreme Court’s power of judicial review.

Online Courses for Teachers | Online.Hillsdale.edu

The Federalist Papers Lecture 8
The U.S. Supreme Court Lecture 1

Primary Sources

Students may read and annotate the following primary source(s), either at home or together in class. Using their annotations and the below questions, lead students through a seminar conversation on each text.

The U.S. Constitution, Article III

Terms and Topics

judicial power original jurisdiction
Supreme Court appellate jurisdiction coequality of branches Marbury v. Madison Judiciary Act of 1789 judicial review appellate courts jurisdiction

Questions for the American Mind

- Which purposes and powers does the Supreme Court have?
- How does the Constitution place and structure the judicial power in the Supreme Court?
- What are the requirements for becoming a justice?
- How does one become a justice?
- What are the chief characteristics of the Supreme Court, and why?
- What is judicial review? How was the power first claimed and asserted?
- Who has the power to establish “lesser courts”?
- How can the judiciary check and balance the power of the president?
- How can the judiciary check and balance the power of Congress?
- To whom are elected officials and the Constitution itself ultimately subject?
- Questions from the U.S. Civics Test:
  - Question 2: What is the supreme law of the land?
  - Question 13: What is the rule of law?
Question 50: What is one part of the judicial branch?
Question 51: What does the judicial branch do?
Question 52: What is the highest court in the United States?
Question 53: How many seats are on the Supreme Court?
Question 54: How many Supreme Court justices are usually needed to decide a case?
Question 55: How long do Supreme Court justices serve?
Question 56: Supreme Court justices serve for life. Why?

Keys to the Lesson

In many respects, the Supreme Court was not given much consideration by the founding generation. The relatively minimal amount of detail and deliberation concerning the judiciary may have been the result of the rather straightforward nature of the judicial power: to use reason to judge whether or not a law has been violated in particular cases. The keys to exercising such a power, which has historic origins, depended on the wisdom of the judge as well as their understanding of the law. The requirement that the more deliberative Senate would have to consent to an elected president’s appointment of federal judges acted as a check against judicial tyranny. A key innovation the Framers brought to the judiciary was making it separate from the lawmaking and law-enforcing parts of the government and independent by lifetime appointment. The coequality of the judiciary was also an important element in enacting the separation of powers to ensure that justice would be effectively served. Most important was that the judiciary would be the constant guard of the Constitution and the rule of law.

Teachers might best plan and teach the Judiciary with emphasis on the following approaches:

- Explain that the judicial power is vested by Article III in the Supreme Court and in such inferior Courts as Congress creates by law. The judicial power (and the judiciary’s function) is to decide (or adjudicate) the “cases and controversies” that come before the courts according to the jurisdiction assigned by the Constitution or by Congress.
- Point out that the key to understanding the role of the judiciary in upholding the rule of law is that the “Constitution, and the Laws of the United States which shall be made in Pursuance thereof” is “the supreme Law of the Land” (Article VI). This means not only that all laws consistent with the Constitution must be followed but also that the Constitution is above ordinary laws.
- Explain that while lower court decision may be appealed, the decisions of the Supreme Court in particular cases before it are final. While the precedents of the Supreme Court (the doctrine of stare decisis) are important for instructing lower courts and predicting how the Supreme Court might decide similar cases in the future, the precedent of a particular case is neither final nor absolute. Significant cases (such as Dred Scott v. Sandford in 1857 and Plessy v. Ferguson in 1896) have been overturned years later despite the Court’s earlier decisions.
- Teach how Publius explains and defends the judicial power and the principle of judicial review—the authority of the courts to declare a law unconstitutional. It is important to note what Publius considered the role of the judge to be: not a legislator who makes laws but rather an impartial judge in a particular case who will uphold and apply the law fairly. In carrying out the judicial power, the judge must also support and defend the Constitution, which means that in making their decisions they are obligated to side with the Constitution if a law is inconsistent with the “supreme Law of the Land.” The judge must therefore interpret the laws and the Constitution. In doing so they should look at the intentions of Congress in making the laws, and to the courts’ own precedents, but most important they should abide by the original meaning of the Constitution as the intent expressed by the American people. The teacher may review Federalist 78 in preparation.

- Explain that while judicial review is rightly understood as a crucial element implied in the Constitution’s grant of judicial power, this does not mean that the Supreme Court has either the only or the final say over the Constitution and its meaning. Each branch of government is responsible to the Constitution as the source and extent of their authority, and are obligated to uphold it in carrying out their constitutional duties. This means Congress should consider the constitutionality of the laws it passes (and repeal those it considers unconstitutional), presidents should veto bills that they believe are unconstitutional and execute laws only in a constitutional manner, and that courts should strike down laws that are inconsistent with the Constitution. Nevertheless, when the three branches are at odds about the Constitution, the sovereign people have the final say as to the meaning of the Constitution by electing legislators who will make different laws, presidents who will appoint different judges, or by amending the Constitution itself. No singular branch has a monopoly on what the Constitution means.

- Teach students about how the Supreme Court decisions Marbury v. Madison debated and asserted the idea of judicial review that had been previewed in The Federalist. As explained above, note how the argument for judicial review asserted by the Supreme Court in Marbury v. Madison is distinct from judicial absolutism or judicial finality.

- Note for students how Congress began to establish lesser courts, per the Constitution, with the Judiciary Act of 1789. Students should be generally familiar with lower courts established throughout American history, their jurisdictions, and the general workings of lawsuits, trials, etc.

STRENGTHENING UNDERSTANDING: POST-LESSON ASSIGNMENT

Assignment: Explain the overall structure and powers of the Supreme Court and lesser courts, and why the judiciary, as opposed to other branches, has these powers (1-2 paragraphs).
Lesson 5 — The Bill of Rights

LESSON OBJECTIVE

Students learn about the arguments for and against a Bill of Rights, what each of the first ten amendments to the Constitution protects, and why each was included and written the way it was.

ONLINE COURSES FOR TEACHERS | Online.Hillsdale.edu

| The Federalist Papers | Lecture 9 |
| Civil Rights in American History | Lecture 2 |

PRIMARY SOURCES

Students may read and annotate the following primary source(s), either at home or together in class. Using their annotations and the below questions, lead students through a seminar conversation on each text.

- The U.S. Constitution, Articles V-VII
- The Bill of Rights

TERMS AND TOPICS

- Bill of Rights
- freedom of religion
- free exercise
- establishment clause
- freedom of speech
- freedom of the press
- right to assembly
- right to bear arms
- due process

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

- What is the process for amending the Constitution?
- Why does the Constitution make it so hard for it to be amended?
- What were the arguments for and against a Bill of Rights?
- What do each of the following amendments in the Bill of Rights guarantee and why: 1st, 2nd, 4th, 5th, 9th, and 10th?
- What is the origin of the rights protected in the Bill of Rights?
- How does religion help promote morality and freedom?
- What is the free exercise of religion and why is it important?
- What is freedom of speech and why is it so crucial to freedom and self-government?
- Why does the 2nd Amendment make it evident that the Founders found it necessary to guarantee to private citizens the right to possess tools used for their self-defense?
- What is due process? Why is it such an important legal guarantor of freedom?
Questions from the U.S. Civics Test:
- Question 5: How are changes made to the U.S. Constitution?
- Question 7: How many amendments does the U.S. Constitution have?
- Question 60: What is the purpose of the 10th Amendment?
- Question 65: What are three rights of everyone living in the United States?

Keys to the Lesson

The genius of the Bill of Rights was in the recognition that while future changes would produce new debates on government power, there nevertheless were fundamental rights not subject to change. Some sort of absolute prohibition that makes clear what is nonnegotiable seemed prudent. It is important to note that the list of rights guaranteed by the Constitution did not indicate a view by the framers that rights came from the government. Rather, these rights were recognized as fundaments which no government created or may violate. What is somewhat remarkable about this list of rights is how universal they are now considered. That is in many respects owing to their articulation and inclusion by the framers in America.

Teachers might best plan and teach the Bill of Rights with emphasis on the following approaches:

- Before looking at the Bill of Rights itself, read with students Articles V-VII of the Constitution. Students should be familiar with what these Articles, particularly concerning the amendment process and the status of the Constitution in the American constitutional system of law. Remind them that the Bill of Rights are ten amendments to the Constitution but do not replace or redefine the main Constitution as the main bulwark of liberty.
- Teach students about the Anti-Federalists’ concerns with the Constitution, the arguments for and against a Bill of Rights, and how the Federalists ultimately convinced key states to support the Constitution by guaranteeing to add a Bill of Rights if it was ratified.
- Lead students through a complete reading of the Bill of Rights. Pause frequently to ask students questions on the various parts of the text. Sometimes the Bill of Rights comes across as special rights that the government has given to the people (and, therefore, may conceivably take away). This is not the case. These are fundamental rights recognized and protected by the Constitution. The people may point to and claim these rights when government threatens them.
- Help students understand how the rights found in the Bill of Rights are related to the preservation of life, liberty, property, or the pursuit of happiness, or how they answer some of the grievances in the Declaration of Independence or problems discovered under the Articles of Confederation. Spend time especially considering the 1st, 2nd, 4th, 5th, 9th, and 10th Amendments and the following guarantees:
  - Religious Liberty: When the Founders wrote that “Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion,” they were not at all against religion playing a significant public role in society. But they did not want to establish an official church and creed, because they feared this would become a threat to “the free exercise of religion,” which was also protected in the First Amendment. They wanted to encourage and protect religious belief and exercise from a government that was either hostile to religion in general or to a specific religion, as was the case in other countries where church and state were not officially separated. The Founders emphatically believed that religion was necessary to promote morality, to shape civil society, and to form virtuous, responsible, wise, and caring citizens. They believed that government should encourage and support religion in general. But they did not think the government should endorse or fund one single, official church or do anything to obstruct the people from exercising their religious faith.

- Freedom of Speech: It is essential for any free society to have freedom of speech for citizens to hold government accountable and to discuss and debate ideas. Freedom of speech helps society to flourish by promoting the sharing of ideas, innovations, scientific thought, and virtue. The Founders also wanted to keep politicians and the government accountable to the people by allowing for the free expression of ideas in support of or critical of elected officials’ choices and character. Freedom of the Press applies freedom of speech to printed speech as well.

- Freedom of Assembly and to Petition. Any group of citizens can gather without the government’s permission as long as their activities are peaceful. Similarly, citizens have the right to make their interests known to the government, including to specific branches of the government and specific elected members of the government.

- The Right of Self-Defense: The right to bear arms reflects two essential principles: 1) individuals have a natural right to protect and defend their own lives, families, and property against the tyrannical actions of another person; and 2) citizens may protect their own lives, families, and properties against the tyrannical actions of the government itself. The right to bear arms protects citizens’ ability and right to counter any attempt at oppression by the government.

- Due Process: Due process is the legal process that every person under the rule of law is due as a matter of equal justice. It establishes that any deprivations of a person’s natural rights to life, liberty, and property must be accompanied by a legal process in which the law was already a law at the time of being violated and in which the opportunity to defend one’s innocence is afforded. Innocence is presumed until evidence is judged in a fair trial to prove guilt. All are equal before the law and are guaranteed the same fair and impartial justice and the equal protection of the law. The right of the criminally accused to a jury of their peers (meaning fellow citizens) is also an important and long established element of due process. This ensures that the government’s executives and judges are held accountable to public opinion and that those judging whether a law was broken are those who could one day have that same judgment applied to them, thus ensuring a fair trial and verdict.

- Explain that the Founders did not believe the Bill of Rights encompassed all the rights of men in society. While some of the rights in the Bill of Rights are natural rights, others are generally civil rights (rights existing in law) intended to preserve certain natural rights, particularly from the misapplication of government power. Many of these rights, moreover, require prudential judgment to determine if they have been violated in a particular instance. There are certainly other natural and civil rights retained by the people that might not be listed in the Constitution. Note that the 9th Amendment suggests and guarantees just that.

- Discuss how the 10th Amendment was written to affirm that any other powers that are not delegated to the government by the Constitution are reserved to the States or to the people. By this amendment, the Constitution recognizes that key powers remain with the States, which have the general authority over the safety and well-being of their state citizens. It also means (especially when read in conjunction with the 9th Amendment) that the ultimate sovereign are the people, who are endowed with all rights and (as a result) are the only ones who can delegate any power to government.

STRENGTHENING UNDERSTANDING: POST-LESSON ASSIGNMENT

Assignment: Explain the meaning and importance of the freedom of religion, the freedom of speech, the right to bear arms, and the 10th Amendment (2–3 paragraphs).
APPENDIX A

Study Guide

Test

Writing Assignment
Study Guide — The United States Constitution Test

TERMS AND TOPICS

Explain each of the following and the context in which it was discussed during this unit’s lessons.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Articles of Confederation</th>
<th>separation of powers</th>
<th>vice president</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Constitution</td>
<td>branch</td>
<td>judicial power</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>union</td>
<td>checks and balances</td>
<td>Supreme Court</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>republic</td>
<td>legislative power</td>
<td>coequality of branches</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>representative democracy</td>
<td>bill</td>
<td>jurisdiction</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>direct democracy</td>
<td>Congress</td>
<td>Marbury v. Madison</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>extended sphere</td>
<td>bicameralism</td>
<td>judicial review</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>human nature</td>
<td>House of Representatives</td>
<td>Bill of Rights</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>faction</td>
<td>Senate</td>
<td>freedom of religion</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>majority tyranny</td>
<td>term</td>
<td>free exercise</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>federalism</td>
<td>Speaker of the House</td>
<td>establishment clause</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>local government</td>
<td>executive power</td>
<td>freedom of speech</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>state government</td>
<td>presidency</td>
<td>freedom of the press</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>federal government</td>
<td>veto power</td>
<td>right to assembly</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>township</td>
<td>impeachment</td>
<td>right to bear arms</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>republic</td>
<td>cabinet</td>
<td>due process</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>enumerated powers</td>
<td>Commander-in-Chief</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

PRIMARY SOURCES

Explain the main arguments in each of the following sources and their significance to understanding the United States Constitution.

The U.S. Constitution
Federalist 10
Federalist 51
The Bill of Rights

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

Based on notes from lessons and seminar conversations, answer each of the following.

Lesson 1 | The Principles of the Constitution

☐ What is the relationship between the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution?
☐ How is representative democracy distinct from direct democracy?
☐ How is representation supposed to lead to the creation of better laws?
According to The Federalist, what are the virtues and limitations of human nature?
What is the danger with factions and parties?
Why did The Federalist believe a larger country would help prevent the danger of majority tyranny from factions?
What is federalism? What are its advantages?
What are the distinctions among the local, state, and federal governments?
What is separation of powers? Why does the Constitution separate the powers of government?
What are checks and balances? What is their purpose?

Lesson 2 | The Congress

Which purposes and powers does Congress have?
What is bicameralism, and what are its advantages?
What are the requirements for becoming a Representative or Senator? Why are they different?
How does one become Representative or Senator?
What are the chief characteristics of the House of Representatives, and why?
What are the chief characteristics of the Senate, and why?
How does representation itself and the differences between the House of Representatives and the Senate combine to refine and enlarge the will of the people?
How does a bill become a law?
How can Congress check and balance the power of the president?
How can Congress check and balance the power of the judiciary?

Lesson 3 | The Presidency

What is the executive power? Why do we need a president?
What purposes and powers does the presidency have?
What are the requirements for becoming president?
How does one become president?
What are the chief characteristics of the presidency, and why?
What is the Electoral College, how did it originally work, and what is its purpose?
What was the purpose of the State of the Union address?
Explain the role of the president in relation to foreign policy. What powers does he have and not have?
How can the president check and balance the power of the Congress?
How can the president check and balance the power of the judiciary?

Lesson 4 | The Judiciary

Which purposes and powers does the Supreme Court have?
What are the requirements for becoming a justice?
How does one become a justice?
What are the chief characteristics of the Supreme Court, and why?
What is judicial review? How was the power first claimed and asserted?
Who has the power to establish “lesser courts”?
How can the judiciary check and balance the power of the president?
How can the judiciary check and balance the power of Congress?
To whom are elected officials and the Constitution itself ultimately subject?

Lesson 5 | The Bill of Rights

- Why does the Constitution make it so hard for it to be amended?
- What do each of the following amendments in the Bill of Rights guarantee and why: 1st, 2nd, 4th, 5th, 9th, and 10th?
- How does religion help promote morality and freedom?
- What is the free exercise of religion and why is it important?
- What is freedom of speech and why is it so crucial to freedom and self-government?
- Why does the 2nd Amendment make it evident that the Founders found it necessary to guarantee to private citizens the right to possess tools used for their self-defense?
- What is due process? Why is it such an important legal guarantor of freedom?
TERMS AND TOPICS

Explain each of the following and the context in which it was discussed during this unit’s lessons.

1. representative democracy

2. majority tyranny

3. federalism

4. enumerated powers

5. legislative power

6. executive power

7. judicial power

8. judicial review
PRIMARY SOURCES

Explain the main arguments in each of the following sources and their significance to our understanding of the United States Constitution.

9. Federalist 10

10. Federalist 51

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

Answer each of the following. Complete sentences are not necessary, but correct spelling and writing should be employed, and responses must fully answer each question.

11. How is representation supposed to lead to the creation of better laws?

12. What is separation of powers? Why does the Constitution separate the powers of government?
13. Which purposes and powers does Congress have?

14. How can Congress check and balance the power of the president?

15. What purposes and powers does the presidency have?

16. Explain the role of the president in relation to foreign policy. What powers does he have and not have?

17. What is judicial review? How was the power first claimed and asserted?

18. To whom are elected officials and the Constitution itself ultimately subject?

19. Why does the 2nd Amendment make it evident that the Founders found it necessary to guarantee to private citizens the right to possess tools used for their self-defense?

20. What is due process? Why is it such an important legal guarantor of freedom?
Writing Assignment — The United States Constitution

DIRECTIONS

Citing primary sources and conversations from class in your argument, write a 4–5 paragraph essay answering the question:

How does the Constitution attempt to make sure the best people (wisest, honest, most talented, dutiful to the people they represent, etc.) are making, enforcing, and judging laws so that the laws that result are the most just?
APPENDIX B

Primary Sources

The American People

James Madison
THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

The Constitution

LAW

March 4, 1789
United States of America

BACKGROUND

Delegates to the Constitutional Convention drafted and the states ratified this Constitution, forming the second national government for the United States of America.

ANNOTATIONS

Preamble

We the People of the United States, in Order to form a more perfect Union, establish Justice, insure domestic Tranquility, provide for the common defense, promote the general Welfare, and secure the Blessings of Liberty to ourselves and our Posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America.

Article I

Section 1. All legislative Powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives.

Section 2. The House of Representatives shall be composed of Members chosen every second Year by the People of the several States, and the Electors in each State shall have the Qualifications requisite for Electors of the most numerous Branch of the State Legislature.

No person shall be a Representative who shall not have attained to the Age of twenty five Years, and been seven Years a Citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, ...

be an Inhabitant of that State in which he shall be chosen.

Representatives and direct Taxes shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union, according to their respective Numbers, which shall be determined by adding to the whole Number of free Persons, including those bound to Service for a Term of Years, and excluding Indians not taxed, three fifths of all other Persons. The actual Enumeration shall be made within three Years after the first Meeting of the Congress of the United States, and within every subsequent Term of ten Years, in such Manner as they shall by Law direct. The Number of Representatives shall not exceed one for every thirty Thousand, but each State shall have at Least one Representative; and until such enumeration shall be made, the State of New Hampshire shall be entitled to choose three, Massachusetts eight, Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations one, Connecticut five, New-York six, New Jersey four, Pennsylvania eight, Delaware one, Maryland six, Virginia ten, North Carolina five, South Carolina five, and Georgia three.

When vacancies happen in the Representation from any State, the Executive Authority thereof shall issue Writs of Election to fill such Vacancies.

The House of Representatives shall choose their Speaker and other Officers; and shall have the sole Power of Impeachment.

Section 3. The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the Legislature thereof, for six Years; and each Senator shall have one Vote.

Immediately after they shall be assembled in Consequence of the first Election, they shall be divided as equally as may be into three Classes. The Seats of the Senators of the first Class shall be vacated at the Expiration of the second Year, of the second Class at the Expiration of the fourth Year, and of the third Class at the Expiration of the sixth Year, so that one third may be chosen every second Year; and if Vacancies happen by Resignation, or otherwise, during the Recess of the Legislature of any State, the Executive thereof may make temporary Appointments until the next Meeting of the Legislature, which shall then fill such Vacancies.
No Person shall be a Senator who shall not have attained to the Age of thirty Years, and been nine Years a Citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an Inhabitant of that State for which he shall be chosen.

The Vice President of the United States shall be President of the Senate, but shall have no Vote, unless they be equally divided.

The Senate shall choose their other Officers, and also a President pro tempore, in the Absence of the Vice President, or when he shall exercise the Office of President of the United States.

The Senate shall have the sole Power to try all Impeachments. When sitting for that Purpose, they shall be on Oath or Affirmation. When the President of the United States is tried, the Chief Justice shall preside: And no Person shall be convicted without the Concurrence of two thirds of the Members present.

Judgment in Cases of Impeachment shall not extend further than to removal from Office, and disqualification to hold and enjoy any Office of honor, Trust or Profit under the United States: but the Party convicted shall nevertheless be liable and subject to Indictment, Trial, Judgment and Punishment, according to Law.

Section 4. The Times, Places and Manner of holding Elections for Senators and Representatives, shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by Law make or alter such Regulations, except as to the Places of choosing Senators.

The Congress shall assemble at least once in every Year, and such Meeting shall be on the first Monday in December, unless they shall by Law appoint a different Day.

Section 5. Each House shall be the Judge of the Elections, Returns and Qualifications of its own Members, and a Majority of each shall constitute a Quorum to do Business; but a smaller Number may adjourn from day to day, and may be authorized to compel the Attendance of absent Members, in such Manner, and under such Penalties as each House may provide.
Each House may determine the Rules of its Proceedings, punish its Members for disorderly Behavior, and, with the Concurrence of two thirds, expel a Member.

Each House shall keep a Journal of its Proceedings, and from time to time publish the same, excepting such Parts as may in their Judgment require Secrecy; and the Yeas and Nays of the Members of either House on any question shall, at the Desire of one fifth of those Present, be entered on the Journal.

Neither House, during the Session of Congress, shall, without the Consent of the other, adjourn for more than three days, nor to any other Place than that in which the two Houses shall be sitting.

Section 6. The Senators and Representatives shall receive a Compensation for their Services, to be ascertained by Law, and paid out of the Treasury of the United States. They shall in all Cases, except Treason, Felony and Breach of the Peace, be privileged from Arrest during their Attendance at the Session of their respective Houses, and in going to and returning from the same; and for any Speech or Debate in either House, they shall not be questioned in any other Place.

No Senator or Representative shall, during the Time for which he was elected, be appointed to any civil Office under the Authority of the United States, which shall have been created, or the Emoluments whereof shall have been encreased during such time; and no Person holding any Office under the United States, shall be a Member of either House during his Continuance in Office.

Section 7. All Bills for raising Revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives; but the Senate may propose or concur with Amendments as on other Bills.

Every Bill which shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate, shall, before it become a Law, be presented to the President of the United States; If he approve he shall sign it, but if not he shall return it, with his Objections to that House in which it shall have originated, who shall enter the Objections at large on their Journal, and proceed to reconsider it. If after such Reconsideration two thirds of that House shall agree to pass the Bill, it shall be sent, together with the Objections, to the other House, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered, and if approved by two thirds of that House, it shall become a Law. But in all such Cases the Votes of both Houses shall be determined by yeas and Nays, and the Names of the Persons voting for and against the Bill shall be entered on the Journal of each House respectively. If any Bill shall not be returned by the President within ten days (Sundays excepted) after it shall have been presented to him, the Same shall be a Law, in like Manner as if he had signed it, unless the Congress by their Adjournment prevent its Return in which Case it shall not be a Law.

Every Order, Resolution, or Vote to which the Concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary (except on a question of Adjournment) shall be presented to the President of the United States; and before the Same shall take Effect, shall be approved by him, or being disapproved by him, shall be repassed by two thirds of the Senate and House of Representatives, according to the Rules and Limitations prescribed in the Case of a Bill.

Section 8. The Congress shall have Power To lay and collect Taxes, Duties, Imposts and Excises, to pay the Debts and provide for the common Defense and general Welfare of the United States; but all Duties, Imposts and Excises shall be uniform throughout the United States;

To borrow Money on the credit of the United States;

To regulate Commerce with foreign Nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian Tribes;

To establish an uniform Rule of Naturalization, and uniform Laws on the subject of Bankruptcies throughout the United States;

To coin Money, regulate the Value thereof, and of foreign Coin, and fix the Standard of Weights and Measures;

To provide for the Punishment of counterfeiting the Securities and current Coin of the United States;

To establish Post Offices and post Roads;
To promote the Progress of Science and useful Arts, by securing for limited Times to Authors and Inventors the exclusive Right to their respective Writings and Discoveries;

To constitute Tribunals inferior to the supreme Court;

To define and punish Piracies and Felonies committed on the high Seas, and Offenses against the Law of Nations;

To declare War, grant Letters of Marque and Reprisal, and make Rules concerning Captures on Land and Water;

To raise and support Armies, but no Appropriation of Money to that Use shall be for a longer Term than two Years;

To provide and maintain a Navy;

To make Rules for the Government and Regulation of the land and naval Forces;

To provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions;

To provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia, and for governing such Part of them as may be employed in the Service of the United States, reserving to the States respectively, the Appointment of the Officers, and the Authority of training the Militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress;

To exercise exclusive Legislation in all Cases whatsoever, over such District (not exceeding ten Miles square) as may, by Cession of particular States, and the Acceptance of Congress, become the Seat of the Government of the United States, and to exercise like Authority over all Places purchased by the Consent of the Legislature of the State in which the Same shall be, for the Erection of Forts, Magazines, Arsenals, dock-Yards, and other needful Buildings;—And

To make all Laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into Execution the foregoing Powers, and all other Powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any Department or Officer thereof.
Section 9. The Migration or Importation of such Persons as any of the States now existing shall think proper to admit, shall not be prohibited by the Congress prior to the Year one thousand eight hundred and eight, but a Tax or duty may be imposed on such Importation, not exceeding ten dollars for each Person.

The Privilege of the Writ of Habeas Corpus shall not be suspended, unless when in Cases of Rebellion or Invasion the public Safety may require it.

No Bill of Attainder or ex post facto Law shall be passed.

No Capitation, or other direct, Tax shall be laid, unless in Proportion to the Census or Enumeration herein before directed to be taken.

No Tax or Duty shall be laid on Articles exported from any State.

No Preference shall be given by any Regulation of Commerce or Revenue to the Ports of one State over those of another: nor shall Vessels bound to, or from, one State, be obliged to enter, clear, or pay Duties in another.

No Money shall be drawn from the Treasury, but in Consequence of Appropriations made by Law; and a regular Statement and Account of the Receipts and Expenditures of all public Money shall be published from time to time.

No Title of Nobility shall be granted by the United States: And no Person holding any Office of Profit or Trust under them, shall, without the Consent of the Congress, accept of any present, Emolument, Office, or Title, of any kind whatever, from any King, Prince, or foreign State.

Section 10. No State shall enter into any Treaty, Alliance, or Confederation; grant Letters of Marque and Reprisal; coin Money; emit Bills of Credit; make any Thing but gold and silver Coin a Tender in Payment of Debts; pass any Bill of Attainder, ex post facto Law, or Law impairing the Obligation of Contracts, or grant any Title of Nobility.

No State shall, without the Consent of the Congress, lay any Imposts or Duties on Imports or Exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing its inspection Laws: and the net Produce of all Duties and Imposts, laid by any State on Imports or Exports, shall be for the Use of the Treasury of the United States; and all such Laws shall be subject to the Revision and Control of the Congress.

No State shall, without the Consent of Congress, lay any duty of Tonnage, keep Troops, or Ships of War in time of Peace, enter into any Agreement or Compact with another State, or with a foreign Power, or engage in War, unless actually invaded, or in such imminent Danger as will not admit of delay.

Article II

Section 1. The executive Power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America. He shall hold his Office during the Term of four Years, and, together with the Vice-President chosen for the same Term, be elected as follows:

Each State shall appoint, in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a Number of Electors, equal to the whole Number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress: but no Senator or Representative, or Person holding an Office of Trust or Profit under the United States, shall be appointed an Elector.

The Electors shall meet in their respective States, and vote by Ballot for two Persons, of whom one at least shall not be an Inhabitant of the same State with themselves. And they shall make a List of all the Persons voted for, and of the Number of Votes for each; which List they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the Seat of the Government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate. The President of the Senate shall, in the Presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the Certificates, and the Votes shall then be counted. The Person having the greatest Number of Votes shall be the President, if such Number be a Majority of the whole Number of Electors appointed; and if there be more than one who have such Majority, and have an equal Number of Votes, then the House of Representatives shall immediately choose by Ballot one of them for President; and if no Person have a Majority, then from the five highest on the List the said House shall in like Manner choose the President. But in choosing the President, the Votes shall be taken by States, the Representation from each State having one Vote; a quorum for this Purpose shall consist of a Member or Members from two thirds of the States, and a Majority of all the States shall be necessary to a Choice. In every Case, after the Choice of the President, the Person having the greatest Number of Votes of the Electors shall be the Vice President. But if there should remain two or more who have equal Votes, the Senate shall choose from them by Ballot the Vice President.

The Congress may determine the Time of choosing the Electors, and the Day on which they shall give their Votes; which Day shall be the same throughout the United States.

No Person except a natural born Citizen, or a Citizen of the United States, at the time of the Adoption of this Constitution, shall be eligible to the Office of President; neither shall any Person be eligible to that Office who shall not have attained to the Age of thirty-five Years, and been fourteen Years a Resident within the United States.

In Case of the Removal of the President from Office, or of his Death, Resignation, or Inability to discharge the Powers and Duties of the said Office, the Same shall devolve on the Vice President, and the Congress may by Law provide for the Case of Removal, Death, Resignation or Inability, both of the President and Vice President, declaring what Officer shall then act as President, and such Officer shall act accordingly, until the Disability be removed, or a President shall be elected.

The President shall, at stated Times, receive for his Services, a Compensation, which shall neither be increased nor diminished during the Period for which he shall have been elected, and he shall not receive within that Period any other Emolument from the United States, or any of them.

Before he enter on the Execution of his Office, he shall take the following Oath or Affirmation:—"I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully execute the Office of President of the United States, and will to the best of my Ability, preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States."

Section 2. The President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and of the Militia of the several States, when called into the actual Service of the United States; he may require the Opinion, in writing, of the principal Officer in each of the executive Departments, upon any subject relating to the Duties of their respective Offices, and he shall have Power to grant Reprieves and Pardons for Offenses against the United States, except in Cases of Impeachment.

He shall have Power, by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate, to make Treaties, provided two thirds of the Senators present concur; and he shall nominate, and by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate, shall appoint Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls, Judges of the supreme Court, and all other Officers of the United States, whose Appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by Law: but the Congress may by Law vest the Appointment of such inferior Officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the Courts of Law, or in the Heads of Departments.

The President shall have Power to fill up all Vacancies that may happen during the Recess of the Senate, by granting Commissions which shall expire at the End of their next Session.

Section 3. He shall from time to time give to the Congress Information of the State of the Union, and recommend to their Consideration such Measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient; he may, on extraordinary Occasions, convene both Houses, or either of them, and in Case of Disagreement between them, with Respect to the Time of Adjournment, he may adjourn them to such Time as he shall think proper; he shall receive Ambassadors and other public Ministers; he shall take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed, and shall Commission all the Officers of the United States.

Section 4. The President, Vice President and all civil Officers of the United States, shall be removed from Office on Impeachment for, and Conviction of, Treason, Bribery, or other high Crimes and Misdemeanors.

Article III

Section 1. The judicial Power of the United States, shall be vested in one supreme Court, and in such inferior Courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The Judges, both of the supreme and inferior Courts, shall hold their Offices during good Behavior, and shall, at stated Times, receive for their Services a Compensation, which shall not be diminished during their Continuance in Office.

Section 2. The judicial Power shall extend to all Cases, in Law and Equity, arising under this Constitution, the Laws of the United States, and Treaties made, or which shall be made, under their Authority;—to all Cases affecting Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls;—to all Cases of admiralty and maritime Jurisdiction; —to Controversies to which the United States shall be a Party;—to Controversies between two or more States;—between a State and Citizens of another State;—between Citizens of different States;—between Citizens of the same State claiming Lands under Grants of different States, and between a State, or the Citizens thereof, and foreign States, Citizens or Subjects.

In all Cases affecting Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls, and those in which a State shall be Party, the supreme Court shall have original Jurisdiction. In all the other Cases before mentioned, the supreme Court shall have appellate Jurisdiction, both as to Law and Fact, with such Exceptions, and under such Regulations as the Congress shall make.

The Trial of all Crimes, except in Cases of Impeachment, shall be by Jury; and such Trial shall be held in the State where the said Crimes shall have been committed; but when not committed within any State, the Trial shall be at such Place or Places as the Congress may by Law have directed.

Section 3. Treason against the United States, shall consist only in levying War against them, or in adhering to their Enemies, giving them Aid and Comfort. No Person shall be convicted of Treason unless on the Testimony of two Witnesses to the same overt Act, or on Confession in open Court.

The Congress shall have Power to declare the Punishment of Treason, but no Attainder of Treason shall work Corruption of Blood, or Forfeiture except during the Life of the Person attainted.
Article IV

Section 1. Full Faith and Credit shall be given in each State to the public Acts, Records, and judicial Proceedings of every other State. And the Congress may by general Laws prescribe the Manner in which such Acts, Records and Proceedings shall be proved, and the Effect thereof.

Section 2. The Citizens of each State shall be entitled to all Privileges and Immunities of Citizens in the several States.

A Person charged in any State with Treason, Felony, or other Crime, who shall flee from Justice, and be found in another State, shall on Demand of the executive Authority of the State from which he fled, be delivered up, to be removed to the State having Jurisdiction of the Crime.

No Person held to Service or Labor in one State, under the Laws thereof, escaping into another, shall, in Consequence of any Law or Regulation therein, be discharged from such Service or Labor, but shall be delivered up on Claim of the Party to whom such Service or Labor may be due.

Section 3. New States may be admitted by the Congress into this Union; but no new State shall be formed or erected within the Jurisdiction of any other State; nor any State be formed by the Junction of two or more States, or parts of States, without the Consent of the Legislatures of the States concerned as well as of the Congress.

The Congress shall have Power to dispose of and make all needful Rules and Regulations respecting the Territory or other Property belonging to the United States; and nothing in this Constitution shall be so construed as to Prejudice any Claims of the United States, or of any particular State.

Section 4. The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a Republican Form of Government, and shall protect each of them against Invasion; and on Application of the Legislature, or of the Executive (when the Legislature cannot be convened) against domestic Violence.
Article V

The Congress, whenever two thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose Amendments to this Constitution, or, on the Application of the Legislatures of two thirds of the several States, shall call a Convention for proposing Amendments, which, in either Case, shall be valid to all Intents and Purposes, as Part of this Constitution, when ratified by the Legislatures of three fourths of the several States, or by Conventions in three fourths thereof, as the one or the other Mode of Ratification may be proposed by the Congress; Provided that no Amendment which may be made prior to the Year One thousand eight hundred and eight shall in any Manner affect the first and fourth Clauses in the Ninth Section of the first Article; and that no State, without its Consent, shall be deprived of its equal Suffrage in the Senate.

Article VI

All Debts contracted and Engagements entered into, before the Adoption of this Constitution, shall be as valid against the United States under this Constitution, as under the Confederation.

This Constitution, and the Laws of the United States which shall be made in Pursuance thereof; and all Treaties made, or which shall be made, under the Authority of the United States, shall be the supreme Law of the Land; and the Judges in every State shall be bound thereby, any Thing in the Constitution or Laws of any State to the Contrary notwithstanding.

The Senators and Representatives before mentioned, and the Members of the several State Legislatures, and all executive and judicial Officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by Oath or Affirmation, to support this Constitution; but no religious Test shall ever be required as a Qualification to any Office or public Trust under the United States.
Article VII

The Ratification of the Conventions of nine States, shall be sufficient for the Establishment of this Constitution between the States so ratifying the Same.

Done in Convention by the Unanimous Consent of the States present the Seventeenth Day of September in the Year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and Eighty seven and of the Independence of the United States of America the Twelfth In witness whereof We have hereunto subscribed our Names.

George Washington—
President and deputy from Virginia

Delaware

George Read, Gunning Bedford, Jr., John Dickinson, Richard Bassett, Jacob Broom

Maryland

James McHenry, Daniel of St. Thomas Jenifer, Daniel Carroll

Virginia

John Blair, James Madison, Jr.

North Carolina

William Blount, Richard Dobbs Spaight, Hugh Williamson

South Carolina

John Rutledge, Charles Cotesworth Pinckney, Charles Pinckney, Pierce Butler
Georgia

William Few, Abraham Baldwin

New Hampshire

John Langdon, Nicholas Gilman

Massachusetts

Nathaniel Gorham, Rufus King

Connecticut

William Samuel Johnson, Roger Sherman

New York

Alexander Hamilton

New Jersey

William Livingston, David Brearley, William Paterson, Jonathan Dayton

Pennsylvania

Benjamin Franklin, Thomas Mifflin, Robert Morris, George Clymer, Thomas FitzSimmons, Jared Ingersoll, James Wilson, Gouverneur Morris

Attest William Jackson Secretary
Amendments to the Constitution of the United States of America

Amendment I

Ratified December 15, 1791

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

Amendment II

Ratified December 15, 1791

A well regulated Militia, being necessary to the security of a free State, the right of the people to keep and bear Arms, shall not be infringed.

Amendment III

Ratified December 15, 1791

No Soldier shall, in time of peace be quartered in any house, without the consent of the Owner, nor in time of war, but in a manner to be prescribed by law.

Amendment IV

Ratified December 15, 1791

The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no Warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by Oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized.
Ratified December 15, 1791

No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the Militia, when in actual service in time of War or public danger; nor shall any person be subject for the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb; nor shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation.

Ratified December 15, 1791

In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law, and to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation; to be confronted with the witnesses against him; to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor, and to have the Assistance of Counsel for his defense.

Ratified December 15, 1791

In Suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved, and no fact tried by a jury, shall be otherwise re-examined in any Court of the United States, than according to the rules of the common law.
Amendment VIII

Ratified December 15, 1791

Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted.

Amendment IX

Ratified December 15, 1791

The enumeration in the Constitution, of certain rights, shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people.

Amendment X

Ratified December 15, 1791

The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.

Amendment XI

Ratified February 7, 1795

The Judicial power of the United States shall not be construed to extend to any suit in law or equity, commenced or prosecuted against one of the United States by Citizens of another State, or by Citizens or Subjects of any Foreign State.

Amendment XII

Ratified June 15, 1804

The Electors shall meet in their respective states and vote by ballot for President and Vice-President, one of whom, at least, shall not be an inhabitant of the same state with themselves; they shall name in their ballots the person voted for as President, and in distinct ballots the person voted for as Vice-President, and they shall make distinct lists of all per-persons voted for as President, and of all persons voted for as Vice-President, and of the number of votes for each, which lists they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the seat of the government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate;—the President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and the votes shall then be counted;—The person having the greatest number of votes for President, shall be the President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of Electors appointed; and if no person have such majority, then from the persons having the highest numbers not exceeding three on the list of those voted for as President, the House of Representatives shall choose immediately, by ballot, the President.

But in choosing the President, the votes shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote; a quorum for this purpose shall consist of a member or members from two-thirds of the states, and a majority of all the states shall be necessary to a choice. And if the House of Representatives shall not choose a President whenever the right of choice shall devolve upon them, before the fourth day of March next following, then the Vice-President shall act as President, as in the case of the death or other constitutional disability of the President.—The person having the greatest number of votes as Vice-President, shall be the Vice-President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of Electors appointed, and if no person have a majority, then from the two highest numbers on the list, the Senate shall choose the Vice-President; a quorum for the purpose shall consist of two-thirds of the whole number of Senators, and a majority of the whole number shall be necessary to a choice. But no person constitutionally ineligible to the office of President shall be eligible to that of Vice-President of the United States.

Amendment XIII

Ratified December 6, 1865

Section 1. Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction.

Section 2. Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.
Amendment XIV

Ratified July 9, 1868

Section 1. All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

Section 2. Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed. But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice-President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the Executive and Judicial officers of a State, or the members of the Legislature thereof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State, being twenty-one years of age, and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion, or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens twenty-one years of age in such State.

Section 3. No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice-President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath, as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability.
Section 4. The validity of the public debt of the United States, authorized by law, including debts incurred for payment of pensions and bounties for services in suppressing insurrection or rebellion, shall not be questioned. But neither the United States nor any State shall assume or pay any debt or obligation incurred in aid of insurrection or rebellion against the United States, or any claim for the loss or emancipation of any slave; but all such debts, obligations and claims shall be held illegal and void.

Section 5. The Congress shall have power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article.

Amendment XV

Ratified February 3, 1870

Section 1. The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

Section 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Amendment XVI

Ratified February 3, 1913

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several States, and without regard to any census or enumeration.

Amendment XVII

Ratified April 8, 1913

The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, elected by the people thereof, for six years; and each Senator shall have one vote. The electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislatures.
When vacancies happen in the representation of any State in the Senate, the executive authority of such State shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies: Provided, That the legislature of any State may empower the executive thereof to make temporary appointments until the people fill the vacancies by election as the legislature may direct.

This amendment shall not be so construed as to affect the election or term of any Senator chosen before it becomes valid as part of the Constitution.

Amendment XVIII

Ratified January 16, 1919

Section 1. After one year from the ratification of this article the manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof for beverage purposes is hereby prohibited.

Section 2. The Congress and the several States shall have concurrent power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Section 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress.

Amendment XIX

Ratified August 18, 1920

The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of sex.

Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.
Amendment XX

Ratified January 23, 1933

Section 1. The terms of the President and the Vice President shall end at noon on the 20th day of January, and the terms of Senators and Representatives at noon on the 3rd day of January, of the years in which such terms would have ended if this article had not been ratified; and the terms of their successors shall then begin.

Section 2. The Congress shall assemble at least once in every year, and such meeting shall begin at noon on the 3rd day of January, unless they shall by law appoint a different day.

Section 3. If, at the time fixed for the beginning of the term of the President, the President elect shall have died, the Vice President elect shall become President. If a President shall not have been chosen before the time fixed for the beginning of his term, or if the President elect shall have failed to qualify, then the Vice President elect shall act as President until a President shall have qualified; and the Congress may by law provide for the case wherein neither a President elect nor a Vice President shall have qualified, declaring who shall then act as President, or the manner in which one who is to act shall be selected, and such person shall act accordingly until a President or Vice President shall have qualified.

Section 4. The Congress may by law provide for the case of the death of any of the persons from whom the House of Representatives may choose a President whenever the right of choice shall have devolved upon them, and for the case of the death of any of the persons from whom the Senate may choose a Vice President whenever the right of choice shall have devolved upon them.

Section 5. Sections 1 and 2 shall take effect on the 15th day of October following the ratification of this article.

Section 6. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States within seven years from the date of its submission.
Amendment XXI

Ratified December 5, 1933

Section 1. The eighteenth article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States is hereby repealed.

Section 2. The transportation or importation into any State, Territory, or possession of the United States for delivery or use therein of intoxicating liquors, in violation of the laws thereof, is hereby prohibited.

Section 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by conventions in the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress.

Amendment XXII

Ratified February 27, 1951

Section 1. No person shall be elected to the office of the President more than twice, and no person who has held the office of President, or acted as President, for more than two years of a term to which some other person was elected President shall be elected to the office of President more than once. But this Article shall not apply to any person holding the office of President when this Article was proposed by the Congress, and shall not prevent any person who may be holding the office of President, or acting as President, during the term within which this Article becomes operative from holding the office of President or acting as President during the remainder of such term.

Section 2. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States within seven years from the date of its submission to the States by the Congress.
Amendment XXIII

Ratified March 29, 1961

Section 1. The District constituting the seat of Government of the United States shall appoint in such manner as the Congress may direct:

A number of electors of President and Vice President equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives in Congress to which the District would be entitled if it were a State, but in no event more than the least populous State; they shall be in addition to those appointed by the States, but they shall be considered, for the purposes of the election of President and Vice President, to be electors appointed by a State; and they shall meet in the District and perform such duties as provided by the twelfth article of amendment.

Section 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Amendment XXIV

Ratified January 23, 1964

Section 1. The right of citizens of the United States to vote in any primary or other election for President or Vice President, for electors for President or Vice President, or for Senator or Representative in Congress, shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or any State by reason of failure to pay any poll tax or other tax.

Section 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Amendment XXV

Ratified February 10, 1967

Section 1. In case of the removal of the President from office or of his death or resignation, the Vice President shall become President.

Section 2. Whenever there is a vacancy in the office of the Vice President, the President shall nominate a Vice President who shall take office upon confirmation by a majority vote of both Houses of Congress.
Section 3. Whenever the President transmits to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives his written declaration that he is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office, and until he transmits to them a written declaration to the contrary, such powers and duties shall be discharged by the Vice President as Acting President.

Section 4. Whenever the Vice President and a majority of either the principal officers of the executive departments or of such other body as Congress may by law provide, transmit to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives their written declaration that the President is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office, the Vice President shall immediately assume the powers and duties of the office as Acting President.

Thereafter, when the President transmits to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives his written declaration that no inability exists, he shall resume the powers and duties of his office unless the Vice President and a majority of either the principal officers of the executive department or of such other body as Congress may by law provide, transmit within four days to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives their written declaration that the President is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office. Thereupon Congress shall decide the issue, assembling within forty-eight hours for that purpose if not in session.

If the Congress, within twenty-one days after receipt of the latter written declaration, or, if Congress is not in session, within twenty-one days after Congress is required to assemble, determines by two-thirds vote of both Houses that the President is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office, the Vice President shall continue to discharge the same as Acting President; otherwise, the President shall resume the powers and duties of his office.
Amendment XXVI

Ratified July 1, 1971

Section 1. The right of citizens of the United States, who are eighteen years of age or older, to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of age.

Section 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Amendment XXVII

Ratified May 7, 1992

No law varying the compensation for the services of the Senators and Representatives shall take effect, until an election of Representatives shall have intervened.
Publius (James Madison) argues for the proposed Constitution by explaining the risks of factions and majority tyranny and how the Constitution addresses them.

GUIDING QUESTIONS

1. How does Madison define faction?
2. How is faction part of human nature?
3. How is minority faction solved?
4. What is the solution for majority faction?
5. What is the role of elected representatives in solving the problem of faction?
6. How does a large republic address the problem of majority faction?
7. What are the concerns of a republic being too large or too small?

The Union as a Safeguard Against Domestic Faction and Insurrection

Among the numerous advantages promised by a well-constructed Union, none deserves to be more accurately developed than its tendency to break and control the violence of faction.…

By a faction I understand a number of citizens, whether amounting to a majority or minority of the whole, who are united and actuated by some common impulse of passion, or of interest, adverse to the rights of other citizens, or to the permanent and aggregate interests of the community.…

The latent causes of faction are thus sown in the nature of man; and we see them everywhere brought into different degrees of activity, according to the different circumstances of civil society. A zeal for different opinions concerning religion, concerning government, and many other points, as well as speculation as of practice; an attachment to different leaders ambitiously contending for preeminence and power; or to persons of other descriptions whose fortunes have been interesting to the human passions, have, in turn, divided mankind into parties, inflamed them with mutual animosity, and rendered them much more disposed to vex and oppress each other than to cooperate for their common good. So strong is this propensity of mankind to fall into mutual animosities that where no substantial occasion presents itself the most frivolous and fanciful distinctions have been sufficient to kindle their unfriendly passions and excite their most violent conflicts. But the most common and durable source of factions has been the various and unequal distribution of property. Those who hold and those who are without property have ever formed distinct interests in society. Those who are creditors, and those who are debtors, fall under a like discrimination. A landed interest, a manufacturing interest, a mercantile interest, a monied interest, with many lesser interests, grow up of necessity in civilized nations, and divide them into different classes, actuated by different sentiments and views. The regulation of these various and interfering interests forms the principal task of modern legislation and involves the spirit of party and faction in the necessary and ordinary operations of government.…
The inference to which we are brought is that the causes of faction cannot be removed and that relief is only to be sought in the means of controlling its effects.

If a faction consists of less than a majority, relief is supplied by the republican principle, which enables the majority to defeat its sinister views by regular vote. It may clog the administration, it may convulse the society; but it will be unable to execute and mask its violence under the forms of the Constitution. When a majority is included in a faction, the form of popular government, on the other hand, enables it to sacrifice to its ruling passion or interest both the public good and the rights of other citizens. To secure the public good and private rights against the danger of such a faction, and at the same time to preserve the spirit and the form of popular government, is then the great object to which our inquiries are directed. Let me add that it is the great desideratum by which alone this form of government can be rescued from the opprobrium under which it has so long labored and be recommended to the esteem and adoption of mankind.

By what means is this object attainable? Evidently by one of two only. Either the existence of the same passion or interest in a majority at the same time must be prevented, or the majority, having such coexistent passion or interest, must be rendered, by their number and local situation, unable to concert and carry into effect schemes of oppression. If the impulse and the opportunity be suffered to coincide, we well know that neither moral nor religious motives can be relied on as an adequate control. They are not found to be such on the injustice and violence of individuals, and lose their efficacy in proportion to the number combined together, that is, in proportion as their efficacy becomes needful.

From this view of the subject it may be concluded that a pure democracy, by which I mean a society consisting of a small number of citizens, who assemble and administer the government in person, can admit of no cure for the mischiefs of faction. A common passion or interest will, in almost every case, be felt by a majority of the whole; a communication and concert result from the form of government itself; and there is nothing to check the inducements to sacrifice the weaker party or an obnoxious individual. Hence it is that such democracies have ever been spectacles of turbulence and contention; have ever been found incompatible with personal security or the rights of property; and have in general been as short in their lives as they have been violent in their deaths. Theoretic politicians, who have patronized this species of government, have erroneously supposed that by reducing mankind to a perfect equality in their political rights, they would at the same time be perfectly equalized and assimilated in their possessions, their opinions, and their passions.

A republic, by which I mean a government in which the scheme of representation takes place, opens a different prospect and promises the cure for which we are seeking. Let us examine the points in which it varies from pure democracy, and we shall comprehend both the nature of the cure and the efficacy which it must derive from the Union.

The two great points of difference between a democracy and a republic are: first, the delegation of the government, in the latter, to a small number of citizens elected by the rest; secondly, the greater number of citizens and greater sphere of country over which the latter may be extended.

The effect of the first difference is, on the one hand, to refine and enlarge the public views by passing them through the medium of a chosen body of citizens, whose wisdom may best discern the true interest of their country and whose patriotism and love of justice will be least likely to sacrifice it to temporary or partial considerations. Under such a regulation it may well happen that the public voice, pronounced by the representatives of the people, will be more consonant to the public good than if pronounced by the people themselves, convened for the purpose. On the other hand, the effect may be inverted. Men of factious tempers, of local prejudices, or of sinister designs, may, by intrigue, by corruption, or by other means, first obtain the suffrages, and then betray the interests of the people. The question resulting is, whether small or extensive republics are most favorable to the election of proper guardians of the public weal; and it is clearly decided in favor of the latter by two obvious considerations.

In the first place it is to be remarked that however small the republic may be the representatives must be raised to a certain number in order to guard against the cabals of a few; and that however large it may be they must be limited to a certain number in order to guard against the confusion of a multitude. Hence, the number of representatives in the two cases not being in proportion to that of the two constituents, and being proportionally greatest in the small republic, it follows that if the proportion of fit characters be not less in the large than in the small republic, the former will present a greater option, and consequently a greater probability of a fit choice.

In the next place, as each representative will be chosen by a greater number of citizens in the large than in the small republic, it will be more difficult for unworthy candidates to practise with success the vicious arts by which elections are too often carried; and the suffrages of the people being more free, will be more likely to center on men who possess the most attractive merit and the most diffusive and established characters.

It must be confessed that in this, as in most other cases, there is a mean, on both sides of which inconveniences will be found to lie. By enlarging too much the number of electors, you render the representative too little acquainted with all their local circumstances and lesser interests; as by reducing it too much, you render him unduly attached to these, and too little fit to comprehend and pursue great and national objects. The federal Constitution forms a happy combination in this respect; the great and aggregate interests being referred to the national, the local and particular to the State legislatures.

The other point of difference is the greater number of citizens and extent of territory which may be brought within the compass of republican than of democratic government; and it is this circumstance principally which renders factious combinations less to be dreaded in the former than in the latter. The smaller the society, the fewer probably will be the distinct parties and interests composing it; the fewer the distinct parties and interests, the more frequently will a majority be found of the same party; and the smaller the number of individuals composing a majority, and the smaller the compass within which they are placed, the more easily will they concert and execute their plans of oppression. Extend the sphere and you take in a greater variety of parties and interests; you make it less probable that a majority of the whole will have a common motive to invade the rights of other citizens; or if such a common motive exists, it will be more difficult for all who feel it to discover their own strength and to act in unison with each other. Besides other impediments, it may be remarked that, where there is a consciousness of unjust or dishonorable purposes, communication is always checked by distrust in proportion to the number whose concurrence is necessary.

Hence, it clearly appears that the same advantage which a republic has over a democracy in controlling the effects of faction is enjoyed by a large over a small republic—is enjoyed by the Union over the States composing it. Does this advantage consist in the substitution of representatives whose enlightened views and virtuous sentiments render them superior to local prejudices and to schemes of injustice? It will not be denied that the representation of the Union will be most likely to possess these requisite endowments. Does it consist in the greater security afforded by a greater variety of parties, against the event of any one party being able to outnumber and oppress the rest? In an equal degree, does the increased variety of parties comprised within the Union increase this security? Does it, in fine, consist in the greater obstacles opposed to the concert and accomplishment of the secret wishes of an unjust and interested majority? Here again the extent of the Union gives it the most palpable advantage.

The influence of factious leaders may kindle a flame within their particular States but will be unable to spread a general conflagration through the other States. A religious sect may degenerate into a political faction in a part of the Confederacy; but the variety of sects dispersed over the entire face of it must secure the national councils against any danger from that source. A rage for paper money, for an abolition of debts, for an equal division of property, or for any other improper or wicked project, will be less apt to pervade the whole body of the Union than a particular member of it, in the same proportion as such a malady is more likely to taint a particular county or district than an entire State.

In the extent and proper structure of the Union, therefore, we behold a republican remedy for the diseases most incident to republican government. And according to the degree of pleasure and pride we feel in being republicans ought to be our zeal in cherishing the spirit and supporting the character of federalists.
PUBLIUS (JAMES MADISON)

Federalist No. 51

ESSAY

February 8, 1788

The New-York Packet| New York City, New York

BACKGROUND

Publius (James Madison) argues for the proposed Constitution by explaining the risks of a concentration of power and how the Constitution addresses them.

GUIDING QUESTIONS

1. What does it mean for each branch of government to have a will of its own?
2. Is the separation of powers absolute, or should the powers overlap?
3. What additional methods help the government to control itself?
4. How is the power surrendered by the people divided to protect from government encroachment?
5. What is the end of government and civil society according to Publius in Federalist 51?

The Structure of the Government Must Furnish the Proper Checks and Balances Between the Different Departments

To what expedient, then, shall we finally resort, for maintaining in practice the necessary partition of power among the several departments, as laid down in the Constitution? The only answer that can be given is, that as all these exterior provisions are found to be inadequate, the defect must be supplied, by so contriving the interior structure of the government as that its several constituent parts may, by their mutual relations, be the means of keeping each other in their proper places. Without presuming to undertake a full development of this important idea, I will hazard a few general observations, which may perhaps place it in a clearer light, and enable us to form a more correct judgment of the principles and structure of the government planned by the convention.

In order to lay a due foundation for that separate and distinct exercise of the different powers of government, which to a certain extent is admitted on all hands to be essential to the preservation of liberty, it is evident that each department should have a will of its own; and consequently should be so constituted that the members of each should have as little agency as possible in the appointment of the members of the others. Were this principle rigorously adhered to, it would require that all the appointments for the supreme executive, legislative, and judiciary magistracies should be drawn from the same fountain of authority, the people, through channels having no communication whatever with one another. Perhaps such a plan of constructing the several departments would be less difficult in practice than it may in contemplation appear. Some difficulties, however, and some additional expense would attend the execution of it. Some deviations, therefore, from the principle must be admitted. In the constitution of the judiciary department in particular, it might be inexpedient to insist rigorously on the principle: first, because peculiar qualifications being essential in the members, the primary consideration ought to be to select that mode of choice which best secures these qualifications; secondly, because the permanent tenure by which the appointments are held in that department, must soon destroy all sense of dependence on the authority conferring them.
It is equally evident, that the members of each department should be as little dependent as possible on those of the others, for the emoluments annexed to their offices. Were the executive magistrate, or the judges, not independent of the legislature in this particular, their independence in every other would be merely nominal.

But the great security against a gradual concentration of the several powers in the same department, consists in giving to those who administer each department the necessary constitutional means and personal motives to resist encroachments of the others. The provision for defense must in this, as in all other cases, be made commensurate to the danger of attack. Ambition must be made to counteract ambition. The interest of the man must be connected with the constitutional rights of the place. It may be a reflection on human nature, that such devices should be necessary to control the abuses of government. But what is government itself, but the greatest of all reflections on human nature? If men were angels, no government would be necessary. If angels were to govern men, neither external nor internal controls on government would be necessary. In framing a government which is to be administered by men over men, the great difficulty lies in this: you must first enable the government to control the governed; and in the next place oblige it to control itself. A dependence on the people is, no doubt, the primary control on the government; but experience has taught mankind the necessity of auxiliary precautions.

This policy of supplying, by opposite and rival interests, the defect of better motives, might be traced through the whole system of human affairs, private as well as public. We see it particularly displayed in all the subordinate distributions of power, where the constant aim is to divide and arrange the several offices in such a manner as that each may be a check on the other that the private interest of every individual may be a sentinel over the public rights. These inventions of prudence cannot be less requisite in the distribution of the supreme powers of the State.

But it is not possible to give to each department an equal power of self-defense. In republican government, the legislative authority necessarily predominates. The remedy for this inconveniency is to divide the legislature into different branches; and to render them, by different modes of election and different principles of action, as little connected with each other as the nature of their common functions and their common dependence on the society will admit….

There are, moreover, two considerations particularly applicable to the federal system of America, which place that system in a very interesting point of view.

First. In a single republic, all the power surrendered by the people is submitted to the administration of a single government; and the usurpations are guarded against by a division of the government into distinct and separate departments. In the compound republic of America, the power surrendered by the people is first divided between two distinct governments, and then the portion allotted to each subdivided among distinct and separate departments. Hence a double security arises to the rights of the people. The different governments will control each other, at the same time that each will be controlled by itself.

Second. It is of great importance in a republic not only to guard the society against the oppression of its rulers, but to guard one part of the society against the injustice of the other part. Different interests necessarily exist in different classes of citizens. If a majority be united by a common interest, the rights of the minority will be insecure. There are but two methods of providing against this evil: the one by creating a will in the community inde-dependent of the majority that is, of the society itself; the other, by comprehending in the society so many separate descriptions of citizens as will render an unjust combination of a majority of the whole very improbable, if not impracticable. The first method prevails in all governments possessing an hereditary or self-appointed authority. This, at best, is but a precarious security; because a power independent of the society may as well espouse the unjust views of the major, as the rightful interests of the minor party, and may possibly be turned against both parties. The second method will be exemplified in the federal republic of the United States. Whilst all authority in it will be derived from and dependent on the society, the society itself will be broken into so many parts, interests, and classes of citizens, that the rights of individuals, or of the minority, will be in little danger from interested combinations of the majority….
Justice is the end of government. It is the end of civil society. It ever has been and ever will be pursued until it be obtained, or until liberty be lost in the pursuit. In a society under the forms of which the stronger faction can readily unite and oppress the weaker, anarchy may as truly be said to reign as in a state of nature, where the weaker individual is not secured against the violence of the stronger; and as, in the latter state, even the stronger individuals are prompted, by the uncertainty of their condition, to submit to a government which may protect the weak as well as themselves; so, in the former state, will the more powerful factions or parties be gradually induced, by a like motive, to wish for a government which will protect all parties, the weaker as well as the more powerful…. In the extended republic of the United States, and among the great variety of interests, parties, and sects which it embraces, a coalition of a majority of the whole society could seldom take place on any other principles than those of justice and the general good; whilst there being thus less danger to a minor from the will of a major party, there must be less pretext, also, to provide for the security of the former, by introducing into the government a will not dependent on the latter, or, in other words, a will independent of the society itself. It is no less certain than it is important, notwithstanding the contrary opinions which have been entertained, that the larger the society, provided it lie within a practical sphere, the more duly capable it will be of self-government. And happily for the republican cause, the practicable sphere may be carried to a very great extent, by a judicious modification and mixture of the federal principle.
FIRST CONGRESS
Proposed Amendments to the Constitution

JOIN RESOLUTION EXCERPT
September 25, 1789
Federal Hall | City of New-York, New York

BACKGROUND
As part of a compromise to secure the ratification of the Constitution, Federalists introduced in the first Congress a Bill of Rights as twelve amendments to the new Constitution. Below are the ten amendments that were ultimately ratified.

ANNOTATIONS

Amendment I
Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

Amendment II
A well regulated Militia, being necessary to the security of a free State, the right of the people to keep and bear Arms shall not be infringed.

Amendment III
No Soldier shall, in time of peace be quartered in any house, without the consent of the Owner, nor in time of war, but in a manner to be prescribed by law.

NOTES & QUESTIONS

Amendment IV

The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no Warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by Oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized.

Amendment V

No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the Militia, when in actual service in time of War or public danger; nor shall any person be subject for the same offence to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb; nor shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation.

Amendment VI

In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law, and to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation; to be confronted with the witnesses against him; to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor, and to have the Assistance of Counsel for his defence.

Amendment VII

In Suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved, and no fact tried by a jury, shall be otherwise re-examined in any Court of the United States, than according to the rules of the common law.
Amendment VIII

Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted.

Amendment IX

The enumeration in the Constitution, of certain rights, shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people.

Amendment X

The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.
UNIT 3
Politics and Policy

40-50-minute classes | 13-18 classes

UNIT PREVIEW

Structure

LESSON 1  Parties, Elections, and Campaigns  3-4 classes  p. 5
LESSON 2  Civic Participation  3-4 classes  p. 8
LESSON 3  Placeholder: State and Local Government  1-2 classes  p. 13
LESSON 4  Domestic Policy  2-3 classes  p. 15
LESSON 5  National Security and Foreign Policy  2-3 classes  p. 17
APPENDIX  Study Guide, Test, and Writing Assignment  p. 21

Why Teach Politics and Policy

It is important for students to recognize that the political thought and governance they studied about the founding is not merely an abstraction. Instead, representative self-government plays out in real life with many individuals and private associations together influencing and reflecting the views of citizens and lawmakers. The political process and arena in the United States are the unofficial parts to American representative democracy. Students should understand American politics and how it operates to know the ways in which their civic participation may be effective and effected. Moreover, students should be aware of the various public policy areas that officeholders seek to address and around which much of politics revolves.
What Teachers Should Consider

The Founders’ principal fears in practical politics—faction and demagogues—were well founded, and their attempts to mitigate these threats were some of the most innovative parts to the constitutional order they arranged. Nevertheless, partisanship arose even with the ratification of the Constitution. The growth of political parties, the dominance of the election cycle, and the plethora of interest groups and civic associations have become hallmarks of American self-government. While the Founders may have sought to avoid this arrangement more than was possible, party politics are cemented in place in the United States. Moreover, general civic participation, as Alexis de Tocqueville noted, has provided for a degree of stability and practice in self-government that has been salutary. Students should appreciate the roles of these various forms of civic participation and how they function. Students should come to understand their own role in the political process, the important privilege that Americans have to participate in the political process, and the various associations, groups, parties, and media with which they may engage. And they should understand broadly the main arenas of domestic and foreign policy, including what each is concerned with, who makes such policy, and how it is made. The goal of this unit is to help students make sense of how representatives are chosen, how policy decisions are shaped, how public opinion is formed, and the civic responsibilities and opportunities afforded to students when they become adult citizens.

How Teachers Can Learn More

TEXTS

American Government and Politics, Joseph Bessette and John Pitney Chapters 4, 7–11, 16–18

ONLINE COURSES | Online.Hillsdale.edu

Introduction to the Constitution
Constitution 101
Constitution 201
The U.S. Supreme Court
LESSON PLANS, ASSIGNMENTS, AND FORMATIVE QUIZ
Lesson 1 — Parties, Elections, and Campaigns

LESSON OBJECTIVE

Students learn how American citizens govern themselves through the constitutional framework for elections, the Electoral College, the election process, political parties, and campaigns.

ONLINE COURSES FOR TEACHERS | Online.Hillsdale.edu

Introduction to the Constitution | Lecture 10

TEXTS FOR TEACHERS

Teachers may craft their lessons to include some of the material in chapters 9–10 of American Government and Politics. Certain narrow selections from these chapters may be read aloud together in class based on grade level ability.

TERMS AND TOPICS

- political party
- Electoral College
- popular vote
- winner-take-all
- ballot
- split ticket
- divided government
- platform
- referendum
- recall
- initiative
- general election
- primary/primary election
- incumbent
- PAC
- campaign advertisements

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

- Why was the election of 1800 so important?
- What are the roles of parties?
- How has party power moved from local parties to national parties? Is this good or bad?
- What happens during an election cycle?
- How do candidates campaign?
- How do candidates finance their campaigns?
- Where do citizens vote? What do they have to do before and during voting?
- What was the purpose of the Electoral College? How does it work?
- Why do incumbents usually win elections even when people are unsatisfied with the institution?
Questions from the U.S. Civics Test:
- Question 1: What is the form of government of the United States?
- Question 4: The U.S. Constitution starts with the words “We the People.” What does “We the People” mean?
- Question 22: How long is a term for a U.S. Senator?
- Question 25: How long is a term for a member of the House of Representatives?
- Question 32: Who elects U.S. senators?
- Question 34: Who elects members of the House of Representatives?
- Question 36: The President of the United States is elected for how many years?
- Question 64: Who can vote in federal elections, run for federal office, and serve on a jury in the United States?
- Question 69: What are two examples of civic participation in the United States?
- Question 70: What is one way Americans can serve their country?
- Question 119: What is the capital of the United States?

KEYS TO THE LESSON

If there is one practice that is the most famous gesture of American life, it is the holding of elections. Indeed, the foundational governing principle of America—that of representative self-government—is expressed and achieved through elections. Freely voting for our neighbors to represent our views in making and enforcing laws—and to have confidence that the process for doing so is fair and just—is the bedrock of American representative democracy, the great achievement of the founding and the envy of oppressed peoples throughout the world and down through the ages. Students should appreciate these facts and also understand how this process of choosing representatives works: both how it was originally intended to work and how it has changed over the centuries to the political process of today.

Teachers might best plan and teach Parties, Elections, and Campaigns with emphasis on the following approaches:

- Explain to students how the American Founders structured the election process. Note the great deference in matters of elections that the Founders gave to state legislatures in particular. The reason they lodged this power for establishing election procedures in state legislatures is so that a separate elected body responsive to the people of a certain area would be accountable to the people for how the elections are conducted in that area. The key was, as much as possible, to make sure that those who establish election procedure were accountable to the people of a whole state, thus dispersing the potential for election fraud and corruption. This is the same reason why redrawing congressional districts is also left up to the state legislatures.
- Explain the one major nationally directed election, that of the president. Explain what the Electoral College is, how it works, and why. Chief goals for the Founders in establishing the Electoral College for choosing the president were twofold. First, by dividing the electorate into geographic groups by state, the Electoral College forces presidential candidates to recognize and incorporate the interests of more rural and remote citizens instead of only the interests of citizens who live in high-density areas, where it is easiest and most efficient to campaign. This arrangement has arguably prevented the division of American citizens into a ruling class of cities and a colony class of rural dwellers, whose interests and needs are ignored. Second, the Electoral College was meant to allow its electors to deny someone the presidency should the electors... determine that the candidate was a demagogue or might act tyrannically. Students should understand that many state legislatures have both allotted the state's electoral vote to the winner of the state's popular vote and have required that electors be faithful to that outcome, thus undermining the second purpose of the Electoral College. The first goal, however, remains in place, except in those states that have required their state electors to follow the national popular vote.

- Walk students through the election cycle, including the various stages of elections, where candidates come from, how candidates campaign, and the roles that various groups and media play in influencing elections.
- Emphasize how it is the parties that determine the vast majority of what happens in the election process and who ends up on a ballot. Students should recognize that one of the most influential roles ordinary citizens can have in the official election process is being involved in the leadership of political parties, beginning at the local level. In fact, it was the focus on the local party that was the traditional place to practice self-government in the United States. Politicians first gained power in their local communities, where they had to develop a good reputation before becoming part of the national system. This meant they were personally tied to their local communities and the issues therein. This enabled local issues to be considered by national politicians as well. Students should understand that while this tradition may still be the most congruent with the intentions of the Founders and with much of American history, in recent decades national parties often dictate the direction of a party based on national priorities, rather than local parties and the issues they seek to address.
- Consider the relationship between elected officials and their constituents. Not only do relatively few Americans know who their representatives are or who governs them, the representative himself or herself has increasingly been separated from his or her constituency in terms of geography—and especially by lifestyle and economic status. Have students consider what effect this has on self-government.
- Have students consider why so many people do not know who governs them. Help them to understand that politicians used to be part of the community and not separate from it. Ask them what this separation does to politicians, to politics, and to the people governed by such representatives.

STRENGTHENING UNDERSTANDING: POST-LESSON ASSIGNMENT

Assignment: Considering the election cycle and what is involved in campaigning, what does an American citizen need to do in order to be elected to public office? (1 paragraph)
Lesson 2 — Civic Participation

LESSON OBJECTIVE

Students learn about American citizenship and the roles that public opinion, civic associations, interest groups, First Amendment rights, and the media play in Americans exercising their civic responsibilities.

ONLINE COURSES FOR TEACHERS | Online.Hillsdale.edu

The U.S. Supreme Court Lecture 5

TEXTS FOR TEACHERS

Teachers may craft their lessons to include some of the material in chapters 4, 7, 8, and 11 of American Government and Politics. Certain narrow selections from these chapters may be read aloud together in class based on grade level ability.

TERMS AND TOPICS

- citizen
- citizenship
- birthright citizenship
- naturalization
- assimilation
- melting pot
- public opinion
- suffrage
- liberal
- conservative
- independent
- libertarian
- populist
- voter registration
- social media
- interest group
- civic association
- families
- philanthropy
- churches
- unions
- think tank
- grassroots
- lobbyist
- First Amendment
- news
- media
- radio
- spin
- narrative

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

- What is citizenship? How does one become a citizen?
- What are the rights, privileges, and responsibilities of citizenship?
- Why is it important that only citizens vote and run for office?
- What is the political spectrum? How is it a helpful tool but sometimes unhelpful?
- How do citizens learn about or become influenced by public opinion?
- How has new technology (social media) impacted how public opinion is spread and understood?
- What are direct and indirect means of political participation?
- Should everyone choose to exercise their right to vote? Why or why not?
- How do interest groups ensure that individuals' voices are heard?
- How do interest groups act against the wills of individuals?
- Why are most interest groups and think tanks headquartered in Washington, DC? What does this say about power in America? What does this mean about local associations?
- What are the benefits and drawbacks to allowing professional lobbying?
- What forms of civic associations have been more traditional in American history? On what levels of government did they tend to focus?
- Why is freedom of speech for individuals necessary for freedom and justice?
- What is the purpose of freedom of the press? Does media accomplish this?
- What is the relationship between reporting and creating news?
- Why does local journalism matter?
- Questions from the U.S. Civics Test:
  - Question 1: What is the form of government of the United States?
  - Question 4: The U.S. Constitution starts with the words “We the People.” What does “We the People” mean?
  - Question 63: There are four amendments to the U.S. Constitution about who can vote. Describe one of them.
  - Question 64: Who can vote in federal elections, run for federal office, and serve on a jury in the United States?
  - Question 65: What are three rights of everyone living in the United States?
  - Question 68: How can people become United States citizens?
  - Question 69: What are two examples of civic participation in the United States?
  - Question 70: What is one way Americans can serve their country?
  - Question 97: What amendment gives citizenship to all persons born in the United States?
  - Question 98: When did all men get the right to vote?
  - Question 102: When did all women get the right to vote?

Keys to the Lesson

In human history, citizenship and right to vote is extraordinarily, almost miraculously, rare. It is yet another of the many privileges and benefits that Americans have and that are so easily taken for granted. This right to vote and the holding of elections lies at the heart of representative self-government, as it is this action and this process through which the people give consent to the laws under which they conduct all their other actions. Students should understand what citizenship is and what their rights and responsibilities as citizens are. Students should also recognize, however, how their views when they someday go to vote are often influenced by the prevailing opinion shared in the community. This public opinion is, in turn, influenced by political party leadership, corporations, marketing, interest groups, the media, and social media. Students should be aware of the various entities that are involved in the political process and how they attempt to influence citizens. Beyond voting and running for office, students should recognize the other ways in which citizens may and should seek to fulfill their responsibilities as free citizens, including being well-informed, making their views heard at government meetings, abiding by the law, and respecting and assisting others.
Teachers might best plan and teach Civic Participation with emphasis on the following approaches:

- Discuss with students what a citizen is and the meaning, rights, and responsibilities of citizenship. Include conversations on birthright citizenship and the naturalization process, the various responsibilities held by citizens such as respecting the rule of law, voting, volunteering, staying well-informed, and exhibited personal virtue and a responsible use of time, talents, and resources.

- Students should gain a clear perspective on voting in human history. In brief, this privilege has been exceptionally rare and, therefore, the American citizen’s right to vote is a remarkable achievement. And nearly all of the groundbreaking moments in this achievement occurred in American history.

- Consider with students the power of public opinion and its foundations in a moral outlook and education. Students should understand how public opinion is formed and influenced and how, in turn, it influences the opinions of individual citizens. Public opinion is something that dominates in a democratic society because everyone is equally powerful in a democratic republic through their votes. People tend, therefore, to consider the majority opinion to be correct, meaning that many political fights occur in the court of public opinion more than in the legislative process. The side that can command public opinion can shape the nation politically.

- Make special note of how generations of educational practices, particularly at the collegiate level, as well as the emergence of powerful new forces such as activist interest groups, corporate marketing, and social media have greatly influenced public opinion over the past several decades.

- Share with students the variety of ways in which citizens can and in many cases should participate in the civic life of the country and their local community. At the very least, citizens have a responsibility to respect the rights of others, conduct their own personal lives with virtue, and take minimal steps to be informed on issues and on their representatives by seeking out the truth and thinking for themselves.

- Help students see the robust tradition of local civic participation America used to have and the great decline in civic participation in the United States, partly owing to the centralization of politics and lawmaking at the national level, the power of interest groups, activist groups, and bureaucracy in lawmaking, and the various new kinds of entertainment and technology that occupy citizens’ time and attention.

- Note for students how private associations have always existed in America and that America was known for the vibrancy of such associations, a phenomenon recognized by Alexis de Tocqueville. Associations are innately factious, because they define beliefs and prescribe limits to participation. In early America, associations allowed individuals to come together to make their voices heard against the majority. In this way, they protected individual rights.

- Consider the role that philanthropic individuals, organizations, and religious institutions have played in American representative democracy. These associations have shaped not only the moral character and conduct of their members but also major reform movements in America, such as abolition, anti-poverty, temperance, and civil rights.

- Clarify for students that the modern interest groups that lobby in Washington, DC, are significantly different from the private and local associations that existed in early America. Many interest groups generally do not represent private individuals but reflect the interests of the comparably wealthy and powerful—and even those who have become wealthy and powerful in the name of representing the weak and the downtrodden.
Help students understand the central role journalism and writing played in the American Revolution and founding. Consider all the documents that students have read that were published and promoted through newspapers or print.

Have students consider also the reason behind the First Amendment. Freedom of speech and of the press are a vital check against the government. They provide a means for criticizing the government and for informing the public about government actions. Furthermore, freedom of speech is connected to freedom of conscience. The destruction of speech will inevitably lead to the destruction of ideas, which is possible only by destroying the creators and possessors of those ideas: people themselves.

Consider how the media is also able to abuse the respect traditionally afforded to them by the people to engage in biased reporting under the cover of objectivity, oftentimes to the benefit of those who are most powerful in society.

Emphasize that intentional efforts by individuals to research, critique, and discern true reporting when making informed political decisions is essential to a free people and to being a responsible citizen.

Consider also with students the rise of social media and its influence on public opinion. Important questions have been raised in recent years over the power that social media has held in shaping public opinion by channeling or restricting access to the sharing of certain ideas.

STRENGTHENING UNDERSTANDING: POST-LESSON ASSIGNMENT

Assignment: How can American citizens participate in politics and government and what groups or factors should they keep in mind while fulfilling their responsibilities as citizens? (1-2 paragraphs)
Unit 3 — Formative Quiz

Covering Lessons 1-2
10-15 minutes

DIRECTIONS: Answer each question in at least one complete sentence.

1. Why was the election of 1800 so important?

2. Where do citizens vote? What do they have to do before and during voting?

3. What is the political spectrum?

4. How do citizens learn about or become influenced by public opinion?

5. What is the relationship between reporting and creating news?
Lesson 3 — Placeholder: State and Local Government

1–2 classes

Note: This lesson affords a school the space to teach about the specific details of their own state and local governments. Teachers may pull in content related to their state and community while still addressing the broad points outlined below.

Lesson Objective

Students learn about the state and local governments in which they are represented, as well as some of the principles and history undergirding these governing institutions in the United States.

Online Courses for Teachers | Online.Hillsdale.edu

Constitution 101 Lecture 4
The Federalist Papers Lecture 4

Terms and Topics

federalism
township
local government
city
state government school board county
domestic policy

Questions for the American Mind

- What value did the Founders place on state and local governments?
- How did the Framers of the Constitution seek to empower state and local governments?
- What benefits has federalism afforded the American experiment in self-government?
- What are the structure and primary roles of offices in the state government?
- What are the structure and primary roles of offices in the local government?
- What is the relationship among federal, state, and local governments?
- Which domestic policy areas are most commonly addressed by state governments?
- Which domestic policy areas are most commonly addressed by local governments?
- Questions from the U.S. Civics Test:
  - Question 61: Who is the governor of your state now?
  - Question 62: What is the capital of your state?
KEYS TO THE LESSON

Students should understand how their state and local governments are structured, along with the roles that each has. Students should also consider these governments in light of the Founders’ views.

Beyond teaching about their specific state and local governments, teachers might best plan and teach with emphasis on the following approaches:

- Emphasize with students how, historically, states and local governments had far more power than they do today. The Founders placed great importance on the roles and powers of state and local governments as being one of the fundamental checks on the authority of the federal government.
- Note how the policies enacted in state and local governments often directly affect and shape the daily lives of citizens more than the policies of the federal government.
- Explain to students some of the benefits of federalism and of state and local governments. Besides forming another kind of separation of powers, state and local governments allow for experimentation with certain policies on small scales prior to adopting a policy for the entire country. Federal lawmakers can then learn from these experiments. They can avoid those that were poor or adapt or improve those that worked without inflicting experimental damage on the entire country. These state governments can also sue the federal government in court and, perhaps most importantly, state and local governments allow citizens to “vote with their feet” by moving from one place with policies they dislike to another place with policies they believe are good. This requires another level of responsiveness to the people and affords sanctuaries for freedom when one state becomes more tyrannical for a time.
- Point out to students that it is the state and especially the local governments where citizens have the greatest opportunity to be involved officially in government and where they are most likely to bring about policy changes. The local level in particular becomes both an outlet for civic participation as well as an arena for future state and federal statesmen to gain experience and practice in the art of statesmanship. These levels of government, due to the smaller and more personal constituency, are also the most likely to be the most representative of a citizenry’s interests and opinions.

STRENGTHENING UNDERSTANDING: POST-LESSON ASSIGNMENT

Assignment: Outline the kinds of government under which you live and how these kinds of government affect the daily lives of you and your neighbors (1–2 paragraphs)
Lesson 4 — Domestic Policy

Lesson Objective

Students learn about social and economic policy within the United States—including the various fields of social and economic policy, the branches of government, bureaucratic agencies, and interests involved in such policy decisions—and a broad overview of the types of contested issues in these fields that have emerged in the country’s history to the present day.

Online Courses for Teachers | Online.Hillsdale.edu

- Constitution 201 Lecture 8
- The U.S. Supreme Court Lecture 4

Texts for Teachers

Teachers may craft their lessons to include some of the material in chapters 16-17 of American Government and Politics. Certain narrow selections from these chapters may be read aloud together in class based on grade level ability.

Terms and Topics

- free market capitalism
- socialism
- communism
- welfare
- Social Security
- Medicare/Medicaid
- charter school
- redistribution
- Gross Domestic Product (GDP)
- unemployment
- inflation
- progressive taxation
- income tax
- Internal Revenue Service
- tariff
- protectionism
- Justice Department
- Federal Bureau of Investigation

Questions for the American Mind

- What are the various kinds of social and economic policies?
- What were the views of the Founders in these areas?
- How had the federal government become more involved in domestic policy?
- As the federal government has become more involved in domestic policy, what has happened to the roles and importance of religious institutions, charities, and the family in addressing domestic issues and caring for their neighbors?
- How have welfare programs changed the way people view the government?
- What accounts for the complexity of the United States tax system?
- How are government programs funded?
• Questions from the U.S. Civics Test:
  - Question 20: Name one power of the U.S. Congress.
  - Question 41: Name one power of the president.
  - Question 48: What are two Cabinet-level positions?
  - Question 58: Name one power that is only for the federal government.
  - Question 59: Name one power that is only for the states.
  - Question 71: Why is it important to pay federal taxes?

Keys to the Lesson

Students should receive a survey of the kinds of domestic policy areas in which government is involved. This would include especially economic and welfare policy, but also cultural matters and various kinds of legal, election, immigration, education, and family policy. American Government and Politics can provide a good guide to these fields for teachers. Students should understand of what each consists, how policy is determined, and some of the government officials and interest groups involved in such decisions.

Teachers might best plan and teach Domestic Policy with emphasis on the following approaches:

• Outline for students the various domestic policy areas. Students should be able to identify each and the kinds of actions that fall within each field, gaining a “lay of the land.” Middle school is not, however, the place to delve into current policy debates or to ask students to form judgments on contemporary issues.

• Proceed to trace in history the growth in kinds of policy fields and the basic arguments that emerged within those areas. Students should appreciate that the Founders recognized and had carefully informed views on many of the same policy areas that are dealt with today. Their thoughts regarding policy for the poor, immigration, and trade are worth careful consideration.

• While there are certain functions of the federal government that deal with domestic policy (most notably maintaining the rule of law, regulating interstate commerce, coining money and setting weights and measures), note for students the great expansion in the size of the federal government, and in particular, its role in domestic policy. The Founders had structured the federal government to be principally concerned with national security and foreign policy, those fields which only an energetic and united federal government could address.

• The vast majority of policies that most directly affect the daily lives of citizens were to be made by state and local governments. This was purposeful, as such lower governments could be more knowledgeable and responsive to their constituents and the needs and interests associated with life in a certain geographic area, much more so than a centralized and distant central government could be. The locus of power in domestic policy has since shifted away from states and localities and toward Washington, DC, and its bureaucracies.

Strengthening Understanding: Post-Lesson Assignment

Assignment: Choose one area of domestic policy and outline what it addresses and how decisions are made within that field (1 paragraph).
Lesson 5 — National Security and Foreign Policy

LESSON OBJECTIVE

Students learn about the foreign policy of the United States, including the branches of the armed forces, bureaucratic agencies, and interests involved in such policy decisions, and gain a broad overview of the types of contested issues related to national security that have emerged in the country’s history to the present day.

ONLINE COURSES FOR TEACHERS | Online.Hillsdale.edu

The Presidency and the Constitution Lecture 6

TEXTS FOR TEACHERS

Teachers may craft their lessons to include some of the material in chapter 18 of American Government and Politics. Certain narrow selections from this chapter may be read aloud together in class based on grade level ability.

TERMS AND TOPICS

- national security
- foreign policy
- border
- citizen-controlled military
- U.S. Army
- U.S. Navy
- U.S. Marine Corps
- U.S. Air Force
- U.S. Coast Guard
- U.S. Space Force
- U.S. Border Patrol
- State Department
- Central Intelligence Agency
- preemption
- isolationism
- unilateralism
- multilateralism
- intelligence
- sanctions
- nongovernmental organizations

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

- What is the primary purpose of the federal government? Why is this the case?
- What is foreign policy? How is it related to national security?
- How is foreign policy determined in the United States?
- How is foreign policy carried out in the United States?
- Who makes treaties? Who declares war? Who conducts war? Why are these powers separated in this manner?
- What is the difference between unilateralism and multilateralism? When did the shift to multilateralism occur, and what domestic policies accompanied it?
- Questions from the U.S. Civics Test:
  - Question 20: Name one power of the U.S. Congress.
  - Question 41: Name one power of the president.
Question 48: What are two Cabinet-level positions?
Question 58: Name one power that is only for the federal government.
Question 67: Name two promises that new citizens make in the Oath of Allegiance.
Question 70: What is one way Americans can serve their country?
Question 72: It is important for all men ages 18 through 25 to register for the Selective Service. Name one reason why.

Keys to the Lesson

Students should understand the importance of the country’s foreign policy and its fundamental connection to America’s national security. The core purpose of the federal government (as with any national government) as laid out in the United States Constitution is to provide for the common defense. All other functions—lawmaking itself, and the establishment of justice—will fall if the nation is not defended. As such, the federal government has been historically and is still primarily oriented toward national security and national self-defense. Students should be made familiar with what government actions are involved in foreign policy and national security, how the executive branch and the military are arranged toward this end, and what other entities and groups are involved in determining foreign policy.

Teachers might best plan and teach National Security and Foreign Policy with emphasis on the following approaches:

- Outline with students which areas of government action fall under the titles of national security, which fall under foreign policy, and how the two categories are related.
- Review with students how the Constitution designed the federal government and the executive in particular to address issues of national security above all its other roles.
- Emphasize with students how the American armed forces are citizen-controlled, which means military authority is responsible to political authority under the constitutional rule of law. Spend some time outlining the roles of each branch of the armed forces.
- Consider this statement from George Washington’s Farewell Address: “The great rule of conduct for us, in regard to foreign Nations[,] is in extending our commercial relations to have with them as little political connection as possible.” Political alliances or conflicts with other nations were only to be out of necessity. As in the Declaration of Independence, other nations assume their own “separate and equal station” as well, and their independence should be respected. In general, the United States should not interfere in the internal governance of other nations unless necessary for self-defense regarding the nation’s security.
- Discuss with students how George Washington’s overall objective in foreign policy was to defend the institutions of American constitutional government at home and develop the United States to “that degree of strength and consistency which is necessary to give it, humanly speaking, the command of its own fortunes.” That is, the purpose of American foreign policy is to protect and defend American constitutional self-government. America’s principles are universal (“all men are created equal”) but America is a particular nation, which means that while the United States models and advocates for American principles its first obligation is to the defense and perpetuation of this country.
- Consider with students how foreign policy is informed by principle but is largely an exercise in prudential decision-making in particular circumstances.
STRENGTHENING UNDERSTANDING: POST-LESSON ASSIGNMENT

Assignment: Outline what national security and foreign policy address and how decisions are made within these fields (1 paragraph).
APPENDIX

Study Guide

Test

Writing Assignment
Study Guide — Politics and Policy Test

TERMS AND TOPICS

Explain each of the following and the context in which it was discussed during this unit’s lessons.

- political party
- Electoral College
- popular vote
- winner-take-all
- ballot
- split ticket
- divided government
- primary/primary election
- incumbent
- PAC
- citizenship
- naturalization
- assimilation
- public opinion
- suffrage
- liberal
- conservative

- independent
- social media
- interest group
- civic association
- philanthropy
- churches
- unions
- think tank
- grassroots
- lobbyist
- First Amendment
- media
- narrative
- county
- township
- city
- domestic policy

- free market capitalism
- welfare
- Gross Domestic Product (GDP)
- unemployment
- inflation
- progressive taxation
- income tax
- tariff
- protectionism
- national security
- foreign policy
- border
- citizen-controlled military
- sanctions

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

Based on notes from lessons and seminar conversations, answer each of the following.

Lesson 1 | Parties, Elections, and Campaigns

- What are the roles of parties?
- How has party power moved from local parties to national parties? Is this good or bad?
- What happens during an election cycle?
- How do candidates campaign?
- How do candidates finance their campaigns?
- Where do citizens vote? What do they have to do before and during voting?
- What was the purpose of the Electoral College? How does it work?

Lesson 2 | Civic Participation

- What is citizenship? How does one become a citizen?
- What are the rights, privileges, and responsibilities of citizenship?
- How do citizens learn about or become influenced by public opinion?
Lesson 3 | State and Local Government

- How did the Framers of the Constitution seek to empower state and local governments?
- What benefits has federalism afforded the American experiment in self-government?
- What are the structure and primary roles of offices in the state government?
- What are the structure and primary roles of offices in the local government?
- What is the relationship among federal, state, and local governments?
- Which domestic policy areas are most commonly addressed by state governments?
- Which domestic policy areas are most commonly addressed by local governments?

Lesson 4 | Domestic Policy

- What are the various kinds of social and economic policies?
- What were the views of the Founders in these areas?
- As the federal government has become more involved in domestic policy, what has happened to the roles and importance of religious institutions, charities, and the family in addressing domestic issues and caring for their neighbors?
- How have welfare programs changed the way people view the government?
- How are government programs funded?

Lesson 5 | National Security and Foreign Policy

- What is the primary purpose of the federal government? Why is this the case?
- What is foreign policy? How is it related to national security?
- How is foreign policy determined in the United States?
- How is foreign policy carried out in the United States?
- Who makes treaties? Who declares war? Who conducts war? Why are these powers separated in this manner?
Test — Politics and Policy

TERMS AND TOPICS

Explain each of the following and the context in which it was discussed during this unit’s lessons.

1. political party

2. divided government

3. PAC

4. assimilation

5. interest group

6. lobbyist

7. free market capitalism

8. citizen-controlled military
QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

Answer each of the following. Complete sentences are not necessary, but correct spelling and writing should be employed, and responses must fully answer each question.

9. What happens during an election cycle?

10. How do candidates campaign?

11. What was the purpose of the Electoral College? How does it work?

12. What are the rights, privileges, and responsibilities of citizenship?

13. How do citizens learn about or become influenced by public opinion?

14. What forms of civic associations have been more traditional in American history? On what levels of government did they tend to focus?
15. Why is freedom of speech for individuals necessary for freedom and justice?

16. What benefits has federalism afforded the American experiment in self-government?

17. As the federal government has become more involved in domestic policy, what has happened to the roles and importance of religious institutions, charities, and the family in addressing domestic issues and caring for their neighbors?

18. How have welfare programs changed the way people view the government?

19. What is foreign policy? How is it related to national security?

20. Who makes treaties? Who declares war? Who conducts war? Why are these powers separated in this manner?
Writing Assignment — Politics and Policy

DIRECTIONS

Citing primary sources and conversations from class in your argument, write a 4–5 paragraph essay answering the question:

How can citizens exercise their civic responsibilities and participate in the political process? What should they keep in mind in doing so?
UNIT 4
Challenging and Defending America’s Principles

40-50-minute classes | 19-23 classes

UNIT PREVIEW

Structure

LESSON 1         The Founding: The Exception to the Rule  4-5 classes p. 7
LESSON 2         Abolitionism vs. Slavery                 5-6 classes p. 14
LESSON 3         Progressive Government               3-4 classes p. 20
LESSON 4         Civil Rights vs. Discriminatory Laws    5-6 classes p. 26
APPENDIX A       Study Guide, Test, Writing Assignment  p. 31
APPENDIX B       Primary Sources                    p. 43

Why Teach Challenging and Defending America’s Principles

The United States was the first country in history founded on a commitment to equality: that “all men are created equal.” Since 1776, Americans’ efforts to live and govern by this principle have resulted in the greatest degrees of freedom, prosperity, and security for the most people in human history, both for American citizens and for the peoples of the world. It is unprecedented. It is what makes America exceptional, as in, the exception. But it is also true that America has not always lived up to the great truth on which she was founded. Student should understand the various domestic challenges to America’s principles that have arisen through its history, beginning with slavery. This unit explores those challenges and also highlights the individuals and movements that came to the defense of America’s principles, pushing the country to live up to its high ideals as expressed at its founding. This is one of the dramas of American civics, and one worth considering carefully with students.

What Teachers Should Consider

The political norms and way of life which Americans today enjoy are no accident. In many respects, they may trace their origins to Declaration of Independence, the Constitution, and the ideas and actions of the American founding. What is today commonplace and taken for granted were, in 1776 and 1787, by far the exceptions—and sometimes unprecedented exception—to the normal course of politics and human life. Teacher and students alike must first acknowledge these facts and attempt to understand just how rare the American founding was.

But then teachers should appreciate the various challenges to the exceptional institutions and principles that bequeathed the kind of life Americans enjoy today. Challenges during the Revolution itself and through the fraught history of slavery in America were the main ways in which American ideals were first undermined, sometimes by the very people who had asserted them. Thus while the American founding was at the vanguard of asserting and securing the equal natural rights of all people—setting the nation on the path to establishing such equality in law—the institution of slavery became the foremost stumbling block toward achieving the fundamental human equality the Declaration of Independence had proclaimed. Indeed, the stumbling block was only overcome through a bloody civil war fought in large part over the argument of whether “all men are created equal.”

Additional challenges to the principle of equality and limited self-government would manifest themselves after the Civil War and in the century that followed. Reconstruction was only partially and temporarily successful while ongoing discrimination lasted into the latter half of the 20th century. After World War II, the Civil Rights Movement answered the challenges of segregation and intimidation and helped fulfill America’s founding principle of equality before the law.

All throughout their history, Americans have repeatedly arisen to meet challenges in many ways, and especially by appealing to the principles of the American founding. Students should be aware of these, think about them, and consider their implications for their own lives as they approach the full responsibilities of an American citizen.

How Teachers Can Learn More

Texts

The U.S. Constitution: A Reader, ed. Hillsdale College Politics Faculty Chapters 7, 9, 10, 11
African Founders, David Hackett Fischer
No Property in Man, Sean Wilentz
The State, Woodrow Wilson

Copyright © 2022 Hillsdale College. All Rights Reserved.
Online Courses | Online.Hillsdale.edu

Introduction to the Constitution
Constitution 101
Constitution 201
Civil Rights in American History
The U.S. Supreme Court

Primary Sources Studied in This Unit

This unit has a larger number of primary sources than previous units. The texts, however, are each rather brief and are targeted to be illustrative of the main ideas at hand. As with other units, assigning them to students is at the discretion of the teacher, being mindful of grade level ability and pacing.

Letter to the Hebrew Congregation, George Washington
The Virginia Statute for Religious Freedom
Letter to the Danbury Baptist Association, Thomas Jefferson
“Property,” James Madison
The Examination Number No. 7, Alexander Hamilton
Statements on slavery, George Washington, John Adams, Benjamin Franklin, Alexander Hamilton, James Madison
Notes on the State of Virginia, Query XVIII, “Manners,” Thomas Jefferson
The Declaration of Independence, Draft
The U.S. Constitution
The Northwest Ordinance, Article III
“The Constitution of the United States: Is It Pro-Slavery or Anti-Slavery?,” Frederick Douglass
Speech on the reception of abolition petitions, John C. Calhoun
Speech on the Oregon Bill, John C. Calhoun
Speech at Peoria, Abraham Lincoln
Lincoln’s Response in the Seventh Lincoln-Douglas Debate, Abraham Lincoln
First inaugural address, Abraham Lincoln
The Emancipation Proclamation, Abraham Lincoln
Gettysburg Address, Abraham Lincoln
Second inaugural address, Abraham Lincoln
13th Amendment to the Constitution
“What Is Progress?” Woodrow Wilson
War Message to Congress, Woodrow Wilson
“The Study of Administration,” Woodrow Wilson
Annual Message to Congress, 1944, Franklin Delano Roosevelt
“The Inspiration of the Declaration,” Calvin Coolidge
Seneca Falls “Declaration of Sentiments and Resolutions,” Elizabeth Cady Stanton
14th Amendment to the Constitution
15th Amendment to the Constitution
“I Have a Dream,” Martin Luther King Jr.
LESSON PLANS, ASSIGNMENTS, AND FORMATIVE QUIZ
Lesson 1 — The Founding: The Exception to the Rule

Lesson Objective

Students learn about the ways in which the American founding was a momentous change in favor of equality and freedom in the history of the world and set the status of slavery on the path to extinction.

Online Courses for Teachers | Online.Hillsdale.edu

- Introduction to the Constitution Lecture 3
- Constitution 101 Lecture 6
- Civil Rights in American History Lectures 1 and 2

Primary Sources

The following primary sources are potential readings for students. Teachers should use their discretion based on grade level ability in deciding which texts to share with students. The texts may be assigned for homework, read together in class, or simply read aloud by the teacher. Some texts include guiding reading questions to assist students in the event that the text is assigned for homework. Students should annotate the texts either in preparation for or during a seminar conversation. Teachers should not feel it necessary to assign all of the texts, especially in light of grade level considerations.

- Letter to the Hebrew Congregation, George Washington
- The Virginia Statute for Religious Freedom
- Letter to the Danbury Baptist Association, Thomas Jefferson
- “Property,” James Madison
- The Examination Number No. 7, Alexander Hamilton
- Statements on slavery, George Washington, John Adams, Benjamin Franklin, Alexander Hamilton, James Madison
- Notes on the State of Virginia, Query XVIII, “Manners,” Thomas Jefferson
- The Declaration of Independence, Draft
- The U.S. Constitution
- The Northwest Ordinance, Article III
- “The Constitution of the United States: Is It Pro-Slavery or Anti-Slavery?,” Frederick Douglass

Terms and Topics

- religious tolerance
- property rights
- rule of law
- consent of the governed
- voting
- suffrage
- immigration
- equality
- slavery
- abolition
- morality
- majority tyranny
- objective truth
- Northwest Ordinance
QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

- What was unique about America regarding religion?
- What was unique about America regarding private property?
- What was unique about America regarding immigration?
- What was unique about America regarding who makes law and who is subject to law?
- What was unique about America regarding voting?
- Which two practices began at Jamestown in 1619?
- Why did Thomas Jefferson’s first draft of the Declaration of Independence include condemnations of King George for perpetuating the Atlantic slave trade? Why was this section removed?
- What was the nature of the Founders’ compromise with slavery at the time of the founding for the sake of the union? Would it have been possible to abolish slavery in the southern colonies without union?
- What efforts did some founders make to abolish slavery?
- What are the three clauses related to slavery in the Constitution? Explain each.
- How was the Three-Fifth Compromise a partial victory for slaveholders and a partial victory for abolitionists?
- How did Frederick Douglass’s views on the founding with respect to slavery change during his work for abolition?
- Why did the Founders expect that slavery would eventually die out?
- What were the unforeseen consequences of the cotton gin, invented in 1793, four years after the adoption of the Constitution?
- Questions from the U.S. Civics Test:
  - Question 63: There are four amendments to the U.S. Constitution about who can vote. Describe one of them.
  - Question 65: What are three rights of everyone living in the United States?
  - Question 68: How can people become United States citizens?
  - Question 75: What group of people was taken and sold as slaves?
  - Question 78: Who wrote the Declaration of Independence?
  - Question 92: Name the U.S. war between the North and the South.
  - Question 94: Abraham Lincoln is famous for many things. Name one.
  - Question 95: What did the Emancipation Proclamation do?
  - Question 96: What U.S. war ended slavery?

KEYS TO THE LESSON

We come to take quite a lot for granted about government and civil society. What is less clear to today’s Americans is how the American founding, its views on civil society, and some of its practices were very much the exception to the rule at the time and in human history. In fact, many of our settled opinions today on justice had their beginnings as commonplace assumptions with the start of the American experiment in self-government.

Teachers might best plan and teach the Founding: The Exception to the Rule with emphasis on the following approaches:
Consider the many ways that the American colonists were in fact the “exception to the rule” in the world, both at the time and in history, particularly in the areas of self-government, religious tolerance, private property rights among commoners, immigration, and suffrage.

Begin this unit by reviewing the principles advanced in the first two paragraphs of the Declaration of Independence. Review also how the Constitution seeks to achieve freedom, equality, and justice by establishing a system of limited self-government. Most of this unit should involve references back to these founding principles throughout American history, beginning with their efficacy during the founding generation itself. Students should understand the principles of the Declaration of Independence and self-government as the ways in which America was and remains most unique in human history. They form the bedrock on which rest all of America’s exceptions compared to the normal affairs of mankind.

Note the degree of religious toleration present in the colonies and at the founding. Religious faith strongly defined colonial culture, largely because so many came to America to escape the religious persecutions of the old world. From the pilgrims and the Puritans to Roman Catholics and Jews, a wide variety of denominations are found throughout colonial settlements. This diversity fostered religious liberty and toleration at the same time that it strengthened a common morality rooted in religious faith and practice, which was widespread and imbued colonial society. Read with students George Washington’s letter to the Hebrew congregation at Newport, the Virginia Statute for Religious Freedom, and Thomas Jefferson’s letter to the Danbury Baptists for insights into the unprecedented religious toleration present at the founding.

Remind students that the United States was founded as a country of commoners, which was by far the exception in human history. The colonists who settled in British North America came from many nations (chiefly but not exclusively those of Europe) for many different reasons, but one thing they did not bring with them were the legal class distinctions that defined the aristocratic and monarchical nations they left behind. These individuals (except for their British governors) were largely common people who immigrated to America seeking their freedom and betterment. Prohibiting titles of nobility and class distinctions in the Constitution itself worked in tandem with the recognized importance and protection of the ability of all Americans to acquire and hold private property to better their stations in life. The rule of law, moreover, ensured that all were subject to the same law and that the law was the product of the consent of the governed. James Madison’s “Property” essay outlines the kinds of property human beings have and how its protection relates to the dignity and freedom of human beings.

Read aloud with students in class Alexander Hamilton’s Examination No. 7 on the need for a citizenry that holds certain principles and habits of conduct conducive to respecting the rights of fellow citizens. In a nation as diverse as the United States and that is not bound by blood, understanding of, adherence to, and practice in these principles of self-government become all the more important. Immigration policy for Hamilton, therefore, sought to encourage as much immigration as was justly possible and good for Americans while still achieving these prerequisites to maintaining free government. In brief, an immigrant had to understand and be willing and able to practice the responsibilities of self-government, especially respect for the rule of law.

Make sure students have a clear perspective on voting in human history. In brief, this privilege has been exceptionally rare and, therefore, the American citizen’s right to vote is a remarkable achievement. The American colonies, for instance, were one of the few places in history up to that time where most ordinary male citizens of European descent were permitted to vote. The rule in history has been that one person made the law (monarchy) or a few did so (oligarchy). That most male citizens, even though still restricted to those of European descent, were allowed to vote in the American colonies is therefore a consequential development in world history, a significant step toward universal suffrage.

- Explain to students how women, African Americans, and men who did not own property were generally, though not always, prohibited from voting. Yet even at the founding, every state north of Pennsylvania allowed free African Americans to vote. Students should appreciate the historic gains the American people made securing the right to vote for the abovementioned peoples while also recognizing that their original curtailment was more the rule than the exception in human history, not a phenomenon unique to America. What was unique to America was the right to vote at all and then the relatively rapid rate at which the right to vote was expanded.

- Explain that originally, voting was a privilege of citizenship and not a natural right. It was also a serious duty. It was meant to be carried out by people who had significant interest in protecting America, who actively informed themselves on the issues independent of what they were simply told, and who would be called to give their lives up for their country if it were threatened. Put another way, they had a high personal stake in what the country did regarding various policies, including going to war.

- Consider the year 1619 at Jamestown as an insight into colonial America:
  - On one hand, it was in 1619 that the first Africans, having been taken from a Portuguese slave ship en route to Mexico by an English privateer, landed at Jamestown.
  - On the other hand, it was also in 1619 at Jamestown that the Virginia House of Burgesses first convened, marking the beginning of representative self-government in the colonies.
    This self-government would flourish for over a hundred and fifty years as the British colonists of North America largely governed themselves and developed the thought, practice, and habits of a self-governing people (a phenomenon that Edmund Burke described as “salutary neglect”).

- Familiarize students with the views of the leading Founders on slavery, including by reading their own words and Thomas Jefferson’s Query XVIII in his Notes on the State of Virginia. Northern Founders—most of whom were strongly opposed to slavery—and even some southern Founders who believed slavery immoral were politically unable to end slavery. For instance, Gouverneur Morris repeatedly railed against slaveholders in the Constitutional Convention and Thomas Jefferson, who owned slaves himself, included a condemnation of the slave trade and referred to slaves as “men” in the draft of the Declaration of Independence, a section the slaveholding interest demanded be removed. Most anti-slavery Founders continued nevertheless in the belief that the only way that they could have any influence in order to end slavery in the southern states was through union. Without unity, the Americans would very likely have lost the Revolutionary War (giving up their independence and freedom to continued British rule that would perpetuate slavery anyways) or the southern colonies would have formed their own country, in which case those who opposed slavery would have no power to abolish slavery where it existed in the South.
During the Civil War, Frederick Douglass made similar arguments for preserving the Union against fellow abolitionists who wanted to let the South secede with slavery intact.

- Consider with students the sectional nature of views on slavery during the founding. The majority of northerners and northern Founders (e.g., John Adams, Benjamin Franklin, Benjamin Rush, Gouverneur Morris, and John Jay) spoke and wrote extensively on the immorality of slavery and its need to be abolished. Some northern Founders, such as John Jay, Alexander Hamilton, and Benjamin Franklin, founded or served in abolitionist societies.

- Consider also that even among the southern Founders who supported slavery or held slaves, several leading Founders expressed regret and fear of divine retribution for slavery in America, such as Thomas Jefferson, James Madison, and George Washington. Some freed their slaves as well, such as George Washington, who by the end of his life freed the slaves in his family estate. And many, like Thomas Jefferson, nevertheless maintained that slaves were men in full possession of the natural rights of all men. Making these observations does not diminish the inhumaneness of slavery or dismiss the wrong of racism by certain colonists or other individual Americans living in other generations.

- Ask students how to judge the Founders who owned slaves and yet supported the Declaration of Independence and Constitution. Students should consider their public and private lives as well as their words and deeds. Taken altogether, students should recognize the difficulty in assigning an absolute moral judgment that a person is entirely bad or entirely good.

- Have students also consider the distinction between judging character absolutely versus judging individual actions. When they do, students will encounter figures who did both much that was good and also some that was bad, and that this contradiction runs through the heart of every person.

- Be careful with the phrase “consider the times,” as this phrase can easily give the impression that truth and morality (good and evil) are merely relative to one’s viewpoint or historical time period. Instead, help students understand that “to consider the times” in which the American colonists and Founders lived is not to excuse moral injustices or to justify relativism. We should consider the circumstances at the time and weigh them against principles that transcend time. It’s not whitewashing or rewriting history. It is recognizing the reality of history and honestly assessing how figures at the time acted within their circumstances in light of the truth.

- Provide students with a copy of the first draft of the Declaration of Independence that tracks the edits made by the Second Continental Congress. Ask students why specific changes were made. Spend time especially with the sections that addressed slavery and were removed. While these changes were insisted upon by the slaveholding interest, have students consider what it meant that Jefferson, Adams, and Franklin attempted to include such a condemnation in the first place.

- When discussing compromises between the principled claims of the Declaration and the brutal matter of slavery, be mindful of the following:
  - Slavery was one of the few matters of disagreement among the colonial revolutionaries in their otherwise generally united challenge to England. Those who opposed slavery as well as those who favored it agreed about the growing threat of British tyranny.
  - Many northern Founders and even some slaveholding Founders recognized the hypocrisy of claiming the principle of equality in spite of the continuing institution of slavery. Nevertheless, some southern Founders did not believe this phrase to be true for slaves and therefore did not believe it was hypocritical.
  - Slavery and the subsequent inequality and violations of the rights of the descendants of slaves, as well as of women and certain immigrants, are glaring ways in which the country has fallen short of its founding idea.

- Take the time to consider, read, and discuss the ways in which slavery was addressed in the Constitution. Helpful in this endeavor is reading Frederick Douglass’ “The Constitution of the United States. Is It Pro-Slavery or Anti-Slavery?” as a guide. While the Constitution did not abolish slavery, it did place new significant, national limits on it. Indeed, at the time it was adopted, the Constitution marked one of the most significant moves to restrict slavery in the world. As Frederick Douglass and Abraham Lincoln would later acknowledge, the Declaration’s principle of equality and the Constitution’s arrangements gave the Founders the belief that they had placed slavery on the path to eventual extinction.

- Clarify for students the arguments of northerners and southerners concerning the Three-Fifths Clause. The clause was not about the humanity of slaves; it was strictly about how much representation slave-owning states would receive in Congress and the Electoral College. The great hypocrisy of the slaveholders was that while they refused to call a slave a human being, they insisted that each slave be counted as a whole person for purposes of representation. In fact, it was the anti-slavery Founders who did not want slaves counted at all in the Constitution for the purposes of representation. The fact that slaves were only counted as three-fifths for the purposes of representation was a disappointment for southern states, as they had demanded they be counted as a whole person. It was a partial victory for northern opponents to slavery, as it would give the slaveholding states less influence in lawmaking than they wished. Additionally, students should understand that in the mind of those opposed to slavery, this compromise was the only politically viable route if they were to secure southern support for the Constitution, without which the country would become disunited, with the South able to perpetuate slavery indefinitely as their own country without northern abolitionists. Students need not agree with the tenets of the compromise, but they must understand it as the founders themselves understood it.

- Remind students that the slave trade was not formally limited in the states (the Continental Congress had temporarily banned the practice in 1774) until the passage of the Constitution, which allowed for it to be outlawed nationwide in 1808 (which it was) and for Congress to discourage it by imposing tariffs on the slave trade in the meantime. Students should understand that without the compromise that allowed this twenty-year delay, the power to abolish the slave trade would not have been granted by the slaveholding interest in the first place.

- Consider with students the significance of the Constitution not using the word “slave” and instead using “person.” Refusing to use the word “slave” avoided giving legal legitimacy to slavery. Even Article IV, Section 2, Clause 3 emphasizes that slavery was legal based on certain state, not federal, laws. The use of the word “person” forced even slaveholders to recognize the humanity of the slave: that he or she was in fact a human person, not property. There would be no federally-recognized “property in man.”

- Point out for students that clauses that were not about slavery but which slaveholding interests could use to their benefit were not therefore deliberately pro-slavery clauses. Such a logical fallacy would implicate as morally evil anything hijacked for use in committing a wrong act, for example, a road used by bank robbers in their getaway would be “pro-robbery.”

- Have students consider the status of slavery over the initial decades of the country’s history. At the founding, slavery was either openly condemned by northerners or defended (but seldom celebrated) by southerners. Its toleration at the time of the founding was for the sake of a unity that even many abolitionists believed was the only eventual path toward abolition. Based on the evidence at the time, many leading Founders believed slavery was naturally destined for extinction, that public opinion had steadily grown toward seeing slavery for the moral evil that it was, and that the principles of the Declaration of Independence and Revolution helped shape this public opinion and would also be the vehicle for eventual equality. The Founders also believed the Constitution restricted slavery, created a path to restricting it further (by holding the union together), and kept slavery on the path it was already travelling: to extinction. The Declaration of Independence founded the country on principles of equality that could and would be used to demand the end of slavery. The Northwest Ordinance had prohibited the expansion of slavery.
The Constitution refused to give legal standing to the institution, and many states had abolished slavery outright. Even Founders who held slaves believed the profitability of slavery was gradually but decisively waning and that slavery would die out on its own in a short period of time.

- Note for students the history-changing invention of Eli Whitney’s cotton gin in 1793, four years after the adoption of the Constitution. The cotton gin would greatly increase the profitability of slavery in the cotton-growing states of the South and thereby create a significant (and regional) interest in perpetuating the institution of slavery. The new economics of slavery that would grow out of the cotton gin and the vast cotton industry questioned the assumption and changed the projection of the founding generation concerning the viability and eventual demise of slavery.

- Consider with students how America is unprecedented in the history of the world because it was founded on the principle that “all men are created equal and that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights.” Consider the view of many Founders—as well as abolitionists Abraham Lincoln and Frederick Douglass, and the meaning of the “promissory note” of Martin Luther King Jr.—that America is founded on this principle of the inherent equality of every human being based on humanity and natural rights; and that consequently, the role of the American nation and her citizens, as well as her history, has been one of trying to establish this principle in practice through a self-governing people. Almost all of the Founders recognized at the very least that the statement of the principle of equality, despite a compromise that allowed for the pre-existing institution’s continuing existence, undermined the legitimacy of slavery.

- To recap what the Founders did for the cause of freedom and equality, complete the lesson by considering the Land Ordinance of 1785 and the Northwest Ordinance of 1787. These two exceptional documents capture much of what the founding accomplished to advance the principles of America, doing so in concrete and effective law, namely, promoting private land ownership, the free exercise of religion, and public education while prohibiting the expansion of slavery.

STRENGTHENING UNDERSTANDING: POST-LESSON ASSIGNMENT

Assignment: In which ways was the American founding an exception to the rule, meaning, how were its achievements regarding self-government, religious tolerance, property ownership, voting, and restricting slavery uncommon compared to the rest of the world at the time? (1-2 paragraphs)
Lesson 2 — Abolitionism vs. Slavery

LESSON OBJECTIVE

Students learn about the ways in which the status of slavery changed in the decades following the Founding and the efforts of abolitionists, Abraham Lincoln, and the Civil War to end slavery by appealing to America’s founding principles.

ONLINE COURSES FOR TEACHERS | Online.Hillsdale.edu

- Introduction to the Constitution
- Constitution 101
- Civil Rights in American History

PRIMARY SOURCES

The following primary sources are potential readings for students. Teachers should use their discretion based on grade level ability in deciding which texts to share with students. The texts may be assigned for homework, read together in class, or simply read aloud by the teacher. Some texts include guiding reading questions to assist students in the event that the text is assigned for homework. Students should annotate the texts either in preparation for or during a seminar conversation. Teachers should not feel it necessary to assign all of the texts, especially in light of grade level considerations.

- Speech on the reception of abolition petitions, John C. Calhoun
- Speech on the Oregon Bill, John C. Calhoun
- Speech at Peoria, Abraham Lincoln
- Lincoln’s Response in the Seventh Lincoln-Douglas Debate, Abraham Lincoln
- First inaugural address, Abraham Lincoln
- The Emancipation Proclamation, Abraham Lincoln
- Gettysburg Address, Abraham Lincoln
- Second inaugural address, Abraham Lincoln
- 13th Amendment to the Constitution

TERMS AND TOPICS

- equality
- slavery
- abolition
- cotton gin
- Missouri Compromise
- positive good
- sectionalism
- Compromise of 1850
- statesmanship

- morality
- Kansas-Nebraska Act
- Dred Scott v. Sandford
- “a house divided”
- popular sovereignty
- majority tyranny
- objective truth
- moral relativism
- “don’t care”
QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

- What were the unforeseen consequences of the cotton gin, invented in 1793, four years after the adoption of the Constitution?
- What was the argument in the defense of slavery as a “positive good” that emerged among slavery apologists in the decades after the founding?
- How did the idea of slavery as a “positive good” challenge the Constitution’s stance on slavery and the path on which the founding generation had set slavery?
- How did John C. Calhoun reject the Founders on equality, natural rights, and the social contract?
- What did the Kansas-Nebraska Act and Dred Scott v. Sandford do, both in law and as a threat to public opinion on slavery at the time?
- How did Abraham Lincoln try to halt the expansion of slavery and win the moral battle against it?
- How did Abraham Lincoln and Stephen Douglas disagree on the limits of democracy and the danger of majority tyranny?
- What were Abraham Lincoln’s arguments against moral neutrality or relativism (“don’t care”) on the question of slavery?
- How was slavery the true cause of the Civil War?
- What were the arguments for and against Southern secession?
- What were the arguments for and against the Union fighting to keep the South from seceding?
- In what ways did Abraham Lincoln manifest the ideal qualities of a statesman and the virtue of prudence?
- How did Abraham Lincoln manage to accomplish his competing goals to maintain the union, preserve the Constitution and the rule of law, and end slavery?
- What did the Emancipation Proclamation do? How was Abraham Lincoln able to justify, issue, and enforce it successfully?
- How does Abraham Lincoln’s Gettysburg Address assert that freedom and self-government require devotion—and even a willingness to sacrifice for—the country and its principles of justice?
- As presented in his second inaugural address, how did Abraham Lincoln view the Civil War as a tragedy?
- Questions from the U.S. Civics Test:
  - Question 94: Abraham Lincoln is famous for many things. Name one.
  - Question 95: What did the Emancipation Proclamation do?

KEYS TO THE LESSON

Slavery was one of the most significant institutions and practices that ran contrary to the principles of the Declaration of Independence. Understanding the events that followed the founding generation is a key part to understanding American civics. On one hand, there were those who further entrenched slavery and on the other those who gave rise to a movement and series of events that would eventually abolish slavery.
Teachers might best plan and teach Abolitionism vs. Slavery with emphasis on the following approaches:

- Review from the previous lesson the status of slavery over the initial decades of the country’s history, including the extent that advances were made towards equality during the founding and the history-changing invention of Eli Whitney’s cotton gin in 1793, four years after the adoption of the Constitution.

- Explain to students how during the early 1800s the growth in population in the North would eventually allow northern states to restrict slavery further and perhaps even abolish it via a constitutional amendment. Southern slaveholders recognized that they had to expand the number of slave states if they were to prohibit such actions by northerners. The challenge, however, was that they needed northern states to acquiesce to such expansion. To do so, they appealed first to the argument that slavery was a positive good, as captured in the writings of John C. Calhoun. Students should read Calhoun’s two speeches in order to examine his arguments and to understand how Calhoun explicitly rejected the American founding as captured in the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution. Students should work through and identify the serious faults in Calhoun’s arguments, particularly in light of the previous lesson.

- Read with students parts of Lincoln’s speech in Peoria in response to the Kansas-Nebraska Act. Students should understand that Lincoln saw slavery to be, above all, a moral question, and one that every American ought to take seriously as such. Lincoln also believed that moral relativism over the question of slavery, as conveyed in the idea of popular sovereignty, was antithetical to the ideas of the Declaration of Independence, and that slavery was simply a form of majority tyranny, the very danger latent in democracy that the Founders had warned against. Finally, Lincoln condemned the Kansas-Nebraska Act as achieving a complete reversal of the stance the Constitution, the Northwest Ordinance, and the founding generation had toward slavery: that it should be contained until it was abolished and by no means allowed to spread.

- Have students consider Abraham Lincoln’s arguments on how Roger Taney’s majority opinion in Dred Scott v. Sandford effectively ruled that slaves are not humans but property, and that the Constitution protects their enslavement just as it does any other property. Lincoln points out that Taney’s ruling rejected the Founders’ view on slavery and would lead, in tandem with Stephen Douglas’s popular sovereignty, to the spread of slavery throughout the country. By extension, this reasoning would also allow for any form of majority tyranny. Put another way, Taney’s argument in Dred Scott, the idea of “might makes right,” is the same argument that animated despotic regimes like Communist Russia, Fascist Italy, or Nazi Germany.

- Help students think through Lincoln’s understanding of the morality of slavery and its relationship to the founding ideas of America: that all men are created equal, have unalienable rights, and that legitimate government is based on the consent of the governed. Students should see that, although central to the Civil War, the practical question regarding the expansion of slavery ultimately turned on the moral status of slavery.

- Consider the apparently benign stance that Stephen Douglas takes in his position of popular sovereignty—that he does not care about what a group of people does regarding slavery so long as the majority opinion decides it. Students should be asked why this is problematic. Then read with students Abraham Lincoln’s response to Douglas in their seventh debate in which Lincoln shows the moral hollowness of Douglas’ argument.

- Have students consider the arguments by the South and by Abraham Lincoln regarding the idea of “states’ rights” and the constitutionality of secession, particularly by reading and discussing...
Abraham Lincoln’s first inaugural address. Students should understand that there is no such thing as a “state right,” since rights belong only to persons. States (as governments) possess powers (not rights), as outlined in their state and in the federal Constitution, which the states are to use to protect the rights and the common good of their citizens (including from encroachment by the federal government). Lincoln’s first inaugural address presents the case for how secession is unconstitutional and how he, having taken an oath in his office as president, can and must preserve the Constitution and Union.

- Explain that Abraham Lincoln’s first goal in fighting the Civil War was to preserve the Union. It is important that students understand Lincoln’s reasoning. He was against slavery and wanted it abolished, but his constitutional obligation was to preserve the Union. If he acted otherwise, he would violate the Constitution and the rule of law, becoming no better than the seceding states and forfeiting his moral authority as the defender of the rule of law. Students should also know that while Lincoln did not believe he could abolish slavery alone or that abolishing slavery was the purpose for fighting the war, he nonetheless believed, like many of the Founders, that the only way to abolish slavery would be if the Union were preserved.

- Read aloud in class the Emancipation Proclamation and teach students the technicalities Abraham Lincoln navigated in thinking of it, drawing it up, and the timing of its promulgation. He had to retain the border states, abide by the Constitution, achieve victory, and earn the support of public opinion in order for slaves to be effectively freed—and he did it all. Students should understand that Lincoln’s justification for freeing the slaves involved exercising his executive powers as commander-in-chief of the armed forces during an armed rebellion. This is why Lincoln only had the authority to apply the Emancipation Proclamation to those states in actual rebellion, why it could not be applied to slave-holding border states not in rebellion, and why he knew that after the war, an amendment to the Constitution would be necessary to bring emancipation to all the states and make it permanent.

- Have students read and hold a seminar conversation on the Gettysburg Address. It is a magnificent work of oratory, but it also gets at the heart of the American founding and the ideas that maintain the United States. It also shows the importance of defending and advancing those ideas, both in the Civil War and in our own day, as is incumbent on every American citizen.

- Read and have a seminar conversation about Abraham Lincoln’s second inaugural address. Lincoln addresses many topics within the speech, both reflecting on the war and outlining a plan for after the war. In some respects, this speech is “part two” of what Lincoln began to assert in the Gettysburg Address. One of the main ideas Lincoln suggests, however, is that the Civil War was a punishment for the whole nation. This punishment was not necessarily for the mere existence of slavery but because, unlike the founding generation, the nation had in the time since the founding not continued to work for the abolition of the evil of slavery. While no country will ever be perfect, a people should work to make sure its laws do not promote the perpetuation of a practice that violates the equal natural rights of its fellow citizens.

- While a further study of Reconstruction and civil rights will occur in Lesson 4, be sure to teach about the 13th Amendment outlawing slavery that Republicans introduced during the Civil War and the states ratified in 1865.

Strengthening Understanding: Post-Lesson Assignment

Assignment: Why did Abraham Lincoln and other abolitionists like Frederick Douglass believe the American founding condemned slavery? How did Lincoln and abolitionists overcome new challenges in support of slavery and against the founding in order eventually to abolish slavery? (1–2 paragraphs)
Unit 4 — Formative Quiz

Covering Lessons 1-2
10-15 minutes

DIRECTIONS: Answer each question in at least one complete sentence.

1. What was unique about America regarding private property?

2. What was unique about America regarding who makes law and who is subject to law?

3. How did Frederick Douglass’s views on the founding with respect to slavery change during his work for abolition?

4. How did John C. Calhoun reject the Founders on equality, natural rights, and the social contract?

5. What did the Emancipation Proclamation do? How was Abraham Lincoln able to justify, issue, and enforce it successfully?
Lesson 3 — Progressive Government

Lesson Objective

Students learn how the Progressive movement sought to bring about progress and improvement and in the process offered a critique of some founding principles and America’s constitutional order.

Online Courses for Teachers  | Online.Hillsdale.edu

- Introduction to the Constitution | Lecture 12
- Constitution 101 | Lectures 8 and 9
- Constitution 201 | Lectures 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, 10

Primary Sources

The following primary sources are potential readings for students. Teachers should use their discretion based on grade level ability in deciding which texts to share with students. The texts may be assigned for homework, read together in class, or simply read aloud by the teacher. Some texts include guiding reading questions to assist students in the event that the text is assigned for homework. Students should annotate the texts either in preparation for or during a seminar conversation. Teachers should not feel it necessary to assign all of the texts, especially in light of grade level considerations.

- “What Is Progress?” Woodrow Wilson
- War Message to Congress, Woodrow Wilson
- “The Study of Administration,” Woodrow Wilson
- Annual Message to Congress, 1944, Franklin Delano Roosevelt
- “The Inspiration of the Declaration,” Calvin Coolidge

Terms and Topics

- Progressivism
- relativism
- special interests
- monopolies
- direct democracy
- living Constitution
- politics
- administration
- expertise
- bureaucracy
- delegation
- 16th Amendment
- 17th Amendment
- 18th Amendment
- The New Deal
- Second Bill of Rights
- Great Society
- welfare
- libertarianism
- neoconservatism
- Reaganism
- populism
QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

- How did Progressives explain their argument that human nature, truth, and politics were inevitably evolving and improving over the course of history?
- How and why did the Progressives critique the Declaration of Independence, natural rights, and social contract theory?
- What were the Progressives’ conceptions of freedom, equality, and the role of government?
- Why did Progressives think about the power of special interests, monopolies, and the wealthy in politics?
- What social reforms did Progressives pursue to deal with problems of urbanization and industrialization?
- What were Progressives' goals in foreign policy? Why did they hold these views?
- In what ways did Progressives critique the Constitution as being too slow, mechanical, and at odds with itself?
- What were Progressives' early arguments for a “living Constitution”?
- Why did the Progressives critique the separation of powers and checks and balances?
- Why did Progressives believe that many of the Founders’ worries over the dangers of tyranny, and majority tyranny, were outdated, and thus that limits and checks on the government’s power were outdated?
- In what ways did Progressives promote direct democracy?
- What was government by expertise, and why did the Progressives think it was a good idea?
- How does the administrative bureaucracy often claim the formerly separated legislative, executive, and judicial branches all for itself?
- How has Congress delegated its legislative power to the administrative state?
- How did Progressives reimagine the presidency?
- Why did Franklin Roosevelt argue that rights are to be granted by the government according to the social conditions of the historical moment?
- How does this view of rights and their origin conform with or differ from the Founders’ understanding of rights?
- What was Franklin Roosevelt’s Second Bill of Rights? How did these rights differ from the Founders’ original Bill of Rights?
- What were the main ideas of Lyndon Johnson’s Great Society?
- What is welfare?
- For all of the following: what were their origins, how did they attempt to answer Progressivism, how are they distinct from one another, and how might the Founders respond to them?
  - libertarianism
  - neoconservatism
  - Reaganism
  - populism
- Questions from the U.S. Civics Test:
  - Question 5: How are changes made to the U.S. Constitution?
  - Question 32: Who elects U.S. senators?
  - Question 63: There are four amendments to the U.S. Constitution about who can vote. Describe one of them.
  - Question 71: Why is it important to pay federal taxes?
KEYS TO THE LESSON

The industrialization and urbanization that followed the Civil War in America brought a dramatic transformation to American life, business, and politics. New ideas about the role of government in light of many of these changes were imported from German philosophers and models of government. This movement known as Progressivism asserted that the economic changes since the American founding necessitated new functions by government. Moreover, the Progressive belief that human knowledge and morality had progressed since the founding generation meant that government could take on new purposes and powers as well.

Teachers might best plan and teach Progressive Government with emphasis on the following approaches:

- Lead students through considerations of how the Progressives judged the Founders to have been too focused on the individual and the value of private property ownership. As a nation without titles of nobility and class distinctions, the founders understood the great importance of the ability of all Americans to acquire and hold private property. But that was by no means the sole or primary objective of the American founding. The Progressives, however, argued that the founding (and the Constitution in particular) was designed solely to protect private property. The great changes in industry and the accumulation of capital had since then made the founding problematic by allowing too much power to become concentrated in the hands of wealthy industrialists and large businesses. Read with students Woodrow Wilson’s “What is Progress?” with these points in mind and make reference to this work throughout the lesson.

- Help students understand that the presence of large corporations may not have been an issue in and of itself so long as individuals were still free to seek their own material prosperity. The reason it was an issue for the Progressives was due to their second critique of the Founders, one that was more theoretical concerning the idea of rights. The Progressives rejected the Founders’ insistence that rights were natural, that they were part of what made one human, and that they existed only at the individual level. Instead, they maintained that rights were conditioned on social circumstances and belong to groups of people, usually organized by class. The problem with the Founders’ system of equal natural rights was that the equal protection of those rights now favored the wealthy and powerful. Progressives believed government should redefine rights according to class and group, and that government should not protect rights equally when it came to the wealthy and other “special interests.” Indeed, since rights were not based on natural personhood, they were derived instead from some other source as determined by government. This means that the possession of rights is controlled by government: they can be given but also taken away by government. Rejecting the Founders’ understanding of equal and unalienable rights grounded in human nature, the Progressive’s argued for changing rights that were controlled by government.

- Review with students the American Founders’ understanding of human nature. They understood human nature to be fixed and unchanging, good but also flawed and tending toward corrupting power. In response to human nature, government must guard against the opposite dangers of lawlessness and tyranny, accounting for the realities of human nature and rejecting the possibility of utopia. The Constitution, therefore, did not deny, demonize, or elevate human nature, but rather tried to channel the powers of human beings into constructive institutions while mitigating man’s baser tendencies. In brief, the Constitution was constructed on an understanding of fixed human nature born of the Founders’ knowledge of history, their own experience, and their prudence.
• Share with students that while both the Founders and Progressives believed in a moral foundation to politics, Progressives critiqued the above-mentioned view of human nature and government as too pessimistic and too simplistic. Progressives instead generally believed history to be evolving and automatically moving forward. That is, when looking on the technological gains, improvements in the standard of living, and the general pace of scientific discovery, Progressives believed that human beings, even human nature itself, would also improve and would be more likely to do what is right and good automatically. At the societal level, therefore, government ought to bring about that improvement and even aim to perfect human nature. Progressives disagreed with the Founders’ argument that government’s primary purpose was to secure unchanging rights and maintain a framework for self-government. Instead, they held that the purpose of government was to keep up with evolving rights and constant social change, what they called “progress.”

• Clarify with students that studying the philosophical, institutional, and political break that the Progressives made with the Founders does not mean that Progressives were wrong to highlight issues such as child labor, workplace and consumer safety, conservation, and monopolies, as the Founders also did. These are serious problems that ought to have been and should continue to be addressed. But students should consider the arguments surrounding the appropriate response, namely, whether it is the role of government to address these issues, or if private individuals, charities, businesses, consumers, churches, civic associations, and state and local governments are the proper entities to answer these problems, especially in light of students’ understanding of both the American founding and Progressivism.

• Make sure students appreciate the shift in the purpose and operation of government under such a view: government is no longer the defender of certain fundamental rights but otherwise limited to the basic functions (lawmaking, executing law, and adjudicating law) and core responsibilities (such as maintaining courts of law and the nation’s security) of government. Rather, government is to be the active force for change in America, bringing about personal fulfilment of individuals and progress for society. Moreover, these ends were not limited to merely domestic policies but were attainable also on the world stage in foreign affairs. Woodrow Wilson’s “War Message to Congress” articulates the spirit of Progressivism in foreign policy.

• The Progressives argued that the technical and time-consuming work of actually carrying out the broad, general ideas of the law—detailing how it is to be done, implementing the laws, and making sure they are enforced to achieve their objectives—is not the work of Congress or even the President but requires a new body of experts and bureaucrats to do the real work of governing (administration) outside of and not subject to politics. Congress would delegate some of its lawmaking power to these bureaucrats, most of whom would exist under the executive branch and so could also execute the “laws” or regulations they make (in this example, the clean air and water experts would make the specific details of the law). The president can delegate his power to enforce it. They often also are given judicial powers, and have their own courts to adjudicate claims against their own laws and regulations. This shift of legislative, executive, and judicial powers away from the branches in which these powers had been separately vested by the people through the Constitution, and its accumulation under various departments and agencies, amounts to the second great shift in the Progressive worldview: government needed to be rearranged through the creation of the administrative state to circumvent the processes of the Constitution and bring about “progress.”

• Ask students about the importance of this shift away from government by representatives of the people to government by bureaucratic expertise, including whether or not it stands against the principle of representative self-government on which the Founders established the United States. Other words to characterize this view is “government by bureaucracy” or “the administrative state.”

- Emphasize how the advent of the administrative state changed the Founders’ careful insistence that powers be separated and dispersed through the separation of powers, checks and balances, and federalism, not to mention government by elected representatives. All three types of government power (legislative, executive, and judicial) are instead consolidated into bureaucratic agencies that are, moreover, highly autonomous from the people. And all of this is in the name of efficiency: trusting in improved human nature and scientific expertise to achieve higher aims via government than the founding generation ever thought possible.

- Help students to understand the various changes the Progressives made to the functioning of the government. Include in this treatment the 16th, 17th, and 18th amendments, the initiative, the referendum, the recall, etc.

- Clarify for students that the chief long-term consequence of the New Deal was the expansion and formalization of the administrative state, its bureaucratic agencies and employees, and its extensive role in American life. Students should understand that Roosevelt justified such an aggressive political shift as a response to the Great Depression. By greatly expanding and centrally organizing many new aspects of government, the New Deal cemented the idea of government as expert administration. As Roosevelt said in his “Commonwealth Club Address,” the day of “enlightened administration” had arrived.

- Emphasize that Roosevelt saw the power of government not merely as a guarantor of the freedom to exercise natural rights but as actually guaranteeing economic conditions and assuring new economic rights. New entitlement programs guaranteed certain benefits to groups or segments of the population, and implied that individuals have a right to such government entitlements just as or even more important than their natural rights. Roosevelt argued (in his “Second Bill of Rights” speech) that the old rights guaranteed in the Constitution were inadequate and that America required a new economic bill of rights to guarantee employment, housing, medical care, social security, education, and even recreation. These ideas would inform future political debates over several decades.

- Note for students the effect that the New Deal had on federalism and the separation of powers. While the courts at first attempted to uphold limits on the powers of the federal government (by rejecting, for instance, attempts to delegate power to the bureaucracy), by the end of the New Deal the Supreme Court had abandoned attempts to restrict such limits, granting Congress vast authority to legislate about anything that pertained to economic activity. And in expanding its delegations of power to the bureaucracy, Congress in turn expanded the federal government’s power to regulate those activities.

- Present Lyndon Johnson’s Great Society as the third phase of Progressivism. The Great Society argued that government was not merely meant to preserve rights (as the Founders asserted), or even to achieve economic equality and fulfillment (as in early Progressivism and the New Deal). Taking Progressivism a step further, the Great Society sought to use government to achieve a kind of human fulfillment for groups of people. It sought to bring government action to areas previously not the realm of the federal government, such as public education.

- Conclude the lesson by surveying with students general constitutionalist interests, in the wake of the several progressive movements, to return the country to what they considered a proper respect and appreciation for the accomplishments of the American founding, its grounding in the principles of the Declaration of Independence, and its establishment of the rule of law and the forms of constitutional government. For these groups which may loosely be called the “conservative movement,” in particular was an emphasis on abiding by the Constitution as a ruling expression of the consent of the governed. This brought prominence to the appointment of judges and how they should be guided by the original meaning of the Constitution rather than reading the Constitution as a “living” document that evolves with time.

- Read with students Calvin Coolidge’s “The Inspiration of the Declaration” speech on the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence, and consider his description of the moral and intellectual grounding of the Declaration, in particular his statement that “If all men are created equal, that is final. If they are endowed with inalienable rights, that is final. If governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed, that is final. No advance, no progress can be made beyond these propositions.”

- Explain to students that the general tension within conservatism tend to concern the degree to which government is used to secure, encourage, or achieve constitutional principles, economic liberty, and the common good.

- Help students understand the following general constitutionalist approaches over the last several decades. Consider with students the extent to which each constitutionalist movement claimed to adhere to all or specific parts of the American founding, particularly through appeals to the Declaration of Independence and an originalist reading of the Constitution.
  - Libertarianism views government in the most limited sense: to securing the rule of law and economic contracts while permitting most other activities, regardless of their morality, so long as they do not immediately harm another.
  - William F. Buckley was critical of the New Deal and especially its socialist tendencies, and was also an advocate of churches, private associations, and the family.
  - Neoconservatism emerged as critics of the welfare state and the liberalization of social policy and advocates of a strong American foreign policy.
  - The New Right were especially concerned about social issues arising out of government policies (particularly as driven by the Supreme Court).
  - Ronald Reagan attempted to combine free-market economic concerns, the new concerns about matters of moral conduct, and concerns about America’s national security (especially in the midst of the Cold War). This new consensus sought to decrease the size of government (especially the federal government and its role in America’s economy) and reestablish Constitutional limits (especially to revive federalism) while asserting American principles and national strength on the world stage.
  - In recent years, some constitutionalist views have begun to emphasize what they consider to be more secure borders, economic nationalism, a moral outlook reflective of the founding generation, and an American-centric foreign policy.

STRENGTHENING UNDERSTANDING: POST-LESSON ASSIGNMENT

Assignment: What are the ways in which Progressives disagreed with the Founders? How might the Founders have replied? (1–2 paragraphs)
Lesson 4 — Civil Rights vs. Discriminatory Laws

Lesson Objective

Students learn about the various ways in which discriminatory laws were an affront to the principles of the Declaration of Independence and about the many successful efforts to change such laws.

Online Courses for Teachers | Online.Hillsdale.edu

- Civil Rights in American History Lectures 4, 5, 7, 8, 9
- The U.S. Supreme Court Lecture 8

Primary Sources

The following primary sources are potential readings for students. Teachers should use their discretion based on grade level ability in deciding which texts to share with students. The texts may be assigned for homework, read together in class, or simply read aloud by the teacher. Some texts include guiding reading questions to assist students in the event that the text is assigned for homework. Students should annotate the texts either in preparation for or during a seminar conversation. Teachers should not feel it necessary to assign all of the texts, especially in light of grade level considerations.

- Seneca Falls “Declaration of Sentiments and Resolutions,” Elizabeth Cady Stanton
- 13th Amendment to the Constitution
- 14th Amendment to the Constitution
- 15th Amendment to the Constitution
- “I Have a Dream,” Martin Luther King Jr.

Terms and Topics

- 19th Amendment
- Worcester v. Georgia
- Dawes Act
- Indian Citizenship Act
- nativism
- Chinese Exclusion Act
- melting pot
- Civil Rights Act of 1866
- 13th Amendment
- 14th Amendment
- 15th Amendment
- black codes
- Jim Crow
- segregation
- "separate but equal"
- discrimination
- civil rights
- civil rights movement
- “promissory note”
- color-blind
- Civil Rights Act of 1964
QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

- How has suffrage been expanded since the founding?
- To what did Elizabeth Cady Stanton appeal in the Seneca Falls Declaration?
- Compare Andrew Johnson’s Reconstruction actions and those of the Radical Republicans.
- Regarding the 13th, 14th, and 15th Amendments, what did each do?
- In which ways did former confederate states attempt to curtail the rights of freedmen during Reconstruction? How did they respond to the actions of Republicans in the north?
- What kinds of gains did African Americans attain during Reconstruction after slavery was explicitly abolished via the 13th Amendment?
- What were the immediate consequences, especially for African Americans living in the South, of the end to Reconstruction in 1877?
- What forms of discrimination were present during much of the twentieth century?
- What did Plessy v. Ferguson rule? To what did Justice Harlan appeal in his dissent?
- What did Brown v. Board of Education rule?
- How did Martin Luther King Jr. justify the civil rights movement with the Declaration of Independence and the principles of the American founding?
- What did King mean by the “promissory note”?
- In what ways and by what means did the civil rights movement seek to change laws?
- In what ways and by what means did the civil rights movement seek to change the private consciences of individuals?
- In considering the Founding and the two centuries that have passed since, how have the successes of the United States in equality, security, freedom, and prosperity compared to the successes or failures of other nations in these areas? To what extent do those countries’ founding principles and governing institutions resemble or differ from America’s?
- Questions from the U.S. Civics Test:
  - Question 63: There are four amendments to the U.S. Constitution about who can vote. Describe one of them.
  - Question 65: What are three rights of everyone living in the United States?
  - Question 97: What amendment gives citizenship to all persons born in the United States?
  - Question 98: When did all men get the right to vote?
  - Question 99: Name one leader of the women’s rights movement in the 1800s.
  - Question 102: When did all women get the right to vote?
  - Question 112: What did the civil rights movement do?
  - Question 113: Martin Luther King Jr. Is famous for many things. Name one.

KEYS TO THE LESSON

The story of Native American and African American civil rights has been one of failure, sacrifice, and eventual triumph in American history. Reconstruction was a period in which Congress attempted to secure civil rights for African Americans in accordance with the principles on which America was founded. The fact that the division over civil rights was largely though not exclusively along geographic lines and that it came in the wake of a bitter war meant for less than ideal circumstances for achieving long-term successes. Nonetheless, slavery was explicitly abolished by the Constitution and civil rights were enacted and guaranteed, albeit only by military force. The gains witnessed for African Americans were impressive in many respects, but racial ideologies and resentments left over from the Civil War made for a fraught effort to achieve civil rights and heal the country. It would take almost a century for the modern civil rights movement to achieve in law what the Declaration of Independence and Abraham Lincoln outlined for America, a movement led especially by Martin Luther King, Jr.

Teachers might best plan and teach Civil Rights vs. Discriminatory Laws with emphasis on the following approaches:

- Consider with students distinctions between discrimination on the part of an individual person and laws which are discriminatory. While this unit makes the personal moral appeal to each person to respect the inherent, equal human dignity of each person, its focus is on laws that were explicitly discriminatory. That is, the letter of the law favored one individual over another simply based on the shade of their skin or biological sex.
- Read with students Elizabeth Cady Stanton’s 1848 Seneca Falls “Declaration of Sentiments and Resolutions.” Note Stanton’s appeal to the principles of the Declaration to argue for women’s suffrage. The 19th Amendment secured the right to vote for women in 1920, though many states had secured women’s voting rights decades earlier.
- Trace with students the history of Native Americans and U.S. citizenship. Consider the numerous instances in which Native Americans were denied their rights and the great gains they have witnessed in having those rights secured through American history, including the various laws to make Native Americans citizens and the ways in which Native Americans retain their own status as nations. Pages 106-108 of American Government and Politics offers a strong overview of this history.
- Have students consider the effect of Abraham Lincoln’s assassination on Reconstruction and the future of America, especially as regards civil rights for African Americans. Lincoln’s focus was healing the nation while simultaneously providing for the effective and long-term establishment of equal rights for African Americans.
- The transformation of a society away from decades of slavery was no small task. Reconstruction was tragically undermined and strained by the conflicts between congressional Republicans (who strongly opposed slavery), President Andrew Johnson (a pro-Union Democrat with little sympathy for former slaves), and lawmakers in the Southern states (who mostly wished to restrict the rights of the new freedmen), all of whom operated out of distrust following a painful and bloody Civil War.
- Have students read the three amendments to the Constitution related to the abolition of slavery and citizenship of freedmen. It is important to note the major and meaningful efforts northern Republicans made to guarantee the rights of African Americans.
- Teach students about both the important gains and protections Republicans won for African Americans during Reconstruction as well as the ways in which these were undermined by actions in the former Confederate states and Andrew Johnson himself. Students should gain an appreciation for the remarkable speed and degrees to which former slaves were incorporated into the civil body early in Reconstruction, including the thousands of African Americans who would hold office at the local, state, and even federal level. But they should also understand the ways that Johnson resisted equal treatment of African Americans and in doing so encouraged and allowed certain policies, like “black codes” passed by state legislatures, and movements, such as what would become the Ku Klux Klan, in the former Confederacy. In fact, many of the reversals of reconstruction began during the presidential reconstruction of Johnson, who was decidedly against secession but by no means opposed to slavery. Congress repeatedly had to override his vetoes and enact Constitutional amendments to prevent his defense of inequalities.

- Have students learn about the ways in which many civil rights achievements were thwarted or undone both during and after Reconstruction. For instance, spend time discussing how as Southerners of European descent were franchised, African American officials were voted out of office and how “black codes” would eventually become Jim Crow laws. Discuss how “black codes” limited freedmen’s civil rights and imposed economic restrictions, including making being unemployed illegal, prohibiting landownership, requiring long-term labor contracts, prohibiting assemblies of freedmen only, prohibiting teaching freedmen to read or write, segregating public facilities, prohibiting freedmen from serving on juries, and carrying out corporal punishments for violators, among other restrictions and injustices. Note also the use of poll taxes and literacy tests to prohibit African Americans from voting.

- Cover how northern Republicans passed and President Ulysses S. Grant signed into law the Ku Klux Klan Acts to prohibit intimidation of freedmen exercising their civil rights. Grant also empowered the president to use the armed forces against those who tried to deny freedmen equal protection under the laws. Nonetheless, such measures were usually sloppily or half-heartedly enforced.

- At the same time, note the improvements during Reconstruction in building hospitals, creating a public school system, securing civil rights in principle, and fostering community within the freedmen community, especially in marital and family stability and through vibrant churches.

- Explain that Reconstruction effectively ended with the Compromise of 1877 that settled the disputed election of 1876. With southern Democrats back in Congress, they would allow Republican Rutherford B. Hayes to be declared president in exchange for withdrawing federal troops in former confederate states. Point out that in the backdrop was both continuing Southern resistance to civil rights and a gradual waning of Northern zeal for (and political interest in) reform within the South after twelve years.

- Ask students to consider the tragic nature of Reconstruction: a time of so much hoped for and achieved in applying the principle of equal natural rights was repeatedly undermined and mismanaged, then suddenly ended for political expediency, enabling new forms of injustice in certain areas of the country, after a war to end injustice had consumed the lives of hundreds of thousands of Americans.

- Nevertheless, make sure students do not lose sight of the momentous achievements in liberty, equality, and self-government fulfilled because of the Civil War. Students should appreciate the very significant achievements of Lincoln and the Civil War while looking forward to future generations of Americans who would seek to live up to the fundamental principles of America in their own times.

- In general, canvass with students various government actions related to voter participation, such as the 15th, 19th, and 26th Amendments, Jim Crow, and poll taxes. Students should consider how each of these changes affects voting and the practice of representative self-government.

- Explain to students how the Supreme Court argued in Plessy v. Ferguson that segregation based on race, so long as circumstances were the same, would be considered “equal.” Students should think about Justice Harlan’s dissent, however, which appealed to the understanding of equality as found in the Declaration in order to condemn the ruling.
• Help students to understand the significance of Brown v. Board of Education, especially once it was gradually enforced in the years following the decision. The court arrived at a judgment that aligned with the founding understanding of equality, even though it did not cite the founding principles but instead social science. Consider whether or not basing the decision on social science instead of the founding principles left open the possibility for government discrimination in different forms going forward.

• Consider with students the goals and means of the civil rights movement in the terms in which Martin Luther King Jr. set them. He argued that the civil rights movement was meant to redeem the “promissory note” of the Declaration of Independence and Reconstruction Amendments that founded America on an idea: that since all men are created equal, justice demands that the rule of law be applied equally to all citizens. The civil rights movement, in King’s view, thus carried on the legacy of the founders, Frederick Douglass, and Abraham Lincoln. The two primary sources from King outline this view, its ties to the natural law, and its appeals to the Christian roots of such a political philosophy.

• Spend time outlining what was meant by equality during the civil rights movement, both politically and philosophically. On the civil or political side, the civil rights movement’s appeal to equality in the Declaration of Independence demanded the equal application of the rule of law and the end to laws that established and enforced segregation and discrimination. The rights of all citizens were to be protected equally instead of protecting the rights of only some and not others based on the color of their skin. This was the great achievement of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. On the philosophical or moral side, Martin Luther King, Jr. also as a pastor called for a transformation in the heart of each American. For in addition to reforms in law, a color-blind society requires that each person would decide to view all people as equals in their humanity and rights.

• Clarify with students how the civil rights movement largely focused on the government’s resolve and ability, based on the principle of equality, to enforce equal treatment as opposed to the creation of equity, that is, to enforcing an equality of results and outcomes.

• Have students discuss and compare all of these achievements in light of America’s founding principles and history. Students should be asked to compare what America has achieved, ever since her founding, to the record of mankind up to and since the Declaration of Independence and Constitution. They should see clearly the many flaws in American history, but they should also see how it has been America’s principles and Americans sacrificing for them that have carried the day. Compared to the history of the world and to other nations, these achievements should strike students as exceptional. They should be asked to ponder what has made them possible and what might be risked if we forget, or worse yet, disavow the principles and people responsible for such degrees of equality, freedom, security, and prosperity. Students need not arrive at any one view, but they should at least entertain these kinds of questions.

STRENGTHENING UNDERSTANDING: POST-LESSON ASSIGNMENT

Assignment: Choose one of the main challenges to America’s founding principles studied in this lesson. Explain how it related to the principles of America (2-3 paragraphs).
APPENDIX A

Study Guide

Test

Writing Assignment
Study Guide — Challenging and Defending America’s Principles Test

TERMS AND TOPICS

Explain each of the following and the context in which it was discussed during this unit’s lessons.

religious tolerance
property rights
rule of law
consent of the governed suffrage immigration
equality
slavery
abolition
morality
majority tyranny
sectionalism
statesmanship
Kansas-Nebraska Act
Dred Scott v. Sandford
“a house divided”
popular sovereignty
moral relativism

“don’t care”
secession
states’ rights
Emancipation Proclamation
Progressivism
special interests
direct democracy
living Constitution
politics
administration expertise bureaucracy
delegation
16th Amendment
17th Amendment
The New Deal
Second Bill of Rights
Great Society
welfare
libertarianism
Reaganism
19th Amendment
Dawes Act
Indian Citizenship Act
13th Amendment
14th Amendment
15th Amendment
black codes
Jim Crow
segregation
“separate but equal”
discrimination
civil rights movement
“promissory note”
color-blind
Civil Rights Act of 1964

PRIMARY SOURCES

Explain the main arguments in each of the following sources and their significance to our understanding of challenges to and defenses of America’s principles.

Statements on slavery, George Washington, John Adams, Benjamin Franklin, Alexander Hamilton, James Madison
“The Constitution of the United States: Is It Pro-Slavery or Anti-Slavery?,” Frederick Douglass
The Emancipation Proclamation, Abraham Lincoln
Gettysburg Address, Abraham Lincoln
13th Amendment to the Constitution
“What Is Progress?” Woodrow Wilson
Seneca Falls “Declaration of Sentiments and Resolutions,” Elizabeth Cady Stanton
14th Amendment to the Constitution
15th Amendment to the Constitution
“I Have a Dream,” Martin Luther King Jr.
QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

Based on notes from lessons and seminar conversations, answer each of the following.

Lesson 1 | The Founding: The Exception to the Rule

☐ What was unique about America regarding religion?
☐ What was unique about America regarding private property?
☐ What was unique about America regarding immigration?
☐ What was unique about America regarding who makes law and who is subject to law?
☐ What was unique about America regarding voting?
☐ What was the nature of the Founders’ compromise with slavery at the time of the founding for the sake of the union? Would it have been possible to abolish slavery in the southern colonies without union?
☐ Why did many in the founding generation expect that slavery would eventually die out so long as it was not allowed to expand?
☐ What efforts did some founders make to abolish slavery?
☐ How was the Three-Fifth Compromise a partial victory for slaveholders and a partial victory for abolitionists?
☐ How did Frederick Douglass’s views on the founding with respect to slavery change during his work for abolition?

Lesson 2 | Abolitionism vs. Slavery

☐ What were the unforeseen consequences of the cotton gin, invented in 1793, four years after the adoption of the Constitution?
☐ How did the idea of slavery as a “positive good” challenge the Constitution’s stance on slavery and the path on which the founding generation had set slavery?
☐ How did John C. Calhoun reject the Founders on equality, natural rights, and the social contract?
☐ What did the Kansas-Nebraska Act and Dred Scott v. Sandford do, both in law and as a threat to public opinion on slavery at the time?
☐ How did Abraham Lincoln try to halt the expansion of slavery and win the moral battle against it?
☐ What were Abraham Lincoln’s arguments against moral neutrality or relativism (“don’t care”) on the question of slavery?
☐ What were the arguments for and against the Union fighting to keep the South from seceding?
☐ In what ways did Abraham Lincoln manifest the ideal qualities of a statesman and the virtue of prudence?
☐ How did Abraham Lincoln manage to accomplish his competing goals to maintain the union, preserve the Constitution and the rule of law, and end slavery?
☐ What did the Emancipation Proclamation do? How was Abraham Lincoln able to justify, issue, and enforce it successfully?
☐ How does Abraham Lincoln’s Gettysburg Address assert that freedom and self-government require devotion—and even a willingness to sacrifice for—the country and its principles of justice?
☐ As presented in his second inaugural address, how did Abraham Lincoln view the Civil War as a tragedy?
Lesson 3 | Progressive Government

- How did Progressives explain their argument that human nature, truth, and politics were inevitably evolving and improving over the course of history?
- What were the Progressives’ conceptions of freedom, equality, and the role of government?
- Why did Progressives think about the power of special interests, monopolies, and the wealthy in politics?
- What were Progressives’ goals in foreign policy? Why did they hold these views?
- In what ways did Progressives critique the Constitution as being too slow, mechanical, and at odds with itself?
- What were Progressives’ arguments for a “living Constitution”?
- Why did the Progressives critique the separation of powers and checks and balances?
- Why did Progressives believe that many of the Founders’ worries over the dangers of tyranny, and majority tyranny, were outdated, and thus that limits and checks on the government’s power were outdated?
- What was government by expertise, and why did the Progressives think it was a good idea?
- How does the administrative bureaucracy often claim the formerly separated legislative, executive, and judicial branches all for itself?
- How has Congress delegated its legislative power to the administrative state?
- How did Franklin Roosevelt argue that rights are to be granted by the government according to the social conditions of the historical moment?
- Why did Progressives reimagine the presidency?
- How does this view of rights and their origin differ from the Founders’ understanding of rights?
- What were the main ideas of Lyndon Johnson’s Great Society?
- How did Reaganism attempt to answer Progressivism?

Lesson 4 | Civil Rights vs. Discriminatory Laws

- How has suffrage been expanded since the founding?
- To what did Elizabeth Cady Stanton appeal in the Seneca Falls Declaration?
- Regarding the 13th, 14th, and 15th Amendments, what did each do?
- What kinds of gains did African Americans attain during Reconstruction after slavery was explicitly abolished via the 13th Amendment?
- What forms of discrimination were present during much of the twentieth century?
- What did Plessy v. Ferguson rule? To what did Justice Harlan appeal in his dissent?
- What did Brown v. Board of Education rule?
- How did Martin Luther King Jr. justify the civil rights movement with the Declaration of Independence and the principles of the American founding?
- What did King mean by the “promissory note”?
- In what ways did the civil rights movement seek to change laws?
- In what ways did the civil rights movement seek to change the private consciences of individuals?
Test — Challenging and Defending America’s Principles

TERMS AND TOPICS

Explain each of the following and the context in which it was discussed during this unit’s lessons.

1. property rights

2. statesmanship

3. “a house divided”

4. living Constitution

5. bureaucracy

6. The New Deal

7. Reaganism

8. segregation
PRIMARY SOURCES

Explain the main arguments in each of the following sources and their significance to our understanding of the challenges to and defenses of America’s principles.

10. “I Have a Dream,” Martin Luther King Jr.

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

Answer each of the following. Complete sentences are not necessary, but correct spelling and writing should be employed, and responses must fully answer each question.

11. What was the nature of the Founders’ compromise with slavery at the time of the founding for the sake of the union? Would it have been possible to abolish slavery in the southern colonies without union?

12. What efforts did some founders make to abolish slavery?
13. How did Abraham Lincoln try to halt the expansion of slavery and win the moral battle against it?

14. How did Abraham Lincoln manage to accomplish his competing goals to maintain the union, preserve the Constitution and the rule of law, and end slavery?

15. What were the Progressives’ conceptions of freedom, equality, and the role of government?

16. Why did Progressives believe that many of the Founders’ worries over the dangers of tyranny, and majority tyranny, were outdated, and thus that limits and checks on the government’s power were outdated?

17. How does the administrative bureaucracy often claim the formerly separated legislative, executive, and judicial branches all for itself?

18. What forms of discrimination were present during much of the twentieth century?

19. How did Martin Luther King Jr. justify the civil rights movement with the Declaration of Independence and the principles of the American founding?

20. In what ways and by what means did the civil rights movement seek to change the private consciences of individuals?
Writing Assignment — Challenging and Defending America’s Principles

DIRECTIONS

Citing primary sources and conversations from class in your argument, write a 4–5 paragraph essay answering the question:

How have America’s principles been challenged throughout its history and how have Americans appealed to the American founding in order to defend these principles against such challenges?

APPENDIX B

Primary Sources

George Washington

The Virginia General Assembly

Thomas Jefferson

James Madison

Alexander Hamilton

John Adams

Benjamin Franklin

The American People

The United States Congress

Frederick Douglass

John C. Calhoun

Abraham Lincoln

Woodrow Wilson

Franklin Delano Roosevelt

Calvin Coolidge

Elizabeth Cady Stanton

Martin Luther King Jr.
President George Washington

To the Hebrew Congregation in Newport

Letter

August 18, 1790
Newport, Rhode Island

Background

In his response to a congratulatory note sent by the congregation on the occasion of his election, George Washington expresses his gratitude and discusses religious liberty.

Guiding Questions

1. What has "toleration" been replaced with? What is the distinction Washington makes?

2. What natural rights does Washington refer to, and how are they to be protected?

Gentlemen:

While I receive, with much satisfaction, your Address replete with expressions of esteem; I rejoice in the opportunity of assuring you, that I shall always retain grateful remembrance of the cordial welcome I experienced in my visit to Newport, from all classes of Citizens.

The reflection on the days of difficulty and danger which are past is rendered the more sweet, from a consciousness that they are succeeded by days of uncommon prosperity and security. If we have wisdom to make the best use of the advantages with which we are now favored, we cannot fail, under the just administration of a good Government, to become a great and happy people.

The Citizens of the United States of America have a right to applaud themselves for having given to mankind examples of an enlarged and liberal policy: a policy worthy of imitation. All possess alike liberty of conscience and immunities of citizenship. It is now no more that toleration is spoken of, as if it was by the indulgence of one class of people, that another enjoyed the exercise of their inherent natural rights. For happily the Government of the United States, which gives to bigotry no sanction, to persecution no assistance requires only that they who live under its protection should demean themselves as good citizens, in giving it on all occasions their effectual support.

It would be inconsistent with the frankness of my character not to avow that I am pleased with your favorable opinion of my Administration and fervent wishes for my felicity. May the Children of the Stock of Abraham, who dwell in this land, continue to merit and enjoy the good will of the other Inhabitants; while every one shall sit in safety under his own vine and figtree, and there shall be none to make him afraid. May the father of all mercies scatter light and not darkness in our paths, and make us all in our several vocations useful here, and in his own due time and way everlastingly happy.
THOMAS JEFFERSON
Statute for Religious Freedom

DRAFT BILL

1777
Virginia

BACKGROUND

This 1777 draft bill was the blueprint for one eventually passed in Virginia in 1786, and was one of three actions for which Thomas Jefferson wanted credited mentioned on his tombstone, in addition to being author of the Declaration of Independence and founder of the University of Virginia.

GUIDING QUESTIONS

1. What has Almighty God given man with respect to his mind?

2. What does this statute say are the problems with compelled contributions of money to religion?

3. What particular right of man does this statute protect?

I. Well aware that the opinions and belief of men depend not on their own will but follow involuntarily the evidence proposed to their minds; that Almighty God hath created the mind free; and manifested his supreme will that free it shall remain by making it altogether insusceptible of restraint; that all attempts to influence it by temporal punishments, or burdens, or by civil incapacitations, tend only to beget habits of hypocrisy and meanness, and are a departure from the plan of the holy author of our religion, who being lord both of body and mind, yet chose not to propagate it by coercions on either, as was in his Almighty power to do but to extend it by its influence on reason alone; that the impious presumption of legislators and rulers, civil as well as ecclesiastical, who, being themselves but fallible and uninspired men, have assumed dominion over the faith of others, setting up their own opinions and modes of thinking as the only true and infallible, and as such endeavoring to impose them on others, hath established and maintained false religions over the greatest part of the world and through all time: That to compel a man to furnish contributions of money for the propagation of opinions which he disbelieves and abhors, is sinful and tyrannical; that even the forcing him to support this or that teacher of his own religious persuasion, is depriving him of the comfortable liberty of giving his contributions to the particular pastor whose morals he would make his pattern, and whose powers he feels most persuasive to righteousness and is withdrawing from the ministry those temporary rewards, which proceeding from an approbation of their personal conduct, are an additional incitement to earnest and unremitting labors for the instruction of mankind; that our civil rights have no dependence on our religious opinions, any more than our opinions in physics or geometry; that therefore the proscribing any citizen as unworthy the public confidence by laying upon him an incapacity of being called to offices of trust and emolument, unless he profess or renounce this or that religious opinion, is depriving him injuriously of those privileges and advantages to which, in common with his fellow citizens, he has a natural right; that it tends also to corrupt the principles of that religion it is meant to encourage, by bribing, with a monopoly of worldly honors and emoluments, those who will externally profess and conform to it; that though indeed these are criminal who do not withstand such temptation, yet neither are those innocent who lay the bait in their way that the opinions of men are not the object of civil government, nor under its jurisdiction; that to suffer the civil magistrate to intrude his powers into the field of opinion and to restrain the profession or propagation of principles on supposition of their ill tendency is a dangerous fallacy, which at once destroys all religious liberty, because he being of course judge of that tendency will make his opinions the rule of judgement, and approve or condemn the senttiments of others only as they shall square with or differ from his own; that it is time enough for the rightful purposes of civil government for its officers to interfere when principles break out into overt acts against peace and good order; and finally, that truth is great and will prevail if left to herself; that she is the proper and sufficient antagonist to error, and has nothing to fear from the conflict unless by human interposition disarmed of her natural weapons, free argument and debate; errors ceasing to be dangerous when it is permitted freely to contradict them.

II. We the General Assembly of Virginia do enact, that no man shall be compelled to frequent or support any religious worship, place, or ministry whatsoever, nor shall be enforced, restrained, molested, or burdened in his body or goods, nor shall otherwise suffer, on account of his religious opinions or belief; but that all men shall be free to profess, and by argument to maintain, their opinions in matters of religion, and that the same shall in no wise diminish, enlarge, or affect their civil capacities.

And though we well know that this Assembly, elected by the people for the ordinary purposes of legislation only, have no power to restrain the acts of succeeding Assemblies, constituted with powers equal to our own, and that therefore to declare this act to be irrevocable would be of no effect in law; yet we are free to declare, and do declare, that the rights hereby asserted are of the natural rights of mankind, and that if any act shall be hereafter passed to repeal the present or to narrow its operation, such act will be an infringement of natural right.
PRESIDENT THOMAS JEFFERSON (DEMOCRATIC-REPUBLICAN)

To the Danbury Baptist Association

LETTER

January 1, 1802
Danbury, Connecticut

BACKGROUND

President Thomas Jefferson responds to the Danbury Baptist Association's request that as president, he aid them in overcoming laws inhibiting religious liberty in Connecticut.

GUIDING QUESTIONS

1. How does Jefferson interpret the First Amendment's Establishment and Free Exercise clauses?

2. Given the principle of federalism, what, as president, is Jefferson able to do for the Association?

Gentlemen:

The affectionate sentiments of esteem and approbation which you are so good as to express towards me, on behalf of the Danbury Baptist Association, give me the highest satisfaction. My duties dictate a faithful and zealous pursuit of the interests of my constituents, and in proportion as they are persuaded of my fidelity to those duties, the discharge of them becomes more and more pleasing. Believing with you that religion is a matter which lies solely between man and his God, that he owes account to none other for his faith or his worship, that the legislative powers of government reach actions only, and not opinions, I contemplate with sovereign reverence that act of the whole American people which declared that their legislature should "make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof," thus building a wall of separation between Church and State. Adhering to this expression of the supreme will of the nation in behalf of the rights of conscience, I shall see with sincere satisfaction the progress of those sentiments which tend to restore to man all his natural rights, convinced he has no natural right in opposition to his social duties.

I reciprocate your kind prayers for the protection and blessing of the common Father and Creator of man, and tender you for yourselves and your religious association, assurances of my high respect and esteem.
REP. JAMES MADISON (VA)

“Property”

ESSAY

March 27, 1792

The National Gazette | Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

BACKGROUND

James Madison included this essay as part of a series of articles he wrote for The National Gazette in the early years of American government under the Constitution.

GUIDING QUESTIONS

1. What are the two senses of the word "property" according to Madison?

2. In what way can man’s rights, opinions, and the use of his faculties be his property?

3. According to Madison, what must a government do to secure the various senses of property?

---

This term in its particular application means “that dominion which one man claims and exercises over the external things of the world, in exclusion of every other individual.”

In its larger and juster meaning, it embraces every thing to which a man may attach a value and have a right; and which leaves to every one else the like advantage.

In the former sense, a man’s land, or merchandise, or money is called his property.

In the latter sense, a man has a property in his opinions and the free communication of them.

He has a property of peculiar value in his religious opinions, and in the profession and practice dictated by them.

He has a property very dear to him in the safety and liberty of his person.

He has an equal property in the free use of his faculties and free choice of the objects on which to employ them.

In a word, as a man is said to have a right to his property, he may be equally said to have a property in his rights.

Where an excess of power prevails, property of no sort is duly respected. No man is safe in his opinions, his person, his faculties, or his possessions.

Where there is an excess of liberty, the effect is the same, though from an opposite cause.

Government is instituted to protect property of every sort; as well that which lies in the various rights of individuals, as that which the term particularly expresses. This being the end of government, that alone is a just government, which impartially secures to every man, whatever is his own.

According to this standard of merit, the praise of affording a just securing to property, should be sparingly bestowed on a government which, however scrupulously guarding the possessions of individuals, does not protect them in the enjoyment and communication of their opinions, in which they have an equal, and in the estimation of some, a more valuable property.

More sparingly should this praise be allowed to a government, where a man’s religious rights are violated by penalties, or fettered by tests, or taxed by a hierarchy. Conscience is the most sacred of all property; other property depending in part on positive law, the exercise of that, being a natural and unalienable right. To guard a man’s house as his castle, to pay public and enforce private debts with the most exact faith, can give no title to invade a man’s conscience which is more sacred than his castle, or to withhold from it that debt of protection, for which the public faith is pledged, by the very nature and original conditions of the social pact.

That is not a just government, nor is property secure under it, where the property which a man has in his personal safety and personal liberty, is violated by arbitrary seizures of one class of citizens for the service of the rest. A magistrate issuing his warrants to a press gang, would be in his proper functions in Turkey or Indostan, under appellations proverbial of the most complete despotism.

That is not a just government, nor is property secure under it, where arbitrary restrictions, exemptions, and monopolies deny to part of its citizens that free use of their faculties, and free choice of their occupations, which not only constitute their property in the general sense of the word; but are the means of acquiring property strictly so called. What must be the spirit of legislation where a manufacturer of linen cloth is forbidden to bury his own child in a linen shroud, in order to favor his neighbour who manufactures woolen cloth; where the manufacturer and wearer of woolen cloth are again forbidden the economical use of buttons of that material, in favor of the manufacturer of buttons of other materials!

A just security to property is not afforded by that government, under which unequal taxes oppress one species of property and reward another species: where arbitrary taxes invade the domestic sanctuaries of the rich, and excessive taxes grind the faces of the poor; where the keenness and competitions of want are deemed an insufficient spur to labor, and taxes are again applied, by an unfeeling policy, as another spur; in violation of that sacred property, which Heaven, in decreeing man to earn his bread by the sweat of his brow, kindly reserved to him, in the small repose that could be spared from the supply of his necessities.

If there be a government then which prides itself in maintaining the inviolability of property; which provides that none shall be taken directly even for public use without indemnification to the owner, and yet directly violates the property which individuals have in their opinions, their religion, their persons, and their faculties; nay more, which indirectly violates their property, in their actual possessions, in the labor that acquires their daily subsistence, and in the hallowed remnant of time which ought to relieve their fatigues and soothe their cares, the influence will have been anticipated, that such a government is not a pattern for the United States.

If the United States mean to obtain or deserve the full praise due to wise and just governments, they will equally respect the rights of property, and the property in rights: they will rival the government that most sacredly guards the former; and by repelling its example in violating the latter, will make themselves a pattern to that and all other governments.
LUCIUS CRASSUS (ALEXANDER HAMILTON)
The Examination Number VII

BACKGROUND

Alexander Hamilton wrote this article examining President Thomas Jefferson’s message to Congress at the beginning of his presidency.

GUIDING QUESTIONS

1. According to Hamilton, what are the several principles that ought to govern immigration?

---

The next exceptionable feature in the Message, is the proposal to abolish all restriction on naturalization, arising from a previous residence. In this the President is not more at variance with the concurrent maxims of all commentators on popular governments, than he is with himself. The Notes on Virginia are in direct contradiction to the Message, and furnish us with strong reasons against the policy now recommended. The passage alluded to is here presented: Speaking of the population of America, Mr. Jefferson there says, “Here I will beg leave to propose a doubt. The present desire of America, is to produce rapid population, by as great importations of foreigners as possible. But is this founded in good policy?” “Are there no inconveniences to be thrown into the scale, against the advantage expected from a multiplication of numbers, by the importation of foreigners? It is for the happiness of those united in society, to harmonize as much as possible, in matters which they must of necessity transact together. Civil government being the sole object of forming societies, its administration must be conducted by common consent. Every species of government has its specific principles: Ours, perhaps, are more peculiar than those of any other in the universe. It is a composition of the freest principles of the English Constitution, with others, derived from natural right and reason. To these, nothing can be more opposed than the maxims of absolute monarchies. Yet from such, we are to expect the greatest number of emigrants. They will bring with them the principles of the governments they leave, imbibed in their early youth; or if able to throw them off, it will be in exchange for an unbounded licentiousness, passing as is usual, from one extreme to another. It would be a miracle were they to stop precisely at the point of temperate liberty. Their principles with their language, they will transmit to their children. In proportion to their numbers, they will share with us in the legislation. They will infuse into it their spirit, warp and bias its direction, and render it a heterogeneous, incoherent, distracted mass. I may appeal to experience, during the present contest, for a verification of these conjectures: but if they be not certain in event, are they not possible, are they not probable? Is it not safer to wait with patience for the attainment of any degree of population desired or expected? May not our government be more homogeneous, more peaceable, more durable? Suppose 20 millions of republican Americans, thrown all of a sudden into France, what would be the condition of that kingdom? If it would be more turbulent, less happy, less strong, we may believe that the addition of half a million of foreigners, to our present numbers, would produce a similar effect here.” Thus wrote Mr. Jefferson in 1781….

…The impolicy of admitting foreigners to an immediate and unreserved participation in the right of suffrage, or in the sovereignty of a Republic, is as much a received axiom as any thing in the science of politics, and is verified by the experience of all ages. Among other instances, it is known, that hardly any thing contributed more to the downfall of Rome, than her precipitate communication of the privileges of citizenship to the inhabitants of Italy at large. And how terribly was Syracuse scourged by perpetual seditions, when, after the overthrow of the tyrants, a great number of foreigners were suddenly admitted to the rights of citizenship? Not only does ancient but modern, and even domestic history furnish evidence of what may be expected from the dispositions of foreigners, when they get too early footing in a country. Who wields the sceptre of France, and has erected a Despotism on the ruins of a Republic? A foreigner. Who rules the councils of our own ill-fated, unhappy country? And who stimulates persecution on the heads of its citizens, for daring to maintain an opinion, and for exercising the rights of suffrage? A foreigner! Where is the virtuous pride that once distinguished Americans? Where the indignant spirit which in defence of principle, hazarded a revolution to attain that independence now insidiously attacked?

LUCIUS CRASSUS
Statements on Slavery
EXCERPTS FROM FIVE FOUNDERS
1786-1819

BACKGROUND
The following excerpts catalog views of five leading Founders on the slave trade and the institution of slavery in America during the first few decades of the country’s existence.

ANNOTATIONS

George Washington
Letter to Robert Morris, April 12, 1786
"...[T]here is not a man living who wishes more sincerely than I do, to see a plan adopted for the abolition of it...."

John Adams
Letter to Robert J. Evans, June 8, 1819
"...Every measure of prudence, therefore, ought to be assumed for the eventual total extirpation of slavery from the United States.... I have, through my whole life, held the practice of slavery in...abhorrence...."

Benjamin Franklin

An Address to the Public from the Pennsylvania Society, November 9, 1789

"...Slavery is such an atrocious debasement of human nature, that its very extirpation, if not performed with solicitous care, may sometimes open a source of serious evils...."

Alexander Hamilton

Philo Camillus no. 2, August 1795

"...The laws of certain states which give an ownership in the service of negroes as personal property, constitute a similitude between them and other articles of personal property, and thereby subject them to the right of capture by war. But being men, by the laws of God and nature, they were capable of acquiring liberty—and when the captor in war, to whom by the capture the ownership was transferred, thought fit to give them liberty, the gift was not only valid, but irrevocable...."

James Madison

Speech at the Constitutional Convention, June 6, 1787

"...We have seen the mere distinction of color made in the most enlightened period of time, a ground of the most oppressive dominion ever exercised by man over man...."
Query XVIII: Manners

CHAPTER FROM NOTES ON THE STATE OF VIRGINIA

May 1785

Paris, France

BACKGROUND

GUIDING QUESTIONS

1. How did the institution of slavery harm both the enslaved and their masters?

2. Why does Jefferson fear God’s wrath?

3. What does Jefferson think of the prospects for an end to slavery?

The particular customs and manners that may happen to be received in that state?

It is difficult to determine on the standard by which the manners of a nation may be tried, whether catholic or particular. It is more difficult for a native to bring to that standard the manners of his own nation, familiarized to him by habit. There must doubtless be an unhappy influence on the manners of our people produced by the existence of slavery among us. The whole commerce between master and slave is a perpetual exercise of the most boisterous passions, the most unremitting despotism on the one part, and degrading submissions on the other. Our children see this, and learn to imitate it; for man is an imitative animal. This quality is the germ of all education in him. From his cradle to his grave he is learning to do what he sees others do. If a parent could find no motive either in his philanthropy or his self-love, for restraining the intemperance of passion towards his slave, it should always be a sufficient one that his child is present. But generally it is not sufficient. The parent storms, the child looks on, catches the lineaments of wrath, puts on the same airs in the circle of smaller slaves, gives a loose to the worst of passions, and thus nursed, educated, and daily exercised in tyranny, cannot but be stamped by it with odious peculiarities. The man must be a prodigy who can retain his manners and morals undepraved by such circumstances. And with what execration should the statesman be loaded, who, permitting one half the citizens thus to trample on the rights of the other, transforms those into despots, and these into enemies, destroys the morals of the one part, and the amor patriae of the other. For if a slave can have a country in this world, it must be any other in preference to that in which he is born to live and labor for another; in which he must lock up the faculties of his nature, contribute as far as depends on his individual endeavors to the evanishment of the human race, or entail his own miserable condition on the endless generations proceeding from him. With the morals of the people, their industry also is destroyed. For in a warm climate, no man will labor for himself who can make another labor for him. This is so true, that of the proprietors of slaves a very small proportion indeed are ever seen to labor. And can the liberties of a nation be thought secure when we have removed their only firm basis, a conviction in the minds of the people that these liberties are of the gift of God? That they are not to be violated but with His wrath? Indeed I tremble for my country when I reflect that God is just; that his justice cannot sleep forever; that considering numbers, nature and natural means only, a revolution of the wheel of fortune, an exchange of situation is among possible events; that it may become probable by supernatural interference! The Almighty has no attribute which can take side with us in such a contest. But it is impossible to be temperate and to pursue this subject through the various considerations of policy, of morals, of history natural and civil. We must be contented to hope they will force their way into every one's mind. I think a change already perceptible, since the origin of the present revolution. The spirit of the master is abating, that of the slave rising from the dust, his condition mollifying, the way I hope preparing, under the auspices of heaven, for a total emancipation, and that this is disposed, in the order of events, to be with the consent of the masters, rather than by their extirpation.
A DECLARATION By the REPRESENTATIVES of the UNITED STATES of AMERICA, in «GENERAL» CONGRESS ASSEMBLED

When in the Course of human Events it becomes necessary for one People to dissolve the Political Bands which have connected them with another, and to assume among the Powers of the Earth the separate & equal Station to which the Laws of Nature and of Nature's God entitle them, a decent Respect to the Opinions of Mankind requires that they should declare the causes which impel them to the Separation.

We hold these Truths to be self-evident, that all Men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with inherent and unalienable Rights, that among these are Life,
Liberty, & the Pursuit of Happiness: —That to secure these Rights, Governments are instituted among Men, deriving their just Powers from the Consent of the governed; that whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these Ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or abolish it, & to institute new Government, laying it’s Foundation on such Principles, & organizing it’s Powers in such Form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their Safety & Happiness. Prudence indeed will dictate that Governments long established should not be changed for light & transient Causes; and accordingly all Experience hath shown that Mankind are more disposed to suffer, while Evils are sufferable, than to right themselves by abolishing the Forms to which they are accustomed. But when a long Train of Abuses & Usurpations begun at a distinguished period and pursuing invariably the same Object, evinces a Design to reduce them under absolute Despotism, it is their Right, it is their Duty to throw off such Government, & to provide new Guards for their future Security. Such has been the patient Sufferance of these Colonies; & such is now the Necessity which constrains them to expunge «alter» their former Systems of Government. The History of the present King of Great-Britain is a History of unremitting «repeated» Injuries & Usurpations, among which appears no solitary fact to contradict the uniform tenor of the rest but all have «all having» in direct Object the Establishment of an absolute Tyranny over these States. To prove this, let facts be submitted to a candid World for the truth of which we pledge a faith yet unsullied by falsehood.

He has refused his Assent to Laws, the most wholesome & necessary for the public Good.

He has dissolved Representative Houses repeatedly, & continually for opposing with manly Firmness his Invasions on the Rights of the People.

He has refused for a long Time, after such Dissolutions, to cause others to be elected, whereby the Legislative Powers, incapable of Annihilation, have returned to the People at large for their exercise; the State remaining in the meantime exposed to all the Dangers of Invasion from without, & Convulsions within.
He has endeavored to prevent the Population of these states; for that Purpose obstructing the laws for Naturalization of Foreigners; refusing to pass others to encourage their Migrations hither, & raising the Conditions of new Appropriations of Lands.

He has made our Judges dependent on his Will alone, for the Tenure of their Offices, & the Amount & payment of their Salaries.

He has erected a Multitude of new Offices by a self assumed power and sent hither Swarms of new Officers to harass our People and eat out their Substance.

He has kept among us in Times of Peace, Standing Armies, and ships of war without the consent of our Legislatures.

He has affected to render the Military independent of, & superior to the Civil power.

He has combined with others to subject us to a Jurisdiction foreign to our Constitution, & unacknowledged by our Laws; giving his Assent to their Acts of pretended Legislation:
For quartering large Bodies of Armed Troops among us:
For protecting them, by a mock-Trial, from Punishment for any Murders which they should commit on the Inhabitants of these States:
For cutting off our Trade with all Parts of the World:
For imposing Taxes on us without our consent:
For depriving us «, in many Cases,» of the Benefits of Trial by Jury:
For transporting us beyond Seas to be tried for pretended Offences:
For abolishing the free System of English Laws in a neighboring Province, establishing therein an arbitrary Government, and enlarging it's Boundaries, so as to render it at once an Example and fit Instrument for introducing the same absolute Rule into these states «Colonies»:
For taking away our Charters, abolishing our most valuable Laws, and altering fundamentally the Forms of our Governments:
For suspending our own Legislatures, & declaring themselves invested with Power to legislate for us in all Cases whatsoever.
He has abdicated Government here by withdrawing his governors, and declaring us out of his allegiance & protection «declaring us out of his Protection, and Waging war against us.» He has plundered our Seas, ravaged our Coasts, burnt our towns, & destroyed the Lives of our People.

He is, at this time Transporting large Armies of foreign Mercenaries to complete the works of Death, Desolation & Tyranny, already begun with circumstances of Cruelty and Perfidy «scarcely paralleled in the most barbarous Ages, & totally» unworthy the Head of a civilized Nation. He has constrained our fellow Citizens taken Captive on the high Seas to bear Arms against their Country, to become the Executioners of their Friends & Brethren, or to fall themselves by their Hands. He has «excited domestic Insurrections amongst us, & has» endeavored to bring on the Inhabitants of our Frontiers, the merciless Indian Savages, whose known Rule of Warfare, is an undistinguished Destruction, of all Ages, Sexes, & Conditions of existence. He has incited treasonable insurrections of our fellow-citizens, with the allurements of forfeiture & confiscation of our property. He has waged cruel war against human nature itself, violating it's most sacred rights of life and liberty in the persons of a distant people who never offended him, captivating & carrying them into slavery in another hemisphere, or to incur miserable death in their transportation thither. This piratical warfare, the opprobrium of INFIDEL powers, is the warfare of the CHRISTIAN king of Great Britain. Determined to keep open a market where MEN should be bought & sold, he has prostituted his negative for suppressing every legislative attempt to prohibit or to restrain this execrable commerce. And that this assemblage of horrors might want no fact of distinguished die, he is now exciting those very people to rise in arms among us, and to purchase that liberty of which he has deprived them, by murdering the people on whom he also obtruded them: thus paying off former crimes committed against the LIBERTIES of one people, with crimes which he urges them to commit against the LIVES of another. In every stage of these Oppressions we have Petitioned for Redress in the most humble Terms: Our repeated Petitions have been answered only by repeated Injury. A Prince whose Character is thus marked by every act which may define a Tyrant, is unfit to be the Ruler of a «free» People who mean to be free. Future ages will scarcely believe that the hardness of one man adventured, within the short compass of twelve years only, to lay a foundation so broad & so undisguised for tyranny over a people fostered & fixed in principles of freedom.

Nor have we been wanting in Attentions to our British Brethren. We have warned them from Time to Time of Attempts by their Legislature to extend a «an unwarrantable» jurisdiction over these our states «us». We have reminded them of the Circumstances of our Emigration & Settlement here, no one of which could warrant so strange a pretension: that these were effected at the expense of our own blood & treasure, unassisted by the wealth or the strength of Great Britain: that in constituting indeed our several forms of government, we had adopted one common king, thereby laying a foundation for perpetual league & amity with them: but that submission to their parliament was no part of our constitution, nor ever in idea, if history may be credited: and. We have appealed to their native Justice and Magnanimity as well as to «, and we have conjured them by» the Ties of our common Kindred to disavow these Usurpations, which were likely to«, would inevitably» interrupt our Connection and Correspondence. They too have been deaf to the Voice of Justice & of Consanguinity, and when occasions have been given them, by the regular course of their laws, of removing from their councils the disturbers of our harmony, they have, by their free election, re-established them in power. At this very time too they are permitting their chief magistrate to send over not only soldiers of our common blood, but Scotch & foreign mercenaries to invade & destroy us. These facts have given the last stab to agonizing affection, and manly spirit bids us to renounce forever these unfeeling brethren. We must endeavor to forget our former love for them, and hold them as we hold the rest of mankind, enemies in war, in peace friends. We might have been a free and a great people together; but a communication of grandeur & of freedom it seems is below their dignity. Be it so, since they will have it. The road to happiness & to glory is open to us too. We will tread it apart from them, and «. We must therefore» acquiesce in the Necessity which denounces our eternal Separation «, and hold them, as we hold the rest of Mankind, Enemies in War, in Peace, Friends!»

We, therefore, the Representatives of the UNITED STATES OF AMERICA in General Congress Assembled,«appealing to the Supreme Judge of the World for the Rectitude of our Intentions,» do, in the name, & by the Authority of the good People of these states reject and renounce all allegiance and subjection to the kings of Great Britain and all others who may hearafter claim by, through or under them; we utterly dissolve all political connection which may heretofore have subsided between us and the people or parliament of Great Britain: and finally we do assert and declare these colonies to be free and independent states, «Colonies, solemnly Publish and Declare, That these United Colonies are, and are of Right to be, Free and Independent States; that they are absolved from all Allegiance to the British Crown, and that all political Connection between them and the State of Great-Britain is and ought to be totally dissolved;» & that as Free & Independent States, they have full Power to levy War, conclude Peace, contract Alliances, establish Commerce & to do all other Acts & Things which Independent States may of right do. And for the support of this declaration, «with a firm Reliance on the Protection of divine Providence,» we mutually pledge to each other our lives, our Fortunes, & our sacred Honor.
THE U.S. CONGRESS OF THE CONFEDERATION

An Ordinance for the Government of the Territory of the United States
Northwest of the River Ohio

LAW EXCERPT

July 13, 1787
Federal Hall | New York City, New York

BACKGROUND

Congress passed the Northwest Ordinance to provide the governing structure for all of the territories of the young United States, lands that would later become the states of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, and Wisconsin.

ANNOTATIONS

Article III

Religion, morality, and knowledge being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, schools and the means of education shall forever be encouraged. The utmost good faith shall always be observed towards the Indians; their lands and property shall never be taken from them without their consent; and in their property, rights, and liberty they never shall be invaded or disturbed unless in just and lawful wars authorized by Congress; but laws founded in justice and humanity shall, from time to time, be made, for preventing wrongs being done to them, and for preserving peace and friendship with them....

BACKGROUND

Delegates to the Constitutional Convention drafted and the states ratified this Constitution, forming the second national government for the United States of America.

ANNOTATIONS

Preamble

We the People of the United States, in Order to form a more perfect Union, establish Justice, insure domestic Tranquility, provide for the common defense, promote the general Welfare, and secure the Blessings of Liberty to ourselves and our Posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America.

Article I

Section 1. All legislative Powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives.

Section 2. The House of Representatives shall be composed of Members chosen every second Year by the People of the several States, and the Electors in each State shall have the Qualifications requisite for Electors of the most numerous Branch of the State Legislature.

No person shall be a Representative who shall not have attained to the Age of twenty five Years, and been seven Years a Citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected,
be an Inhabitant of that State in which he shall be chosen.

Representatives and direct Taxes shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union, according to their respective Numbers, which shall be determined by adding to the whole Number of free Persons, including those bound to Service for a Term of Years, and excluding Indians not taxed, three fifths of all other Persons. The actual Enumeration shall be made within three Years after the first Meeting of the Congress of the United States, and within every subsequent Term of ten Years, in such Manner as they shall by Law direct. The Number of Representatives shall not exceed one for every thirty Thousand, but each State shall have at Least one Representative; and until such enumeration shall be made, the State of New Hampshire shall be entitled to choose three, Massachusetts eight, Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations one, Connecticut five, New-York six, New Jersey four, Pennsylvania eight, Delaware one, Maryland six, Virginia ten, North Carolina five, South Carolina five, and Georgia three.

When vacancies happen in the Representation from any State, the Executive Authority thereof shall issue Writs of Election to fill such Vacancies.

The House of Representatives shall choose their Speaker and other Officers; and shall have the sole Power of Impeachment.

Section 3. The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the Legislature thereof, for six Years; and each Senator shall have one Vote.

Immediately after they shall be assembled in Consequence of the first Election, they shall be divided as equally as may be into three Classes. The Seats of the Senators of the first Class shall be vacated at the Expiration of the second Year, of the second Class at the Expiration of the fourth Year, and of the third Class at the Expiration of the sixth Year, so that one third may be chosen every second Year; and if Vacancies happen by Resignation, or otherwise, during the Recess of the Legislature of any State, the Executive thereof may make temporary Appointments until the next Meeting of the Legislature, which shall then fill such Vacancies.
No Person shall be a Senator who shall not have attained to the Age of thirty Years, and been nine Years a Citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an Inhabitant of that State for which he shall be chosen.

The Vice President of the United States shall be President of the Senate, but shall have no Vote, unless they be equally divided.

The Senate shall choose their other Officers, and also a President pro tempore, in the Absence of the Vice President, or when he shall exercise the Office of President of the United States.

The Senate shall have the sole Power to try all Impeachments. When sitting for that Purpose, they shall be on Oath or Affirmation. When the President of the United States is tried, the Chief Justice shall preside: And no Person shall be convicted without the Concurrence of two thirds of the Members present.

Judgment in Cases of Impeachment shall not extend further than to removal from Office, and disqualification to hold and enjoy any Office of honor, Trust or Profit under the United States: but the Party convicted shall nevertheless be liable and subject to Indictment, Trial, Judgment and Punishment, according to Law.

Section 4. The Times, Places and Manner of holding Elections for Senators and Representatives, shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by Law make or alter such Regulations, except as to the Places of choosing Senators.

The Congress shall assemble at least once in every Year, and such Meeting shall be on the first Monday in December, unless they shall by Law appoint a different Day.

Section 5. Each House shall be the Judge of the Elections, Returns and Qualifications of its own Members, and a Majority of each shall constitute a Quorum to do Business; but a smaller Number may adjourn from day to day, and may be authorized to compel the Attendance of absent Members, in such Manner, and under such Penalties as each House may provide.
Each House may determine the Rules of its Proceedings, punish its Members for disorderly Behavior, and, with the Concurrence of two thirds, expel a Member.

Each House shall keep a Journal of its Proceedings, and from time to time publish the same, excepting such Parts as may in their Judgment require Secrecy; and the Yeas and Nays of the Members of either House on any question shall, at the Desire of one fifth of those Present, be entered on the Journal.

Neither House, during the Session of Congress, shall, without the Consent of the other, adjourn for more than three days, nor to any other Place than that in which the two Houses shall be sitting.

Section 6. The Senators and Representatives shall receive a Compensation for their Services, to be ascertained by Law, and paid out of the Treasury of the United States. They shall in all Cases, except Treason, Felony and Breach of the Peace, be privileged from Arrest during their Attendance at the Session of their respective Houses, and in going to and returning from the same; and for any Speech or Debate in either House, they shall not be questioned in any other Place.

No Senator or Representative shall, during the Time for which he was elected, be appointed to any civil Office under the Authority of the United States, which shall have been created, or the Emoluments whereof shall have been encreased during such time; and no Person holding any Office under the United States, shall be a Member of either House during his Continuance in Office.

Section 7. All Bills for raising Revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives; but the Senate may propose or concur with Amendments as on other Bills.

Every Bill which shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate, shall, before it become a Law, be presented to the President of the United States; If he approve he shall sign it, but if not he shall return it, with his Objections to that House in which it shall have originated, who shall enter the Objections at large on their Journal, and proceed to reconsider it. If after such Reconsideration two thirds of that House shall agree to pass the Bill, it shall be sent, together with the Objections, to the other House, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered, and if approved by two thirds of that House, it shall become a Law. But in all such Cases the Votes of both Houses shall be determined by yeas and Nays, and the Names of the Persons voting for and against the Bill shall be entered on the Journal of each House respectively. If any Bill shall not be returned by the President within ten days (Sundays excepted) after it shall have been presented to him, the Same shall be a Law, in like Manner as if he had signed it, unless the Congress by their Adjournment prevent its Return in which Case it shall not be a Law.

Every Order, Resolution, or Vote to which the Concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary (except on a question of Adjournment) shall be presented to the President of the United States; and before the Same shall take Effect, shall be approved by him, or being disapproved by him, shall be repassed by two thirds of the Senate and House of Representatives, according to the Rules and Limitations prescribed in the Case of a Bill.

Section 8. The Congress shall have Power To lay and collect Taxes, Duties, Imposts and Excises, to pay the Debts and provide for the common Defense and general Welfare of the United States; but all Duties, Imposts and Excises shall be uniform throughout the United States;

To borrow Money on the credit of the United States;

To regulate Commerce with foreign Nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian Tribes;

To establish an uniform Rule of Naturalization, and uniform Laws on the subject of Bankruptcies throughout the United States;

To coin Money, regulate the Value thereof, and of foreign Coin, and fix the Standard of Weights and Measures;

To provide for the Punishment of counterfeiting the Securities and current Coin of the United States;

To establish Post Offices and post Roads;
The United States Constitution

To promote the Progress of Science and useful Arts, by securing for limited Times to Authors and Inventors the exclusive Right to their respective Writings and Discoveries;

To constitute Tribunals inferior to the supreme Court;

To define and punish Piracies and Felonies committed on the high Seas, and Offenses against the Law of Nations;

To declare War, grant Letters of Marque and Reprisal, and make Rules concerning Captures on Land and Water;

To raise and support Armies, but no Appropriation of Money to that Use shall be for a longer Term than two Years;

To provide and maintain a Navy;

To make Rules for the Government and Regulation of the land and naval Forces;

To provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions;

To provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia, and for governing such Part of them as may be employed in the Service of the United States, reserving to the States respectively, the Appointment of the Officers, and the Authority of training the Militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress;

To exercise exclusive Legislation in all Cases whatsoever, over such District (not exceeding ten Miles square) as may, by Cession of particular States, and the Acceptance of Congress, become the Seat of the Government of the United States, and to exercise like Authority over all Places purchased by the Consent of the Legislature of the State in which the Same shall be, for the Erection of Forts, Magazines, Arsenals, dock-Yards, and other needful Buildings;—And

To make all Laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into Execution the foregoing Powers, and all other Powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any Department or Officer thereof.
Section 9. The Migration or Importation of such Persons as any of the States now existing shall think proper to admit, shall not be prohibited by the Congress prior to the Year one thousand eight hundred and eight, but a Tax or duty may be imposed on such Importation, not exceeding ten dollars for each Person.

The Privilege of the Writ of Habeas Corpus shall not be suspended, unless when in Cases of Rebellion or Invasion the public Safety may require it.

No Bill of Attainder or ex post facto Law shall be passed.

No Capitation, or other direct, Tax shall be laid, unless in Proportion to the Census or Enumeration herein before directed to be taken.

No Tax or Duty shall be laid on Articles exported from any State.

No Preference shall be given by any Regulation of Commerce or Revenue to the Ports of one State over those of another: nor shall Vessels bound to, or from, one State, be obliged to enter, clear, or pay Duties in another.

No Money shall be drawn from the Treasury, but in Consequence of Appropriations made by Law; and a regular Statement and Account of the Receipts and Expenditures of all public Money shall be published from time to time.

No Title of Nobility shall be granted by the United States: And no Person holding any Office of Profit or Trust under them, shall, without the Consent of the Congress, accept of any present, Emolument, Office, or Title, of any kind whatever, from any King, Prince, or foreign State.

Section 10. No State shall enter into any Treaty, Alliance, or Confederation; grant Letters of Marque and Reprisal; coin Money; emit Bills of Credit; make any Thing but gold and silver Coin a Tender in Payment of Debts; pass any Bill of Attainder, ex post facto Law, or Law impairing the Obligation of Contracts, or grant any Title of Nobility.

No State shall, without the Consent of the Congress, lay any Imposts or Duties on Imports or Exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing its inspection Laws: and the net Produce of all Duties and Imposts, laid by any State on Imports or Exports, shall be for the Use of the Treasury of the United States; and all such Laws shall be subject to the Revision and Control of the Congress.

No State shall, without the Consent of Congress, lay any duty of Tonnage, keep Troops, or Ships of War in time of Peace, enter into any Agreement or Compact with another State, or with a foreign Power, or engage in War, unless actually invaded, or in such imminent Danger as will not admit of delay.

Article II

Section 1. The executive Power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America. He shall hold his Office during the Term of four Years, and, together with the Vice-President chosen for the same Term, be elected as follows:

Each State shall appoint, in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a Number of Electors, equal to the whole Number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress: but no Senator or Representative, or Person holding an Office of Trust or Profit under the United States, shall be appointed an Elector. The Electors shall meet in their respective States, and vote by Ballot for two Persons, of whom one at least shall not be an Inhabitant of the same State with themselves. And they shall make a List of all the Persons voted for, and of the Number of Votes for each; which List they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the Seat of the Government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate. The President of the Senate shall, in the Presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the Certificates, and the Votes shall then be counted. The Person having the greatest Number of Votes shall be the President, if such Number be a Majority of the whole Number of Electors appointed; and if there be more than one who have such Majority, and have an equal Number of Votes, then the House of Representatives shall immediately choose by Ballot one of them for President; and if no Person have a Majority, then from the five highest on the List the said House shall in like Manner choose the President. But in choosing the President, the Votes shall be taken by States, the Representation from each State having one Vote; a quorum for this Purpose shall consist of a Member or Members from two thirds of the States, and a Majority of all the States shall be necessary to a Choice. In every Case, after the Choice of the President, the Person having the greatest Number of Votes of the Electors shall be the Vice President. But if there should remain two or more who have equal Votes, the Senate shall choose from them by Ballot the Vice President.

The Congress may determine the Time of choosing the Electors, and the Day on which they shall give their Votes; which Day shall be the same throughout the United States.

No Person except a natural born Citizen, or a Citizen of the United States, at the time of the Adoption of this Constitution, shall be eligible to the Office of President; neither shall any Person be eligible to that Office who shall not have attained to the Age of thirty-five Years, and been fourteen Years a Resident within the United States.

In Case of the Removal of the President from Office, or of his Death, Resignation, or Inability to discharge the Powers and Duties of the said Office, the Same shall devolve on the Vice President, and the Congress may by Law provide for the Case of Removal, Death,
Resignation or Inability, both of the President and Vice President, declaring what Officer shall then act as President, and such Officer shall act accordingly, until the Disability be removed, or a President shall be elected.

The President shall, at stated Times, receive for his Services, a Compensation, which shall neither be increased nor diminished during the Period for which he shall have been elected,
and he shall not receive within that Period any other Emolument from the United States,
or any of them.

Before he enter on the Execution of his Office, he shall take the following Oath or Affirmation:—"I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully execute the Office of President of the United States, and will to the best of my Ability, preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States."

Section 2. The President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and of the Militia of the several States, when called into the actual Service of the United States; he may require the Opinion, in writing, of the principal Officer in each of the executive Departments, upon any subject relating to the Duties of their respective Offices, and he shall have Power to grant Reprieves and Pardons for Offenses against the United States, except in Cases of Impeachment.

He shall have Power, by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate, to make Treaties, provided two thirds of the Senators present concur; and he shall nominate, and by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate, shall appoint Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls, Judges of the supreme Court, and all other Officers of the United States, whose Appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by Law: but the Congress may by Law vest the Appointment of such inferior Officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the Courts of Law, or in the Heads of Departments.

The President shall have Power to fill up all Vacancies that may happen during the Recess of the Senate, by granting Commissions which shall expire at the End of their next Session.

Section 3. He shall from time to time give to the Congress Information of the State of the Union, and recommend to their Consideration such Measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient; he may, on extraordinary Occasions, convene both Houses, or either of them, and in Case of Disagreement between them, with Respect to the Time of Adjournment, he may adjourn them to such Time as he shall think proper; he shall receive Ambassadors and other public Ministers; he shall take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed, and shall Commission all the Officers of the United States.

Section 4. The President, Vice President and all civil Officers of the United States, shall be removed from Office on Impeachment for, and Conviction of, Treason, Bribery, or other high Crimes and Misdemeanors.

Article III

Section 1. The judicial Power of the United States, shall be vested in one supreme Court, and in such inferior Courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The Judges, both of the supreme and inferior Courts, shall hold their Offices during good Behavior, and shall, at stated Times, receive for their Services a Compensation, which shall not be diminished during their Continuance in Office.

Section 2. The judicial Power shall extend to all Cases, in Law and Equity, arising under this Constitution, the Laws of the United States, and Treaties made, or which shall be made, under their Authority;—to all Cases affecting Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls;—to all Cases of admiralty and maritime Jurisdiction; —to Controversies to which the United States shall be a Party;—to Controversies between two or more States;—between a State and Citizens of another State;—between Citizens of different States;—between Citizens of the same State claiming Lands under Grants of different States, and between a State, or the Citizens thereof, and foreign States, Citizens or Subjects.

In all Cases affecting Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls, and those in which a State shall be Party, the supreme Court shall have original Jurisdiction. In all the other Cases before mentioned, the supreme Court shall have appellate Jurisdiction, both as to Law and Fact, with such Exceptions, and under such Regulations as the Congress shall make.

The Trial of all Crimes, except in Cases of Impeachment, shall be by Jury; and such Trial shall be held in the State where the said Crimes shall have been committed; but when not committed within any State, the Trial shall be at such Place or Places as the Congress may by Law have directed.

Section 3. Treason against the United States, shall consist only in levying War against them, or in adhering to their Enemies, giving them Aid and Comfort. No Person shall be convicted of Treason unless on the Testimony of two Witnesses to the same overt Act, or on Confession in open Court.

The Congress shall have Power to declare the Punishment of Treason, but no Attainder of Treason shall work Corruption of Blood, or Forfeiture except during the Life of the Person attainted.
Article IV

Section 1. Full Faith and Credit shall be given in each State to the public Acts, Records, and judicial Proceedings of every other State. And the Congress may by general Laws prescribe the Manner in which such Acts, Records and Proceedings shall be proved, and the Effect thereof.

Section 2. The Citizens of each State shall be entitled to all Privileges and Immunities of Citizens in the several States.

A Person charged in any State with Treason, Felony, or other Crime, who shall flee from Justice, and be found in another State, shall on Demand of the executive Authority of the State from which he fled, be delivered up, to be removed to the State having Jurisdiction of the Crime.

No Person held to Service or Labor in one State, under the Laws thereof, escaping into another, shall, in Consequence of any Law or Regulation therein, be discharged from such Service or Labor, but shall be delivered up on Claim of the Party to whom such Service or Labor may be due.

Section 3. New States may be admitted by the Congress into this Union; but no new State shall be formed or erected within the Jurisdiction of any other State; nor any State be formed by the Junction of two or more States, or parts of States, without the Consent of the Legislatures of the States concerned as well as of the Congress.

The Congress shall have Power to dispose of and make all needful Rules and Regulations respecting the Territory or other Property belonging to the United States; and nothing in this Constitution shall be so construed as to Prejudice any Claims of the United States, or of any particular State.

Section 4. The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a Republican Form of Government, and shall protect each of them against Invasion; and on Application of the Legislature, or of the Executive (when the Legislature cannot be convened) against domestic Violence.
Article V

The Congress, whenever two thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose Amendments to this Constitution, or, on the Application of the Legislatures of two thirds of the several States, shall call a Convention for proposing Amendments, which, in either Case, shall be valid to all Intents and Purposes, as Part of this Constitution, when ratified by the Legislatures of three fourths of the several States, or by Conventions in three fourths thereof, as the one or the other Mode of Ratification may be proposed by the Congress; Provided that no Amendment which may be made prior to the Year One thousand eight hundred and eight shall in any Manner affect the first and fourth Clauses in the Ninth Section of the first Article; and that no State, without its Consent, shall be deprived of its equal Suffrage in the Senate.

Article VI

All Debts contracted and Engagements entered into, before the Adoption of this Constitution, shall be as valid against the United States under this Constitution, as under the Confederation.

This Constitution, and the Laws of the United States which shall be made in Pursuance thereof; and all Treaties made, or which shall be made, under the Authority of the United States, shall be the supreme Law of the Land; and the Judges in every State shall be bound thereby, any Thing in the Constitution or Laws of any State to the Contrary notwithstanding.

The Senators and Representatives before mentioned, and the Members of the several State Legislatures, and all executive and judicial Officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by Oath or Affirmation, to support this Constitution; but no religious Test shall ever be required as a Qualification to any Office or public Trust under the United States.
Article VII

The Ratification of the Conventions of nine States, shall be sufficient for the Establishment of this Constitution between the States so ratifying the Same.

Done in Convention by the Unanimous Consent of the States present the Seventeenth Day of September in the Year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and Eighty seven and of the Independence of the United States of America the Twelfth In witness whereof We have hereunto subscribed our Names.

George Washington—

President and deputy from Virginia

Delaware

George Read, Gunning Bedford, Jr., John Dickinson, Richard Bassett, Jacob Broom

Maryland

James McHenry, Daniel of St. Thomas Jenifer, Daniel Carroll

Virginia

John Blair, James Madison, Jr.

North Carolina

William Blount, Richard Dobbs Spaight, Hugh Williamson

South Carolina

John Rutledge, Charles Cotesworth Pinckney, Charles Pinckney, Pierce Butler
Georgia

William Few, Abraham Baldwin

New Hampshire

John Langdon, Nicholas Gilman

Massachusetts

Nathaniel Gorham, Rufus King

Connecticut

William Samuel Johnson, Roger Sherman

New York

Alexander Hamilton

New Jersey

William Livingston, David Brearley, William Paterson, Jonathan Dayton

Pennsylvania

Benjamin Franklin, Thomas Mifflin, Robert Morris, George Clymer, Thomas FitzSimmons, Jared Ingersoll, James Wilson, Gouverneur Morris

Attest William Jackson Secretary
Amendments to the Constitution of the United States of America

Amendment I

Ratified December 15, 1791

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

Amendment II

Ratified December 15, 1791

A well regulated Militia, being necessary to the security of a free State, the right of the people to keep and bear Arms, shall not be infringed.

Amendment III

Ratified December 15, 1791

No Soldier shall, in time of peace be quartered in any house, without the consent of the Owner, nor in time of war, but in a manner to be prescribed by law.

Amendment IV

Ratified December 15, 1791

The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no Warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by Oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized.
Amendment V

Ratified December 15, 1791

No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the Militia, when in actual service in time of War or public danger; nor shall any person be subject for the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb; nor shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation.

Amendment VI

Ratified December 15, 1791

In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law, and to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation; to be confronted with the witnesses against him; to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor, and to have the Assistance of Counsel for his defense.

Amendment VII

Ratified December 15, 1791

In Suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved, and no fact tried by a jury, shall be otherwise re-examined in any Court of the United States, than according to the rules of the common law.
Amendment VIII

Ratified December 15, 1791

Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted.

Amendment IX

Ratified December 15, 1791

The enumeration in the Constitution, of certain rights, shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people.

Amendment X

Ratified December 15, 1791

The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.

Amendment XI

Ratified February 7, 1795

The Judicial power of the United States shall not be construed to extend to any suit in law or equity, commenced or prosecuted against one of the United States by Citizens of another State, or by Citizens or Subjects of any Foreign State.

Amendment XII

Ratified June 15, 1804

The Electors shall meet in their respective states and vote by ballot for President and Vice-President, one of whom, at least, shall not be an inhabitant of the same state with themselves; they shall name in their ballots the person voted for as President, and in distinct ballots the person voted for as Vice-President, and they shall make distinct lists of all persons voted for as President, and of all persons voted for as Vice-President, and of the number of votes for each, which lists they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the seat of the government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate;—the President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and the votes shall then be counted;—The person having the greatest number of votes for President, shall be the President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of Electors appointed; and if no person have such majority, then from the persons having the highest numbers not exceeding three on the list of those voted for as President, the House of Representatives shall choose immediately, by ballot, the President.

But in choosing the President, the votes shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote; a quorum for this purpose shall consist of a member or members from two-thirds of the states, and a majority of all the states shall be necessary to a choice. And if the House of Representatives shall not choose a President whenever the right of choice shall devolve upon them, before the fourth day of March next following, then the Vice-President shall act as President, as in the case of the death or other constitutional disability of the President.—The person having the greatest number of votes as Vice-President, shall be the Vice-President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of Electors appointed, and if no person have a majority, then from the two highest numbers on the list, the Senate shall choose the Vice-President; a quorum for the purpose shall consist of two-thirds of the whole number of Senators, and a majority of the whole number shall be necessary to a choice. But no person constitutionally ineligible to the office of President shall be eligible to that of Vice-President of the United States.

Amendment XIII

Ratified December 6, 1865

Section 1. Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction.

Section 2. Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.
Amendment XIV

Ratified July 9, 1868

Section 1. All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

Section 2. Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed. But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice-President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the Executive and Judicial officers of a State, or the members of the Legislature thereof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State, being twenty-one years of age, and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion, or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens twenty-one years of age in such State.

Section 3. No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice-President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath, as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability.
Section 4. The validity of the public debt of the United States, authorized by law, including debts incurred for payment of pensions and bounties for services in suppressing insurrection or rebellion, shall not be questioned. But neither the United States nor any State shall assume or pay any debt or obligation incurred in aid of insurrection or rebellion against the United States, or any claim for the loss or emancipation of any slave; but all such debts, obligations and claims shall be held illegal and void.

Section 5. The Congress shall have power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article.

Amendment XV

Ratified February 3, 1870

Section 1. The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

Section 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Amendment XVI

Ratified February 3, 1913

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several States, and without regard to any census or enumeration.

Amendment XVII

Ratified April 8, 1913

The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, elected by the people thereof, for six years; and each Senator shall have one vote. The electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislatures.
When vacancies happen in the representation of any State in the Senate, the executive authority of such State shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies: Provided, That the legislature of any State may empower the executive thereof to make temporary appointments until the people fill the vacancies by election as the legislature may direct.

This amendment shall not be so construed as to affect the election or term of any Senator chosen before it becomes valid as part of the Constitution.

Amendment XVIII

Ratified January 16, 1919

Section 1. After one year from the ratification of this article the manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof for beverage purposes is hereby prohibited.

Section 2. The Congress and the several States shall have concurrent power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Section 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress.

Amendment XIX

Ratified August 18, 1920

The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of sex.

Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.
Amendment XX

Ratified January 23, 1933

Section 1. The terms of the President and the Vice President shall end at noon on the 20th day of January, and the terms of Senators and Representatives at noon on the 3rd day of January, of the years in which such terms would have ended if this article had not been ratified; and the terms of their successors shall then begin.

Section 2. The Congress shall assemble at least once in every year, and such meeting shall begin at noon on the 3rd day of January, unless they shall by law appoint a different day.

Section 3. If, at the time fixed for the beginning of the term of the President, the President elect shall have died, the Vice President elect shall become President. If a President shall not have been chosen before the time fixed for the beginning of his term, or if the President elect shall have failed to qualify, then the Vice President elect shall act as President until a President shall have qualified; and the Congress may by law provide for the case wherein neither a President elect nor a Vice President shall have qualified, declaring who shall then act as President, or the manner in which one who is to act shall be selected, and such person shall act accordingly until a President or Vice President shall have qualified.

Section 4. The Congress may by law provide for the case of the death of any of the persons from whom the House of Representatives may choose a President whenever the right of choice shall have devolved upon them, and for the case of the death of any of the persons from whom the Senate may choose a Vice President whenever the right of choice shall have devolved upon them.

Section 5. Sections 1 and 2 shall take effect on the 15th day of October following the ratification of this article.

Section 6. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States within seven years from the date of its submission.
Amendment XXI

Ratified December 5, 1933

Section 1. The eighteenth article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States is hereby repealed.

Section 2. The transportation or importation into any State, Territory, or possession of the United States for delivery or use therein of intoxicating liquors, in violation of the laws thereof, is hereby prohibited.

Section 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by conventions in the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress.

Amendment XXII

Ratified February 27, 1951

Section 1. No person shall be elected to the office of the President more than twice, and no person who has held the office of President, or acted as President, for more than two years of a term to which some other person was elected President shall be elected to the office of President more than once. But this Article shall not apply to any person holding the office of President when this Article was proposed by the Congress, and shall not prevent any person who may be holding the office of President, or acting as President, during the term within which this Article becomes operative from holding the office of President or acting as President during the remainder of such term.

Section 2. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States within seven years from the date of its submission to the States by the Congress.
Amendment XXIII

Ratified March 29, 1961

Section 1. The District constituting the seat of Government of the United States shall appoint in such manner as the Congress may direct:

A number of electors of President and Vice President equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives in Congress to which the District would be entitled if it were a State, but in no event more than the least populous State; they shall be in addition to those appointed by the States, but they shall be considered, for the purposes of the election of President and Vice President, to be electors appointed by a State; and they shall meet in the District and perform such duties as provided by the twelfth article of amendment.

Section 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Amendment XXIV

Ratified January 23, 1964

Section 1. The right of citizens of the United States to vote in any primary or other election for President or Vice President, for electors for President or Vice President, or for Senator or Representative in Congress, shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or any State by reason of failure to pay any poll tax or other tax.

Section 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Amendment XXV

Ratified February 10, 1967

Section 1. In case of the removal of the President from office or of his death or resignation, the Vice President shall become President.

Section 2. Whenever there is a vacancy in the office of the Vice President, the President shall nominate a Vice President who shall take office upon confirmation by a majority vote of both Houses of Congress.
Section 3. Whenever the President transmits to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives his written declaration that he is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office, and until he transmits to them a written declaration to the contrary, such powers and duties shall be discharged by the Vice President as Acting President.

Section 4. Whenever the Vice President and a majority of either the principal officers of the executive departments or of such other body as Congress may by law provide, transmit to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives their written declaration that the President is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office, the Vice President shall immediately assume the powers and duties of the office as Acting President.

Thereafter, when the President transmits to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives his written declaration that no inability exists, he shall resume the powers and duties of his office unless the Vice President and a majority of either the principal officers of the executive department or of such other body as Congress may by law provide, transmit within four days to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives their written declaration that the President is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office. Thereupon Congress shall decide the issue, assembling within forty-eight hours for that purpose if not in session.

If the Congress, within twenty-one days after receipt of the latter written declaration, or, if Congress is not in session, within twenty-one days after Congress is required to assemble, determines by two-thirds vote of both Houses that the President is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office, the Vice President shall continue to discharge the same as Acting President; otherwise, the President shall resume the powers and duties of his office.
Amendment XXVI

Ratified July 1, 1971

Section 1. The right of citizens of the United States, who are eighteen years of age or older, to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of age.

Section 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Amendment XXVII

Ratified May 7, 1992

No law varying the compensation for the services of the Senators and Representatives shall take effect, until an election of Representatives shall have intervened.
FREDERICK DOUGLASS

The Constitution of the United States: Is It Pro-Slavery or Anti-Slavery

SPEECH

March 26, 1860
Scottish Anti-Slavery Society | Glasgow, Scotland

BACKGROUND

Former slave and abolitionist Frederick Douglass delivered this speech before the Scottish Anti-Slavery Society responding to the question of whether the U.S. Constitution supported or opposed slavery.

GUIDING QUESTIONS

1. In which ways does Douglass disagree with other abolitionists, such as William Lloyd Garrison?

2. What evidence does Douglass cite from the founding that has formed his understanding?

3. What is Douglass’ main argument against dissolving the Union over the issue of slavery?

Frederick Douglass, Selected Speeches and Writings, ed. Philip S. Foner (Chicago: Lawrence Hill, 1999), 188-206.
I proceed to the discussion. And first a word about the question. Much will be gained at the outset if we fully and clearly understand the real question under discussion. Indeed, nothing is or can be understood. This are often confounded and treated as the same, for no better reason than that they resemble each other, even while they are in their nature and character totally distinct and even directly opposed to each other. This jumbling up things is a sort of dust-throwing which is often indulged in by small men who argue for victory rather than for truth.

Thus, for instance, the American Government and the American Constitution are spoken of in a manner which would naturally lead the hearer to believe that one is identical with the other; when the truth is, they are distinct in character as is a ship and a compass. The one may point right and the other steer wrong. A chart is one thing, the course of the vessel is another. The Constitution may be right, the Government is wrong. If the Government has been governed by mean, sordid, and wicked passions, it does not follow that the Constitution is mean, sordid, and wicked.

What, then, is the question?...

The real and exact question between myself and the class of persons represented by the speech at the City Hall may be fairly stated thus: — 1st, Does the United States Constitution guarantee to any class or description of people in that country the right to enslave, or hold as property, any other class or description of people in that country? 2nd, Is the dissolution of the union between the slave and free States required by fidelity to the slaves, or by the just demands of conscience? Or, in other words, is the refusal to exercise the elective franchise, and to hold office in America, the surest, wisest, and best way to abolish slavery in America?

To these questions the Garrisonians say Yes. They hold the Constitution to be a slaveholding instrument, and will not cast a vote or hold office, and denounce all who vote or hold office, no matter how faithfully such persons labour to promote the abolition of slavery. I, on the other hand, deny that the Constitution guarantees the right to hold property in man, and believe that the way to abolish slavery in America is to vote such men into power as will use their powers for the abolition of slavery. This is the issue plainly stated, and you shall judge between us…. It should also be borne in mind that the intentions of those who framed the Constitution, be they good or bad, for slavery or against slavery, are so respected so far, and so far only, as we find those intentions plainly stated in the Constitution. It would be the wildest of absurdities, and lead to endless confusion and mischiefs, if, instead of looking to the written paper itself, for its meaning, it were attempted to make us search it out, in the secret motives, and dishonest intentions, of some of the men who took part in writing it. It was what they said that was adopted by the people, not what they were ashamed or afraid to say, and really omitted to say….

I repeat, the paper itself, and only the paper itself, with its own plainly written purposes, is the Constitution. It must stand or fall, flourish or fade, on its own individual and self-declared character and objects. Again, where would be the advantage of a written Constitution, if, instead of seeking its meaning in its words, we had to seek them in the secret intentions of individuals who may have had something to do with writing the paper?...What then? Shall we condemn the righteous law because wicked men twist it to the support of wickedness? Is that the way to deal with good and evil? Shall we blot out all distinction between them, and hand over to slavery all that slavery may claim on the score of long practice?...

It so happens that no such words as “African slave trade,” no such words as “slave insurrections,” are anywhere used in that instrument…. Here then are several provisions of the Constitution to which reference has been made. I read them word for word just as they stand in the paper, called the United States Constitution, Art. I, sec. 2. “Representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included in this Union, according to their respective numbers, which shall be determined by adding to the whole number of free persons, including those bound to service for a term years, and excluding Indians not taxed, three-fifths of all other persons; Art. I, sec. 9. The migration or importation of such persons as any of the States now existing shall think fit to admit, shall not be prohibited by the Congress prior to the year one thousand eight hundred and eight, but a tax or duty may be imposed on such importation, not exceeding tend dollars for each person; Art. 4, sec. 2. No person held to service or labour in one State, under the laws thereof, escaping into another shall, in consequence of any law or regulation therein, be discharged from service or labour; but shall be delivered up on claim of the party to whom such service or labour may be due; Art. I, sec. 8. To provide for calling for the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions.” Here then, are those provisions of the Constitution, which the most extravagant defenders of slavery can claim to guarantee a right of property in man. These are the provisions which have been pressed into the service of the human fleshmongers of America. Let us look at them just as they stand, one by one. Let us grant, for the sake of the argument, that the first of these provisions, referring to the basis of representation and taxation, does refer to slaves. We are not compelled to make that admission, for it might fairly apply to aliens — persons living in the country, but not naturalized. But giving the provisions the very worse construction, what does it amount to? I answer — It is a downright disability laid upon the slaveholding States; one which deprives those States of two-fifths of their natural basis of representation. A black man in a free State is worth just two-fifths more than a black man in a slave State, as a basis of political power under the Constitution. Therefore, instead of encouraging slavery, the Constitution encourages freedom by giving an increase of “two-fifths” of political power to free over slave States. So much for the three-fifths clause; taking it at is worst, it still leans to freedom, not slavery; for, be it remembered that the Constitution nowhere forbids a coloured man to vote. I come to the next, that which it is said guaranteed the continuance of the African slave trade for twenty years. I will also take that for just what my opponent alleges it to have been, although the Constitution does not warrant any such conclusion. But, to be liberal, let us suppose it did, and what follows? Why, this — that this part of the Constitution, so far as the slave trade is concerned, became a dead letter more than 50 years ago, and now binds no man’s conscience for the continuance of any slave trade whatsoever. Mr. Thompson is just 52 years too late in dissolving the Union on account of this clause. He might as well dissolve the British Government, because Queen Elizabeth granted to Sir John Hawkins to import Africans into the West Indies 300 years ago! But there is still more to be said about this abolition of the slave trade. Men, at that time, both in England and in America, looked upon the slave trade as the life of slavery.
The Constitution of the United States: Is It Pro-Slavery or Anti-Slavery?
Frederick Douglass

The abolition of the slave trade was supposed to be the certain death of slavery. Cut off the stream, and the pond will dry up, was the common notion at the time.

Wilberforce and Clarkson, clear-sighted as they were, took this view; and the American statesmen, in providing for the abolition of the slave trade, thought they were providing for the abolition of the slavery. This view is quite consistent with the history of the times. All regarded slavery as an expiring and doomed system, destined to speedily disappear from the country. But, again, it should be remembered that this very provision, if made to refer to the African slave trade at all, makes the Constitution anti-slavery rather than for slavery; for it says to the slave States, the price you will have to pay for coming into the American Union is, that the slave trade, which you would carry on indefinitely out of the Union, shall be put an end to in twenty years if you come into the Union. Secondly, if it does apply, it expired by its own limitation more than fifty years ago. Thirdly, it is anti-slavery, because it looked to the abolition of slavery rather than to its perpetuity. Fourthly, it showed that the intentions of the framers of the Constitution were good, not bad. I think this is quite enough for this point.

I go to the “slave insurrection” clause, though, in truth, there is no such clause. The one which is called so has nothing whatever to do with slaves or slaveholders any more than your laws for suppression of popular outbreaks has to do with making slaves of you and your children. It is only a law for suppression of riots or insurrections. But I will be generous here, as well as elsewhere, and grant that it applies to slave insurrections. Let us suppose that an anti-slavery man is President of the United States (and the day that shall see this the case is not distant) and this very power of suppressing slave insurrections would put an end to slavery. The right to put down an insurrection carries with it the right to determine the means by which it shall be put down. If it should turn out that slavery is a source of insurrection, that there is no security from insurrection while slavery lasts, why, the Constitution would be best obeyed by putting an end to slavery, and an anti-slavery Congress would do the very same thing. Thus, you see, the so-called slave-holding provisions of the American Constitution, which a little while ago looked so formidable, are, after all, no defence or guarantee for slavery whatever. But there is one other provision. This is called the “Fugitive Slave Provision.” It is called so by those who wish to make it subserve the interest of slavery in America, and the same by those who wish to uphold the views of a party in this country…. But it may be asked — if this clause does not apply to slaves, to whom does it apply?

I answer, that when adopted, it applies to a very large class of persons — namely, redemptioners — persons who had come to America from Holland, from Ireland, and other quarters of the globe — like the Coolies to the West Indies — and had, for a consideration duly paid, become bound to “serve and labour” for the parties two whom their service and labour was due. It applies to indentured apprentices and others who have become bound for a consideration, under contract duly made, to serve and labour, to such persons this provision applies, and only to such persons. The plain reading of this provision shows that it applies, and that it can only properly and legally apply, to persons “bound to service.” Its object plainly is, to secure the fulfillment of contracts for “service and labour.” It applies to indentured apprentices, and any other persons from whom service and labour may be due. The legal condition of the slave puts him beyond the operation of this provision. He is not described in it. He is a simple article of property. He does not owe and cannot owe service. He cannot even make a contract. It is impossible for him to do so. He can no more make such a contract than a horse or an ox can make one. This provision, then, only respects persons who owe service, and they only can owe service who can receive an equivalent and make a bargain. The slave cannot do that, and is therefore exempted from the operation of this fugitive provision…. Let us look at the objects for which the Constitution was framed and adopted, and see if slavery is one of them. Here are its own objects as set forth by itself: — “We, the people of these United States, in order to form a more perfect union, establish justice, ensure domestic tranquility, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution of the United States of America.” The objects here set forth are six in number: union, defence, welfare, tranquility, justice, and liberty. These are all good objects, and slavery, so far from being among them, is a foe of them all. But it has been said that Negroes are not included within the benefits sought under this declaration. This is said by the slaveholders in America — it is said by the City Hall orator — but it is not said by... the Constitution itself. Its language is “we the people;” not we the white people, not even we the citizens, not we the privileged class, not we the high, not we the low, but we the people; not we the horses, sheep, and swine, and wheel-barrows, but we the people, we the human inhabitants; and, if Negroes are people, they are included in the benefits for which the Constitution of America was ordained and established. But how dare any man who pretends to be a friend to the Negro thus gratuitously concede away what the Negro has a right to claim under the Constitution? Why should such friends invent new arguments to increase the hopelessness of his bondage? This, I undertake to say, as the conclusion of the whole matter, that the constitutionality of slavery can be made out only by disregarding the plain and common-sense reading of the Constitution itself; by discrediting and casting away as worthless the most beneficent rules of legal interpretation; by ruling the Negro outside of these beneficent rules; by claiming that the Constitution does not mean what it says, and that it says what it does not mean; by disregarding the written Constitution, and interpreting it in the light of a secret understanding. It is in this mean, contemptible, and underhand method that the American Constitution is pressed into the service of slavery.…

My argument against the dissolution of the American Union is this: It would place the slave system more exclusively under the control of the slaveholding States, and withdraw it from the power in the Northern States which is opposed to slavery. Slavery is essentially barbarous in its character. It, above all things else, dreads the presence of an advanced civilization. It flourishes best where it meets no reproving frowns, and hears no condemning voices. While in the Union it will meet with both. Its hope of life, in the last resort, is to get out of the Union. I am, therefore, for drawing the bond of the Union more completely under the power of the Free States. What they most dread, that I most desire. I have much confidence in the instincts of the slaveholders. They see that the Constitution will afford slavery no protection when it shall cease to be administered by slaveholders. They see, moreover, that if there is once a will in the people of America to abolish slavery, this is no word, no syllable in the Constitution to forbid that result. They see that the Constitution has not saved slavery in Rhode Island, in Connecticut, in New York, or Pennsylvania; that the Free States have only added three to their original number. There were twelve Slave States at the beginning of the Government: there are fifteen now. The dissolution of the Union would not give the North a single advantage over slavery, but would take from it many. Within the Union we have a firm basis of opposition to slavery. It is opposed to all the great objects of the Constitution. The dissolution of the Union is not only an unwise but a cowardly measure — 15 millions running away from three hundred and fifty thousand slaveholders. Mr. Garrison and his friends tell us that while in the Union we are responsible for slavery. He and they sing out “No Union with slaveholders,” and refuse to vote. I admit our responsibility for slavery while in the Union but I deny that going out of the Union would free us from that responsibility. There now clearly is no freedom from responsibility for slavery to any American citizen short to the abolition of slavery. The American people have gone quite too far in this slaveholding business now to sum up their whole business of slavery by singing out the cant phrase, “No union with slaveholders.” To desert the family hearth may place the recreant husband out of the presence of his starving children, but this does not free him from responsibility. If a man were on board of a pirate ship, and in company with others had robbed and plundered, his whole duty would not be preformed simply by taking the longboat and singing out, “No union with pirates.” His duty would be to restore the stolen property. The American people in the Northern States have helped to enslave the black people. Their duty will not have been done till they give them back their plundered rights. Reference was made at the City Hall to my having once held other opinions, and very different opinions to those I have now expressed. An old speech of mine delivered fourteen years ago was read to show — I know not what. Perhaps it was to show that I am not infallible. If so, I have to say in defence, that I never pretended to be. Although I cannot accuse myself of being remarkably unstable, I do not pretend that I have never altered my opinion both in respect to men and things. Indeed, I have been very much modified both in feeling and opinion within the last fourteen years. When I escaped from slavery, and was introduced to the Garrisonians, I adopted very many of their opinions, and defended them just as long as I deemed them true. I was young, had read but little, and naturally took some things on trust. Subsequent experience and reading have led me to examine for myself. This had brought me to other conclusions. When I was a child, I thought and spoke as a child. But the question is not as to what were my opinions fourteen years ago, but what they are now. If I am right now, it really does not matter what I was fourteen years ago. My position now is one of reform, not of revolution. I would act for the abolition of slavery through the Government — not over its ruins. If slaveholders have ruled the American Government for the last fifty years, let the anti-slavery men rule the nation for the next fifty years. If the South has made the Constitution bend to the purposes of slavery, let the North now make that instrument bend to the cause of freedom and justice. If 350,000 slaveholders have, by devoting their energies to that single end, been able to make slavery the vital and animating spirit of the American Confederacy for the last 72 years, now let the freemen of the North, who have the power in their own hands, and who can make the American Government just what they think fit, resolve to blot out for ever the foul and haggard crime, which is the blight and mildew, the curse and the disgrace of the whole United States.
Sen. John C. Calhoun (D-SC)
On the Reception of Abolition Petitions
Speech Excerpt
February 6, 1837
U.S. Senate | Washington, D.C.

BACKGROUND

John C. Calhoun delivered this speech in the U.S. Senate in response to petitions submitted by abolitionists demanding an end to slavery in the District of Columbia and the abolition of the slave trade across state lines.

Guiding Questions

1. What does Calhoun argue to be the effect of enslavement in America on African Americans? Why?
2. In which ways does Calhoun take exception to northern criticism of the effects of slavery on European Americans?
3. What does Calhoun mean by a “positive good”? What evidence does he claim to support his assertion?
4. How does Calhoun argue that slaves are treated better than laborers in the north?

---

On the Reception of Abolition Petitions

John C. Calhoun

...Abolition and Union cannot co-exist. As the friend of the Union I openly proclaim it, and the sooner it is known the better. The former may now be controlled, but in a short time it will be beyond the power of man to arrest the course of events. We of the South will not, cannot, surrender our institutions. To maintain the existing relations between the two races, inhabiting that section of the Union, is indispensable to the peace and happiness of both. It cannot be subverted without drenching the country in blood, and extirpating one or the other of the races. Be it good or bad, it has grown up with out society and institutions, and is so interwoven with them, that to destroy it would be to destroy us as a people. But let me not be understood as admitting, even by implication, that the existing relations between the two races in slaveholding States is an evil—far otherwise; I hold it to be a good, as it has thus far proved itself to be to both, and will continue to prove so if not disturbed by the fell spirit of abolition. I appeal to facts. Never before has the black race of Central Africa, from the dawn of history to the present day, attained a condition so civilized and so improved, not only physically, but morally and intellectually. It came among us in a low, degraded, and savage condition, and in the course of a few generations it has grown up under the fostering care of our institutions, reviled as they have been to its present comparatively civilized condition. This, with the rapid increase of numbers, is conclusive proof of the general happiness of the race, in spite of all the exaggerated tales to the contrary. In the mean time, the white or European race has not degenerated. It has kept pace with its brethren in other sections of the Union where slavery does not exist.... But I take higher ground. I hold that in the present state of civilization, where two races of different origin, and distinguished by color, and other physical differences, as well as intellectual, are brought together, the relation now existing in the slaveholding States between the two, is, instead of an evil, a good—a positive good. I feel myself called upon to speak freely upon the subject where the honor and interests of those I represent are involved. I hold then that there never has yet existed a wealthy and civilized society in which one portion of the community did not, in point of fact, live on the labor of the other. Broad and general as is this assertion, it is fully borne out by history. This is not the proper occasion, but if it were, it would not be difficult to trace the various devices by which the wealth of all civilized communities has been so unequally divided, and to show by what means so small a share has been allotted to those by whose labor it was produced, and so large a share given to the non-producing classes. The devices are almost innumerable, from the brute force and gross superstition of ancient times, to the subtle and artful fiscal contrivances of modern. I might well challenge a comparison between them and the more direct, simple, and patriarchal mode by which the labor of the African race is, among us, commanded by the European. I may say with truth, that in few countries so much is left to the share of the laborer, and so little exacted from him, or where there is more kind attention paid to him in sickness or infirmities of age. Compare his condition with the tenants of the poor houses in the more civilized portions of Europe—look at the sick, and the old and infirm slave, on one hand, in the midst of his family and friends, under the kind superintending care of his master and mistress, and compare it with the forlorn and wretched condition of the pauper in the poor house....
Senator John C. Calhoun (D-SC)

On the Oregon Bill

Speech Excerpts

June 27, 1848

U.S. Senate | Washington, D.C.

BACKGROUND

Senator John C. Calhoun gave this speech in response to the Oregon Bill, which sought to organize the new territory along anti-slavery principles.

GUIDING QUESTIONS

1. How does Calhoun portray the conflict between the North and the South?

2. How does Calhoun use the Constitution to justify his argument?

3. What theoretical proposition is the cause of the Union’s destruction, according to Calhoun?

4. According to Calhoun, what is the relationship between the government and individual liberty?

---

…Now, let me say, Senators, if our Union and system of government are doomed to perish, and we to share the fate of so many great people who have gone before us, the historian, who, in some future day, may record the events ending in so calamitous a result, will devote his first chapter to the ordinance of 1787, lauded as it and its authors have been, as the first of that series which led to it. His next chapter will be devoted to the Missouri compromise, and the next to the present agitation. Whether there will be another beyond, I know not. It will depend on what we may do.

If he should possess a philosophical turn of mind, and be disposed to look to more remote and recondite causes, he will trace it to a proposition which originated in a hypothetical truism, but which, as now expressed and now understood, is the most false and dangerous of all political errors. The proposition to which I allude, has become an axiom in the minds of a vast many on both sides of the Atlantic, and is repeated daily from tongue to tongue, as an established and incontrovertible truth; it is,—that “all men are born free and equal.” I am not afraid to attack error, however deeply it may be intrenched, or however widely extended, whenever it becomes my duty to do so, as I believe it to be on this subject and occasion.

Taking the proposition literally (it is in that sense it is understood), there is not a word of truth in it. It begins with “all men are born,” which is utterly untrue. Men are not born. Infants are born. They grow to be men. And concludes with asserting that they are born “free and equal,” which is not less false. They are not born free. While infants they are incapable of freedom, being destitute alike of the capacity of thinking and acting, without which there can be no freedom. Besides, they are necessarily born subject to their parents, and remain so among all people, savage and civilized, until the development of their intellect and physical capacity enables them to take care of themselves. They grow to all the freedom of which the condition in which they were born permits, by growing to be men. Nor is it less false that they are born “equal.” They are not so in any sense in which it can be regarded; and thus, as I have asserted, there is not a word of truth in the whole proposition, as expressed and generally understood.
If we trace it back, we shall find the proposition differently expressed in the Declaration of Independence. That asserts that “all men are created equal.” The form of expression, though less dangerous, is not less erroneous. All men are not created. According to the Bible, only two—a man and a woman—ever were—and of these one was pronounced subordinate to the other. All others have come into the world by being born, and in no sense, as I have shown, either free or equal. But this form of expression being less striking and popular, has given way to the present, and under the authority of a document put forth on so great an occasion, and leading to such important consequences, has spread far and wide, and fixed itself deeply in the public mind. It was inserted in our Declaration of Independence without any necessity. It made no necessary part of our justification in separating from the parent country, and declaring ourselves independent. Breach of our chartered privileges, and lawless encroachment on our acknowledged and well-established rights by the parent country, were the real causes,—and of themselves sufficient, without resorting to any other, to justify the step. Nor had it any weight in constructing the governments which were substituted in the place of the colonial. They were formed of the old materials and on practical and well-established principles, borrowed for the most part from our own experience and that of the country from which we sprang.

If the proposition be traced still further back, it will be found to have been adopted from certain writers in government who had attained much celebrity in the early settlement of these States, and with whose writings all the prominent actors in our revolution were familiar. Among these, Locke and Sydney were prominent. But they expressed it very differently. According to their expression, “all men in the state of nature were free and equal.” From this the others were derived; and it was this to which I referred when I called it a hypothetical truism;—to understand why, will require some explanation.

Man, for the purpose of reasoning, may be regarded in three different states: in a state of individuality; that is, living by himself apart from the rest of his species. In the social; that is, living in society, associated with others of his species. And in the political; that is, living under government. We may reason as to what would be his rights and duties in either, without taking into consideration whether he could exist in it or not. It is certain, that in the first, the very supposition that he lived apart and separated from all others would make him free and equal. No one in such a state could have the right to command or control another. Every man would be his own master, and might do just as he pleased. But it is equally clear, that man cannot exist in such a state; that he is by nature social, and that society is necessary, not only to the proper development of all his faculties, moral and intellectual, but to the very existence of his race. Such being the case, the state is a purely hypothetical one; and when we say all men are free and equal in it, we announce a mere hypothetical truism; that is, a truism resting on a mere supposed stake that cannot exist, and of course one of little or no practical value.

But to call it a state of nature was a great misnomer, and has led to dangerous errors; for that cannot justly be called a state of nature which is so opposed to the constitution of man as to be inconsistent with the existence of his race and the development of the high faculties, mental and moral, with which he is endowed by his Creator….

We now begin to experience the danger of admitting so great an error to have a place in the declaration of our independence. For a long time it lay dormant; but in the process of time it began to germinate, and produce its poisonous fruits. It had strong hold on the mind of Mr. Jefferson, the author of that document, which caused him to take an utterly false view of the subordinate relation of the black to the white race in the South; and to hold, in consequence, that the latter, though utterly unqualified to possess liberty, were as fully entitled to both liberty and equality as the former; and that to deprive them of it was unjust and immoral. To this error, his proposition to exclude slavery from the territory northwest of the Ohio may be traced,—and to that of the ordinance of 1787,—and through it the deep and dangerous agitation which now threatens to engulf, and will certainly engulf, if not speedily settled, our political institutions, and involve the country in countless woes.
Abraham Lincoln

Speech at Peoria

Speech Excerpt

October 16, 1854

Lawn of the Peoria County Courthouse | Peoria, Illinois

On the Kansas-Nebraska Act

BACKGROUND

Abraham Lincoln responded to the passage of the Kansas-Nebraska Act and its principal proponent, Stephen A. Douglas, with this address at Peoria.

GUIDING QUESTIONS

1. Is Lincoln in favor or against self-governance?

2. In what way can the right of self-governance be abused according to Lincoln?

3. What principles does Lincoln take to be more essential than the right to self-governance?

4. What are the results of the violation of the Missouri Compromise both in the north and in the south?

5. How does Lincoln think the founders viewed slavery?

I trust I understand, and truly estimate the right of self-government. My faith in the proposition that each man should do precisely as he pleases with all which is exclusively his own, lies at the foundation of the sense of justice there is in me. I extend the principles to communities of men, as well as to individuals. I so extend it, because it is politically wise, as well as naturally just; politically wise, in saving us from broils about matters which do not concern us. Here, or at Washington, I would not trouble myself with the oyster laws of Virginia, or the cranberry laws of Indiana.

The doctrine of self-government is right—absolutely and eternally right—but it has no just application, as here attempted. Or perhaps I should rather say that whether it has such just application depends upon whether a negro is not or is a man. If he is not a man, why in that case, he who is a man may, as a matter of self-government, do just as he pleases with him. But if the negro is a man, is it not to that extent, a total destruction of self-government, to say that he too shall not govern himself? When the white man governs himself that is self-government; but when he governs himself, and also governs another man, that is more than self-government—that is despotism. If the negro is a man, why then my ancient faith teaches me that “all men are created equal;” and that there can be no moral right in connection with one man’s making a slave of another....

What I do say is, that no man is good enough to govern another man, without that other’s consent. I say this is the leading principle—the sheet anchor of American republicanism.

Our Declaration of Independence says:

“We hold these truths to be self-evident: that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed.”

….I particularly object to the new position which the avowed principle of this Nebraska law gives to slavery in the body politic. I object to it because it assumes that there can be moral right in the enslaving of one man by another. I object to it as a dangerous dalliance for a few people—a sad evidence that, feeling prosperity we forget right—that liberty, as a principle, we have ceased to revere. I object to it because the fathers of the republic eschewed, and rejected it. The argument of “Necessity” was the only argument they ever admitted in favor of slavery; and so far, and so far only as it carried them, did they ever go. They found the institution existing among us, which they could not help; and they cast blame upon the British King for having permitted its introduction. Before the constitution, they prohibited its introduction into the north-western Territory—the only country we owned, then free from it. At the framing and adoption of the constitution, they forbore to so much as mention the word “slave” or “slavery” in the whole instrument. In the provision for the recovery of fugitives, the slave is spoken of as a “person held to service or labor.” In that prohibiting the abolition of the African slave trade for twenty years, that trade is spoken of as “The migration or importation of such persons as any of the States now existing, shall think proper to admit,” etc. These are the only provisions alluding to slavery. Thus, the thing is hid away, in the constitution, just as an afflicted man hides away a wen or a cancer, which he dares not cut out at once, lest he bleed to death; with the promise, nevertheless, that the cutting may begin at the end of a given time. Less than this our fathers could not do; and now they would not do. Necessity drove them so far, and farther, they would not go. But this is not all. The earliest Congress, under the constitution, took the same view of slavery. They hedged and hemmed it in to the narrowest limits of necessity.

In 1794, they prohibited an out-going slave-trade—that is, the taking of slaves from the United States to sell.

In 1798, they prohibited the bringing of slaves from Africa, into the Mississippi Territory—this territory then comprising what are now the States of Mississippi and Alabama. This was ten years before they had the authority to do the same thing as to the States existing at the adoption of the constitution.

In 1800 they prohibited American citizens from trading in slaves between foreign countries—as, for instance, from Africa to Brazil.
In 1803 they passed a law in aid of one or two State laws, in restraint of the internal slave trade.

In 1807, in apparent hot haste, they passed the law, nearly a year in advance, to take effect the first day of 1808—the very first day the constitution would permit—prohibiting the African slave trade by heavy pecuniary and corporal penalties.

In 1820, finding these provisions ineffectual, they declared the trade piracy, and annexed to it, the extreme penalty of death. While all this was passing in the general government, five or six of the original slave States had adopted systems of gradual emancipation; and by which the institution was rapidly becoming extinct within these limits.

Thus we see, the plain unmistakable spirit of that age, towards slavery, was hostility to the principle, and toleration, only by necessity....

Our republican robe is soiled, and trailed in the dust. Let us repurify it. Let us turn and wash it white, in the spirit, if not the blood, of the Revolution. Let us turn slavery from its claims of “moral right,” back upon its existing legal rights, and its arguments of “necessity.”

Let us return it to the position our fathers gave it; and there let it rest in peace. Let us re-adopt the Declaration of Independence, and with it, the practices, and policy, which harmonize with it. Let north and south—let all Americans—let all lovers of liberty everywhere—join in the great and good work. If we do this, we shall not only have saved the Union; but we shall have so saved it, as to make, and to keep it, forever worthy of the saving.

We shall have so saved it, that the succeeding millions of free happy people, the world over, shall rise up, and call us blessed, to the latest generations....
ABRAHAM LINCOLN (R)
Seventh Debate in the 1858 Election Campaign
DEBATE RESPONSE EXCERPTS
October 15, 1858
Outside Alton City Hall | Alton, Illinois

BACKGROUND
Incumbent senator from Illinois, Democrat Stephen Douglas, debated Abraham Lincoln, the Republican candidate, for the seventh and final time in the 1858 election campaign. The candidates were not directly running for U.S. Senate, as senators were still appointed by the state legislature at the time, but their arguments were meant to bolster votes for their respective parties in the state legislature, which would then appoint one of them as U.S. Senator. Lincoln offered this reply to Douglas’s opening remarks.

GUIDING QUESTIONS

1. Why does Lincoln think that history is on his side with respect to the meaning of “equality” in the Declaration of Independence?

2. According to Lincoln, how should one interpret the language of the Constitution with regard to slavery? What is the view of the founders on slavery, according to Lincoln?

3. What is the primary dividing line between Republicans and Democrats at this time, according to Lincoln?

4. In Lincoln’s view, why is the existence of the Union threatened?

5. On what grounds does Lincoln base the struggle between him and Douglas as the struggle between right and wrong?

Abraham Lincoln's Reply to Senator Stephen Douglas

...Language is used not suggesting that slavery existed or that the black race were among us. And I understand the contemporaneous history of those times to be that covert language was used with a purpose, and that purpose was that in our Constitution, which it was hoped and is still hoped will endure forever—when it should be read by intelligent and patriotic men, after the institution of slavery had passed from among us—there should be nothing on the face of the great charter of liberty suggesting that such a thing as negro slavery had ever existed among us. This is part of the evidence that the fathers of the Government expected and intended the institution of slavery to come to an end. They expected and intended that it should be in the course of ultimate extinction. And when I say that I desire to see the further spread of it arrested I only say I desire to see that done which the fathers have first done. When I say I desire to see it placed where the public mind will rest in the belief that it is in the course of ultimate extinction, I only say I desire to see it placed where they placed it. It is not true that our fathers, as Judge Douglas assumes, made this government part slave and part free. Understand the sense in which he puts it. He assumes that slavery is a rightful thing within itself,—was introduced by the framers of the Constitution. The exact truth is, that they found the institution existing among us, and they left it as they found it. But in making the government they left this institution with many clear marks of disapprobation upon it. They found slavery among them and they left it among them because of the difficulty— the absolute impossibility of its immediate removal. And when Judge Douglas asks me why we cannot let it remain part slave and part free as the fathers of the government made, he asks a question based upon an assumption which is itself a falsehood; and I turn upon him and ask him the question, when the policy that the fathers of the government had adopted in relation to this element among us was the best policy in the world—the only wise policy—the only policy that we can ever safely continue upon—that will ever give us peace unless this dangerous element masters us all and becomes a national institution—I turn upon him and ask him why he could not let it alone? I turn and ask him why he was driven to the necessity of introducing a new policy in regard to it? He has himself said he introduced a new policy. He said so in his speech on the 22nd of March of the present year, 1858. I ask him why he could not let it remain where our fathers placed it? I ask too of Judge Douglas and his friends why we shall not again place this institution upon the basis on which the fathers left it? I ask you when he infers that I am in favor of setting the free and slave States at war, when the institution was placed in that attitude by those who made the constitution, \textit{did they make any war}? If we had no war out of it when thus placed, wherein is the ground of belief that we shall have war out of it if we return to that policy? Have we had any peace upon this matter springing from any other basis? I maintain that we have not. I have proposed nothing more than a return to the policy of the fathers....

The real issue in this controversy—the one pressing upon every mind—is the sentiment on the part of one class that looks upon the institution of slavery \textit{as a wrong}, and of another class that \textit{does not} look upon it as a wrong. The sentiment that contemplates the institution of slavery in this country as a wrong is the sentiment of the Republican party. It is the sentiment around which all their actions—all their arguments circle—from which all their propositions radiate. They look upon it as being a moral, social and political wrong; and while they contemplate it as such, they nevertheless have due regard for its actual existence among us, and the difficulties of getting rid of it in any satisfactory way and to all the constitutional obligations thrown about it. Yet having a due regard for these, they desire a policy in regard to it that looks to its not creating any more danger. They insist that it should as far as may be, \textit{be treated} as a wrong, and one of the methods of treating it as a wrong is to \textit{make provision that it shall grow no larger}. They also desire a policy that looks to a peaceful end of slavery at sometime, as being wrong....

On the other hand, I have said there is a sentiment which treats it as \textit{not} being wrong. That is the Democratic sentiment of this day.... The Democratic policy in regard to that institution will not tolerate the merest breath, the slightest hint, of the least degree of wrong about it. Try it by some of Judge Douglas' arguments. He says he "don't care whether it is voted up or voted down” in the Territories. I do not care myself in dealing with that expression, whether it is intended to be expressive of his individual sentiments on the subject, or only of the national policy he desires to have established. It is alike valuable for my purpose. Any man can say that who does not see anything wrong in slavery, but no man can logically say it who does see a wrong in it; because no man can logically say he don’t care whether a wrong is voted up or voted down. He may say he don’t care whether an indifferent thing is voted up or down, but he must logically have a choice between a right thing and a wrong thing. He contends that whatever community wants slaves has a right to have them. So they have if it is not a wrong. But if it is a wrong, he cannot say people have a right to do wrong. He says that upon the score of equality, slaves should be allowed to go in a new Territory, like other property. This is strictly logical if there is no difference between it and other property. If it and other property are equal, his argument is entirely logical. But if you insist that one is wrong and the other right, there is no use to institute a comparison between right and wrong. You may turn over everything in the Democratic policy from beginning to end, whether in the shape it takes on the statute book, in the shape it takes in the Dred Scott decision, in the shape it takes in conversation or the shape it takes in short maxim-like arguments—it everywhere carefully excludes the idea that there is anything wrong in it.

That is the real issue. That is the issue that will continue in this country when these poor tongues of Judge Douglas and myself shall be silent. It is the eternal struggle between these two principles—right and wrong—throughout the world. They are the two principles that have stood face to face from the beginning of time; and will ever continue to struggle. The one is the common right of humanity and the other the divine right of kings. It is the same principle in whatever shape it develops itself. It is the same spirit that says, “You work and toil and earn bread, and I'll eat it.” No matter in what shape it comes, whether from the mouth of a king who seeks to bestride the people of his own nation and live by the fruit of their labor, or from one race of men as an apology for enslaving another race, it is the same tyrannical principle.
PRESIDENT ABRAHAM LINCOLN (R)
First Inaugural Address
SPEECH EXCERPTS

March 4, 1861
U.S. Capitol | Washington, D.C.

BACKGROUND

Abraham Lincoln delivered this speech at his inauguration amidst declarations of secession by southern states.

GUIDING QUESTIONS

1. How does Lincoln try to assuage the fears of Southerners?
2. Why does Lincoln believe that the Union is perpetual?
3. What is "the only substantial dispute," and what are its possible resolutions as Lincoln sees them?

...I take the official oath today, with no mental reservations, and with no purpose to con- Strauss the Constitution or laws, by any hypercritical rules. And while I do not choose now to specify particular acts of Congress as proper to be enforced, I do suggest, that it will be much safer for all, both in official and private stations, to conform to, and abide by, all those acts which stand unrepealed, than to violate any of them, trusting to find impunity in hav- ing them held to be unconstitutional.

It is seventy-two years since the first inauguration of a President under our national Con- stitution. During that period fifteen different and greatly distinguished citizens, have, in succession, administered the executive branch of the government. They have conducted it through many perils; and, generally, with great success. Yet, with all this scope for prece- dent, I now enter upon the same task for the brief constitutional term of four years, under great and peculiar difficulty. A disruption of the Federal Union heretofore only menaced, is now formidably attempted.

I hold, that in contemplation of universal law, and of the Constitution, the Union of these States is perpetual. Perpetuity is implied, if not expressed, in the fundamental law of all national governments. It is safe to assert that no government proper, ever had a provision in its organic law for its own termination. Continue to execute all the express provisions of our national Constitution, and the Union will endure forever—it being impossible to de- stroy it, except by some action not provided for in the instrument itself.

Again, if the United States be not a government proper, but an association of States in the nature of contract merely, can it, as a contract, be peaceably unmade, by less than all the parties who made it? One party to a contract may violate it—break it, so to speak; but does it not require all to lawfully rescind it?

Descending from these general principles, we find the proposition that, in legal contem- plation, the Union is perpetual, confirmed by the history of the Union itself. The Union is much older than the Constitution. It was formed in fact, by the Articles of Association in 1774. It was matured and continued by the Declaration of Independence in 1776. It was further matured and the faith of all the then thirteen States expressly plighted and engaged that it should be perpetual, by the Articles of Confederation in 1778. And finally, in 1787, one of the declared objects for ordaining and establishing the Constitution, was "to form a more perfect union."

But if destruction of the Union, by one, or by a part only, of the States, be lawfully possible, the Union is less perfect than before the Constitution, having lost the vital element of perpetuity.

It follows from these views that no State, upon its own mere motion, can lawfully get out of the Union,—that resolves and ordinances to that effect are legally void; and that acts of violence, within any State or States, against the authority of the United States, are insurrectionary or revolutionary, according to circumstances.

I therefore consider that, in view of the Constitution and the laws, the Union is unbroken; and, to the extent of my ability, I shall take care, as the Constitution itself expressly enjoins upon me, that the laws of the Union be faithfully executed in all the States. Doing this I deem to be only a simple duty on my part; and I shall perform it, so far as practicable, unless my rightful masters, the American people, shall withhold the requisite means, or, in some authoritative manner, direct the contrary. I trust this will not be regarded as a menace, but only as the declared purpose of the Union that it will constitutionally defend, and maintain itself.

In doing this there needs to be no bloodshed or violence; and there shall be none, unless it be forced upon the national authority. The power confided to me, will be used to hold, occupy, and possess the property, and places belonging to the government, and to collect the duties and imposts; but beyond what may be necessary for these objects, there will be no invasion—no using of force against, or among the people anywhere....
One section of our country believes slavery is right, and ought to be extended, while the other believes it is wrong, and ought not to be extended. This is the only substantial dispute. The fugitive slave clause of the Constitution, and the law for the suppression of the foreign slave trade, are each as well enforced, perhaps, as any law can ever be in a community where the moral sense of the people imperfectly supports the law itself. The great body of the people abide by the dry legal obligation in both cases, and a few break over in each. This, I think, cannot be perfectly cured; and it would be worse in both cases after the separation of the sections, than before. The foreign slave trade, now imperfectly suppressed, would be ultimately revived without restriction, in one section; while fugitive slaves, now only partially surrendered, would not be surrendered at all, by the other.

Physically speaking, we cannot separate. We cannot remove our respective sections from each other, nor build an impassable wall between them. A husband and wife may be divorced, and go out of the presence, and beyond the reach of each other; but the different parts of our country cannot do this. They cannot but remain face to face; and intercourse, either amicable or hostile, must continue between them. Is it possible then to make that intercourse more advantageous, or more satisfactory, after separation than before? Can aliens make treaties easier than friends can make laws? Can treaties be more faithfully enforced between aliens, than laws can among friends? Suppose you go to war, you cannot fight always; and when, after much loss on both sides, and no gain on either, you cease fighting, the identical old questions, as to terms of intercourse, are again upon you.

This country, with its institutions, belongs to the people who inhabit it. Whenever they shall grow weary of the existing government, they can exercise their constitutional right of amending it, or their revolutionary right to dismember, or overthrow it. I can not be ignorant of the fact that many worthy, and patriotic citizens are desirous of having the national constitution amended. While I make no recommendation of amendments, I fully recognize the rightful authority of the people over the whole subject, to be exercised in either of the modes prescribed in the instrument itself; and I should, under existing circumstances, favor, rather than oppose, a fair opportunity being afforded the people to act upon it....
My countrymen, one and all, think calmly and well, upon this whole subject. Nothing valuable can be lost by taking time. If there be an object to hurry any of you, in hot haste, to a step which you would never take deliberately, that object will be frustrated by taking time; but no good object can be frustrated by it. Such of you as are now dissatisfied, still have the old Constitution unimpaired, and, on the sensitive point, the laws of your own framing under it; while the new administration will have no immediate power, if it would, to change either. If it were admitted that you who are dissatisfied, hold the right side in the dispute, there still is no single good reason for precipitate action. Intelligence, patriotism, Christianity, and a firm reliance on Him, who has never yet forsaken this favored land, are still competent to adjust, in the best way, all our present difficulty.

In your hands, my dissatisfied fellow countrymen, and not in mine, is the momentous issue of civil war. The government will not assail you. You can have no conflict, without being yourselves the aggressors. You have no oath registered in Heaven to destroy the government, while I shall have the most solemn one to "preserve, protect and defend it."

I am loath to close. We are not enemies, but friends. We must not be enemies. Though passion may have strained, it must not break our bonds of affection. The mystic chords of memory, stretching from every battle-field, and patriot grave, to every living heart and hearthstone, all over this broad land, will yet swell the chorus of the Union, when again touched, as surely they will be, by the better angels of our nature.
PRESIDENT ABRAHAM LINCOLN (R-IL)

A Proclamation

AN ORDER

January 1, 1863

Executive Mansion | Washington, D.C.

Emancipation Proclamation

BACKGROUND

On September 22, 1862 after the Union victory in the Battle of Antietam, Abraham Lincoln announced this order concerning property in slaves in the rebelling states, which took effect January 1, 1863.

GUIDING QUESTIONS

1. Whom did the proclamation free?

2. In which places did this order apply?

3. By what authority did Lincoln issue this order?

4. What military purpose did the order serve?

5. What did Lincoln implore of slaves freed by the order?

By the President of the United States of America: A Proclamation.

Whereas, on the twenty-second day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-two, a proclamation was issued by the President of the United States, containing, among other things, the following, to wit:

"That on the first day of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-three, all persons held as slaves within any State or designated part of a State, the people thereof shall then be in rebellion against the United States, shall be then, thenceforward, and forever free; and the Executive Government of the United States, including the military and naval authority thereof, will recognize and maintain the freedom of such persons, and will do no act or acts to repress such persons, or any of them, in any efforts they may make for their actual freedom.

"That the Executive will, on the first day of January aforesaid, by proclamation, designate the States and parts of States, if any, in which the people thereof, respectively, shall then be in rebellion against the United States; and the fact that any State, or the people thereof, shall on that day be, in good faith, represented in the Congress of the United States by members chosen thereto at elections wherein a majority of the qualified voters of such State shall have participated, shall, in the absence of strong countervailing testimony, be deemed conclusive evidence that such State, and the people thereof, are not then in rebellion against the United States."

Now, therefore I, Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States, by virtue of the power in me vested as Commander-in-Chief, of the Army and Navy of the United States in time of actual armed rebellion against authority and government of the United States, and as a fit and necessary war measure for suppressing said rebellion, do, on this first day of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-three, and in accordance with my purpose so to do publicly proclaimed for the full period of one hundred days, from the day first above mentioned, order and designate as the States and parts of States wherein the people thereof respectively, are this day in rebellion against the United States, the following, to wit:

Arkansas, Texas, Louisiana, (except the Parishes of St. Bernard, Plaquemines, Jefferson, St.
Johns, St. Charles, St. James, Ascension, Assumption, Terrebonne, Lafourche, St. Mary, St.
Martin, and Orleans, including the City of New Orleans) Mississippi, Alabama, Florida, Georgia, South-Carolina, North-Carolina, and Virginia, (except the forty-eight counties designated as West Virginia, and also the counties of Berkley, Accomac, Northampton, Elizabeth-City, York, Princess Ann, and Norfolk, including the cities of Norfolk and Portsmouth); and which excepted parts are, for the present, left precisely as if this proclamation were not issued.

And by virtue of the power, and for the purpose aforesaid, I do order and declare that all persons held as slaves within said designated States, and parts of States, are, and henceforward shall be free; and that the Executive government of the United States, including the military and naval authorities thereof, will recognize and maintain the freedom of said persons.

And I hereby enjoin upon the people so declared to be free to abstain from all violence, unless in necessary self-defense; and I recommend to them that, in all cases when allowed, they labor faithfully for reasonable wages.

And I further declare and make known, that such persons of suitable condition, will be received into the armed service of the United States to garrison forts, positions, stations, and other places, and to man vessels of all sorts in said service.

And upon this act, sincerely believed to be an act of justice, warranted by the Constitution, upon military necessity, I invoke the considerate judgment of mankind, and the gracious favor of Almighty God.
In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington, this first day of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-three, and of the Independence of the United States of America the eighty-seventh.

By the President:

Abraham Lincoln

William H. Seward, Secretary of State.
PRESIDENT ABRAHAM LINCOLN (R)

On the Consecration of the Soldiers’ National Cemetery

SPEECH

November 19, 1863
Soldiers’ National Cemetery | Gettysburg, Pennsylvania

Gettysburg Address

BACKGROUND

Abraham Lincoln delivered these remarks at the dedication of the Union cemetery for those soldiers killed in the Battle of Gettysburg in the summer of 1863.

GUIDING QUESTIONS

1. For Lincoln, what is the central idea of the American Founding?
2. For what cause did the soldiers buried in Gettysburg give their lives?
3. What were they fighting to defend?
4. To what cause does Lincoln wish for listeners to dedicate themselves?

Four score and seven years ago our fathers brought forth, on this continent, a new nation, conceived in Liberty, and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal.

Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that nation, or any nation so conceived, and so dedicated, can long endure. We are met on a great battle-field of that war.

We have come to dedicate a portion of that field, as a final resting-place for those who here gave their lives, that that nation might live. It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this.

But, in a larger sense, we can not dedicate—we can not consecrate—we can not hallow—this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here, have consecrated it far above our poor power to add or detract. The world will little note, nor long remember what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here. It is for us the living, rather, to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus far so nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us—that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they here gave the last full measure of devotion—that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain—that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom—and that government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth.
PRESIDENT ABRAHAM LINCOLN (R)

Second Inaugural Address

SPEECH

March 4, 1865

U.S. Capitol | Washington, D.C.

BACKGROUND

Having been reelected and with the end of the Civil War in sight, Abraham Lincoln delivered this speech at his inauguration to a second term as president.

GUIDING QUESTIONS

1. According to Lincoln, who caused the Civil War?

2. What role in the war does Lincoln ascribe to God?

3. How does Lincoln think the North should treat the South when the war ends?

Fellow Countrymen:

At this second appearing to take the oath of the presidential office, there is less occasion for an extended address than there was at the first. Then a statement, somewhat in detail, of a course to be pursued, seemed fitting and proper. Now, at the expiration of four years, during which public declarations have been constantly called forth on every point and phase of the great contest which still absorbs the attention, and engrosses the energies of the nation, little that is new could be presented. The progress of our arms, upon which all else chiefly depends, is as well known to the public as to myself; and it is, I trust, reasonably satisfactory and encouraging to all. With high hope for the future, no prediction in regard to it is ventured.

On the occasion corresponding to this four years ago, all thoughts were anxiously directed to an impending civil-war. All dreaded it—all sought to avert it. While the inaugural address was being delivered from this place, devoted altogether to saving the Union without war, insurgent agents were in the city seeking to destroy it without war—seeking to dissolve the Union, and divide effects, by negotiation. Both parties deprecated war; but one of them would make war rather than let the nation survive; and the other would accept war rather than let it perish. And the war came.

One eighth of the whole population were colored slaves, not distributed generally over the Union, but localized in the Southern part of it. These slaves constituted a peculiar and powerful interest. All knew that this interest was, somehow, the cause of the war. To strengthen, perpetuate, and extend this interest was the object for which the insurgents would rend the Union, even by war; while the government claimed no right to do more than to restrict the territorial enlargement of it. Neither party expected for the war, the magnitude, or the duration, which it has already attained. Neither anticipated that the cause of the conflict might cease with, or even before, the conflict itself should cease. Each looked for an easier triumph, and a result less fundamental and astounding. Both read the same Bible, and pray to the same God; and each invokes His aid against the other. It may seem strange that any men should dare to ask a just God’s assistance in wringing their bread from the sweat of other men's faces; but let us judge not that we be not judged. The prayers of both could not be answered; that of neither has been answered fully. The Almighty has His own purposes. "Woe unto the world because of offenses! for it must needs be that offenses come; but woe to that man by whom the offense cometh!" If we shall suppose that American Slavery is one of those offenses which, in the providence of God, must needs come, but which, having continued through His appointed time, He now wills to remove, and that He gives to both North and South, this terrible war, as the woe due to those by whom the offense came, shall we discern therein any departure from those divine attributes which the believers in a Living God always ascribe to Him? Fondly do we hope—fervently do we pray—that this mighty scourge of war may speedily pass away. Yet, if God wills that it continue, until all the wealth piled by the bond-man's two hundred and fifty years of unrequited toil shall be sunk, and until every drop of blood drawn with the lash, shall be paid by another drawn with the sword, as was said three thousand years ago, so still it must be said "the judgments of the Lord, are true and righteous altogether."

With malice toward none; with charity for all; with firmness in the right, as God gives us to see the right, let us strive on to finish the work we are in; to bind up the nation's wounds; to care for him who shall have borne the battle, and for his widow, and his orphan—to do all which may achieve and cherish a just, and a lasting peace, among ourselves, and with all nations.
U.S. CONGRESS AND STATES

Thirteenth Amendment to the Constitution

AMENDMENT

December 18, 1865
United States of America

BACKGROUND

The U.S. Congress passed and three-quarters of states ratified the Thirteenth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution by December 6, 1865, and the amendment was acknowledged as effective by Secretary of State William Seward on December 18, 1865.

ANNOTATIONS

Section 1. Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction.

Section 2. Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

NOTES & QUESTIONS

U.S. Const. amend. XIII.
GOVERNOR WOODROW WILSON (D-NJ)

What is Progress?

SPEECH

1912

BACKGROUND

Woodrow Wilson delivered versions of this speech on several occasions during his campaign for the presidency in 1912.

GUIDING QUESTIONS

1. What problems does America now face, according to Wilson?

2. What is the issue with the Founders’ view of government and how they structured it?

3. How must government change, in Wilson’s view?

What is Progress?
Woodrow Wilson

…The laws of this country have not kept up with the change of economic circumstances in this country; they have not kept up with the change of political circumstances; and therefore we are not even where we were when we started. We shall have to run, not until we are out of breath, but until we have caught up with our own conditions, before we shall be where we were when we started; when we started this great experiment which has been the hope and the beacon of the world. And we should have to run twice as fast as any rational program I have seen in order to get anywhere else.

I am, therefore, forced to be a progressive, if for no other reason, because we have not kept up with our changes of conditions, either in the economic field or in the political field. We have not kept up as well as other nations have. We have not kept our practices adjusted to the facts of the case, and until we do, and unless we do, the facts of the case will always have the better of the argument; because if you do not adjust your laws to the facts, so much the worse for the laws, not for the facts, because law trails along after the facts. Only that law is unsafe which runs ahead of the facts and beckons to it and makes it follow the will-o’-the-wisps of imaginative projects.

Business is in a situation in America which it was never in before; it is in a situation to which we have not adjusted our laws. Our laws are still meant for business done by individuals; they have not been satisfactorily adjusted to business done by great combinations, and we have got to adjust them. I do not say we may or may not; I say we must; there is no choice. If your laws do not fit your facts, the facts are not injured, the law is damaged; because the law, unless I have studied it amiss, is the expression of the facts in legal relationships. Laws have never altered the facts; laws have always necessarily expressed the facts; adjusted interests as they have arisen and have changed toward one another.

Politics in America is in a case which sadly requires attention. The system set up by our law and our usage doesn’t work,—or at least it can’t be depended on; it is made to work only by a most unreasonable expenditure of labor and pains. The government, which was designed for the people, has got into the hands of bosses and their employers, the special interests. An invisible empire has been set up above the forms of democracy….
But what is progress going to do with the past, and with the present? How is it going to treat them? With ignominy, or respect? Should it break with them altogether, or rise out of them, with its roots still deep in the older time? What attitude shall progressives take toward the existing order, toward those institutions of conservatism, the Constitution, the laws, and the courts?...

The makers of our Federal Constitution read Montesquieu with true scientific enthusiasm. They were scientists in their way,—the best way of their age,—those fathers of the nation. Jefferson wrote of "the laws of Nature,"—and then by way of afterthought,—"and of Nature's God." And they constructed a government as they would have constructed an orrery,—to display the laws of nature. Politics in their thought was a variety of mechanics. The Constitution was founded on the law of gravitation. The government was to exist and move by virtue of the efficacy of "checks and balances."

The trouble with the theory is that government is not a machine, but a living thing. It falls, not under the theory of the universe, but under the theory of organic life. It is accountable to Darwin, not to Newton. It is modified by its environment, necessitated by its tasks, shaped to its functions by the sheer pressure of life. No living thing can have its organs offset against each other, as checks, and live. On the contrary, its life is dependent upon their quick cooperation, their ready response to the commands of instinct or intelligence, their amicable community of purpose. Government is not a body of blind forces; it is a body of men, with highly differentiated functions, no doubt, in our modern day, of specialization, with a common task and purpose. Their cooperation is indispensable, their warfare fatal. There can be no successful government without the intimate, instinctive coordination of the organs of life and action. This is not theory, but fact, and displays its force as fact, whatever theories may be thrown across its track. Living political constitutions must be Darwinian in structure and in practice. Society is a living organism and must obey the laws of life, not of mechanics; it must develop.
All that progressives ask or desire is permission—in an era when "development," "evolution," is the scientific word—to interpret the Constitution according to the Darwinian principle; all they ask is recognition of the fact that a nation is a living thing and not a machine.

Some citizens of this country have never got beyond the Declaration of Independence, signed in Philadelphia, July 4th, 1776. Their bosoms swell against George III, but they have no consciousness of the war for freedom that is going on today.

The Declaration of Independence did not mention the questions of our day. It is of no consequence to us unless we can translate its general terms into examples of the present day and substitute them in some vital way for the examples it itself gives, so concrete, so intimately involved in the circumstances of the day in which it was conceived and written.

It is an eminently practical document, meant for the use of practical men; not a thesis for philosophers, but a whip for tyrants; not a theory of government, but a program of action. Unless we can translate it into the questions of our own day, we are not worthy of it, we are not the sons of the sires who acted in response to its challenge.

What form does the contest between tyranny and freedom take today? What is the special form of tyranny we now fight? How does it endanger the rights of the people, and what do we mean to do in order to make our contest against it effectual? What are to be the items of our new declaration of independence?

By tyranny, as we now fight it, we mean control of the law, of legislation and adjudication, by organizations which do not represent the people, by means which are private and selfish. We mean, specifically, the conduct of our affairs and the shaping of our legislation in the interest of special bodies of capital and those who organize their use. We mean the alliance, for this purpose, of political machines with selfish business. We mean the exploitation of the people by legal and political means. We have seen many of our governments under these influences cease to be representative governments, cease to be governments representative of the people, and become governments representative of special interests, controlled by machines, which in their turn are not controlled by the people....
PRESIDENT WOODROW WILSON (D)
War Message to Congress

February 3, 1917
Congress | Washington, D.C.

BACKGROUND

President Woodrow Wilson delivered this address to Congress regarding the relationship between the United States and Germany.

ANNOTATIONS

...There is one choice we cannot make, we are incapable of making: we will not choose the path of submission and suffer the most sacred rights of our Nation and our people to be ignored or violated. The wrongs against which we now array ourselves are no common wrongs; they cut to the very roots of human life.

5  With a profound sense of the solemn and even tragical character of the step I am taking and of the grave responsibilities which it involves, but in unhesitating obedience to what I deem my constitutional duty, I advise that the Congress declare the recent course of the Imperial German Government to be in fact nothing less than war against the government and people of the United States; that it formally accept the status of belligerent which has thus been thrust upon it, and that it take immediate steps not only to put the country in a more thorough state of defense but also to exert all its power and employ all its resources to bring the Government of the German Empire to terms and end the war....

10  We are accepting this challenge of hostile purpose because we know that in such a Government, following such methods, we can never have a friend; and that in the presence of its organized power, always lying in wait to accomplish we know not what purpose, there can be no assured security for the democratic Governments of the world. We are now about to accept gauge of battle with this natural foe to liberty and shall, if necessary, spend the whole force of the nation to check and nullify its pretensions and its power. We are glad, now that we see the facts with no veil of false pretense about them to fight thus for the ultimate peace of the world and for the liberation of its peoples, the German peoples included: for the rights of nations great and small and the privilege of men everywhere to choose their way of life and of obedience. The world must be made safe for democracy. Its peace must be planted upon the tested foundations of political liberty. We have no selfish ends to serve.

---

We desire no conquest, no dominion. We seek no indemnities for ourselves, no material compensation for the sacrifices we shall freely make. We are but one of the champions of the rights of mankind. We shall be satisfied when those rights have been made as secure as the faith and the freedom of nations can make them. Just because we fight without rancor and without selfish object, seeking nothing for ourselves but what we shall wish to share with all free peoples, we shall, I feel confident, conduct our operations as belligerents without passion and ourselves observe with proud punctilio the principles of right and of fair play we profess to be fighting for….

It is a distressing and oppressive duty, Gentlemen of the Congress, which I have performed in thus addressing you. There are, it may be many months of fiery trial and sacrifice ahead of us. It is a fearful thing to lead this great peaceful people into war, into the most terrible and disastrous of all wars, civilization itself seeming to be in the balance.

But the right is more precious than peace, and we shall fight for the things which we have always carried nearest our hearts,—for democracy, for the right of those who submit to authority to have a voice in their own Governments, for the rights and liberties of small nations, for a universal dominion of right by such a concert of free peoples as shall bring peace and safety to all nations and make the world itself at last free. To such a task we can dericate our lives and our fortunes, every thing that we are and everything that we have, with the pride of those who know that the day has come when America is privileged to spend her blood and her might for the principles that gave her birth and happiness and the peace which she has treasured. God helping her, she can do no other.
WOODROW WILSON
“The Study of Administration”
ESSAY EXCERPTS

BACKGROUND

Bryn Mawr College political science professor Woodrow Wilson wrote this essay proposing independent regulatory agencies insulated from the political process.

ANNOTATIONS

…The field of administration is a field of business. It is removed from the hurry and strife of politics; it at most points stands apart even from the debatable ground of constitutional study. It is a part of political life only as the methods of the counting-house are a part of the life of society; only as machinery is part of the manufactured product. But it is, at the same time, raised very far above the dull level of mere technical detail by the fact that through its greater principles it is directly connected with the lasting maxims of political wisdom, the permanent truths of political progress.

The object of administrative study is to rescue executive methods from the confusion and costliness of empirical experiment and set them upon foundations laid deep in stable principle.

Public administration is detailed and systematic execution of public law. Every particular application of general law is an act of administration. The assessment and raising of taxes, for instance, the hanging of a criminal, the transportation and delivery of the mails, the equipment and recruiting of the army and navy, etc., are all obviously acts of administra tion; but the general laws which direct these things to be done are as obviously outside of and above administration. The broad plans of governmental action are not administrative;

REFERENCE

the detailed execution of such plans is administrative.…

Just here we manifestly emerge upon the field of that still larger question,—the proper relations between public opinion and administration.

To whom is official trustworthiness to be disclosed, and by whom is it to be rewarded? Is the official to look to the public for his need of praise and his push of promotion, or only to his superior in office? Are the people to be called in to settle administrative discipline as they are called in to settle constitutional principles? These questions evidently find their root in what is undoubtedly the fundamental problem of this whole study. That problem is: What part shall public opinion take in the conduct of administration?

The right answer seems to be, that public opinion shall play the part of authoritative critic.…

The problem is to make public opinion efficient without suffering it to be meddlesome.

Directly exercised, in the oversight of the daily details and in the choice of the daily means of government, public criticism is of course a clumsy nuisance, a rustic handling delicate machinery. But as superintending the greater forces of formative policy alike in politics and administration, public criticism is altogether safe and beneficent, altogether indispensable.
Let administrative study find the best means for giving public criticism this control and for shutting it out from all other interference.…
President Franklin D. Roosevelt (D)
Message on the State of the Union
Speech
January 11, 1944
Congress | Washington, D.C.

BACKGROUND

President Franklin Roosevelt outlined his second or “economic Bill of Rights” while delivering his state of the union address to Congress looking forward to post-war policies.

GUIDING QUESTIONS

1. What does Roosevelt consider our “political rights”?

2. Why are those political rights no longer adequate, according to Roosevelt?

3. How would the government go about securing things such as a right to a decent living or recreation?

4. What or who in America does Roosevelt label as Fascistic?

5. Who is the source for all these rights?

---

It is our duty now to begin to lay the plans and determine the strategy for the winning of a lasting peace and the establishment of an American standard of living higher than ever before known. We cannot be content, no matter how high that general standard of living may be, if some fraction of our people—whether it be one-third or one-fifth or one-tenth—is ill-fed, ill-clothed, ill-housed, and insecure.

This Republic had its beginning, and grew to its present strength, under the protection of certain inalienable political rights—among them the right of free speech, free press, free worship, trial by jury, freedom from unreasonable searches and seizures. They were our rights to life and liberty.

As our Nation has grown in size and stature, however—as our industrial economy expanded—these political rights proved inadequate to assure us equality in the pursuit of happiness.

We have come to a clear realization of the fact that true individual freedom cannot exist without economic security and independence. "Necessitous men are not free men." People who are hungry and out of a job are the stuff of which dictatorships are made.

In our day these economic truths have become accepted as self-evident. We have accepted, so to speak, a second Bill of Rights under which a new basis of security and prosperity can be established for all—regardless of station, race, or creed.

Among these are:

The right to a useful and remunerative job in the industries or shops or farms or mines of the Nation;

The right to earn enough to provide adequate food and clothing and recreation;

The right of every farmer to raise and sell his products at a return which will give him and his family a decent living;
The right of every businessman, large and small, to trade in an atmosphere of freedom from unfair competition and domination by monopolies at home or abroad;

The right of every family to a decent home;

The right to adequate medical care and the opportunity to achieve and enjoy good health;

The right to adequate protection from the economic fears of old age, sickness, accident, and unemployment;

The right to a good education.

All of these rights spell security. And after this war is won we must be prepared to move forward, in the implementation of these rights, to new goals of human happiness and well-being.

America’s own rightful place in the world depends in large part upon how fully these and similar rights have been carried into practice for our citizens. For unless there is security here at home there cannot be lasting peace in the world.

One of the great American industrialists of our day—a man who has rendered yeoman service to his country in this crisis—recently emphasized the grave dangers of "rightist reaction" in this Nation. All clear-thinking businessmen share his concern. Indeed, if such reaction should develop—if history were to repeat itself and we were to return to the so-called "normalcy" of the 1920's—then it is certain that even though we shall have conquered our enemies on the battlefields abroad, we shall have yielded to the spirit of Fascism here at home.

I ask the Congress to explore the means for implementing this economic bill of rights—for it is definitely the responsibility of the Congress so to do. Many of these problems are already before committees of the Congress in the form of proposed legislation. I shall from time to time communicate with the Congress with respect to these and further proposals.
In the event that no adequate program of progress is evolved, I am certain that the Nation will be conscious of the fact.

Our fighting men abroad—and their families at home—expect such a program and have the right to insist upon it. It is to their demands that this Government should pay heed rather than the whining demands of selfish pressure groups who seek to feather their nests while young Americans are dying.

The foreign policy that we have been following—the policy that guided us at Moscow, Cairo, and Teheran—is based on the common sense principle which was best expressed by Benjamin Franklin on July 4, 1776: "We must all hang together, or assuredly we shall all hang separately."

I have often said that there are no two fronts for America in this war. There is only one front. There is one line of unity which extends from the hearts of the people at home to the men of our attacking forces in our farthest outposts. When we speak of our total effort, we speak of the factory and the field, and the mine as well as of the battleground—we speak of the soldier and the civilian, the citizen and his Government.

Each and every one of us has a solemn obligation under God to serve this Nation in its most critical hour—to keep this Nation great—to make this Nation greater in a better world.
The Inspiration of the Declaration of Independence

BACKGROUND

President Calvin Coolidge delivered this speech at Philadelphia to celebrate the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence and the founding of the United States.

ANNOTATIONS

...There is something beyond the establishment of a new nation, great as that event would be, in the Declaration of Independence which has ever since caused it to be regarded as one of the great charters that not only was to liberate America but was everywhere to ennoble humanity.

It was not because it was proposed to establish a new nation, but because it was proposed to establish a nation on new principles, that July 4, 1776, has come to be regarded as one of the greatest days in history. Great ideas do not burst upon the world unannounced. They are reached by a gradual development over a length of time usually proportionate to their importance. This is especially true of the principles laid down in the Declaration of Independence. Three very definite propositions were set out in its preamble regarding the nature of mankind and therefore of government. These were the doctrine that all men are created equal, that they are endowed with certain inalienable rights, and that therefore the source of the just powers of government must be derived from the consent of the governed.

If no one is to be accounted as born into a superior station, if there is to be no ruling class, and if all possess rights which can neither be bartered away nor taken from them by any earthly power, it follows as a matter of course that the practical authority of the Government has to rest on the consent of the governed. While these principles were not altogether new in political action, and were very far from new in political speculation, they had never been assembled before and declared in such a combination. But remarkable as this may be, it is not the chief distinction of the Declaration of Independence. The importance of political speculation is not to be underestimated, as I shall presently disclose. Until the idea is developed and the plan made there can be no action.

It was the fact that our Declaration of Independence containing these immortal truths was the political action of a duly authorized and constituted representative public body in its sovereign capacity, supported by the force of general opinion and by the armies of Washington already in the field, which makes it the most important civil document in the world. It was not only the principles declared, but the fact that therewith a new nation was born which was to be founded upon those principles and which from that time forth in its development has actually maintained those principles, that makes this pronouncement an incomparable event in the history of government. It was an assertion that a people had arisen determined to make every necessary sacrifice for the support of these truths and by their practical application bring the War of Independence to a successful conclusion and adopt the Constitution of the United States with all that it has meant to civilization.

The idea that the people have a right to choose their own rulers was not new in political history. It was the foundation of every popular attempt to depose an undesirable king.... But we should search these charters in vain for an assertion of the doctrine of equality. This principle had not before appeared as an official political declaration of any nation. It was profoundly revolutionary. It is one of the corner stones of American institutions....

Placing every man on a plane where he acknowledged no superiors, where no one possessed any right to rule over him, he must inevitably choose his own rulers through a system of self-government. This was their theory of democracy. In those days such doctrines would scarcely have been permitted to flourish and spread in any other country. This was the purpose which the fathers cherished. In order that they might have freedom to express these thoughts and opportunity to put them into action, whole congregations with their pastors had migrated to the colonies. These great truths were in the air that our people breathed. Whatever else we may say of it, the Declaration of Independence was profoundly American.

If this apprehension of the facts be correct, and the documentary evidence would appear to verify it, then certain conclusions are bound to follow. A spring will cease to flow if its source be dried up; a tree will wither if its roots be destroyed. In its main features the Declaration of Independence is a great spiritual document. It is a declaration not of material but of spiritual conceptions. Equality, liberty, popular sovereignty, the rights of man—these are not elements which we can see and touch. They are ideals. They have their source and their roots in the religious convictions. They belong to the unseen world. Unless the faith of the American people in these religious convictions is to endure, the principles of our Declaration will perish. We can not continue to enjoy the result if we neglect and abandon the cause.

About the Declaration there is a finality that is exceedingly restful. It is often asserted that the world has made a great deal of progress since 1776, that we have had new thoughts and new experiences which have given us a great advance over the people of that day, and that we may therefore very well discard their conclusions for something more modern. But that reasoning can not be applied to this great charter. If all men are created equal, that is final. If they are endowed with inalienable rights, that is final. If governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed, that is final. No advance, no progress can be made beyond these propositions. If anyone wishes to deny their truth or their soundness, the only direction in which he can proceed historically is not forward, but backward toward the time when there was no equality, no rights of the individual, no rule of the people. Those who wish to proceed in that direction can not lay claim to progress. They are reactionary. Their ideas are not more modern, but more ancient, than those of the Revolutionary fathers.
In the development of its institutions America can fairly claim that it has remained true to the principles which were declared 150 years ago. In all the essentials we have achieved an equality which was never possessed by any other people. Even in the less important matter of material possessions we have secured a wider and wider distribution of wealth. The rights of the individual are held sacred and protected by constitutional guarantees, which even the Government itself is bound not to violate. If there is any one thing among us that is established beyond question, it is self-government—the right of the people to rule. If there is any failure in respect to any of these principles, it is because there is a failure on the part of individuals to observe them. We hold that the duly authorized expression of the will of the people has a divine sanction. But even in that we come back to the theory of John Wise that “Democracy is Christ’s government....” The ultimate sanction of law rests on the righteous authority of the Almighty.

On an occasion like this a great temptation exists to present evidence of the practical success of our form of democratic republic at home and the ever-broadening acceptance it is securing abroad. Although these things are well known, their frequent consideration is an encouragement and an inspiration. But it is not results and effects so much as sources and causes that I believe it is even more necessary constantly to contemplate. Ours is a government of the people. It represents their will. Its officers may sometimes go astray, but that is not a reason for criticizing the principles of our institutions. The real heart of the American Government depends upon the heart of the people. It is from that source that we must look for all genuine reform. It is to that cause that we must ascribe all our results....

No other theory is adequate to explain or comprehend the Declaration of Independence. It is the product of the spiritual insight of the people. We live in an age of science and of abounding accumulation of material things. These did not create our Declaration. Our Declaration created them. The things of the spirit come first. Unless we cling to that, all our material prosperity, overwhelming though it may appear, will turn to a barren scepter in our grasp. If we are to maintain the great heritage which has been bequeathed to us, we must be like-minded as the fathers who created it. We must not sink into a pagan materialism. We must cultivate the reverence which they had for the things that are holy. We must follow the spiritual and moral leadership which they showed. We must keep replenished, that they may glow with a more compelling flame, the altar fires before which they worshipped.
WOMEN’S RIGHTS CONVENTION

Declarations of Sentiments and Resolutions

DECLARATION

July 19, 1848

Wesleyan Chapel | Seneca Falls, New York

BACKGROUND

Early suffragist leader Elizabeth Cady Stanton drafted this statement at the 1848 Women’s Rights Convention at Seneca Falls.

GUIDING QUESTIONS

1. Who is the "he" referred to in the document?

2. What do the women demand from American society?

When, in the course of human events, it becomes necessary for one portion of the family of man to assume among the people of the earth a position different from that which they have hitherto occupied, but one to which the laws of nature and of nature’s God entitle them, a decent respect to the opinions of mankind requires that they should declare the causes that impel them to such a course.

We hold these truths to be self-evident: that all men and women are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; that to secure these rights governments are instituted, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed. Whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the right of those who suffer from it to refuse allegiance to it, and to insist upon the institution of a new government, laying its foundation on such principles, and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness. Prudence, indeed, will dictate that governments long established should not be changed for light and transient causes; and accordingly all experience hath shown that mankind are more disposed to suffer, while evils are sufferable, than to right themselves by abolishing the forms to which they were accustomed. But when a long train of abuses and usurpations, pursuing invariably the same object evinces a design to reduce them under absolute despotism, it is their duty to throw off such government, and to provide new guards for their future security. Such has been the patient sufferance of the women under this government, and such is now the necessity which constrains them to demand the equal station to which they are entitled.

The history of mankind is a history of repeated injuries and usurpations on the part of man toward woman, having in direct object the establishment of an absolute tyranny over her. To prove this, let facts be submitted to a candid world.

He has never permitted her to exercise her inalienable right to the elective franchise.

He has compelled her to submit to laws, in the formation of which she had no voice.
He has withheld from her rights which are given to the most ignorant and degraded men—both natives and foreigners.

Having deprived her of this first right of a citizen, the elective franchise, thereby leaving her without representation in the halls of legislation, he has oppressed her on all sides.

He has made her, if married, in the eye of the law, civilly dead.

He has taken from her all right in property, even to the wages she earns.

He has made her, morally, an irresponsible being, as she can commit many crimes with impunity, provided they be done in the presence of her husband. In the covenant of marriage, she is compelled to promise obedience to her husband, he becoming, to all intents and purposes, her master—the law giving him power to deprive her of her liberty, and to administer chastisement.

He has so framed the laws of divorce, as to what shall be the proper causes, and in case of separation, to whom the guardianship of the children shall be given, as to be wholly regardless of the happiness of women—the law, in all cases, going upon a false supposition of the supremacy of man, and giving all power into his hands.

After depriving her of all rights as a married woman, if single, and the owner of property, he has taxed her to support a government which recognizes her only when her property can be made profitable to it.

He has monopolized nearly all the profitable employments, and from those she is permitted to follow, she receives but a scanty remuneration. He closes against her all the avenues to wealth and distinction which he considers most honorable to himself. As a teacher of theology, medicine, or law, she is not known.

He has denied her the facilities for obtaining a thorough education, all colleges being closed against her.
He allows her in Church, as well as State, but a subordinate position, claiming Apostolic authority for her exclusion from the ministry, and, with some exceptions, from any public participation in the affairs of the Church.

He has created a false public sentiment by giving to the world a different code of morals for men and women, by which moral delinquencies which exclude women from society, are not only tolerated, but deemed of little account in man.

He has usurped the prerogative of Jehovah himself, claiming it as his right to assign for her a sphere of action, when that belongs to her conscience and to her God.

He has endeavored, in every way that he could, to destroy her confidence in her own powers, to lessen her self-respect, and to make her willing to lead a dependent and abject life.

Now, in view of this entire disfranchisement of one-half the people of this country, their social and religious degradation—in view of the unjust laws above mentioned, and because women do feel themselves aggrieved, oppressed, and fraudulently deprived of their most sacred rights, we insist that they have immediate admission to all the rights and privileges which belong to them as citizens of the United States.

In entering upon the great work before us, we anticipate no small amount of misconception, misrepresentation, and ridicule; but we shall use every instrumentality within our power to effect our object. We shall employ agents, circulate tracts, petition the State and National legislatures, and endeavor to enlist the pulpit and the press in our behalf. We hope this Convention will be followed by a series of Conventions embracing every part of the country.
Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution

BACKGROUND

The U.S. Congress passed and three-quarters of states ratified the Fourteenth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution by July 21, 1868, and the amendment was acknowledged as effective by Secretary of State William Seward on July 28, 1868.

ANNOTATIONS

Section 1. All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

Section 2. Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed. But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice-President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the Executive and Judicial officers of a State, or the members of the Legislature thereof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State, being twenty-one years of age, and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion, or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens twenty-one years of age in such State.

---

U.S. Const. amend. XIV.

Section 3. No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice-President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath, as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability.

Section 4. The validity of the public debt of the United States, authorized by law, including debts incurred for payment of pensions and bounties for services in suppressing insurrection or rebellion, shall not be questioned. But neither the United States nor any State shall assume or pay any debt or obligation incurred in aid of insurrection or rebellion against the United States, or any claim for the loss or emancipation of any slave; but all such debts, obligations and claims shall be held illegal and void.

Section 5. The Congress shall have power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article.
U.S. CONGRESS AND STATES

Fifteenth Amendment to the Constitution

BACKGROUND

The U.S. Congress passed and three-quarters of states ratified the Fifteenth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution by February 3, 1870, and the amendment was acknowledged as effective by Secretary of State Hamilton Fish on March 30, 1870.

ANNOTATIONS

Section 1. The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

Section 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

U.S. Const. amend. XV.
MARTIN LUTHER KING, JR.

At the March on Washington

SPEECH

August 28, 1963
Lincoln Memorial | Washington, D.C.

BACKGROUND

Martin Luther King, Jr., delivered this address at the March on Washington from the steps of the Lincoln Memorial.

GUIDING QUESTIONS

1. What historical documents does King refer to in his speech?

2. What is the “promissory note”?

3. What is King’s dream?

4. What is the significance of King’s ending the speech quoting “My Country Tis of Thee”?

---

Martin Luther King, Jr., “I Have A Dream,” in I Have A Dream: Writings and Speeches that Changed the World (San Francisco: Harper, 1986).
I am happy to join with you today in what will go down in history as the greatest demonstration for freedom in the history of our nation.

Five score years ago, a great American, in whose symbolic shadow we stand today, signed the Emancipation Proclamation. This momentous decree came as a great beacon light of hope to millions of Negro slaves who had been seared in the flames of withering injustice. It came as a joyous daybreak to end the long night of their captivity.

But one hundred years later, the Negro still is not free; one hundred years later, the life of the Negro is still sadly crippled by the manacles of segregation and the chains of discrimination; one hundred years later, the Negro lives on a lonely island of poverty in the midst of a vast ocean of material prosperity; one hundred years later, the Negro is still languished in the corners of American society and finds himself in exile in his own land.

So we've come here today to dramatize a shameful condition. In a sense we've come to our nation's capital to cash a check. When the architects of our republic wrote the magnificent words of the Constitution and the Declaration of Independence, they were signing a promissory note to which every American was to fall heir. This note was the promise that all men, yes, black men as well as white men, would be guaranteed the unalienable rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

It is obvious today that America has defaulted on this promissory note in so far as her citizens of color are concerned. Instead of honoring this sacred obligation, America has given the Negro people a bad check, a check which has come back marked “insufficient funds.”

But we refuse to believe that the bank of justice is bankrupt. We refuse to believe that there are insufficient funds in the great vaults of opportunity of this nation. And so we have come to cash this check, a check that will give us upon demand the riches of freedom and the security of justice.

We have also come to this hallowed spot to remind America of the fierce urgency of now.
This is no time to engage in the luxury of cooling off or to take the tranquilizing drug of gradualism.

Now is the time to make real the promises of democracy; now is the time to rise from the dark and desolate valley of segregation to the sunlit path of racial justice; now is the time to lift our nation from the quicksands of racial injustice to the solid rock of brotherhood; now is the time to make justice a reality for all of God’s children.

It would be fatal for the nation to overlook the urgency of the moment.

This sweltering summer of the Negro’s legitimate discontent will not pass until there is an invigorating autumn of freedom and equality. Nineteen sixty-three is not an end, but a beginning. And those who hope that the Negro needed to blow off steam and will now be content, will have a rude awakening if the nation returns to business as usual. There will be neither rest nor tranquility in America until the Negro is granted his citizenship rights. The whirlwinds of revolt will continue to shake the foundations of our nation until the bright day of justice emerges.

But there is something that I must say to my people, who stand on the worn threshold which leads into the palace of justice. In the process of gaining our rightful place, we must not be guilty of wrongful deeds. Let us not seek to satisfy our thirst for freedom by drinking from the cup of bitterness and hatred.

We must forever conduct our struggle on the high plane of dignity and discipline. We must not allow our creative protests to degenerate into physical violence. Again and again we must rise to the majestic heights of meeting physical force with soul force. The marvelous new militancy, which has engulfed the Negro community, must not lead us to a distrust of all white people. For many of our white brothers, as evidenced by their presence here today, have come to realize that their destiny is tied up with our destiny. And they have come to realize that their freedom is inextricably bound to our freedom.

We cannot walk alone. And as we walk, we must make the pledge that we shall always march ahead. We cannot turn back.
There are those who are asking the devotees of Civil Rights, “When will you be satisfied?”

We can never be satisfied as long as the Negro is the victim of the unspeakable horrors of police brutality; we can never be satisfied as long as our bodies, heavy with the fatigue of travel, cannot gain lodging in the motels of the highways and the hotels of the cities; we cannot be satisfied as long as the Negro’s basic mobility is from a smaller ghetto to a larger one; we can never be satisfied as long as our children are stripped of their selfhood and robbed of their dignity by signs stating “For Whites Only”; we cannot be satisfied as long as the Negro in Mississippi cannot vote, and the Negro in New York believes he has nothing for which to vote.

No! no, we are not satisfied, and we will not be satisfied until “justice rolls down like waters and righteousness like a mighty stream.”

I am not unmindful that some of you have come here out of great trials and tribulations. Some of you have come fresh from narrow jail cells. Some of you have come from areas where your quest for freedom left you battered by the storms of persecution and staggered by the winds of police brutality.

You have been the veterans of creative suffering.

Continue to work with the faith that unearned suffering is redemptive.

Go back to Mississippi. Go back to Alabama. Go back to South Carolina. Go back to Georgia. Go back to Louisiana. Go back to the slums and ghettos of our Northern cities, knowing that somehow this situation can and will be changed. Let us not wallow in the valley of despair.

I say to you today, my friends, so even though we face the difficulties of today and tomorrow, I still have a dream.

It is a dream deeply rooted in the American dream.
I have a dream that one day this nation will rise up and live out the true meaning of its creed, “We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal.”

I have a dream that one day on the red hills of Georgia, sons of former slaves and the sons of former slaveowners will be able to sit down together at the table of brotherhood.

I have a dream that one day even the state of Mississippi, a state sweltering with the heat of injustice, sweltering with the heat of oppression, will be transformed into an oasis of freedom and justice.

I have a dream that my four little children will one day live in a nation where they will not be judged by the color of their skin but by the content of their character.

I have a dream today!

I have a dream that one day down in Alabama — with its vicious racists, with its Governor having his lips dripping with the words of interposition and nullification — one day right there in Alabama, little black boys and black girls will be able to join hands with little white boys and white girls as sisters and brothers.

I have a dream today!

I have a dream that one day every valley shall be exalted, and every hill and mountain shall be made low. The rough places will be plain and the crooked places will be made straight, “and the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together.”

This is our hope. This is the faith that I go back to the South with. With this faith we will be able to hew out of the mountain of despair a stone of hope.

With this faith we will be able to transform the jangling discords of our nation into a beautiful symphony of brotherhood. With this faith we will be able to work together, to pray together, to struggle together, to go to jail together, to stand up for freedom together, knowing that we will be free one day.
And this will be the day.

This will be the day when all of God’s children will be able to sing with new meaning, “My country ’tis of thee, sweet land of liberty, of thee I sing. Land where my father died, land of the pilgrim’s pride, from every mountainside, let freedom ring.” And if America is to be a great nation, this must become true.

So let freedom ring from the prodigious hilltops of New Hampshire; let freedom ring from the mighty mountains of New York; let freedom ring from the heightening Alleghenies of Pennsylvania; let freedom ring from the snow-capped Rockies of Colorado; let freedom ring from the curvaceous slopes of California.

But not only that.

Let freedom ring from Stone Mountain of Georgia; let freedom ring from Lookout Mountain of Tennessee; let freedom ring from every hill and mole hill of Mississippi. “From every mountainside, let freedom ring.”

And when this happens, and when we allow freedom to ring, when we let it ring from every village and every hamlet, from every state and every city, we will be able to speed up that day when all of God’s children, black men and white men, Jews and Gentiles, Protestants and Catholics, will be able to join hands and sing in the words of the old Negro spiritual:

“Free at last. Free at last. Thank God Almighty, we are free at last.”
HIGH SCHOOL

American History

OVERVIEW

Unit 1 | The British Colonies of North America

LESSON 1  The Lands, Waters, and Peoples of America
LESSON 2  1492–1630  Exploration and Settlement
LESSON 3  1630–1732  The Colonies in Profile
LESSON 4  1607–1763  Major Events in the Colonies

Unit 2 | The American Founding

LESSON 1  1763–1776  Self-Government or Tyranny
LESSON 2  1776  The Declaration of Independence
LESSON 3  1776–1783  The War of Independence
LESSON 4  1783–1789  The United States Constitution

Unit 3 | The Early Republic  Coming Soon!
Unit 4 | The American Civil War

LESSON 1
1848–1854  The Expansion of Slavery

LESSON 2
1854–1861  Toward Civil War

LESSON 3
1861–1865  The Civil War

LESSON 4
1865–1877  Reconstruction

Unit 5 | The Turn of the Century
Coming Soon!

Unit 6 | The Interwar Years & World War II
Coming Soon!

Unit 7 | Post-War America
Coming Soon!

Unit 8 | Recent American History
Coming Soon!
UNIT 1
The British Colonies of North America
1492–1763

UNIT PREVIEW

Structure

LESSON 1 The Lands, Waters, and Peoples of America 2–3 classes p. 7
LESSON 2 1492–1630 Exploration and Settlement 2–3 classes p. 17
LESSON 3 1630–1732 The Colonies in Profile 2–3 classes p. 28
LESSON 4 1607–1763 Major Events in the Colonies 4–5 classes p. 37
APPENDIX A Study Guide, Test, and Writing Assignment p. 45
APPENDIX B Primary Sources p. 63

Why Teach the British Colonies of North America?

Christopher Columbus’s discovery of what was then termed “The New World” is one of the most consequential events in all of recorded history. It was as if another half of Earth was being opened to the peoples of Europe, Africa, and Asia, and the changes that followed this momentous discovery were immense. Students should be especially aware of the profound effects of the initial contact of European explorers with the indigenous peoples of North America. They should understand the ways of life characteristic of Native American tribes, the exploits of European explorers and settlers, and the triumphs and tragedies that defined the relationships between settlers and natives. Students should also study closely the manner in which the British colonies of North America were established, since those first settlements would be the seedbed of our country. Our unique American heritage began here, on these coasts, among scattered settlements of men and women pursuing economic independence or religious freedom, leaving behind their familiar lives to seek liberty and opportunity at what to them was the edge of the world. With the promise of freedom at these far reaches also came untold hardships and daily dangers. The American story begins with those few who braved these risks for the freedom to pursue what all human beings desire to attain: happiness.

Enduring Ideas from This Unit

1. America's varied and wondrous geography has played a crucial role in many of America's successes.
2. The discovery, exploration, and settlement of the Western Hemisphere was one of the most consequential series of events in human history.
3. The contact between indigenous North American and European civilizations resulted in both benefits and afflictions for natives and colonists alike.
4. The British colonies of North America were unique, and their circumstances gradually shaped the character of the colonists into something unprecedented: the American.
5. The freedom afforded to the American colonists resulted in a degree of successful self-government unknown to the rest of the world in 1763.

What Teachers Should Consider

Imagine two more continents, an eighth and a ninth, with different terrain, untouched resources, seemingly limitless lands, and complete openness to any sort of political regime. This is the vision teachers might consider adopting in preparing students to learn American history. In other words, one can adopt an outlook similar to that of the people who began the first chapter in the story of America. Such an outlook will help students to see the origins of America as something that was fluid and not at all inevitable.

In the same way the explorers, settlers, and indigenous Native Americans keenly fixed their attention on the contours of the North American landscape, so should students of American history at the outset of their studies. A close study of American geography sets the stage on which Americans of every generation would act out their lives.

Europeans' exploration and settlement of the Western Hemisphere is an extraordinary era in terms of historical impact, but it also contains engaging stories of intrepid discoverers and of the conditions they found and helped to shape. It is important to find the proper balance in conveying the story of that era. Students ought to step into the lives of these explorers and settlers and understand not only their motivations for undertaking such hazardous trips and ways of living but also their experiences on the Atlantic and on the fringes of an unknown continent. They should also think carefully and honestly about the interactions between Native Americans, explorers, and settlers. They will encounter a mixed picture. At times, they will see cooperation, care, and mutual respect; at other times they will see all the duplicity and injustice that human nature is capable of. They will see these traits exhibited by all parties at various moments and in different circumstances.

Teachers should also focus on making clear the differences between England’s North American colonies and those of other emerging New World empires, such as Spain, France, and Portugal. They should bring out what was unique among the English settlers, from the form of their colonies’ settlements to the social and economic ventures of the colonists themselves, as well as their varied relationships to the mother country. Each English colony may be taught separately, each offering a distinct social and economic profile, while a final lesson may be devoted to studying the major events and movements in shared colonial American history. Together, students should come to see that an unplanned experiment was unfolding in the British colonies of North America: one that was shaping a unique society and citizenry, one that would be equipped for great accomplishments in the coming centuries.

How Teachers Can Learn More

TEXTS

Albion’s Seed, David Hackett Fischer
Voyagers to the West, Bernard Bailyn
Peripheries and Center, Jack P. Greene
American Slavery, American Freedom, Edmund Morgan
African Founders, David Hackett Fischer
The Formative Years, 1607–1763, Clarence Ver Steeg
The Roots of American Order, Russell Kirk
Freedom Just Around the Corner, Walter McDougall
The French and Indian War, Walter Borneman
American Heritage: A Reader, ed. Hillsdale College History Faculty

ONLINE COURSES | Online.Hillsdale.edu

The Great American Story: A Land of Hope
American Heritage: From Colonial Settlement to Current Day
Lesson Planning Resources

TEACHER RESOURCES

A Teacher’s Guide to Land of Hope, Wilfred McClay and John McBride
A Student Workbook for Land of Hope, Wilfred McClay and John McBride

STUDENT RESOURCES

Land of Hope, Wilfred McClay

PRIMARY SOURCES

Letter to Raphael Sanchez, Christopher Columbus
Letter to King Ferdinand II, Christopher Columbus
Laws of Virginia
The Mayflower Compact
“A Modell of Christian Charity,” John Winthrop
Fundamental Orders of Connecticut
Preface to the Frame of Government of Pennsylvania
An Act for Freedom of Conscience in Pennsylvania
Magna Carta
Act of the General Court of Massachusetts
English Bill of Rights
Second Treatise of Government, John Locke
Albany Plan of Union
LESSON PLANS, FORMATIVE QUIZZES, AND ASSIGNMENTS
Lesson 1—The Lands, Waters, and Peoples of America

LESSON OBJECTIVE

Students learn about the geography of what would become the United States of America, including its physical contours, climate, advantages for civilization, and its Native American inhabitants, as well as the present-day political map of the United States.

TEACHER PREPARATION

Create a note outline based on the following:

Student Texts
- Land of Hope
  Pages xi–xiv, 2–7
- Primary Sources
  See below.

Teacher Texts
- A Teacher's Guide to Land of Hope
  Pages 1–7
- A Student Workbook for Land of Hope
  Pages 1–5

Online.Hillsdale.edu
- The Great American Story
  Lectures 1 and 2
- American Heritage
  Lecture 1

STUDENT PREPARATION

Assignment: Students read Land of Hope, pages xi–xiv, 2–7, and either complete the reading questions handout in the Student Workbook for Land of Hope (pages 1–5) or prepare for a reading quiz (provided below).

CORE CONTENT IN THIS LESSON

Topographic Geography
- Atlantic Ocean
- Caribbean Sea
- San Salvador
- Bahamas
- Puerto Rico
- U.S. Virgin Islands
- Bering Strait
- St. Lawrence River
- Appalachian Mountains
- Acadia National Park
- Mount Washington
- Green Mountains
- Lake Champlain
- Adirondack Mountains
- Finger Lakes
- Lake Ontario
- Niagara River
- Niagara Falls
- Lake Erie
- Charles River
Cape Cod
Nantucket
Mohegan Bluffs
Dinosaur Trackway
Long Island Sound
Long Island
Manhattan Island
Hudson River
Catskill Mountains
Whitesbog
Ganoga Falls
Allegheny River
Allegheny Mountains
Great Cypress Swamp
Assateague Island
District of Columbia
Potomac River
Chesapeake Bay
James River
Blue Ridge Mountains
Shenandoah Valley
Seneca Rocks
Outer Banks
The Sandhills
Great Smoky Mountains
Stone Mountain
Lake Okeechobee
The Everglades
Straits of Florida
Florida Keys
Gulf of Mexico
Noccalula Falls
Mississippi River
Mississippi Delta
Lake Pontchartrain
Ohio River
Ohio River Valley
Great Serpent Mound
Detroit/St. Clair Rivers
Lake St. Clair
Lake Huron
Lake Michigan
Straits of Mackinac
Michigan's Lower Peninsula
Sleeping Bear Dunes
Indiana Dunes
Cave-in-Rock
Michigan's Upper Peninsula
Lake Superior
Apostle Islands
Great Lakes
Mammoth Caves
Cumberland Gap
Tennessee River
49th Parallel
Lake of the Woods
Theodore Roosevelt National Park
Badlands
Great Plains
Maquoketa Caves
Platte River
Chimney Rock
Missouri River
Onondaga Cave
Little Jerusalem (Kansas)
Arkansas River
Hot Springs National Park
Great Salt Plains
Red River
Rio Grande
Rocky Mountains
Continental Divide
Glacier National Park
Yellowstone National Park
Old Faithful
Snake River
Cassia Silent City of Rocks
Colorado Dunes
Bryce Canyon
Arches National Park
Great Salt Lake
Lake Tahoe
Valley of Fire
Hoover Dam
Oklahoma Panhandle
Texas Panhandle
Big Bend
Colorado Canyon
Carlsbad Caverns
White Sands
Colorado River
Grand Canyon
Gadsden Purchase
Puget Sound
Columbia River
Mount Rainier
Mount St. Helens
Olympic National Park
Hall of Marshes
Thor’s Well
Crater Lake
San Francisco Bay
Sierra Nevada
San Joaquin Valley
Big Sur
Sequoia National Park
Yosemite National Park

Death Valley
Mojave Desert
Pacific Ocean
Yukon River
Mount McKinley/Denali
Bering Sea
Bering Strait
Hawaiian Islands
Maui
Oahu
Kilauea Volcano
American Samoa
Guam
Northern Mariana Islands

New York
Albany
New York City
Brooklyn
Buffalo
Pennsylvania
Harrisburg
Philadelphia
Pittsburgh
Georgia
Atlanta
Savannah
District of Columbia
Washington
Vermont
Montpelier
Burlington
Kentucky
Frankfort Louisville
Tennessee
Nashville
Memphis
Ohio
Columbus
Cleveland
Cincinnati

Political Geography
Virginia
Richmond
Arlington
Charlottesville
Massachusetts
Boston
Plymouth
Salem
New Hampshire
Concord
Portsmouth
Maryland
Annapolis
Baltimore
Connecticut
Hartford
Rhode Island
Providence
Delaware
Dover
Wilmington
North Carolina
Raleigh
Charlotte
South Carolina
Columbia
Charleston
New Jersey
Trenton
Louisiana
  Baton Rouge
  New Orleans

Indiana
  Indianapolis

Mississippi
  Jackson

Illinois
  Springfield
  Chicago

Alabama
  Montgomery
  Mobile

Maine
  Augusta
  Portland

Missouri
  Jefferson City
  St. Louis
  Springfield
  Kansas City

Arkansas
  Little Rock
  Bentonville

Michigan
  Lansing
  Detroit
  Grand Rapids

Florida
  Tallahassee
  Tampa
  Miami
  Jacksonville
  Orlando
  St. Augustine

Texas
  Austin
  Dallas
  Houston
  Lubbock
  San Antonio

Iowa
  Des Moines

Wisconsin
  Madison
  Green Bay

California
  Sacramento
  Los Angeles
  San Diego
  San Francisco
  San Jose

Minnesota
  St. Paul
  Minneapolis
  Duluth

Oregon
  Salem
  Portland

Kansas
  Topeka
  Kansas City

West Virginia
  Charleston

Nevada
  Carson City
  Las Vegas

Nebraska
  Lincoln
  Omaha

Colorado
  Denver
  Colorado Springs

North Dakota
  Bismarck

South Dakota
  Pierre
  Rapid City

Montana
  Helena

Washington
  Olympia
  Seattle

Idaho
  Boise

Wyoming
  Cheyenne

Utah
  Salt Lake City

Oklahoma
  Oklahoma City
  Tulsa
New Mexico
Santa Fe
Albuquerque

Arizona
Phoenix
Tucson

Alaska
Juneau
Anchorage

Hawaii
Honolulu

New England Region
Mid-Atlantic Region
Southern Region
Midwest Region
Great Lakes States
Plains States
Rocky Mountain States
Southwestern Region
Four Corners
Pacific Northwest

Terms and Topics
- glaciers
- continental shelf
- land bridge
- Mayas
- Aztecs
- Incas
- Hopewell
- Adena
- Apache
- Cherokee
- Cheyenne
- Chippewa
- Choctaw
- Creek
- Delaware
- Hopi
- Huron
- Lakota
- Mohawk
- Mohican
- Navajo
- Oneida
- Ottawa
- Ojibwa
- Pueblo
- Potawatomie
- Powhatan
- Seminole
- Shawnee
- Sioux
- Susquehanna
- urban
- cities
- suburbs
- towns
- rural
- Welland Canal
- Erie Canal
- Brooklyn Bridge
- Tennessee Valley Authority
- Florida State Road A1A
- Mackinac Bridge
- Soo Locks
- Golden Gate Bridge
- Interstate Highway System

Images
Maps
Famous or exemplar landscapes, landmarks, bodies of water, present-day cities, and other geographic features
Illustrations of indigenous peoples, civilizations, and life
Photographs of Aztec, Maya, Inca, Hopewell, and Ancestral Pueblo ruins
STORY FOR THE AMERICAN HEART

- Christopher Columbus’s crew on their voyage and sighting land

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

- What words best describe the topography of the United States?
- What resources and advantages does this land afford for the flourishing of a developed civilization? How does it compare to other places in the world?
- What are the various regions, and what are the topographical features that define each of them?
- How have Americans distributed themselves across the continent in the present day? What accounts for this distribution, in both the past and the present?
- Where did the indigenous peoples of North and South America come from? How do we believe they came?
- What kinds of civilizations did different groups of indigenous peoples establish in different parts of the Americas?
- How did European and indigenous cultures differ from one another? Is there evidence of conflict among indigenous tribes?

KEYS TO THE LESSON

Every story has a setting, and the true story of history is no different. To tell and to teach this story effectively requires first introducing students to the stage on which Americans would act. Thus, American history should begin with a study of American geography. This inaugural lesson does not seek to inundate students with facts to memorize (though they will learn many). Rather, it seeks to transport them to the different places of America, not through an online virtual map but through the use of their own imaginations. Geography instruction is an excellent way to awaken and exercise the imaginations of students, priming them for all the other journeys which this course will ask their minds to undertake. Every history lesson will involve a similar setting of the stage in the students’ imaginations, and this lesson establishes that precedent. Of course, the lesson also gives students the “lay of the land” for the entire study of American history, beginning with an immersive trip through the country’s magnificent and diverse landscape and then mapping it onto the modern political map of their country. This geography lesson can be full of simple questions about what students observe, training them in the skill of careful discernment of detail. In addition, the collaborative effort of mapping out the country is an excellent way to build rapport, to learn names, and to ease into the school year. At the end of the lesson, the class may return to the virgin topography of the United States and place the various indigenous civilizations on it, learning the smattering of their history that has survived, and then return to the Atlantic and to the Spanish caravels and carracks just over the eastern horizon.

Teachers might best plan and teach The Lands, Waters, and Peoples of America with emphasis on the following approaches:

- The year of teaching history may begin with a number of brief conversations, introductions, procedures, and assessments of students’ prior knowledge of the historical period. It can include discussing the meaning of history and why we study it. It should help students to see that the reasons for studying history are various. Knowing the history of one’s country is an essential component of good citizenship. But history also can have value as a form of reflection on human nature and on the requirements of a good society. And like any subject, knowing history is good for its own sake, i.e., for the enjoyment and pleasure that comes with knowing. Being made aware of their motivations may allow students to ascend from “Because I have to” to this highest reason as the year proceeds.

- Begin by telling a story that will encourage students to use their imaginations and set the precedent for the way class will normally be taught. The story of Christopher Columbus’s crew sighting land is an excellent example. The story may be picked up when Columbus’s three ships are already en route. Paint the scene. Provide descriptions of the ship. Help students get a sense of what sailing was like in those days, and the dangers it involved. Draw out the sounds and smells onboard the ships. Introduce the kind of men on board, the letters and instructions they had with them, and what they may have been thinking from moment to moment. Talk about their captain: his appearance, thoughts, and comportment. Share the story of how recently the crew had nearly mutinied against him, and how he quelled their fears. Describe the sudden appearance of a large flock of birds the previous day. Finally, bring students to the very early morning of October 12, 1492, after the view from the ship’s rail had not changed for weeks, when the call came from the masts, “La tierra!” Land!

- Next should come a lesson on the geography of what would become the United States. First go backwards and talk about the geological changes that shaped the continent over time using maps readily available online.

- Treat the physical topography of the United States, following the path that settlers would travel from the Atlantic seaboard westward to the Pacific Ocean. Introduce landmarks, bodies of water, and other physical characteristics, moving from east to west. The items listed under “Topographic Geography” follow in roughly this order. This list includes several more obscure natural landmarks to ensure that each state has at least one of its natural wonders highlighted. Students should not be expected to recall all of these (the sample “Study Guide” scales back this list considerably). The goal is instead to make sure students are at least aware of these landmarks during the class period in order to develop an appreciation for the beauty and diversity of their country’s landscape.

- Call upon students’ imaginations by describing the settings of what you introduce with vivid language that engages all their senses. Place them in particular climates with the correct weather depending on the season, including types of natural disasters to which an area is subject. Record all this information with the class on a physical map handed out to them and on its projection on the board. As the class proceeds from coast to coast, label the map together. Ask plenty of questions in the process. For review, project images of key areas discussed on the map and have students try to identify what is being projected. Show a map that reflects this topography, such as a raised relief map, and the distribution of natural resources and future trade routes connected with these resources.

- Emphasize with students the tremendous advantages America’s land offers to human flourishing. America had excellent and untouched soils for cultivation, temperature and rainfall averages were ideal, and timber was plentiful. Native plants and animals suitable for human consumption were abundant, while imported livestock thrived. The virgin forests provided all the fuel needed for fires, heating, and cooking, as well as for building. Waterways were plentiful and mostly navigable; their importance cannot be overstated, and students should appreciate that the colonial-era Atlantic world imagined the world primarily in terms of water flow, especially in North America. Most of the country had mild winters with long, warm growing seasons and few areas subject to drought. As for security from foreign powers, the United States would have two massive oceans separating it from most of the rest of the world.

- After thoroughly covering topography, transition to the modern political map with a new projected map and a corresponding political map handout. In teaching the political map, proceed in the order in which the first thirteen states were settled as colonies, and then in the order in which the remaining thirty-seven became states in the Union. Note special topographical, population, and trade characteristics of each state, including capitals, major cities, and special attractions or landmarks. Review the topography, weather, climate, and seasons in the process. Discuss how population is distributed in the states and across the country, and then group the states into different regions.

- Show students images from each state. In order not to stereotype, show an image of a major city, a rural scene, and a beautiful natural landmark or feature from each state, highlighting the diversity abundant not only in America as a whole but also within individual states. And help students to appreciate that in terms of land area, American states are about the size of most countries in the world.

- Show a map that reflects population density using color, and one that shows the majority ancestry of Americans based on counties to see how immigrants and their descendants have settled across the United States. Mark general population trends over history as citizens and immigrants have shifted from place to place. Include a map that shows America’s Interstate Highway System, major airports, and major ports. Note the historic prominence of railroads.

- After covering the modern political United States, return to the topographical map and place the indigenous tribes onto the map of North America and into the environments in which the various tribes lived. The diversity of tribes is astounding, and highlighting several communities, particularly on the eastern seaboard, will put students in the right historical context and assist with teaching the events in subsequent lessons.

- Show the range of different Western Hemisphere civilizations through the millennia prior to Christopher Columbus, including their ways of life, customs, beliefs, and interactions between different tribes or civilizations. In conjunction with state and local history, explore the history and traditions of historical Native Americans from the school’s locality or state.

- Conclude this first lesson by reminding students that to Columbus, his crew, and the peoples of Europe, Africa, and Asia in 1492 (and for millennia before), none of this was known to them, and discovering the entirety of the New World would take hundreds of years, even after Columbus’s voyages.
STRENGTHENING UNDERSTANDING: POST-LESSON ASSIGNMENTS

Assignment 1: Complete the topographical map of the United States together as a class and study it for a future map assessment.

Assignment 2: Complete the political map of the United States together as a class and study it for a future map assessment.
Reading Quiz

The British Colonies of North America | Lesson 1
Land of Hope, Pages xi-xiv, 2-7

DIRECTIONS: Answer each question.

1. Why did the author title his book “Land of Hope” with respect to American history?

2. According to the author, should it be surprising to discover that some great people in history also had great flaws? Why or why not?

3. Why, according to the author, is it difficult to determine when to begin teaching a historical topic?

4. Name one indigenous group that was in North or South America prior to the arrival of Europeans.

5. Name one example of Europeans imagining an ideal civilization across the Atlantic in “the west.”
Lesson 2—Exploration and Settlement

LESSON OBJECTIVE

Students learn about the European exploration of North America and the first English settlement efforts at Roanoke, Jamestown, Plymouth, and Massachusetts Bay.

TEACHER PREPARATION

Create a note outline based on the following:

Student Texts
- Land of Hope, Pages 7–13, 20–28
- Primary Sources, See below.

Teacher Texts
- A Student Workbook for Land of Hope, Pages 5–6, 10–14

Online.Hillsdale.edu
- The Great American Story, Lecture 2
- American Heritage, Lecture 2

STUDENT PREPARATION

Assignment 1: Students read Land of Hope, pages 7–13, 20–28, and either complete the reading questions handout in the Student Workbook for Land of Hope (pages 12–14) or prepare for a reading quiz (provided below).

Assignment 2: Students read and annotate the Laws of Virginia and answer guiding reading questions (provided in appendix).

Assignment 3: Students read and annotate excerpts from John Winthrop’s “A Modell of Christian Charity” and answer guiding reading questions (provided in appendix).

CORE CONTENT IN THIS LESSON

Geography & Places
- Genoa
- San Salvador/Watling Island
- “The New World”
- La Florida
- St. Augustine
- Virginia
- Roanoke
- Chesapeake Bay
Jamestown          Massachusetts Bay
Cape Cod            Boston
Plymouth

Persons
Leif Erikson
Ferdinand and Isabella
Christopher Columbus
Ponce de Leon
Amerigo Vespucci
John Smith
Pocahontas

Thomas Gates
Lord De La Warr
John Rolfe
William Bradford
Miles Standish
Massasoit
John Winthrop

Terms and Topics
Silk Road
Renaissance humanism
caravel
dry magnetic compass
astrolabe merchants
nation-states
Niña, Pinta, and Santa María
Taino
“Indians” conquistadors
Columbian Exchange
smallpox
mercantilism
privateers
Spanish Armada
joint-stock companies

Virginia Company
indentured servants
Powhatan
“Starving Time” freehold
tobacco
House of Burgesses
Separatist Puritans
Pilgrims
Mayflower commoner
religious freedom
state of nature
social contract
rule of law
self-government
Wampanoag
Puritans

Primary Sources
Letter to Raphael Sanchez, Christopher Columbus
Letter to King Ferdinand II, Christopher Columbus
Laws of Virginia
The Mayflower Compact
“A Modell of Christian Charity,” John Winthrop
To Know by Heart

“Today these parts of the earth have been explored more extensively than a fourth part of the world… and that has been discovered by Amerigo Vespucci…. I can see no reason why anyone would object to calling this fourth part Amerige, the land of Amerigo, or America, after the man of great ability who discovered it.” —Martin Waldseemüller

“We must consider that we shall be as a city upon a hill. The eyes of all people are upon us.” —John Winthrop

Timeline

1453 Fall of Constantinople
Oct. 12, 1492 Columbus lands on San Salvador Island
1507 First use of the name “America” on a map
1517 Martin Luther publishes his Ninety-Five Theses
1585–90 Roanoke Colony
1588 Defeat of the Spanish Armada
1607 Jamestown settled
1619 Africans disembark at Jamestown; first meeting of the Virginia House of Burgesses
1620 Pilgrims settle Plymouth
1630 Puritans settle Massachusetts Bay
1632 Establishment of Maryland

4th Thursday in November Thanksgiving Day

Images

Historical figures and events
World map prior to Columbus
Caravel and carrack
Maps of Columbus’s voyages and other exploration
Dress of Native Americans, explorers, and settlers
Waldseemüller and Ringmann map
Illustrated map of Jamestown
Mayflower
Mayflower Compact facsimile
First Thanksgiving

Stories for the American Heart

- Christopher Columbus’s account of making landfall
- Christopher Columbus’s voyages and interactions with natives
- Christopher Columbus’s death in poverty and believing he had failed
- The Lost Colony of Roanoke
- John Smith’s account of the founding of Jamestown
- The "Starving Time” at Jamestown

Copyright © 2022 Hillsdale College. All Rights Reserved.
Pocahontas, John Smith, and John Rolfe
Excerpts from the diary of John Rolfe
John Twine’s account of the first meeting of the Virginia House of Burgesses
The arrival of Africans at Jamestown
The voyage of the Mayflower
Excerpts from William Bradford’s Of Plimoth Plantation
William Bradford’s account of going ashore at Plymouth
The first winter at Plymouth
Accounts of the First Thanksgiving by Edward Winslow and William Bradford

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

- What events “unsettled” European civilization and influenced the decision to explore the seas beyond Europe? How so?
- How was exploration connected to the ideas and circumstances of the Renaissance?
- What technologies allowed for farther sailing on the oceans?
- What was Christopher Columbus’s theory?
- What were some of the ways in which Christopher Columbus’s voyages changed the world?
- In which ways was Christopher Columbus successful, and in which did he fail?
- From where do we get the name “America”?
- How did most European monarchs explore, settle, and manage their claimed possessions in the New World? How was England’s approach different?
- What were the characteristics of the settlers in England’s first successful colonies?
- What motivated settlers to establish Jamestown?
- What problems did Jamestown’s settlers create and face? How did they manage to succeed?
- What two things happened in Jamestown in 1619?
- What motivated the Pilgrims to settle at Plymouth? What were their goals?
- Why did the Pilgrims draft and sign the Mayflower Compact?
- What is so extraordinary about the Mayflower Compact?
- How did the First Thanksgiving come about? Why?
- How were the Puritans at Massachusetts Bay distinct from the Pilgrims at Plymouth?
- What kind of governments did settlers establish in New England?
- Based on John Winthrop’s writings, how did the Puritans at Massachusetts Bay envision their lives and the task before them in North America?
- Questions from the U.S. Civics Test:
  - Question 73: The colonists came to America for many reasons. Name one.
  - Question 74: Who lived in America before the Europeans arrived?
  - Question 75: What group of people was taken and sold as slaves?

KEYS TO THE LESSON

Christopher Columbus’s discovery of the New World was one of the signal achievements of the age of exploration. The ideas of Renaissance humanism fostered confidence in the capacities of man and led monarchs to sponsor expensive and risky voyages to the uncharted waters and lands an ocean away. Enterprising commoners braved the seas and these wild lands for their own fortunes and opportunity.
Nearly one hundred years would pass before the English would attempt a permanent settlement in North America and another two decades before they found any success. Yet while Jamestown was founded chiefly on economic motives, the next two decades would see the Plymouth and Massachusetts Bay colonies founded, at least in part for religious and cultural ends. What was common to all these efforts was the desire for freedom to better their conditions—both the quality of earthly life and the preparation for eternal life. Put differently, they desired the freedom to seek happiness, made available to the common man in ways that had no parallel in the Old World.

Teachers might best plan and teach Exploration and Settlement with emphasis on the following approaches:

- Begin the teaching of American history by helping students gain historical perspective. Using the following reference points, ask them to compare today’s way of life with life in the centuries prior to the 1600s.
  - a political body based on natural rights and their equal protection
  - ability to believe and act on one’s beliefs without fear of arrest—or worse
  - ability to go about daily life without fear of being injured, killed, or having property taken
  - ability to possess the tools necessary to protect one’s food, shelter, family, and life
  - ability to put one’s thoughts into print without fear of arrest—or worse
  - ability to receive an education paid for, in part, by one’s neighbors
  - ability to speak one’s mind without fear of arrest—or worse
  - ability to vote for those who determine by law what one may or may not do
  - acquisition of clothing, food, and shelter
  - communication by internet, text, phone, mail
  - control of one’s ideas and inventions unless willingly shared with another
  - criticism or protest against those in power without fear of arrest—or worse
  - electricity, plumbing, heating, cooling
  - family structure
  - legal presumption of innocence when accused of a crime
  - literacy and numeracy
  - possession of one’s own land for food and shelter
  - religious practices
  - risk of disease and injury
  - slavery
  - the distance of one’s physical travels
  - the role of most men in family life and the community (working at home or out of doors; defending the family and community)
  - the role of most women in family life and the community (working at home indoors; caring for the family and neighbors)
  - the rule of law
  - travel by plane, car, boat, horse and buggy, walking
  - trial by a jury of one’s neighbors
  - trial for crimes effected quickly and publicly
Offer students some background on the reasons why Europeans began exploring in the first place. If students have previously studied European history, then a brief review will be sufficient. For this course, students should generally understand the Renaissance idea of humanism and the confidence it offered European governments and merchants to leverage the full capacities of man. Humanism intersected with other cultural currents: trade interests in Asia, Muslim control of land routes, newly emerging and competing monarchs, growing prosperity among an expanding middle class, and new maritime technology. Riding these currents, those inspired by humanist ideas turned to the seas in search of what was beyond, first along the African coast, and then across the Atlantic. A review of explorers who predated Christopher Columbus may be helpful.

Relay to students the background to Christopher Columbus. Of important note is the attention he gave to new theories of navigation and the size, but not the shape, of the world.

Of Columbus's first voyage, help students to imagine what he was doing and what his crew was undertaking as well. It was far from certain that they would find the route Columbus sought, or that they would survive trying. Even then, Columbus was confident of his theories and of his ability.

Share the stories of each of Columbus's four voyages, marking the gradual decline in success, based on the stated goals of each trip.

Consider Columbus’s specific actions and what they might suggest about his overall character. On the one hand, he was intrepid and determined in pursuit of his theories. He was also a mariner of great skill. Read with students letters in which he claims to have initially secured the respectful treatment of the natives his crew encountered, mindful that we do not have an account from the natives themselves. On the other hand, he was sometimes an incompetent leader whom his men did not listen to or respect, particularly when he took to imposing severe punishments and permitting cruel actions against certain native groups. Columbus’s importance in American history is that he established the first enduring links between the Old and the New Worlds, initiating European civilization’s influence on the Western Hemisphere.

Use this opportunity to address with students the history of interactions between the indigenous peoples of North and South America and European explorers and settlers. Of paramount importance is that students not paint with too broad of a brush. The relationships varied widely. Many interactions and relationships were mutually respectful and cooperative. Others were brutal and unjust. Often the relations between the same groups ebbed and flowed between friendship and conflict over time. Ask why misunderstandings, duplicity, and conflict between very different peoples and cultures—and between fallible individuals of all sorts—might arise.

In addition to conflict, discuss how the indigenous people’s lack of acquired immunity to diseases, notably smallpox, which most Europeans had been conditioned to survive, was a leading contributor to the decline of the Native American population.

Highlight the later years of Columbus’s life, including his removal as commander in Spanish-claimed territories, his shipwreck and stranding on Jamaica for a year, and Spain’s unwillingness to commission any further expeditions under his command. Columbus died as an abject failure in the eyes of the world and likely in his own eyes, as he never did find a passage to Asia yet also did not understand that what he had discovered was another half of planet Earth. Note how his sailings along the isthmus of Panama left him, unknowingly, just a few dozen miles from the vast Pacific Ocean, the existence of which he knew nothing.

- Explain that Italian mapmaker Amerigo Vespucci, after joining an outfit to the Western Hemisphere, asserted only after Columbus’s death that what Columbus had discovered were not parts of Asia but entirely “new” continents. German mapmakers Latinized and feminized his name into “America” on one of their first maps depicting the New World.

- Review other explorations between Columbus and the beginning of English settlement efforts in the late 1500s. Study Ponce de Leon’s discovery of Florida and the eventual settlement at St. Augustine, marking the first European presence in the future United States. Students need not study all of these events in detail, but they should grasp the overall strategy that Spain, Portugal, and even France adopted toward exploring and settling the New World, namely, a top-down, economically motivated approach under the direct centralized control of their respective monarchies. It will be important to contrast this approach with that of the English in the next lesson. Have students study maps of the Western Hemisphere and the domains these various powers had claimed for their respective crowns. It should also be noted that, as revealed in the history of exploration by Hernando Cortés and Francisco Pizarro, there was often a gulf between the monarchs’ directives to deal with natives justly and humanely and the ability to enforce such restraints across an ocean.

- Trace the paths of various explorers into the future states of America, particularly in Florida and the West. The presence of Catholic missionaries is of special note, highlighting one motivation for exploration.

- Explain how the conflicts between Protestants and Catholics for the English throne, England’s relative distance from continental Europe, and its growing naval strength delayed its interests in exploration beyond the commissioning of voyages by John Cabot. The English largely contented themselves through much of the sixteenth century with preying on Spanish ships returning from the New World with spices and bullion.

- Recount the first English effort to establish a permanent settlement in North America in the colony of Roanoke, which famously disappeared with barely a trace after a brief four-year existence.

- Set up the founding of Jamestown as emblematic of one important motivation for the English to establish a colony: material opportunity for the lower classes. Land ownership by common folk was extremely rare in almost all of Europe, and economic mobility itself was a relatively new and rare phenomenon. The organizers and settlers of Jamestown embodied the enterprising spirit that would come to define emigrants from England to North America, and, for that matter, millions of immigrants throughout America’s history. This degree of opportunity for the ordinary person was unprecedented. It partly explains why so many European commoners left what was familiar and risked the greater likelihood of an earlier death to pursue it. The Jamestown settlers exemplified the idea of pursuing “the American dream.”

- Help students to appreciate the several periods when Jamestown was on the verge of failing and the many deaths incurred despite its eventual success. Of particular note was Jamestown’s original experiment with a form of communism. This collectivism, plus rampant disease, helped produce a disastrous first year and a half for the fledgling settlement. John Smith’s requirement that settlers earn their bread by their work and his guarantee of private property ownership, along with some much-needed assistance from the local Native Americans, not only saved the settlement but also became quintessentially American traits, both in law and in the character of the people. But even this near disaster paled in comparison to what was known as the “Starving Time,” in which failure was averted only by a return to the rule of law under Lord De La Warr. Read with students the Laws of Virginia to discuss the rule of law at Jamestown. The turning point for Jamestown was the successful cultivation of tobacco by John Rolfe. While not the gold many settlers had originally envisioned, the crop would both shore up Jamestown’s existence and spread the news among the English and other Europeans that opportunities were present and realizable in English Virginia.

- Consider how the year 1619 at Jamestown offers a profound insight into colonial America:
  - On the one hand, it was in 1619 that the first enslaved Africans, having been taken from a Portuguese slave ship en route to Mexico by an English privateer, landed at Jamestown.
  - On the other hand, it was also in 1619 at Jamestown that the Virginia House of Burgesses first convened, marking the beginning of representative self-government in the colonies. This self-government would flourish for more than 150 years as the British colonists of North America largely governed themselves and developed the thoughts, practices, and habits of a self-governing people.

- Show how the founding of Plymouth was emblematic of the other important motivation for Englishmen to establish a colony: religion. In the wake of the Protestant Reformation, the Christian world was divided, with various forms of strife and severe restrictions on religious belief and practice. In England, these divisions were within Protestantism itself, with Puritans wishing to purify the Church of England of remaining Catholic trappings and Separatist-Puritans (whom we call Pilgrims) seeking to establish a new, true Church of England. It was this latter group that sought not only the freedom to practice their form of Anglicanism but also to re-found the Church in the New World. This band of settlers had the marks of a utopian mindset, even when the English crown required a number of prisoners to embark with them on the Mayflower. And unlike the all-male group that originally settled Jamestown, the Mayflower’s passengers included dozens of families.

- Spend some time with the Mayflower Compact, signed off the coast of Cape Cod before the settlers went ashore. Emphasize the English tradition of the rule of law and of forms of democratic expression traced back at least to the Magna Carta. While it would still be decades before Thomas Hobbes and John Locke formulated the idea of the social contract, these Pilgrims made the social contract a reality. That is, facing a lawless wilderness (a state of nature) with families to protect and ex-convicts in their midst, the Pilgrims resorted to that English tradition of self-government under the rule of law—a social contract among themselves—with God as its ultimate judge. Both the Pilgrims at Plymouth in 1620 and the convening of the Virginia House of Burgesses down the coast at Jamestown in 1619, the first two successful English settlements, almost immediately practiced self-government. Self-government under law was therefore present at the very inception of America, a fact that makes America unique.

- Note the terrible first winter the Pilgrims suffered at Plymouth, and how the Wampanoag Indians truly saved those who did survive. The next year, with the help of the Wampanoag, was a tremendous success, which Pilgrims and Native Americans together celebrated, and for which they gave thanks to God in what is considered America’s First Thanksgiving (notwithstanding a similar celebration in Spanish Florida in the previous century). Share accounts of this festive Thanksgiving from Edward Winslow and William Bradford.

- Finally, discuss the founding of Massachusetts Bay Colony and the leadership of its first governor, John Winthrop. Like the Pilgrims, these Puritans were fierce critics of the Church of England.
And like the Pilgrims, they saw the founding of a colony in New England as a sort of religious utopia. Unlike the Pilgrims, however, the Puritans at Massachusetts Bay sought not to separate from the Church of England but to establish a community that would help purify and correct the Church of England while remaining a part of it. As evident in Winthrop’s “A Modell of Christian Charity,” New England would convert Old England by its example. This settlement around Boston would be more of a theocracy than even its neighbor on Cape Cod. Together with Jamestown and Plymouth, the English had a beachhead in the New World, and the news spread far and wide across the Atlantic.

STRENGTHENING UNDERSTANDING: POST-LESSON ASSIGNMENTS

Assignment: Explain the ways in which the settlers of England’s first three successful settlements in North America were similar and different, being mindful of their motivations, their characteristics, and the challenges they faced once in the New World (1–2 paragraphs).
Reading Quiz

The British Colonies of North America | Lesson 2
Land of Hope, Pages 7-13, 20-28

DIRECTIONS: Answer each question.

1. After whom was America named?

2. Which Italian navigator landed on what he called “San Salvador Island” in 1492?

3. Which nation’s colonization of the New World in the sixteenth century was marked for its heavy-handed administration and its brutality toward the indigenous population?

4. What was the first successful English colony in the New World?

5. What became the historical name for the individuals who founded Plymouth Colony?
Unit 1 — Formative Quiz

Covering Lessons 1–2
10–15 minutes

DIRECTIONS: Answer each question in at least one complete sentence.

1. What words best describe the topography of the United States?

2. Where did the indigenous peoples of North and South America come from? How do we believe they came?

3. What kinds of civilizations did different groups of indigenous peoples establish in different parts of the Americas?

4. What events “unsettled” European civilization and influenced the decision to explore the seas beyond Europe? How so?

5. In what ways was Christopher Columbus successful, and in what ways did he fail?

6. What motivated settlers to establish Jamestown?

7. Why did the Pilgrims draft and sign the Mayflower Compact?
Lesson 3—The Colonies in Profile

LESSON OBJECTIVE

Students learn about each of the thirteen colonies that would become the United States of America, including their foundings, topography, law, and economies, as well as the presence of indentured servitude and slavery.

TEACHER PREPARATION

Create a note outline based on the following:

Student Texts
- Land of Hope
- Primary Sources

Teacher Texts
- A Teacher's Guide to Land of Hope
- A Student Workbook for Land of Hope

Online.Hillsdale.edu
- The Great American Story
- American Heritage

STUDENT PREPARATION

Assignment 1: Students read Land of Hope, pages 28–30, and either complete the reading questions handout in A Student Workbook for Land of Hope (pages 14–15) or prepare for a reading quiz (provided below).

Assignment 2: Students read and annotate the Fundamental Orders of Connecticut, the Preface to the Frame of Government for Pennsylvania, and An Act for Freedom of Conscience from Pennsylvania and answer guiding reading questions (provided in appendix).

CORE CONTENT IN THIS LESSON

Geography & Places
- New Hampshire
- Maryland
- Connecticut
- Rhode Island
- Delaware
- Carolina
- Charles Town
- New Sweden
- New Jersey
- Hudson River
- Manhattan Island
- New Amsterdam
New York  West Indies
Pennsylvania  Jamaica
Philadelphia  Barbados
Georgia  The Congo
New England Colonies  Gold Coast
Middle Colonies  Anomabu
Southern Colonies

Persons
Lord Baltimore  William Penn
Thomas Hooker  Jacques Marquette
Roger Williams  James Oglethorpe
Henry Hudson  Anne Bradstreet
Peter Stuyvesant  Olaudah Equiano

Terms and Topics
proprietary charter  Roman Republic royal charter  mercantilism
Harvard College  free market public education  Navigation Acts Catholics  militia
Toleration Act  Triangle Trade
Fundamental Orders  indentured servitude of Connecticut  chattel slavery religious freedom  Asante Empire township  Fante county  slave ships piracy  Middle Passage
Quakers  individualism self-government  aristocracy
colonial assemblies
colonial governors

Primary Sources
Fundamental Orders of Connecticut
Preface to the Frame of Government of Pennsylvania
An Act for Freedom of Conscience in Pennsylvania

Timeline
1607  Jamestown founded
1620  Pilgrims found Plymouth
1630  Puritans found Massachusetts Bay
1664  English seize New Amsterdam from the Dutch 1732  James Oglethorpe founds Georgia
Images

- Historical figures and events
- Landscape pictures of geographic places featured in this lesson
- Map of the Triangle Trade
- Blueprint of a slave ship
- Depictions of indentured servants and then slaves in the colonies

STORIES FOR THE AMERICAN HEART

- The establishment of each of the colonies
- Roger Williams’s statements and efforts to establish religious toleration in Rhode Island
- Lord Baltimore’s efforts to establish a Catholic colony with religious freedom
- The successful English takeover of New Amsterdam from the Dutch
- Adriaen van der Donck’s account of Peter Stuyvesant’s governance in New York
- James Oglethorpe’s attempts and failure to establish a debtors’ haven in Georgia
- Accounts from the Salem Witch Trials
- Select poems from Anne Bradstreet, particularly “To My Dear and Loving Husband”
- Anthony and Mary Johnson’s accumulation of significant property
- Selections from Olaudah Equiano’s The Interesting Narrative of the Life of Olaudah Equiano
- The lives and accomplishments of Cuffee Slocum and Paul Cuffe in New England
- Jean Bion’s account of life on a French slave ship

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

- What factors (geographic, demographic, climatological, etc.) contributed to differences between the colonies of England, France, and Spain?
- How may the English approach to settlement and colonization be best described?
- In what ways did the settlers and later colonists express a hope for renewal and restoration in the New World?
- What is meant by historian Daniel Boorstin’s observation that “the colonies were a disproving ground for utopias”?
- What were the main religious beliefs of the colonists, based on their various churches?
- What was unique about religion in the colonies and in the eyes of the law?
- What were the roles of literacy and learning among the colonists?
- What is meant by self-government? How might it be said that the colonists governed themselves?
- What was distinctive about property ownership in the colonies?
- How did the various colonial economies function?
- What was indentured servitude? How is it similar to and different from slavery?
- What are the origins of slavery in world history?
- How were Africans first enslaved, before being brought to the Western Hemisphere?
- What was it like to be an African on the Middle Passage and then a slave in the New World?
- How were African slaves distributed in the New World? What proportions of Africans were taken to which parts?
- How did slavery gradually expand and become sanctioned in law?
- How and why did slavery in the eighteenth century supplant the indenture system of the seventeenth century?
What were the chief characteristics of the “American” colonists? What gave them these characteristics?

In what sense was there an “unofficial aristocracy” in the colonies? What made it “unofficial” and how was it distinct from the aristocracies of Europe?

Questions from the U.S. Civics Test:
- Question 14: Many documents influenced the U.S. Constitution. Name one.
- Question 73: The colonists came to America for many reasons. Name one.
- Question 75: What group of people was taken and sold as slaves?

Keys to the Lesson

Teaching the histories of each colony helps students to understand and appreciate the humble origins of the future United States. It is also very revealing. Students can see in the early histories of many colonies the beginnings of traits that would eventually be hallmarks of American society, law, and citizenry.

Teachers might best plan and teach The Colonies in Profile with emphasis on the following approaches:

- Try to teach the colonies in the order in which they were founded (i.e., as listed above in “Geography and Places”). A map may be projected and distributed to students for reference as the lesson proceeds from colony to colony.
- Compare with students the basic structural differences between French, Spanish, and English colonies; i.e., the native fur trade (France), tributary native labor and precious metals (Spain), and settlement agriculture (England). There are mostly accidental historical reasons for why these three powers’ empires developed as they did, and these factors then had determinative long-term consequences.
- Note the seemingly haphazard approach the English took to colonization, largely shaped by the monarch and parliamentary politics in England at the time of each colonial settlement. For one, colonization was decentralized, and most of the original colonies were established as private property ventures, often sanctioned by the crown but really in the possession of private individuals through joint-stock companies. These were then populated not with government officials or hired agents but with men of all ranks who were also seeking their own opportunity, freedom, and plot of land. Both of these features accounted for the lack of an overall master plan for colonizing North America and marked important departures from the approaches taken by Spain, Portugal, and France. This lack of a plan would become a problem later when England would seek to centralize the administration of the colonies, largely in an effort to raise revenue and enforce the sovereignty of Parliament.
- Help students to understand the importance of these traits. Not only did the English approach to colonization trend toward greater independence from the monarchy, it also attracted and encouraged individuals and families who were independent-minded and determined. What the settlers did not bring with them from Europe were the legal class distinctions that defined the aristocratic and monarchical nations they left behind. These individuals (except for their British governors) were common people who immigrated to America seeking their freedom and to better their station in life. The rugged individualism, practice of personal independence, work ethic, and ingenuity to succeed would become well-known American characteristics and in some cases would result in the formation of new colonies by separation from an existing colony, as was the case in New England.
Spend time on what it meant to make a living and survive in the daunting wilderness and how such perseverance shaped the character and mind of the colonists. This would include looking at lifestyles and kinds of work done in the colonies, the type of self-reliance necessary for such lives, and the ways in which Christian religious beliefs contributed to how communities functioned.

Consider how strongly matters of religious faith defined colonial culture, largely because so many came to America to escape the religious persecutions or limitations of the Old World. From the Pilgrims and the Puritans to Roman Catholics and Jews, a wide variety of faiths (most of them Christian and many of whom were intolerant of one another in the Old World) permeated colonial settlements, and their adherents increasingly came to respect one another as neighbors. Establishing this religious freedom in law, moreover, was widespread and exceptional compared to the rest of the world, even while events such as the persecution of the Quakers in Massachusetts still occurred.

Note also for the students that the diversity of religious belief was accompanied by the diversity of immigrants. New York and Rhode Island, for example, were well known for the number of people who had migrated there from many countries other than the British Isles.

Help students appreciate that colonial America was highly literate and that the leading members of colonial society and government were educated in classical thought, ancient and contemporary history, and philosophy and politics (including thinkers of the moderate Enlightenment). Such high levels of literacy and learning were unheard of anywhere else in the world. Important factors that contributed to this high degree of literacy among the people was the insistence on being able to read the Bible, broad support for education, and collegiate preparation.

Emphasize with students the degree of self-government that the colonists exercised. Include in this discussion the meaning of self-government. In brief, the colonists largely governed their own internal affairs (rule over local matters, including taxation, as opposed to international trade and security) through local legislatures and governance structures chosen by the people. This was partly due to the English tradition of legislative authority and the rule of law, the loose and decentralized pattern of British colonial settlements and rule compared to other empires. Another factor at play here was the great distance between London and the American eastern seaboard, which led to long periods of “benign neglect” of the colonies and the further development of local institutions of self-government. While all of the colonies would eventually become official royal colonies with royal governors, colony-wide legislative bodies were prolific, as were local governments such as townships, counties, and cities. Unlike almost every place in the world at that time and in history, the people were to a large extent ruling themselves. Read with students the various examples of self-government as enacted by colonial legislatures, such as the Fundamental Orders of Connecticut, the Preface to the Frame of Government of Pennsylvania, and an Act for Freedom of Conscience in Pennsylvania.

Outline for students the near universal ownership of firearms among the colonists for self-defense, for hunting, and, when necessary, for the common self-defense.

Discuss how private property opportunities and protections enabled commoners to earn their livelihood in freedom and contributed to the characteristics of Americans as industrious and independent.

Explain to students the several kinds of trade and vocational trades present in the various colonies. Farming was, of course, the main livelihood, but manufacturing, fishing, whaling, shipbuilding, and other trades (particularly in New England) rapidly emerged as key colonial contributions. Trade was principally with England, but the British colonies of North America developed robust trade among one another and with the colonies of other nations as well.
- Share with students the complex patterns of relationship between the colonists and Native Americans. The relationships ran the gamut from friendly to violent, varying widely depending on the tribe involved, with misunderstandings and clashes of cultures and languages. Disagreements abounded over the concepts of communal versus private property. Violent clashes occurred along the edges of the colonial frontier, and cross-frontier retaliations by both sides were not uncommon. Colonists could be caught in conflicts between various Native American tribes, and likewise, Native Americans were often caught in conflicts between European powers.

- Systematic displacement of Native Americans was usually limited to localities during this period (such as after King Philip’s War in southern New England and through the Indian slave trade on the South Carolina frontier). Displacement over time was primarily due to devastation from disease and gradual, individual settlement westward.

- Mention that a number of colonists criticized some of the ways that colonial governments dealt with Native Americans. These also condemned and sought to remove slavery from their colonies. Arguments for justice toward Native Americans and Africans often cited Christian religious beliefs and moral philosophy.

- Review with students the emergence of chattel slavery during the Renaissance in Europe and through colonization, then address slavery in what would become the future United States. When teaching students about the history of slavery in the British colonies of North America, be mindful of the following:
  - Help students to understand why a full understanding of the human person, of equality, and of justice all make slavery an evil action and practice, violating the principle that all people are equal in their humanity and possession of natural rights. Therefore, no one person may automatically infringe on the humanity or rights of another unless some initial violation of another’s rights has occurred.

  - Discuss with students how racism is the belief that some people are superior or inferior to others based on race, racial characteristics, or ancestry, how racism arises from a failure to recognize the equal dignity and value of each human being, and how racism manifests itself through the voluntary acts of individual people, both private words and actions and public speech and actions, such as laws and regulations.

  - Discuss the history of slavery in world history, from ancient times through the middle ages and in different places, leading up to the transatlantic slave trade. Portugal first began using African slaves on their sugar plantations off the west African coast, manifesting the chattel and race-based aspects of slavery in European colonies. The slave trade gradually made its way to the various colonies established throughout the Western Hemisphere, particularly with the cultivation of sugar cane in the Caribbean.

  - Ask students to imagine the Middle Passage and the barbarities of slavery and the slave trade. Overall, of the nearly 11 million Africans who survived being brought to the Western Hemisphere, around 3 percent, or about 350,000, were brought to the North American continent, with the majority going to other colonies in the Caribbean and South America.

As mentioned in the previous lesson, the first Africans were brought to Jamestown by an English privateer who had captured a Portuguese slave ship en route from Africa, likely headed for Portugal’s South American colonies.

Discuss the similarities and differences between slavery and indentured servitude. Indentured servitude was a common way for those who could not afford passage or to establish themselves in the New World to tie themselves to a sponsor for a number of years, offering free labor in exchange for passage across the Atlantic and shelter in the colonies. Oftentimes indentured servitude was sometimes little different from slavery, as shown in transcripts from court cases of indentured servants claiming relief from a cruel master.

It would be several decades before a law emerged in the southern colonies that concerned African colonists in particular or the practice of slavery. In 1662, forty-three years after the arrival of the first Africans at Jamestown, Virginia’s commanding general determined that a child born to an enslaved woman would also be a “servant for life,” and in 1668, corporal punishment for slaves was permitted in law. These appear to be the first laws regarding slavery in colonial America.

The transatlantic slave trade grew with the sugar cane plantations of the Caribbean as far back as the early 1500s—plantations which also happened to become England’s most valuable colonies. At the same time, the source of labor shifted away from indigenous peoples, European convicts, and indentured servants to slaves. Although slavery was more widespread in the southern colonies (to grow tobacco and rice) and almost universal in England’s Caribbean sugar plantations, few laws explicitly prohibited the practice in most colonies, at least at certain times in their histories. Consider also the early abolitionist efforts of some colonists, the Quakers, for example.

- Show students maps of the colonies around 1630, 1700, and 1730 that illustrate the real extent of settlement. They should see that the colonists mostly resided only along the Atlantic coast, still hardly a foothold compared to the vastness of the continental interior, the extent of which they did not yet fathom.
- Reflect with students on the unique American character that emerged among the free British colonists in North America. The harshness and risk of settling the New World gave them a certain grit and determination, along with an enterprising mind and innovative skill set. The universal demand for trade skills and farming in establishing a new civilization placed the vast majority of colonists within what we would call today the “working class.” In New England especially, colonists’ Protestantism made them widely literate for the sake of reading the Bible, skeptical of human sources of authority, and focused on individual improvement. At the same time, it made them highly idealistic, with many seeking to re-found Christendom. For many colonists, previous persecution granted them a deeper and more passionate sense of justice, of right and wrong. It also made them highly attuned to the politics on which freedom depended. A certain rugged, enterprising, and justice-loving individualism defined the colonists.
- Explain how a sort of unofficial aristocracy emerged throughout the colonies, but an aristocracy open to promotion by the meritorious; that is, based on merit, talent, and virtue instead of mere heredity. This unofficial class of leading citizens was also modeled more on the English gentleman rather than on the courts of continental Europe. Their stations in life ranged from planters in the south, where the aristocratic element was most prevalent, to clergy, merchants, professors, and manufacturers in the north. And in general, all of them were highly learned.

STRENGTHENING UNDERSTANDING: POST-LESSON ASSIGNMENTS

Assignment: Explain what it was about the American colonies that made them historically exceptional; that is, the exception compared to the rest of the world and the normal course of human history (1–2 paragraphs).
Reading Quiz

The British Colonies of North America | Lesson 3
Land of Hope, Pages 28-30

DIRECTIONS: Answer each question.

1. Which colony was founded as a haven for religious dissenters, breaking away from Massachusetts Bay Colony?

2. Pennsylvania was established by ______________ for members of his religious group, the Quakers.

3. Historian Daniel Boorstin characterized the colonies as “a disproving ground for ______________.”
Lesson 4—Major Events in the Colonies

1607–1763

4–5 classes

LESSON OBJECTIVE

Students learn about the major events and movements in colonial America and further study the ideas and experiences that were shaping the colonists during what Edmund Burke called the period of “salutary neglect.”

TEACHER PREPARATION

Create a note outline based on the following:

Student Texts

Land of Hope

Primary Sources

Pages 14–20, 31–42

See below.

Teacher Texts

A Teacher’s Guide to Land of Hope

A Student Workbook for Land of Hope

Pages 15–19, 29–32

Pages 12 and 20

Online.Hillsdale.edu

The Great American Story

American Heritage

Lectures 2 and 3

Lectures 2 and 3

STUDENT PREPARATION

Assignment 1: Students read Land of Hope, pages 15–19 and 31–42, and either complete the reading questions handout in A Student Workbook for Land of Hope (pages 12 and 20) or prepare for a reading quiz (provided below).

Assignment 2: Students read and annotate excerpts from John Locke’s Second Treatise of Government and from the Albany Plan of Union and answer guiding reading questions (provided in appendix).

CORE CONTENT IN THIS LESSON

Geography & Places

Appalachian Mountains

Allegheny Mountains

Ohio River Valley

The Great Lakes

Lake Champlain

Canada

Nova Scotia

St. Lawrence River

Niagara Falls

Mississippi River

New Orleans

Detroit
Quebec
Montreal
Potomac River
Duquesne

Persons
Thomas Hobbes
John Locke
William Blackstone
Montesquieu
Jonathan Edwards
George Whitefield
George III
William Pitt
George Washington
Edward Braddock
Benjamin Franklin

Terms and Topics
Beaver Wars
King Philip’s War
The Old French War
Queen Anne’s War
Navigation Acts
English Civil War
The Enlightenment
Bacon’s Rebellion
Glorious Revolution
English Bill of Rights
“salutary neglect”
representation
self-government
township
The Great Awakening
Methodists
Baptists
Poor Richard’s Almanac
French and Indian War
Iroquois Confederacy
“Rules of Civility”
Battle of Jumonville Glen Albany Congress
rifle
Fort Duquesne
Treaty of Paris

Primary Sources
Magna Carta
Act of the General Court of Massachusetts
English Bill of Rights
Second Treatise of Government, John Locke
Albany Plan of Union

To Know by Heart
Selections from George Washington’s “Rules of Civility & Decent Behavior in Company and Conversation,” such as:
- “Be not apt to relate news if you know not the truth thereof.”
- “Undertake not what you cannot perform but be careful to keep your promise.”
- “Speak not evil of the absent for it is unjust.”
- “Think before you speak, pronounce not imperfectly nor bring out your words too hastily but orderly & distinctly.”
- “When you see a Crime punished, you may be inwardly Pleased; but always shew Pity to the Suffering Offender.”
- “Use no Reproachfull Language against any one neither Curse nor Revile.”
Timeline

1688  Glorious Revolution; English Bill of Rights
1730s  The Great Awakening
1754–63  The French and Indian War

Images

Historical figures and events
Dress of colonists from different periods and places
Uniforms and munitions of soldiers in the various wars
Depictions of battles and battlefields, including strategy and tactics, such as the Siege of Louisbourg
Colonial assembly buildings
Depictions of Great Awakening gatherings and revival scenes

Stories for the American Heart

- A sermon by Jonathan Edwards
- George Washington and the cherry tree (legend)
- George Washington’s time as a surveyor
- George Washington’s first battles in the Virginia militia, including his survival and Braddock’s death
- John Winslow’s account of the Acadians during the French and Indian War
- Benjamin Franklin’s autobiography

Questions for the American Mind

- What was it like to wage war in North America during the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries?
- How did each colony reflect English government and legal developments during the seventeenth century?
- What did the colonists learn from the English Civil War?
- Which ancient and Enlightenment figures and ideas influenced the leading colonists?
- What were John Locke’s ideas on natural law, natural rights, and the social contract? To what extent had these already been reflected in English law and, therefore, in colonial law?
- What is “salutary neglect”? In what senses were the colonists neglected and how was this neglect actually beneficial to them?
- What did self-government look like in the colonies?
- Who was permitted to vote, in general, in the colonies? How does this practice compare to the present day? How does it compare to the world at that time and in previous centuries?
- How had the ideas of the Protestant Reformation shaped the colonists’ religious beliefs?
- How did the Great Awakening affect religious belief and especially practice among the colonists?
- How did the Great Awakening contribute to a greater sense of unity between the colonies?
- What were the causes of the French and Indian War?
- What were the major battles and moments in the French and Indian War?
- In what ways did the French and Indian War foster a greater unity among the colonies?
- What was the Albany Plan of Union? What did it reveal about the relationships among the colonies?
- Why did the British defeat the French in the French and Indian War?
- How did the Treaty of Paris reshape North America?
- What challenges and opportunities did the British and the British colonists face with the changes wrought by the Treaty of Paris?
- Questions from the U.S. Civics Test:
  - Question 13: What is the rule of law?
  - Question 85: Benjamin Franklin is famous for many things. Name one.
  - Question 86: George Washington is famous for many things. Name one.

Keys to the Lesson

Having learned about the establishment and characteristics of each colony, students should consider the major influences and events that shaped colonial history. These include, of course, events that occurred within the colonies themselves, but also certain ideas and events in Europe that had significant influence on the colonists, too. Treatment of the Enlightenment and the English Civil War does not need to be extensive in an American history class, but students should understand how these events affected and informed the colonists. Once the lesson enters the eighteenth century, special focus should be placed on the events that created in the colonists a sense of independence from Great Britain and of greater dependence on one another, even as they themselves did not fully recognize or articulate these trends. In general, this lesson should help students see what the colonists and colonies had become before they learn about the American founding.

Teachers might best plan and teach Major Events in the Colonies with emphasis on the following approaches:

- Review with students the relationships between Native Americans and the settlers. Note the variety of relationships and circumstances over time, helping students to recognize how much time colonial history spans. Disease was the main factor that sent the Native Americans into decline. When significant conflict did occur, it often involved an entangling of rivalries among Native American tribes and those of European powers and their colonies. In light of such conflicts, American colonists in particular were well versed in defending themselves with their own arms and in locally assembled citizen militias.
- Teach students about the various wars that occurred in the New World, either between settlers and Native Americans or with colonies of other countries. A lot of detail is not necessary, but students should appreciate that these wars were significant for those who were endangered by them and left largely to their own defenses. Students should also be introduced to the style, strategy, and tactics of seventeenth- and early eighteenth-century warfare, particularly as waged in North America.
- For a time, it was the Puritans who wound up in power in England. As Englishmen, the colonists followed the events of strife from across the ocean. Discuss with students the English Civil War, which involved and influenced some of the main political thought of the colonists, as well as the Glorious Revolution a few decades later. These political developments informed the colonists and drew their careful attention to political considerations.
- Read and discuss with students the Magna Carta and the English Bill of Rights to show that there is a long history of understanding that a “fundamental law” exists above, and that regardless of particular political institutions (such as the King or Parliament), that fundamental law grants rights and liberties. Read also Act of the General Court of Massachusetts that demonstrated the influence of English law and events in England on concepts of self-government in the colonies.

- Review or discuss the intellectual influences on the Americans, particularly those who were the colonists’ unofficial aristocracy. In addition to a Judeo-Christian faith tradition and Greco-Roman philosophy and law, the Enlightenment also influenced leading colonists. Students should understand some of the Enlightenment’s main principles and thinkers. In addition to the English Enlightenment’s influence on Britain’s North American colonists in general, Enlightenment ideas on politics were of special interest to a people governing themselves and carefully observing political events taking place back in England.

- Read with students some of the emblematic thought of John Locke—especially the social contract theory and his arguments on the supremacy of the legislature—that leading colonists would entertain in the mid-eighteenth century.

- Consider with students the English statesman Edmund Burke’s idea that the colonists in British North America enjoyed a relationship of “salutary neglect” with respect to the English government. They were “neglected” in the sense that they were a month away by sea from England, which meant poor communication and the near impossibility of governing directly. The English also largely overlooked their colonies in North America, sometimes viewing the colonists merely as poor tradesmen, former criminals, religious radicals, and commoners of no noble birth. Compared to England’s Caribbean colonies, they were also far less profitable. England’s preoccupation with rivals Spain and France and her own civil war also left English kings and Parliament with relatively little thought to give the colonies. The mercantilist restrictions on trade, moreover, were seldom fully enforced or even capable of being completely enforced, and the colonies largely traded freely with the world.

- Help students understand why this relationship of neglect was not, in Burke’s view, a disadvantage but actually healthy for the colonists. Overall, the colonists were still protected, especially on the seas, by the English. At the same time, however, they were not regulated or administratively directed beyond the general forms of governance; e.g., a royal governor and a local legislature. The colonists were largely free to take the enterprising, individualist spirit of common English settlers and, forced by necessity, to innovate and work hard to pursue livelihoods and security within their own spheres. Laws, moreover, could not wait for a two- or three-month lapse in communication. Colonists were both permitted and forced by circumstances to practice the elements of English law they had brought with them, including a recognition of certain rights and the limits of authority. The colonists had ample talent and opportunity to govern themselves: they had education and a group of leading colonists who were learned in classical thought; they had the English rule of law tradition; and they had general Enlightenment ideas. This tradition of self-government would allow for many generations of practice in self-rule as a feature of daily life. The colonists, therefore, were both used to and deeply practiced in locally governing themselves, replete with the ideas and habits that this process cultivated.

- Briefly spend time reviewing the institutional forms that self-government took in the colonies. In general, representation by election determined the composition of the various colonial assemblies, beginning with the Virginia House of Burgesses in 1619. That representative self-government was the norm in the colonies was astonishing compared to the rest of the world and human history.
The creation of the township was also a uniquely colonial American establishment, and the participation by the average colonist in local government was widespread.

- Students should gain a clear perspective on voting in America and in human history. In brief, this privilege has been exceptionally rare, making the American citizen’s right to vote a remarkable achievement. And nearly all of the groundbreaking moments in this achievement occurred in American history. The American colonies, for instance, were one of the few places where most ordinary male citizens of European descent were permitted to vote. Even though still restricted to those of European descent who maintained some property, this expansion of the right to vote in the American colonies was a consequential development in world history—a significant step toward universal suffrage. As Land of Hope puts it, “A greater proportion of the American population could participate in elections and have a role in selecting their representatives than anywhere else on the planet.”

- Clarify for students that each colony originally did not see itself as part of a shared English colonial political state. Although their own proprietary charters were eventually replaced with royal charters, each colony viewed itself as its own separate entity, only loosely bound to the others by a common mother country and overall shared culture. This view would persist up to the eve of the Revolution.

- Share with students one of the greatest contributors both to the unification of the colonies and to religious belief in America: the Great Awakening. Combine this discussion with Land of Hope’s account of the Protestant Reformation (pages 14–20) to understand the roots of American religion and settlement. The Great Awakening cultivated a distinctly American experience and a distinctly American sort of religious belief and practice. The presence of the Great Awakening throughout the colonies provided the separate and distinct colonies with something they could hold in common. At the same time, it awakened a passion for right moral conduct and justice that could be attached to any cause. Read with students excerpted sermons from Jonathan Edwards and George Whitefield, helping students to be attentive to these kinds of historical effects.

- Teach students about the various conflicts in which the British colonists of North America found themselves. Spend some time in particular with the French and Indian War. Of special note here is the presence of a young George Washington and the Virginia militia fighting alongside the British regulars. This is a good opportunity to introduce Washington, including his boyhood biography and his exploits in the war, and especially his actions during the attack on General Braddock. The French and Indian War was also important for providing the colonists another shared experience, this time amidst the adversities of war, and for demonstrating increased cooperation and a sense of unity, as evidenced by the Albany Congress. The Albany Plan for Union may be read to see the forerunners of unification and independence in the coming decade. This is also a good place to introduce the architect of the Albany congress and plan, Benjamin Franklin, including teaching about his biography up to this juncture. In addition to fostering advances toward and experiences in united action, the French and Indian War is also of great importance for understanding the circumstances that would lead to the American Revolution.

- Share with students maps showing the transfer of territory to the British Empire through the Treaty of Paris. Discuss with students what this meant for the relative power of Great Britain and France and the new challenges and opportunities inherent in such a sudden change of territory and power.
STRENGTHENING UNDERSTANDING: POST-LESSON ASSIGNMENTS

Assignment 1: Explain how the English law tradition and the developments and final outcomes of the English Civil War shaped the colonists’ views and practice of self-government (1–2 paragraphs).

Assignment 2: Explain how England neglected the colonists and how this neglect was actually salutary (1–2 paragraphs).
Reading Quiz

The British Colonies of North America | Lesson 4
Land of Hope, Pages 14-20 and 31-42

DIRECTIONS: Answer each question.

1. What does the author argue to be the first major disruption to European civilization that would influence the future British colonies in North America?

2. What issues plagued England during the 1600s?

3. What war between England and France in North America resulted from disputes over control of the Ohio River Valley and the lands west of the Allegheny Mountains?

4. What religious phenomenon occurred in the colonies in the 1730s?

5. What philosophical phenomenon that originated in Europe found fertile ground among the colonies’ leading citizens?
APPENDIX A

Study Guide

Test

Writing Assignment
Study Guide — The British Colonies of North America Test

Unit 1

Timeline

When given dates, match events from a list to the years or dates that they happened.

Oct. 12, 1492  Columbus lands on San Salvador Island
1585–90  Roanoke Colony
1607  Jamestown settled
1619  Africans disembark at Jamestown; first meeting of the Virginia House of Burgesses
1620  Pilgrims settle Plymouth
1630  Puritans settle Massachusetts Bay
1688  Glorious Revolution; English Bill of Rights
1730s  The Great Awakening
1754–63  The French and Indian War

Geography and Places

Identify each on a map and/or tell where it is and explain its significance.

- Genoa
- San Salvador/Watling’s Island
- “The New World”
- La Florida
- St. Augustine
- Virginia
- Roanoke
- Chesapeake Bay
- Jamestown
- Cape Cod
- Plymouth
- Massachusetts Bay
- Boston
- Hudson River
- Manhattan Island
- New England Colonies
- Middle Colonies
- Southern Colonies
- West Indies
- Jamaica
- Barbados
- The Congo
- Gold Coast
- Anomabu
- Appalachian Mountains
- Allegheny Mountains
- Ohio River Valley
- The Great Lakes
- Lake Champlain
- Canada
- Mississippi River
- New Orleans
- Detroit
- Quebec
- Montreal
- Potomac River
- Duquesne

Persons

Identify each, provide biographical details, and explain what he or she thought or did in specific periods or events.

- Ferdinand and Isabella
- Christopher Columbus
- Ponce de Leon
- Amerigo Vespucci
- John Smith
- Pocahontas
- Thomas Gates
- Lord De La Warr
- John Rolfe
- William Bradford
- Miles Standish
- Massasoit
John Winthrop
Lord Baltimore
Thomas Hooker
Roger Williams
Henry Hudson
Peter Stuyvesant
William Penn
James Oglethorpe

Anne Bradstreet
Olaudah Equiano
Thomas Hobbes
William Blackstone
Montesquieu
Jonathan Edwards
George Whitefield

Edmund Burke
George III
William III
George Washington
Edward Braddock
Benjamin Franklin

TERMS AND TOPICS

Identify each and explain its significance to the period of history studied.

- glaciers
- continental shelf
- land bridge
- Mayas
- Aztecs
- Incas
- Hopewell
- Silk Road
- Renaissance
- humanism
- nation-states
- Taíno
- Columbian Exchange
- smallpox
- mercantilism
- joint-stock companies
- Virginia Company
- indentured servants
- Powhatan
- “Starving Time”
- tobacco

- House of Burgesses
- Separatist Puritans
- Pilgrims
- Mayflower
- state of nature
- social contract
- self-government
- Wampanoag
- Puritans
- proprietary charter
- royal charter
- Harvard College
- public education
- Toleration Act
- Fundamental Orders
- of Connecticut
- religious freedom
- county
- township
- Quakers
- colonial assemblies

- colonial governors
- Navigation Acts
- militia
- Triangle Trade
- chattel slavery
- Asante Empire
- Middle Passage
- King Philip’s War
- English Civil War
- The Enlightenment
- Bacon’s Rebellion
- Glorious Revolution
- English Bill of Rights
- “salutary neglect”
- representation
- Roman Republic
- The Great Awakening
- French and Indian War
- Albany Congress
- Treaty of Paris

PRIMARY SOURCES

Based on annotations and notes from seminar conversations, be able to answer questions on each primary source. While you will not necessarily be asked why each primary source was created, what it did or argued, and what its effects were, being able to answer these kinds of questions will make you well-prepared.

Letter to Raphael Sanchez, Christopher Columbus
Letter to King Ferdinand II, Christopher Columbus
Laws of Virginia
The Mayflower Compact
“A Modell of Christian Charity,” John Winthrop
Fundamental Orders of Connecticut
Preface to the Frame of Government of Pennsylvania
An Act for Freedom of Conscience in Pennsylvania
Magna Carta
English Bill of Rights
Second Treatise of Government, John Locke

TO KNOW BY HEART

Be prepared to fill in missing words and/or identify the speaker and context.

“We must consider that we shall be as a city upon a hill. The eyes of all people are upon us.” —John Winthrop

STORIES FOR THE AMERICAN HEART

In your own words, retell each episode in narrative form. Consider your audience to be middle school students.

- Christopher Columbus’s voyages and interactions with natives
- The “Starving Time” at Jamestown
- Pocahontas, John Smith, and John Rolfe
- The voyage of the Mayflower
- Accounts of the First Thanksgiving by Edward Winslow and William Bradford
- Roger Williams’s statements and efforts to establish religious toleration in Rhode Island
- Select poems from Anne Bradstreet, particularly “To My Dear and Loving Husband”
- Jean Bion’s account of life on a French slave ship
- George Washington and the cherry tree (legend)
- George Washington’s time as a surveyor
- George Washington’s first battles in the Virginia militia, including his survival and Braddock’s death
- Benjamin Franklin’s autobiography

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

Based on notes from lessons and seminar conversations, answer each of the following.

Lesson 1 | The Lands, Waters, and Peoples of America

□ What resources and advantages does North America afford for the flourishing of a developed civilization? How does it compare to other places in the world?
□ How have Americans distributed themselves across the continent in the present day? What accounts for this distribution, in both the past and the present?
□ Where did the indigenous peoples of North and South America come from? How do we believe they came?
□ What kinds of civilizations did different groups of indigenous peoples establish in different parts of the Americas?
Lesson 2 | Exploration and Settlement

- How did European and indigenous cultures differ from one another? Is there evidence of conflict among indigenous tribes?

- What events “unsettled” European civilization and influenced the decision to explore the seas beyond Europe? How so?

- How was exploration connected to the ideas and circumstances of the Renaissance?

- What was Christopher Columbus’s theory?

- What were some of the ways in which Christopher Columbus’s voyages changed the world?

- In which ways was Christopher Columbus successful, and in which did he fail?

- From where do we get the name “America”?

- How did most European monarchs explore, settle, and manage their claimed possessions in the New World? How was England’s approach different?

- What motivated settlers to establish Jamestown?

- What two things happened in Jamestown in 1619?

- What motivated the Pilgrims to settle at Plymouth? What were their goals?

- Why did the Pilgrims draft and sign the Mayflower Compact?

- What is so extraordinary about the Mayflower Compact?

- Based on John Winthrop’s writings, how did the Puritans at Massachusetts Bay envision their lives and the task before them in North America?

Lesson 3 | The Colonies in Profile

- What factors (geographic, demographic, climatological, etc.) contributed to differences between the colonies of England, France, and Spain?

- How may the English approach to settlement and colonization be best described?

- In what ways did the settlers and later colonists express a hope for renewal and restoration in the New World?

- What is meant by historian Daniel Boorstin’s observation that “the colonies were a disproving ground for utopias”?

- What were the main religious beliefs of the colonists, based on their various churches?

- What was unique about religion in the colonies and in the eyes of the law?

- What were the roles of literacy and learning among the colonists?

- What is meant by self-government? How might it be said that the colonists governed themselves?

- What was distinctive about property ownership in the colonies?

- What was indentured servitude? How is it similar to and different from slavery?

- What are the origins of slavery in world history?

- How were Africans first enslaved, before being brought to the Western Hemisphere?

- What was it like to be an African on the Middle Passage and then a slave in the New World?

- How did slavery gradually expand and become sanctioned in law?

- How and why did slavery in the eighteenth century supplant the indenture system of the seventeenth century?

- What were the chief characteristics of the “American” colonists? What gave them these characteristics?
In what sense was there an “unofficial aristocracy” in the colonies? What made it “unofficial” and how was it distinct from the aristocracies of Europe?

Lesson 4 | Major Events in the Colonies

- How did each colony reflect English government and legal developments during the seventeenth century?
- What did the colonists learn from the English Civil War?
- Which ancient and Enlightenment figures and ideas influenced the leading colonists?
- What were John Locke’s ideas on natural law, natural rights, and the social contract? To what extent had these ideas already been reflected in English law and, therefore, in colonial law?
- What is “salutary neglect”? In what senses were the colonists neglected, and how was this neglect actually beneficial to them?
- Who was permitted to vote, in general, in the colonies? How does this practice compare to the present day? How does it compare to the world at that time and in previous centuries?
- How did the Great Awakening affect religious belief and especially practice among the colonists?
- How did the Great Awakening contribute to a greater sense of unity between the colonies?
- What were the causes of the French and Indian War?
- In what ways did the French and Indian War foster a greater unity among the colonies?
- What was the Albany Plan of Union? What did it reveal about the relationships among the colonies?
- Why did the British defeat the French in the French and Indian War?
- How did the Treaty of Paris reshape North America?
- What challenges and opportunities did the British and the British colonists face with the changes wrought by the Treaty of Paris?
Test — The British Colonies of North America

TIMELINE

Write the letter of each event next to the date or years it took place.

Oct. 12, 1492  ______  A. Africans disembark at Jamestown; first meeting of the Virginia House of Burgesses 1585–90  ______  B. Columbus lands on San Salvador Island
1607  ______  C. Glorious Revolution; English Bill of Rights
1619  ______  D. Jamestown settled
1620  ______  E. Pilgrims settle Plymouth
1630  ______  F. Puritans settle Massachusetts Bay
1688  ______  G. Roanoke Colony
1730s  ______  H. The French and Indian War
1754–63  ______  I. The Great Awakening

GEOGRAPHY AND PLACES

1. Label with dots and/or circle:
   St. Augustine
   Roanoke
   Chesapeake Bay
   Jamestown
   Cape Cod
   Plymouth
   Boston
   Hudson River
   Manhattan Island
   West Indies
   Appalachian Mountains
   Ohio River Valley
   The Great Lakes
   Lake Champlain
   Mississippi River
   New Orleans
   Detroit
   Quebec
   Montreal
   Duquesne

Map courtesy of A Student Workbook for Land of Hope.
PERSONS, TERMS, AND TOPICS

Fill in the blank.

2. The year after Christopher Columbus died, an Italian naval observer sailing for Portugal came to realize and claim that what Columbus had discovered and subsequent explorers explored was not merely outlying islands of Asia but in fact an entirely new continent, the size of which was still unknown. The Latin feminine form of the first name of this person found its way onto a map of the New World. Thus was “America” named after ____________________________.

3. Lasting only four years and disappearing without a trace, the ________________ in present-day North Carolina was England’s rather late and first attempt to colonize the New World.

4. England’s second attempt at colonization nearly failed on two occasions, and the settlers had a fraught relationship with the local Powhatan tribe. The eventual success of ________________ came largely from John Rolfe’s successful cultivation of ________________, which was exported to Europe at a great profit.

5. The Separatist Puritans had little hope for a satisfactory removal of Catholic remnants within the Church of England. Not tolerated in England, these ________________ were dismissed on a religious journey to Virginia under the leadership of William Bradford. Instead of settling in Virginia, however, their old wine ship, the ________________, landed far to the north on the North American coast at Cape Cod.

6. Having disagreed multiple times with the Puritan rule in and around Boston and with special zeal for religious toleration and the treatment of Native Americans, ________________ sought refuge from the Narragansett Native Americans and founded the colony Providence Plantations (Rhode Island) based on religious freedom.

7. Originally founded by the Dutch, ________________ was seized by the British in 1664. This meager but ideal harbor town at the mouth of the Hudson River, with commerce moving between Manhattan Island and Long Island, would become the largest city in the Americas.

8. Pennsylvania was named after its founder, who received the lands for this “Bread Colony” as payment for debt from the king to his father upon the latter’s death. “Penn’s Woods” was intended as a haven for Quakers, and its inhabitants practiced religious freedom under its founder and leader named ____________.

9. Although founded by Catholic-convert John Calvert, Lord of Baltimore, Ireland, and intended as a refuge for persecuted Catholics from England, ________________ very quickly had a minority of Catholics. Before they became a minority, however, they prudently passed laws allowing for religious tolerance.
10. With an economy based on the large plantation farming of tobacco, indigo, and rice, the ______________________ colonies developed an aristocratic society and culture of leisure dependent upon a lower class of slaves and yeoman farmers.

11. The British colonies in North America were part of a trade pattern that included England, Caribbean colonies, and African colonies. The American colonies exported cod, ships, lumber, rum, iron, whale oil, tobacco, indigo, and other raw materials to England, and they imported guns, clothes, furniture, paper, and tea from England and slaves from Africa. Historians named this trade system after the shape its trade routes made on a map of the Atlantic: the ______________________.

12. As the colonists settled farther west, they gradually removed the Native Americans from their ancestral grounds through sheer numbers, by spreading diseases that the Native Americans were not used to, and through outright warfare. Native Americans often resisted, as was the case in the Pequot War in Connecticut and Opechancanough’s Massacre at Jamestown. Had it not been for longstanding Native American rivalries and disunion, they may have successfully expelled colonists from Boston itself during ______________________’s War in 1675–76.

13. The colonists’ relationship with England left them both free to establish their own governmental structures and in need of doing so. While the emergence of government institutions did not follow any set pattern, such institutions were all based on the English law tradition, they developed organically, and they epitomized American rule by the people, called ______________________.

14. Power struggles often arose within colonial governments between the elected assemblies and the royally appointed ____________. There thus emerged a long pattern of colonial power challenging and usually proving superior to English authority within the colonies, partly due to claims of power originating from the people themselves.

15. Local self-government was widespread among the colonies but assumed different forms, depending on the region. In the Middle and Southern colonies, the county, situated with a central meeting town and a courthouse, was a powerful judiciary institution; in New England, a new arrangement called a ________________ spread the population of a town over thirty-six square miles. These institutions trained common colonists in political participation and patriotism.

16. Agreed to in 1215 by King John and the English barons, the ________________, or “Great Charter,” was the first English pronouncement of the rule of law. Together with the Mayflower Compact and the English ______________________, which concluded the Glorious Revolution, the colonists drew many ideas and much language from these principal English legal precedents.

17. The philosophy of the British Enlightenment thinker ______________________ defined an increasingly popular idea in England and in the colonies: that of a ________________ that would allot power in a political body beholden to the people in order to preserve and protect the natural rights human beings equally enjoyed by virtue of their humanity.
18. Of the ancient Greek and Roman political philosophers, the American aristocracy was influenced far more by the ancient ________________, especially regarding their understanding that a republic ultimately rests on the virtue of its citizens.

19. Considered the “friend of the colonies,” ________________ was a member of the English Parliament from Ireland who championed continuity, tradition, prudence, moderation, and compromise toward the colonies, whose neglect by England, he believed, was responsible for the colonists' successful governance of themselves.

20. As the population of the colonies doubled every generation, westward expansion beyond the Appalachian Mountains brought the British into conflict not only with Native Americans but also with the French in Canada, especially over who controlled the very fertile and wild lands west of the Appalachians known as the ________ River Valley.

21. This area beyond the Appalachians was first charted by a sixteen-year-old surveyor-aristocrat from Virginia named ______________________. His experience mapping and camping in the uncharted wilderness motivated him at age nineteen to join the Virginia militia, in which he rose to the rank of Major General.

22. To gain a secure alliance with the Iroquois Confederacy and to foster inter-colony cooperation during the French and Indian War, the seven most northern colonies met at the ______________ ________ under the direction of the accomplished printer, thinker, statesman, and inventor from Philadelphia named Benjamin Franklin. While their plan for union was not adopted by the colonies, it was the first instance of united action among the several American colonies, and it became a model for future colonial cooperation.

KNOW BY HEART

Fill in the missing words and identify the source.

23. “We must consider that we shall be as a ________________. The eyes of all people are upon us.”

   Source: ____________________________
STORIES FOR THE AMERICAN HEART

In your own words, retell each episode in narrative form. Consider your audience to be middle school students.

24. George Washington’s first battles in the Virginia militia, including his survival and Braddock’s death

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

Answer each of the following. Complete sentences are not necessary, but correct spelling and writing should be employed, and responses must fully answer each question.

25. What resources and advantages does North America afford for the flourishing of a developed civilization? How does it compare to other places in the world?

26. How did European and indigenous cultures differ from one another? Is there evidence of conflict among indigenous tribes?

27. What events “unsettled” European civilization and influenced the decision to explore the seas beyond Europe? How so?
28. What were some of the ways in which Christopher Columbus’s voyages changed the world?

29. How did most European monarchs explore, settle, and manage their claimed possessions in the New World? How was England’s approach different?

30. What two things happened in Jamestown in 1619?

31. In what ways did the settlers and later colonists express a hope for renewal and restoration in the New World?

32. What is meant by historian Daniel Boorstin’s observation that “the colonies were a disproving ground for utopias”?

33. What was unique about religion in the colonies and in the eyes of the law?

34. What were the roles of literacy and learning among the colonists?

35. What was distinctive about property ownership in the colonies?

36. How did slavery gradually expand and become sanctioned in law?

37. What were the chief characteristics of the “American” colonists? What gave them these characteristics?
38. In what sense was there an “unofficial aristocracy” in the colonies? What made it “unofficial,” and how was it distinct from the aristocracies of Europe?

39. Which ancient and Enlightenment figures and ideas influenced the leading colonists?

40. What is “salutary neglect”? In what senses were the colonists neglected, and how was this neglect actually beneficial to them?

41. What did self-government look like in the colonies?

42. Why did the British defeat the French in the French and Indian War?

43. How did the Treaty of Paris reshape North America?
Writing Assignment — The British Colonies of North America

DIR ECTIONS

Citing events and primary sources in your argument, write a 500–800-word essay answering this question:

To what extents and in which ways was the settlement and establishment of European civilization in the thirteen colonies the exception in human history up until the eighteenth century?
APPENDIX B

Primary Sources

Christopher Columbus

Thomas Gates

The Pilgrims

John Winthrop

Colonists of the Connecticut River Colony

William Penn

First Pennsylvania Provincial Assembly

John of England

Great and General Court of Massachusetts Bay Colony

Parliament of England

John Locke

Delegates of Connecticut, Maryland, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New York, Pennsylvania, and Rhode Island Colonies
ADMIRAL CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS

To King Ferdinand II of Aragon and Queen Isabella I of Castile

LETTER

February 15, 1493

The Niña | The Atlantic Ocean

BACKGROUND

Christopher Columbus informed King Ferdinand II of the discoveries on his first voyage in this letter from early 1493.

GUIDING QUESTIONS

1. What does Christopher Columbus find on his voyage?

2. How does Columbus describe the islands?

3. How do the Native Americans treat Columbus and his crew?

4. What is the culture of the Native Americans as described by Columbus?

5. Why does Columbus believe his voyage was important?

Christopher Columbus, “Letter to King Ferdinand II,” American Studies at the University of Virginia, https://xroads.virginia.edu/~Hyper/HNS/Garden/columbus.html.
SIR: Since I know that you will be pleased at the great victory with which Our Lord has crowned my voyage, I write this to you, from which you will learn how in thirty-three days I passed from the Canary Islands to the Indies, with the fleet which the most illustrious King and Queen, our Sovereigns, gave to me. There I found very many islands, filled with innumerable people, and I have taken possession of them all for their Highnesses, done by proclamation and with the royal standard unfurled, and no opposition was offered to me.

To the first island which I found I gave the name "San Salvador," in remembrance of the Divine Majesty, Who had marvellously bestowed all this…To the second, I gave the name the island of "Santa Maria de Concepcion," to the third, "Fernandina," to the fourth, "Isabella," to the fifth island, "Juana," and so each received from me a new name.

When I came to Juana, I followed its coast to the westward, and I found it to be so extensive that I thought that it must be the mainland, the province of Cathay. And since there were neither towns nor villages on the seashore, but small hamlets only, with the people of which I could not have speech because they all fled immediately, I went forward on the same course, thinking that I could not fail to find great cities or towns. At the end of many leagues, seeing that there was no change and that the coast was bearing me northwards, which I wished to avoid, since winter was already approaching and I proposed to make from it to the south, and as, moreover, the wind was carrying me forward, I determined not to wait for a change in the weather and retraced my path as far as a remarkable harbour known to me. From that point, I sent two men inland to learn if there were a king or great cities. They travelled three days' journey, finding an infinity of small hamlets and people without number, but nothing of importance. For this reason, they returned.

I understood sufficiently from other Indians, whom I had already taken, that this land was nothing but an island, and I therefore followed its coast eastward for one hundred and seven leagues to the point where it ended. From that point, I saw another island, distant about eighteen leagues from the first, to the east, and to it I at once gave the name "Espanola." I went there and followed its northern coast, as I had followed that of Juana, to the eastward for one hundred and eighty-eight great leagues in a straight line. This island and all the others are very fertile to a limitless degree, and this island is extremely so. In it there are many harbours on the coast of the sea, beyond comparison with others that I know in Christendom, and many rivers, good and large, which is marvellous. Its lands are high; there are in it many sierras and very lofty mountains, beyond comparison with that of Tenerife. All are most beautiful, of a thousand shapes; all are accessible and are filled with trees of a thousand kinds and tall, so that they seem to touch the sky. I am told that they never lose their foliage, and this I can believe, for I saw them as green and lovely as they are in Spain in May, and some of them were flowering, some bearing fruit, and some at another stage, according to their nature. The nightingale was singing and other birds of a thousand kinds, in the month of November, there where I went. There are six or eight kinds of palm, which are a wonder to behold on account of their beautiful variety, but so are the other trees and fruits and plants. In it are marvellous pine groves; there are very wide and fertile plains, and there is honey; and there are birds of many kinds and fruits in great diversity. In the interior, there are mines of metals, and the population is without number.

Espanola is a marvel. The sierras and the mountains, the plains, the champaigns, are so lovely and so rich for planting and sowing, for breeding cattle of every kind, for building towns and villages. The harbours of the sea here are such as cannot be believed to exist unless they have been seen, and so with the rivers, many and great, and of good water, the majority of which contain gold. In the trees, fruits and plants, there is a great difference from those of Juana. In this island, there are many spices and great mines of gold and of other metals.

The people of this island and of all the other islands which I have found and of which I have information, all go naked, men and women, as their mothers bore them, although some of the women cover a single place with the leaf of a plant or with a net of cotton which they make for the purpose. They have no iron or steel or weapons, nor are they fitted to use them. This is not because they are not well built and of handsome stature, but because they are very marvellously timorous. They have no other arms than spears made of canes, cut in seeding time, to the ends of which they fix a small sharpened stick. Of these they do not dare to make use, for many times it has happened that I have sent ashore two or three men to some town to have speech with them, and countless people have come out to them, and as soon as they have seen my men approaching, they have fled, a father not even waiting for his son. This is not because ill has been done to any one of them; on the contrary, at every place where I have been and have been able to have speech with them, I have given to them of that which I had, such as cloth and many other things, receiving nothing in exchange. But so they are, incurably timid. It is true that, after they have been reassured and have lost this fear, they are so guileless and so generous with all that they possess, that no one would believe it who has not seen it. They refuse nothing that they possess, if it be asked of them; on the contrary, they invite any one to share it and display as much love as if they would give their hearts. They are content with whatever trifle of whatever kind that may be given to them, whether it be of value or valueless. I forbade that they should be given things so worthless as fragments of broken crockery, scraps of broken and lace tips, although when they were able to get them, they fancied that they possessed the best jewel in the world...They took even the pieces of the broken hoops of the wine barrels and, like savages, gave what they had, so that it seemed to me to be wrong and I forbade it. I gave them a thousand handsome good things, which I had brought, in order that they might conceive affection for us and, more than that, might become Christians and be inclined to the love and service of Your Highnesses and of the whole Castilian nation, and strive to collect and give us of the things which they have in abundance and which are necessary to us.

They do not hold any creed nor are they idolaters; but they all believe that power and good are in the heavens and were very firmly convinced that I, with these ships and men, came from the heavens, and in this belief they everywhere received me after they had mastered their fear. This belief is not the result of ignorance, for they are, on the contrary, of a very acute intelligence and they are men who navigate all those seas, so that it is amazing how good an account they give of everything. It is because they have never seen people clothed or ships of such a kind.
As soon as I arrived in the Indies, in the first island which I found, I took some of the natives by force, in order that they might learn and might give me information of whatever there is in these parts. And so it was that they soon understood us, and we them, either by speech or by signs, and they have been very serviceable. At present, those I bring with me are still of the opinion that I come from Heaven, for all the intercourse which they have had with me. They were the first to announce this wherever I went, and the others went running from house to house, and to the neighbouring towns, with loud cries of, "Come! Come! See the men from Heaven!" So all came, men and women alike, when their minds were set at rest concerning us, not one, small or great, remaining behind, and they all brought something to eat and drink, which they gave with extraordinary affection.

In all the islands, they have very many canoes, which are like rowing fustas, some larger and some smaller; some are greater than a fusta of eighteen benches. They are not so broad, because they are made of a single log of wood, but a fusta would not keep up with them in rowing, since their speed is an incredible thing. In these they navigate among all those islands, which are innumerable, and carry their goods. I have seen one of these canoes with seventy or eighty men in it, each one with his paddle.

In all these islands, I saw no great diversity in the appearance of the people or in their manners and language. On the contrary, they all understand one another, which is a very curious thing, on account of which I hope that their Highnesses will determine upon their conversion to our holy faith, towards which they are very inclined.
I have already said how I went one hundred and seven leagues in a straight line from west to east along the seashore of the island of Juana, and as a result of this voyage I can say that this island is larger than England and Scotland together, for, beyond these one hundred and even leagues, there remain to the westward two provinces to which I have not gone. One of these provinces they call "Avan," and there people are born with tails. These provinces cannot have a length of less than fifty or sixty leagues, as I could understand from those Indians whom I have and who know all the islands.

The other island, Espanola, has a circumference greater than all Spain from Collioure by the seacoast to Fuenterabia in Vizcaya, for I voyaged along one side for one hundred and eighty-eight great leagues in a straight line from west to east. It is a land to be desired and, when seen, never to be left. I have taken possession of all for their Highnesses, and all are more richly endowed than I know how or am able to say, and I hold all for their Highnesses, so that they may dispose of them as they do of the kingdoms of Castile and as absolutely. But especially, in this Espanola, in the situation most convenient and in the best position for the mines of gold and for all trade as well with the mainland here as with that there, belonging to the Grand Khan, where will be great trade and profit, I have taken possession of a large town, to which I gave the name "Villa de Navidad," and in it I have made fortifications and a fort, which will now by this time be entirely completed. In it I have left enough men for such a purpose with arms and artillery and provisions for more than a year, and a fusta, and one a master of all seacraft, to build others, and I have established great friendship with the king of that land, so much so, that he was proud to call me "brother" and to treat me as such. And even were he to change his attitude to one of hostility towards these men, he and his do not know what arms are. They go naked, as I have already said, and they are the most timorous people in the world, so that the men whom I have left there alone would suffice to destroy all that land, and the island is without danger for their persons, if they know how to govern themselves.

In all these islands, it seems to me that all men are content with one woman, and to their chief or king they give as many as twenty.

It appears to me that the women work more than do the men. I have been able to learn if they hold private property; it seemed to me to be that all took a share in whatever any one had, especially of eatable things.

In these islands I have so far found no human monstrosities, as many expected, but on the contrary the whole population is very well tried, nor are they negroes as in Guinea, but their hair is flowing and they are not born where there is intense force in the rays of the sun… In these islands, where there are high mountains, the cold was severe this winter, but they endure it, being used to it and with the help of meats which they consume with many and extremely hot spices. Thus I have found no monsters, nor had a report of any, except in an island "Carib," which is the second at the coming into the Indies, and which is inhabited by people who are regarded in all the islands as very fierce and who eat human flesh. They have many canoes with which they range through all the islands of India and pillage and take whatever they can. They are no more malformed than are the others, except that they have the custom of wearing their hair long like women, and they use bows and arrows of the same cane stems, with a small piece of wood at end, owing to their lack of iron which they do not possess. They are ferocious among these other people who are cowardly to an excessive degree, but I make no more account of them than of the rest. These are they who have intercourse with the women of "Matinino," which is the first island met on the way from Spain to the Indies, in which there is not a man. These women engage in no feminine occupation, but use bows and arrows of cane, like those already mentioned, and they arm and protect themselves with plates of copper, of which they have much.

In another island, which they assure me is larger than Espanola, the people have no hair. In it there is incalculable gold, and from it and from the other islands I bring with me Indians as evidence.

In conclusion, to speak only of what has been accomplished on this voyage, which was so hasty, their Highnesses can see that I will give them as much gold as they may need, if their Highnesses will render me very slight assistance; presently, I will give them spices and cotton, as much as their Highnesses shall command; and mastic, as much as they shall order to be shipped and which, up to now, has been found only in Greece, in the island of Chios, and the Seignory sells it for what it pleases; and aloe, as much as they shall order to be shipped; and slaves, as many as they shall order, and who will be from the idolaters. I believe also that I have found rhubarb and cinnamon, and I shall find a thousand other things of value, which the people whom I have left there will have discovered, for I have not delayed at any point, so far as the wind allowed me to sail, except in the town of Navidad, in order to leave it secured and well established, and in truth I should have done much more if the ships had served me as reason demanded.
This is enough. And thus the eternal God, Our Lord, gives to all those who walk in His way triumph over things which appear to be impossible, and this was notably one. For, although men have talked or have written of these lands, all was conjectural, without ocular evidence, but amounted only to this, that those who heard for the most part listened and judged rather by hearsay than from even a small something tangible. So that, since Our Redeemer has given the victory to our most illustrious King and Queen, and to their renowned kingdoms, in so great a matter, for this all Christendom ought to feel delight and make great feasts and give solemn thanks to the Holy Trinity, with many solemn prayers for the great exaltation which they shall have in the turning of so many peoples to our holy faith, and afterwards for the temporal benefits, because not only Spain but all Christendom will have hence refreshment and gain.

This is an account of the facts, thus abridged.

Done in the caravel, on the Canary Islands, on the fifteenth day of February, in the year one thousand four hundred and ninety-three.

At your orders.

THE ADMIRAL.
ADMIRAL CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS

To Lord Raphael Sanchez

LETTER

March 14, 1493
Lisbon, Portugal

BACKGROUND

After discovering the islands of India, Christopher Columbus addressed this letter to Lord Raphael Sanchez, the Treasurer to the King and Queen of Spain.

ANNOTATIONS

Knowing that it will afford you pleasure to learn that I have brought my undertaking to a successful termination, I have decided upon writing you this letter to acquaint you with all the events which have occurred in my voyage, and the discoveries which have resulted from it.

5 Thirty-three days after my departure from Cadiz I reached the Indian sea, where I discovered many islands, thickly peopled, of which I took possession without resistance in the name of our most illustrious Monarch, by public proclamation and with unfurled banners. To the first of these islands, which is called by the Indians Guanahani, I gave the name of the blessed Saviour (San Salvador), relying upon whose protection I had reached this as well as the other islands; to each of these I also gave a name, ordering that one should be called Santa Maria de la Concepcion, another Fernandina, the third Isabella, the fourth Juana, and so with all the rest respectively.

As soon as we arrived at that, which as I have said was named Juana, I proceeded along its coast a short distance westward, and found it to be so large and apparently without termination, that I could not suppose it to be an island, but the continental province of Cathay. Seeing, however, no towns or populous places on the sea coast, but only a few detached houses and cottages, with whose inhabitants I was unable to communicate, because they fled as soon as they saw us, I went further on, thinking that in my progress I should certainly find some city or village. At length, after proceeding a great way and finding that nothing new presented itself, and that the line of coast was leading us northwards (which I wished to avoid, because it was winter, and it was my intention to move southwards; and because moreover the winds were contrary), I resolved not to attempt any further progress, but rather to turn back and retrace my course to a certain bay that I had observed, and from which I afterwards dispatched two of our men to ascertain whether there were a king or any cities in that province. These men reconnoitered the country for three days, and found a most numerous population, and great numbers of houses, though small, and built without any regard to order: with which information they returned to us.

In the mean time I had learned from some Indians whom I had seized, that that country was certainly an island: and therefore I sailed towards the east, coasting to the distance of three hundred and twenty-two miles, which brought us to the extremity of it; from this point I saw lying eastwards another island, fifty-four miles distant from Juana, to which I gave the name of Espanola: I went thither, and steered my course eastward as I had done at Juana, even to the distance of five hundred and sixty-four miles along the north coast.

This said island of Juana is exceedingly fertile, as indeed are all the others; it is surrounded with many bays, spacious, very secure, and surpassing any that I have ever seen; numerous large and healthful rivers intersect it, and it also contains many very lofty mountains. All these islands are very beautiful, and distinguished by a diversity of scenery; they are filled with a great variety of trees of immense height, and which I believe to retain their foliage in all seasons; for when I saw them they were as verdant and luxuriant as they usually are in Spain in the month of May,—some of them were blossoming, some bearing fruit, and all flourishing in the greatest perfection, according to their respective stages of growth, and the nature and quality of each: yet the islands are not so thickly wooded as to be impassable. The nightingale and various birds were singing in countless numbers, and that in November, the month in which I arrived there. There are besides in the same island of Juana seven or eight kinds of palm trees, which, like all the other trees, herbs, and fruits, considerably surpass ours in height and beauty. The pines also are very handsome, and there are very extensive fields and meadows, a variety of birds, different kinds of honey, and many sorts of metals, but no iron.

In that island also which I have before said we named Espanola, there are mountains of very great size and beauty, vast plains, groves, and very fruitful fields, admirably adapted for tillage, pasture, and habitation. The convenience and excellence of the harbours in this island, and the abundance of the rivers, so indispensable to the health of man, surpass anything that would be believed by one who had not seen it. The trees, herbage, and fruits of Espanola are very different from those of Juana, and moreover it abounds in various kinds of spices, gold, and other metals.

The inhabitants of both sexes in this island, and in all the others which I have seen, or of which I have received information, go always naked as they were born, with the exception of some of the women, who use the covering of a leaf, or small bough, or an apron of cotton which they prepare for that purpose. None of them, as I have already said, are possessed of any iron, neither have they weapons, being unacquainted with, and indeed incompetent to use them, not from any deformity of body (for they are well-formed), but because they are timid and full of fear. They carry however in lieu of arms, canes dried in the sun, on the ends of which they fix heads of dried wood sharpened to a point, and even these they dare not use habitually; for it has often occurred when I have sent two or three of my men to any of the villages to speak with the natives, that they have come out in a disorderly troop, and have fled in such haste at the approach of our men, that the fathers forsook their children and the children their fathers. This timidity did not arise from any loss or injury that they had received from us; for, on the contrary, I gave to all I approached whatever articles I had about me, such as cloth and many other things, taking nothing of theirs in return: but they are naturally timid and fearful. As soon however as they see that they are safe, and have laid aside all fear, they are very simple and honest, and exceedingly liberal with all they have; none of them refusing any thing he may possess when he is asked for it, but on the contrary inviting us to ask them. They exhibit great love towards all others in preference to themselves: they also give objects of great value for trifles, and content themselves with very little or nothing in return. I however forbad that these trifles and articles of no value (such as pieces of dishes, plates, and glass, keys, and leather straps) should be given to them, although if they could obtain them, they imagined themselves to be possessed of the most beautiful trinkets in the world.

It even happened that a sailor received for a leather strap as much gold as was worth three golden nobles, and for things of more trifling value offered by our men, especially newly coincd blancas, or any gold coins, the Indians would give whatever the seller required; as, for instance, an ounce and a half or two ounces of gold, or thirty or forty pounds of cotton, with which commodity they were already acquainted. Thus they bartered, like idiots, cotton and gold for fragments of bows, glasses, bottles, and jars; which I forbade as being unjust, and myself gave them many beautiful and acceptable articles which I had brought with me, taking nothing from them in return; I did this in order that I might the more easily conciliate them, that they might be led to become Christians, and be inclined to entertain a regard for the King and Queen, our Princes and all Spaniards, and that I might induce them to take an interest in seeking out, and collecting, and delivering to us such things as they possessed in abundance, but which we greatly needed.

They practice no kind of idolatry, but have a firm belief that all strength and power, and indeed all good things, are in heaven, and that I had descended from thence with these ships and sailors, and under this impression was I received after they had thrown aside their fears. Nor are they slow or stupid, but of very clear understanding; and those men who have crossed to the neighbouring islands give an admirable description of everything they observed; but they never saw any people clothed, nor any ships like ours.
On my arrival at that sea, I had taken some Indians by force from the first island that I came to, in order that they might learn our language, and communicate to us what they knew respecting the country; which plan succeeded excellently, and was a great advantage to us, for in a short time, either by gestures and signs, or by words, we were enabled to understand each other. These men are still travelling with me, and although they have been with us now a long time, they continue to entertain the idea that I have descended from heaven; and on our arrival at any new place they published this, crying out immediately with a loud voice to the other Indians, "Come, come and look upon beings of a celestial race": upon which both women and men, children and adults, young men and old, when they got rid of the fear they at first entertained, would come out in throngs, crowding the roads to see us, some bringing food, others drink, with astonishing affection and kindness…

…In all these islands there is no difference of physiognomy, of manners, or of language, but they all clearly understand each other, a circumstance very propitious for the realization of what I conceive to be the principal wish of our most serene King, namely, the conversion of these people to the holy faith of Christ, to which indeed, as far as I can judge, they are very favourable and well-disposed…

…These provinces extend to a hundred and fifty-three miles in length, as I have learnt from the Indians whom I have brought with me, and who are well acquainted with the country. But the extent of Espanola is greater than all Spain from Catalonia to Fontarabia, which is easily proved, because one of its four sides which I myself coasted in a direct line, from west to east, measures five hundred and forty miles. This island is to be regarded with especial interest, and not to be slighted; for although as I have said I took possession of all these islands in the name of our invincible King, and the government of them is unreservedly committed to his said Majesty, yet there was one large town in Espanola of which especially I took possession, situated in a remarkably favourable spot, and in every way convenient for the purposes of gain and commerce.
Letter to Lord Raphael Sanchez
Christopher Columbus

To this town I gave the name of Navidad del Senor, and ordered a fortress to be built there, which must by this time be completed, in which I left as many men as I thought necessary, with all sorts of arms, and enough provisions for more than a year. I also left them one caravel, and skilful workmen both in ship-building and other arts, and engaged the favor and friendship of the King of the island in their behalf, to a degree that would not be believed, for these people are so amiable and friendly that even the King took a pride in calling me his brother. But supposing their feelings should become changed, and they should wish to injure those who have remained in the fortress, they could not do so, for they have no arms, they go naked, and are moreover too cowardly; ao that those who hold the said fortress, can easily keep the whole island in check, without any pressing danger to themelves, provided they do not transgress the directions and regulations which I have given them.

As far as I have learned, every man throughout these islands is united to but one wife, with the exception of the kings and princes, who are allowed to have twenty: the women seem to work more than the men. I could not clearly understand whether the people possess any private property, for I observed that one man had the charge of distributing various things to the rest, but especially meat and provisions and the like. I did not find, as some of us had expected, any cannibals amongst them, but on the contrary men of great deference and kindness. Neither are they black, like the Ethiopians: their hair is smooth and straight: for they do not dwell where the rays of the sun strike most vividly,--and the sun has intense power there, the distance from the equinoctial line being, it appears, but six-and-twenty degrees. On the tops of the mountains the cold is very great, but the effect of this upon the Indians is lessened by their being accustomed to the climate, and by their frequently indulging in the use of very hot meats and drinks. Thus, as I have already said, I saw no cannibals, nor did I hear of any, except in a certain island called Charis, which is the second from Espanola on the side towards India, where dwell a people who are considered by the neighbouring islanders as most ferocious: and these feed upon human flesh. The same people have many kinds of canoes, in which they cross to all the surrounding islands and rob and plunder wherever they can; they are not different from the other islanders, except that they wear their hair long, like women, and make use of the bows and javelins of cane, with sharpened spear-points fixed on the thickest end, which I have before described, and therefore they are looked upon as ferocious, and regarded by the other Indians with unbounded fear; but I think no more of them than of the rest. These are the men who form unions with certain women, who dwell alone in the island Matenin, which lies next to Espanola on the side towards India; these latter employ themselves in no labour suitable to their own sex, for they use bows and javelins as I have already described their paramours as doing, and for defensive armour have plates of brass, of which metal they possess great abundance. They assure me that there is another island larger than Espanola, whose inhabitants have no hair, and which abounds in gold more than any of the rest. I bring with me individuals of this island and of the others that I have seen, who are proofs of the facts which I state.

Finally, to compress into few words the entire summary of my voyage and speedy return, and of the advantages derivable therefrom, I promise, that with a little assistance afforded me by our most invincible sovereigns, I will procure them as much gold as they need, as great a quantity of spices, of cotton, and of mastic (which is only found in Chios), and as many men for the service of the navy as their Majesties may require. I promise also rhubarb and other sorts of drugs, which I am persuaded the men whom I have left in the aforesaid fortress have found already and will continue to find; for I myself have tarried no where longer than I was compelled to do by the winds, except in the city of Navidad, while I provided for the building of the fortress, and took the necessary precautions for the perfect security of the men I left there. Although all I have related may appear to be wonderful and unheard of, yet the results of my voyage would have been more astonishing if I had had at my disposal such ships as I required. But these great and marvellous results are not to be attributed to any merit of mine, but to the holy Christian faith, and to the piety and religion of our Sovereigns; for that which the unaided intellect of man could not compass, the spirit of God has granted to human exertions, for God is wont to hear the prayers of his servants who love his precepts even to the performance of apparent impossibilities. Thus it has happened to me in the present instance, who have accomplished a task to which the powers of mortal men had never hitherto attained; for if there have been those who have anywhere written or spoken of these islands, they have done so with doubts and conjectures, and no one has ever asserted that he has seen them, on which account their writings have been looked upon as little else than fables. Therefore let the king and queen, our princes and their most happy kingdoms, and all the other provinces of Christendom, render thanks to our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, who has granted us so great a victory and such prosperity. Let processions be made, and sacred feasts be held, and the temples be adorned with festive boughs. Let Christ rejoice on earth, as he rejoices in heaven in the prospect of the salvation of the souls of so many nations hitherto lost. Let us also rejoice, as well on account of the exaltation of our faith, as on account of the increase of our temporal prosperity, of which not only Spain, but all Christendom will be partakers.

Such are the events which I have briefly described.

Farewell.

Lisbon, the 14th of March.

CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS,
Admiral of the Fleet of the Ocean.
GOVERNOR SIR THOMAS GATES

For The Colony in Virginea Britannia.
Lawes Divine, Morall and Martiall, &c.

EXCERPTS OF GOVERNOR’S ORDERS

Jamestown, Colony of Virginia

BACKGROUND

Sir Thomas Gates arrived at Jamestown during the Starving Time, finding only 60 of the 240 original settlers in James Fort alive. Appointed by the Virginia Company as Governor of the colony of Virginia, Gates imposed these Laws of Virginia—the first American law code.

GUIDING QUESTIONS

1. What is the ruler of the colony’s “principal care?”

2. What are the duties of the people on the Sabbath?

3. What are the punishments given to those who break these laws?

Whereas His Majesty, like himself a most zealous prince, has in his own realms a principal care of true religion and reverence to God, and has always strictly commanded his generals and governors, with all his forces wheresoever, to let their ways be like his ends, for the glory of God.

And forasmuch as no good service can be performed, or war well managed, where military discipline is not observed, and military discipline cannot be kept where the rules or chief parts thereof, be not certainly set down and generally known, have (with the advice and counsel of Sir Thomas Gates, Knight, Lieutenant-General) adhered unto the laws divine and orders politic and martial of his lordship (the same exemplified) an addition of such others as I have found either the necessity of the present state of the colony to require, or the infancy and weakness of the body thereof as yet able to digest, and do now publish them to all persons in the colony, that they may as well take knowledge of the laws themselves as of the penalty and punishment, which without partiality shall be inflicted upon the breakers of the same.

First, since we owe our highest and supreme duty, our greatest, and all our allegiance to Him from whom all power and authority is derived and flows as from the first, and only, fountain, and being special soldiers impressed in this sacred cause, we must alone expect our success from Him who is only the blesser of all good attempts, the King of kings, the Commander of commanders, and Lord of hosts, I do strictly command and charge all captains and officers, of what quality or nature soever, whether commanders in the field, or in the town, or towns, forts, or fortresses, to have a care that the Almighty God be duly and daily served, and that they call upon their people to hear sermons, as that also they diligently frequent morning and evening prayer themselves by their own exemplar and daily life, and duty herein, encouraging others thereunto, and that such who shall often and willfully absent themselves be duly punished according to the martial law in that case provided.

5 That no man speak impiously or maliciously against the holy and blessed Trinity, or any of the three persons, that is to say, against God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost, or against the known articles of the Christian faith, upon pain of death.

That no man blaspheme God’s holy name, upon pain of death, or use unlawful oaths, taking the name of God in vain, curse, or ban, upon pain of severe punishment for the first offence so committed, and for the second, to have a bodkin thrust through his tongue, and if he continue blaspheming of God’s holy name, for the third time so offending, he shall be brought to a martial court, and there receive censure of death for his offence.

No man shall use any traitorous words against His Majesty’s person or royal authority, upon pain of death.

15 No man shall speak any word, or do any act, which may tend to the derision or despite of God’s holy word, upon pain of death. Nor shall any man unworthily demean himself unto any preacher or minister of the same, but generally hold them in all reverent regard and dutiful entreaty, otherwise he, the offender, shall openly be whipped three times, and ask public forgiveness in the assembly of the congregation three several Sabbath days.

20 Every man and woman duly twice a day upon the first tolling of the bell shall upon the working days repair unto the Church to hear divine service upon pain of losing his or her day’s allowance for the first omission, for the second to be whipped, and for the third to be condemned to the galleys for six months. Likewise no man or woman shall dare to violate or break the Sabbath by any gaming, public or private, abroad or at home, but duly sanctify and observe the same, both himself and his family, by preparing themselves at home with private prayer, that they may be the better fitted for the public, according to the commandment of God, and the orders of our Church, as also every man and woman shall repair in the morning to the divine service, and catechizing, upon pain for the first fault to lose their provision and allowance for the whole week following, for the second to lose the said allowance, and also to be whipped, and for the third to suffer death.

All preachers or ministers within this, our colony or colonies, shall in the forts where they are resident after divine service duly preach every Sabbath day in the forenoon, and catechize in the afternoon and weekly say the divine service twice every day, and preach every Wednesday. Likewise every minister where he is resident, within the same fort or fortress, towns or town, shall choose unto him four of the most religious and better disposed as well to inform of the abuses and neglects of the people in their duties and service to God, as also to the due reparation and keeping of the Church handsome and fitted with all reverent observances thereunto belonging. Likewise every minister shall keep a faithful and true record, or church book, of all christenings, marriages, and deaths of such our people as shall happen within their fort or fortresses, towns or town at any time, upon the burden of a neglectful conscience, and upon pain of losing their entertainment.

He that upon pretended malice shall murder or take away the life of any man shall be punished with death.
No man shall commit the horrible and detestable sins of sodomy, upon pain of death; and he or she that can be lawfully convicted of adultery shall be punished with death. No man shall ravish or force any woman, maid or Indian, or other, upon pain of death, and know that he or she that shall commit fornication, and evident proof made thereof, for their first fault shall be whipped, for their second they shall be whipped, and for their third they shall be whipped three times a week for one month, and ask public forgiveness in the assembly of the congregation.

No man shall be found guilty of sacrilege, which is a trespass as well committed in violating and abusing any sacred ministry, duty, or office of the Church irreverently or profanely, as by being a church robber, to filch, steal, or carry away anything out of the church appertaining thereunto, or unto any holy and consecrated place, to the divine service of God, which no man should do, upon pain of death. Likewise he that shall rob the store of any commodities therein, of what quality soever, whether provisions of victuals, or of arms, trucking stuff, apparel, linen or woolen, hose or shoes, hats or caps, instruments or tools of steel, iron, etc., or shall rob from his fellow soldier or neighbor anything that is his, victuals, apparel, household stuff, tool, or what necessary else soever, by water or land, out of boat, house, or knapsack, shall be punished with death.

He that shall take an oath untruly, or bear false witness in any cause, or against any man whatsoever, shall be punished with death.
"Every minister or preacher shall every Sabbath day before catechizing read all these laws and ordinances, publicly in the assembly of the congregation, upon pain of his entertainment checked for that week."
THE UNDERSIGNED SUBJECTS OF KING JAMES

Agreement Between the Settlers of New Plymouth

BACKGROUND

The settlers who traveled to the British possession of Virginia on the Mayflower drafted and signed this agreement pertaining to their governance before disembarking in the New World.

ANNOTATIONS

IN THE NAME OF GOD, AMEN. We, whose names are underwritten, the Loyal Subjects of our dread Sovereign Lord King James, by the Grace of God, of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. Having undertaken for the Glory of God, and Advancement of the Christian Faith, and the Honour of our King and Country, a Voyage to plant the first Colony in the northern Parts of Virginia; Do by these Presents, solemnly and mutually, in the Presence of God and one another, covenant and combine ourselves together into a civil Body Politick, for our better Ordering and Preservation, and Further-ance of the Ends aforesaid: And by Virtue hereof do enact, constitute, and frame, such just and equal Laws, Ordinances, Acts, Constitutions, and Officers, from time to time, as shall be thought most meet and convenient for the general Good of the Colony; unto which we promise all due Submission and Obedience.

IN WITNESS whereof we have hereunto subscribed our names at Cape-Cod the eleventh of November, in the Reign of our Sovereign Lord King James, of England, France, and Ireland, the eighteenth, and of Scotland the fifty-fourth, Anno Domini; 1620.

GOVERNOR JOHN WINTHROP

A Modell of Christian Charity

SPEECH

April 8, 1630

The Arabella | The Atlantic Ocean

BACKGROUND

John Winthrop, governor of the Massachusetts Bay Colony, delivered these remarks aboard the Arabella toward the end of its voyage across the Atlantic Ocean.

GUIDING QUESTIONS

1. Why does John Winthrop say God gives different conditions to different people?

2. By what two rules should people treat each other?

3. What are the work, end, and means of the Massachusetts Bay Colony?

4. What does it mean to be “a city on the hill,” according to Winthrop?

GOD ALMIGHTY in his most holy and wise providence, hath so disposed of the condition of mankind, as in all times some must be rich, some poor, some high and eminent in power and dignity; others mean and in submission.

The Reason hereof.

1 Reas. First to hold conformity with the rest of his world, being delighted to show forth the glory of his wisdom in the variety and difference of the creatures, and the glory of his power in ordering all these differences for the preservation and good of the whole; and the glory of his greatness, that as it is the glory of princes to have many officers, so this great king will have many stewards, Counting himself more honored in dispensing his gifts to man by man, than if he did it by his own immediate hands.

2 Reas. Secondly that he might have the more occasion to manifest the work of his Spirit: first upon the wicked in moderating and restraining them: so that the rich and mighty should not eat up the poor nor the poor and despised rise up against and shake off their yoke. 2ly In the regenerate, in exercising his graces in them, as in the great ones, their love, mercy, gentleness, temperance etc., in the poor and inferior sort, their faith, patience, obedience etc.

3 Reas. Thirdly, that every man might have need of others, and from hence they might be all knit more nearly together in the Bonds of brotherly affection. From hence it appears plainly that no man is made more honorable than another or more wealthy etc., out of any particular and singular respect to himself, but for the glory of his creator and the common good of the creature, man. Therefore God still reserves the property of these gifts to himself as Ezek. 16. 17. he there calls wealth, his gold and his silver, and Prov. 3. 9. he claims their service as his due, honor the Lord with thy riches etc.--All men being thus (by divine providence) ranked into two sorts, rich and poor; under the first are comprehended all such as are able to live comfortably by their own means duly improved; and all others are poor according to the former distribution. There are two rules whereby we are to walk one towards another: Justice and Mercy. These are always distinguished in their act and in their object, yet may they both concur in the same subject in each respect; as sometimes there may be an occasion of showing mercy to a rich man in some sudden danger or distress, and also doing of mere justice to a poor man in regard of some particular contract etc. There is likewise a double Law by which we are regulated in our conversation towards another; in both the former respects, the law of nature and the law of grace, or the moral law or the law of the gospel, to omit the rule of justice as not properly belonging to this purpose otherwise than it may fall into consideration in some particular cases. By the first of these laws man as he was enabled so with all is commanded to love his neighbor as himself. Upon this ground stands all the precepts of the moral law, which concerns our dealings with men. To apply this to the works of mercy; this law requires two things. First that every man afford his help to another in every want or distress. Secondly, that he perform this out of the same affection which makes him careful of his own goods, according to that of our Savior, (Math.) Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you. This was practiced by Abraham and Lot in entertaining the angels and the old man of Gibea. The law of Grace or of the Gospel hath some difference from the former; as in these respects, First the law of nature was given to man in the estate of innocency; this of the Gospel in the estate of regeneracy. 2ly, the former propounds one man to another, as the same flesh and image of God; this as a brother in Christ also, and in the communion of the same Spirit, and so teaches to put a difference between Christians and others. Do good to all, especially to the household of faith; upon this ground the Israelites were to put a difference between the brethren of such as were strangers though not of the Canaanites.

3ly. The Law of nature would give no rules for dealing with enemies, for all are to be considered as friends in the state of innocency, but the Gospel commands love to an enemy. Proof. If thine Enemy hunger, feed him; Love your Enemies, do good to them that hate you. Math. 5. 44.
This law of the Gospel propounds likewise a difference of seasons and occasions. There is a time when a Christian must sell all and give to the poor, as they did in the Apostles’ times. There is a time also when Christians (though they give not all yet) must give beyond their ability, as they of Macedonia, Cor. 2, 6. Likewise community of perils calls for extraordinary liberality, and so does community in some special service for the church. Lastly, when there is no other means whereby our Christian brother may be relieved in his distress, we must help him beyond our ability rather than tempt God in putting him upon help by miraculous or extraordinary means…

…The definition which the Scripture gives us of love is this. Love is the bond of perfection, first it is a bond or ligament. 2ly it makes the work perfect. There is no body but consists of parts and that which knits these parts together, gives the body its perfection, because it makes each part so contiguous to others as thereby they do mutually participate with each other, both in strength and infirmity, in pleasure and pain. To instance in the most perfect of all bodies; Christ and his Church make one body; the several parts of this body considered a part before they were united, were as disproportionate and as much disordering as so many contrary qualities or elements, but when Christ comes, and by his spirit and love knits all these parts to himself and each to other, it is become the most perfect and best proportioned body in the world, Eph. 4. 16. Christ, by whom all the body being knit together by every joint for the furniture thereof, according to the effectual power which is in the measure of every perfection of parts, a glorious body without spot or wrinkle; the ligaments hereof being Christ, or his love, for Christ is love, 1 John 4. 8. So this definition is right. Love is the bond of perfection.

From hence we may frame these conclusions.

First of all, true Christians are of one body in Christ, 1 Cor. 12. 12. 13. 17. *Ye are the body of Christ and members of their part…*2ly. The ligaments of this body which knit together are love. 3ly. No body can be perfect which wants its proper ligament. 4ly. All the parts of this body being thus united are made so contiguous in a special relation as they must need partake of each other’s strength and infirmity, joy, and sorrow, weal, and woe…5ly. This sensibleness and sympathy of each other’s conditions will necessarily infuse into each part a native desire and endeavor, to strengthen, defend, preserve and comfort the other…

…It rests now to make some application of this discourse, by the present design, which gave the occasion of writing of it. Herein are 4 things to be propounded: first the persons, 2ly the work, 3ly the end, 4thly the means. 1. For the persons. We are a company professing ourselves fellow members of Christ, in which respect only though we were absent from each other many miles, and had our employments as far distant, yet we ought to account ourselves knit together by this bond of love, and, live in the exercise of it, if we would have comfort of our being in Christ. This was notorious in the practice of the Christians in former times; as is testified of the Waldenses, from the mouth of one of the adversaries Aeneas Sylvius "mutuo ament pere antequam norunt," they use to love any of their own religion even before they were acquainted with them. 2nly for the work we have in hand. It is by a mutual consent, through a special overruling providence and a more than an ordinary approbation of the Churches of Christ, to seek out a place of Cohabitation and Consorzship under a due form of Government both civil and ecclesiastical. In such cases as this, the care of the public must over sway all private respects, by which, not only conscience, but mere civil policy, does bind us. For it is a true rule that particular Estates cannot subsist in the ruin of the public. 3ly The end is to improve our lives to do more service to the Lord; the comfort and increase of the body of Christ, whereof we are members; that ourselves and posterity may be the better preserved from the common corruptions of this evil world, to serve the Lord and work out our Salvation under the power and purity of his holy ordinances. 4thly for the means whereby this must be effected. They are twofold, a conformity with the work and end we aim at. These we see are extraordinary, therefore we must not content ourselves with usual ordinary means. Whatsoever we did, or ought to have, done, when we lived in England, the same must we do, and more also, where we go. That which the most in their churches maintain as truth in profession only, we must bring into familiar and constant practice; as in this duty of love, we must love brotherly without dissimulation, we must love one another with a pure heart fervently. We must bear one another’s burdens. We must not look only on our own things, but also on the things of our brethren. Neither must we think that the Lord will bear with such failings at our hands as he does from those among whom we have lived…

When God gives a special commission he looks to have it strictly observed in every article; When he gave Saul a commission to destroy Amalek, He indented with him upon certain articles, and because he failed in one of the least, and that upon a fair pretense, it lost him the kingdom, which should have been his reward, if he had observed his commission. Thus stands the cause between God and us. We are entered into Covenant with Him for this work. We have taken out a commission. The Lord hath given us leave to draw our own articles. We have professed to enterprise these and those accounts, upon these and those ends. We have hereupon besought Him of favor and blessing. Now if the Lord shall please to hear us, and bring us in peace to the place we desire, then hath he ratified this Covenant and sealed our Commission, and will expect a strict performance of the articles contained in it; but if we shall neglect the observation of these articles which are the ends we have propounded, and, dissembling with our God, shall fall to embrace this present world and prosecute our carnal intentions, seeking great things for ourselves and our posterity, the Lord will surely break out in wrath against us; be revenged of such a [sinful] people and make us know the price of the breach of such a Covenant.

Now the only way to avoid this shipwreck, and to provide for our posterity, is to follow the counsel of Micah, to do justly, to love mercy, to walk humbly with our God. For this end, we must be knit together, in this work, as one man. We must entertain each other in brotherly affection. We must be willing to abridge ourselves of our superfluities, for the supply of other's necessities. We must uphold a familiar commerce together in all meekness, gentleness, patience, and liberality. We must delight in each other; make other's conditions our own; rejoice together, mourn together, labor and suffer together, always having before our eyes our commission and community in the work, as members of the same body. So shall we keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace. The Lord will be our God, and delight to dwell among us, as his own people, and will command a blessing upon us in all our ways. So that we shall see much more of his wisdom, power, goodness and truth, than formerly we have been acquainted with. We shall find that the God of Israel is among us, when ten of us shall be able to resist a thousand of our enemies; when he shall make us a praise and glory that men shall say of succeeding plantations, "the Lord make it likely that of New England." For we must consider that we shall be as a city upon a hill. The eyes of all people are upon us. So that if we shall deal falsely with our God in this work we have undertaken, and so cause him to withdraw his present help from us, we shall be made a story and a by-word through the world. We shall open the mouths of enemies to speak evil of the ways of God, and all professors for God's sake. We shall shame the faces of many of God's worthy servants, and cause their prayers to be turned into curses upon us till we be consumed out of the good land whither we are a going.

I shall shut up this discourse with that exhortation of Moses, that faithful servant of the Lord, in his last farewell to Israel, Deut. 30. Beloved there is now set before us life and good, Death and evil, in that we are commanded this day to love the Lord our God, and to love one another, to walk in his ways and to keep his Commandments and his Ordinance and his laws, and the articles of our Covenant with him, that we may live and be multiplied, and that the Lord our God may bless us in the land whither we go to possess it. But if our hearts shall turn away, so that we will not obey, but shall be seduced, and worship and serve other Gods, our pleasure and profits, and serve them; it is propounded unto us this day, we shall surely perish out of the good land whither we pass over this vast sea to possess it;

Therefore let us choose life that we, and our seed may live, by obeying His voice and cleaving to Him, for He is our life and our prosperity.
THE INHABITANTS AND RESIDENTS OF WINDSOR, HARTFORD, AND WETHERSFIELD

The Fundamental Orders

CONSTITUTION

January 14, 1639
Connecticut River Colony

BACKGROUND

After disputes with the Massachusetts Bay Colony, Roger Ludlow and other leading residents along the Connecticut River drafted this frame of government for inhabitants along the river, which was adopted for the community by anonymous leaders in 1639.

GUIDING QUESTIONS

1. On what is government to be based?

2. How is the government to ensure the rights of individuals?

3. How does one come to be a magistrate?

4. What kinds of limits are placed on the power of the government?

For as much as it hath pleased Almighty God by the wise disposition of his divine providence so to order and dispose of things that we the Inhabitants and Residents of Windsor, Hartford and Wethersfield are now cohabiting and dwelling in and upon the River of Connectecotte and the lands thereunto adjoining; and well knowing where a people are gathered together the word of God requires that to maintain the peace and union of such a people there should be an orderly and decent Government established according to God, to order and dispose of the affairs of the people at all seasons as occasion shall require; do therefore associate and conjoin ourselves to be as one Public State or Commonwealth; and do for ourselves and our successors and such as shall be adjoined to us at any time hereafter, enter into Combination and Confederation together, to maintain and preserve the liberty and purity of the Gospel of our Lord Jesus which we now profess, as also, the discipline of the Churches, which according to the truth of the said Gospel is now practiced amongst us; as also in our civil affairs to be guided and governed according to such Laws, Rules, Orders and Decrees as shall be made, ordered, and decreed as followeth:

1. It is Ordered, sentenced, and decreed, that there shall be yearly two General Assemblies or Courts, the one the second Thursday in April, the other the second Thursday in September following; the first shall be called the Court of Election, wherein shall be yearly chosen from time to time, so many Magistrates and other public Officers as shall be found requisite: Whereof one to be chosen Governor for the year ensuing and until another be chosen, and no other Magistrate to be chosen for more than one year: provided always there be six chosen besides the Governor, which being chosen and sworn according to an Oath recorded for that purpose, shall have the power to administer justice according to the Laws here established, and for want thereof, according to the Rule of the Word of God; which choice shall be made by all that are admitted freemen and have taken the Oath of Fidelity, and do cohabit within this Jurisdiction having been admitted Inhabitants by the major part of the Town wherein they live or the major part of such as shall be then present.
2. It is Ordered, sentenced, and decreed, that the election of the aforesaid Magistrates shall be in this manner: every person present and qualified for choice shall bring in (to the person deputed to receive them) one single paper with the name of him written in it whom he desires to have Governor, and that he that hath the greatest number of papers shall be Governor for that year. And the rest of the Magistrates or public officers to be chosen in this manner: the Secretary for the time being shall first read the names of all that are to be put to choice and then shall severally nominate them distinctly, and every one that would have the person nominated to be chosen shall bring in one single paper written upon, and he that would not have him chosen shall bring in a blank; and every one that hath more written papers than blanks shall be a Magistrate for that year; which papers shall be received and told by one or more that shall be then chosen by the court and sworn to be faithful therein; but in case there should not be six chosen as aforesaid, besides the Governor, out of those which are nominated, than he or they which have the most written papers shall be a Magistrate or Magistrates for the ensuing year, to make up the aforesaid number.

3. It is Ordered, sentenced, and decreed, that the Secretary shall not nominate any person, nor shall any person be chosen newly into the Magistracy which was not propounded in some General Court before, to be nominated the next election; and to that end it shall be lawful for each of the Towns aforesaid by their deputies to nominate any two whom they conceive fit to be put to election; and the Court may add so many more as they judge requisite.

4. It is Ordered, sentenced, and decreed, that no person be chosen Governor above once in two years, and that the Governor be always a member of some approved Congregation, and formerly of the Magistracy within this Jurisdiction; and that all the Magistrates, Freemen of this Commonwealth; and that no Magistrate or other public officer shall execute any part of his or their office before they are severally sworn, which shall be done in the face of the court if they be present, and in case of absence by some deputed for that purpose.
5. It is Ordered, sentenced, and decreed, that to the aforesaid Court of Election the several Towns shall send their deputies, and when the Elections are ended they may proceed in any public service as at other Courts. Also the other General Court in September shall be for making of laws, and any other public occasion, which concerns the good of the Commonwealth.

6. It is Ordered, sentenced, and decreed, that the Governor shall, either by himself or by the Secretary, send out summons to the Constables of every Town for the calling of these two standing Courts one month at least before their several times: And also if the Governor and the greatest part of the Magistrates see cause upon any special occasion to call a General Court, they may give order to the Secretary so to do within fourteen days' warning: And if urgent necessity so required, upon a shorter notice, giving sufficient grounds for it to the deputies when they meet, or else be questioned for the same; And if the Governor and major part of Magistrates shall either neglect or refuse to call the two General standing Courts or either of them, as also at other times when the occasions of the Commonwealth require, the Freemen thereof, or the major part of them, shall petition to them so to do; if then it be either denied or neglected, the said Freemen, or the major part of them, shall have the power to give order to the Constables of the several Towns to do the same, and so may meet together, and choose to themselves a Moderator, and may proceed to do any act of power which any other General Courts may.

7. It is Ordered, sentenced, and decreed, that after there are warrants given out for any of the said General Courts, the Constable or Constables of each Town, shall forthwith give notice distinctly to the inhabitants of the same, in some public assembly or by going or sending from house to house, that at a place and time by him or them limited and set, they meet and assemble themselves together to elect and choose certain deputies to be at the General Court then following to agitate the affairs of the Commonwealth; which said deputies shall be chosen by all that are admitted Inhabitants in the several Towns and have taken the oath of fidelity; provided that none be chosen a Deputy for any General Court which is not a Freeman of this Commonwealth…
8. It is Ordered, sentenced, and decreed, that Windsor, Hartford, and Wethersfield shall have power, each Town, to send four of their Freemen as their deputies to every General Court; and Whatsoever other Town shall be hereafter added to this Jurisdiction, they shall send so many deputies as the Court shall judge meet, a reasonable proportion to the number of Freemen that are in the said Towns being to be attended therein; which deputies shall have the power of the whole Town to give their votes and allowance to all such laws and orders as may be for the public good, and unto which the said Towns are to be bound.

9. It is Ordered, sentenced, and decreed, that the deputies thus chosen shall have power and liberty to appoint a time and a place of meeting together before any General Court, to advise and consult of all such things as may concern the good of the public, as also to examine their own Elections, whether according to the order, and if they or the greatest part of them find any election to be illegal they may seclude such for present from their meeting, and return the same and their reasons to the Court; and if it be proved true, the Court may fine the party or parties so intruding, and the Town, if they see cause, and give out a warrant to go to a new election in a legal way, either in part or in whole. Also the said deputies shall have power to fine any that shall be disorderly at their meetings, or for not coming in due time or place according to appointment; and they may return the said fines into the Court if it be refused to be paid, and the Treasurer to take notice of it, and to escheat or levy the same as he does other fines.

10. It is Ordered, sentenced, and decreed, that every General Court, except such as through neglect of the Governor and the greatest part of the Magistrates the Freemen themselves do call, shall consist of the Governor, or some one chosen to moderate the Court, and four other Magistrates at least, with the major part of the deputies of the several Towns legally chosen; and in case the Freemen, or major part of them, through neglect or refusal of the Governor and major part of the Magistrates, shall call a Court, it shall consist of the major part of Freemen that are present or their deputies, with a Moderator chosen by them: In which said General Courts shall consist the supreme power of the Commonwealth, and they only shall have power to make laws or repeal them, to grant levies, to admit of Freemen, dispose of lands undisposed of, to several Towns or persons, and also shall have power to call either Court or Magistrate or any other person whatsoever into question for any misdemeanor, and may for just causes displace or deal otherwise according to the nature of the offense; and also may deal in any other matter that concerns the good of this Commonwealth, except election of Magistrates, which shall be done by the whole body of Freemen.

In which Court the Governor or Moderator shall have power to order the Court, to give liberty of speech, and silence unseasonable and disorderly speakings, to put all things to vote, and in case the vote be equal to have the casting voice. But none of these Courts shall be adjourned or dissolved without the consent of the major part of the Court.

11. It is Ordered, sentenced, and decreed, that when any General Court upon the occasions of the Commonwealth have agreed upon any sum, or sums of money to be levied upon the several Towns within this Jurisdiction, that a committee be chosen to set out and appoint what shall be the proportion of every Town to pay of the said levy, provided the committee be made up of an equal number out of each Town.

14th January 1639 the 11 Orders above said are voted.
William Penn

Preface to the Frame of Government

Constitution Excerpt

May 5, 1682
Province of Pennsylvania

Background

William Penn, Founder of the Province of Pennsylvania, wrote this preface for the colony’s first constitution.

Guiding Questions

1. According to William Penn, does God desire a government for mankind?

2. What is the purpose of government?

3. Are the people meant to participate in government?

4. What is the importance of good men to a community?

5. What is the relationship between liberty and obedience?

When the great and wise God had made the world, of all his creatures, it pleased him to choose man his Deputy to rule it: and to fit him for so great a charge and trust, he did not only qualify him with skill and power, but with integrity to use them justly. This native goodness was equally his honor and his happiness, and whilst he stood here, all went well; there was no need of coercive or compulsive means; the precept of divine love and truth, in his bosom, was the guide and keeper of his innocency. But lust prevailing against duty, made a lamentable breach upon it; and the law, that before had no power over him, took place upon him, and his disobedient posterity, that such as would not live comformable to the holy law within, should fall under the reproof and correction of the just law without, in a Judicial administration.

This the Apostle teaches in divers of his epistles: "The law," says he, "was added because of transgression." In another place, "knowing that the law was not made for the righteous man; but for the disobedient and ungodly, for sinners, for unholy and prophane, for murderers, for whoremongers, for them that defile themselves with mankind, and for man-stealers, for liars, for perjured persons," etc., but this is not all; he opens and carries the matter of government a little further: "let every soul be subject to the higher powers; for there is no power but of God. The powers that be are ordained of God: whosoever therefore resisteth the power, resisteth the ordinance of God. For rulers are not a terror to good works, but to evil: wilt thou then not be afraid of the power? Do that which is good, and thou shalt have praise of the same." "He is the minister of God to thee for good." "Wherefore ye must needs be subject, not only for wrath, but for conscience sake."

This settles the divine right of government beyond exception, and that for two ends: first, to terrify evil doers: secondly, to cherish those that do well; which gives government a life beyond corruption, and makes it as durable in the world, as good men shall be. So that government seems to me a part of religion itself, a filing sacred in its institution and end. For, if it does not directly remove the cause, it crushes the effects of evil, and is as such, though a lower, yet an emanation of the same Divine Power, that is both author and object of pure religion; the difference lying here, that the one is more free and mental, the other more corporal and compulsive in its operations: but that is only to evil doers; government itself being otherwise as capable of kindness, goodness and charity, as a more private society. They weakly err, that think there is no other use of government than correction, which is the coarsest part of it: daily experience tells us that the care and regulation of many other affairs, more soft, and daily necessary, make up much of the greatest part of government; and which must have followed the peopling of the world, had Adam never fell, and will continue among men, on earth, under the highest attainments they may arrive at, by the coming of the blessed Second Adam, the Lord from heaven. Thus much of government in general, as to its rise and end.

For particular frames and models, it will become me to say little; and comparatively I will say nothing. My reasons are:

First. That the age is too nice and difficult for it; there being nothing the wits of men are more busy and divided upon. It is true, they seem to agree to the end, to wit, happiness; but, in the means, they differ, as to divine, so to this human felicity; and the cause is much the same, not always want of light and knowledge, but want of using them rightly. Men side with their passions against their reason, and their sinister interests have so strong a bias upon their minds, that they lean to them against the good of the things they know.

Secondly. I do not find a model in the world, that time, place, and some singular emergences have not necessarily altered; nor is it easy to frame a civil government, that shall serve all places alike.

Thirdly. I know what is said by the several admirers of monarchy, aristocracy, and democracy, which are the rule of one, a few, and many, and are the three common ideas of government, when men discourse on the subject. But I choose to solve the controversy with this small distinction, and it belongs to all three: Any government is free to the people under it, whatever be the frame, where the laws rule, and the people are a party to those laws, and more than this is tyranny, oligarchy, or confusion.
But lastly, when all is said, there is hardly one frame of government in the world so ill designed by its first founders that in good hands, [it] would not do well enough; and story tells us, the best in ill ones can do nothing that is great or good; witness the Jewish and Roman states. Governments, like clocks, go from the motion men give them; and as governments are made and moved by men, so by them they are ruined too. Wherefore governments rather depend upon men, than men upon governments. Let men be good, and the government cannot be bad; if it be ill, they will cure it. But if men be bad, let the government be never so good, they will endeavor to warp and spoil it to their turn.

I know some say, let us have good laws, and no matter for the men that execute them: but let them consider, that though good laws do well, good men do better: for good laws may want good men, and be abolished or evaded by ill men, but good men will never want good laws nor suffer ill ones. It is true, good laws have some awe upon-ill ministers, but that is where they have not power to escape or abolish them and the people are generally wise and good: but a loose and depraved people (which is the question) love laws and an administration like themselves. That, therefore, which makes a good constitution, must keep it, vie: men of wisdom and virtue, qualities, that because they descend not with worldly inheritances, must be carefully propagated by a virtuous education of youth; for which after ages will owe more to the care and prudence of founders and the successive magistracy than to their parents for their private patrimonies.

These considerations of the weight of government and the nice and various opinions about it made it uneasy to me to think of publishing the ensuing frame and conditional laws, foreseeing both the censures they will meet with from men of differing humors and engagements and the occasion they may give of discourse beyond my design.

But, next to the power of necessity, (which is a solicitor that will take no denial) this induced me to a compliance, that we have (with reverence to God and good conscience to men) to the best of our skill contrived and composed the frame and laws of this government to the great end of all government; viz., to support power in reverence with the people and to secure the people from the almost of power; that they may be free by their just obedience, and the magistrates honorable for their just administration; for liberty without obedience is confusion, and obedience without liberty is slavery. To carry this evenness is partly owing to the constitution, and partly to the magistracy. Where either of these fail, government will be subject to convulsions, but where both are wanting, it must be totally subverted; then where both meet, the government is like to endure, which I humbly pray and hope God will please to make the lot of this of Pennsylvania. Amen.

WILLIAM PENN.
FIRST PENNSYLVANIA PROVINCIAL ASSEMBLY

An Act for Freedom of Conscience

LAW

December 7, 1682
Province of Pennsylvania | Chester, Pennsylvania

BACKGROUND

William Penn, Governor of Pennsylvania, insisted upon this law, which the Pennsylvania Provincial Assembly passed in 1682.

GUIDING QUESTIONS

1. What is the proper end of government?

2. Why are there laws?

3. What is the freedom of conscience?

4. What are its limits?

5. What are the punishments given for breaking this law?

Whereas the glory of almighty God and the good of mankind is the reason and end of government and, therefore, government in itself is a venerable ordinance of God. And forasmuch as it is principally desired and intended by the Proprietary and Governor and the freemen of the province of Pennsylvania and territories thereunto belonging to make and establish such laws as shall best preserve true Christian and civil liberty in opposition to all unchristian, licentious, and unjust practices, whereby God may have his due, Caesar his due, and the people their due, from tyranny and oppression on the one side and insolence and licentiousness on the other, so that the best and firmest foundation may be laid for the present and future happiness of both the Governor and people of the province and territories aforesaid and their posterity.

Be it, therefore, enacted by William Penn, Proprietary and Governor, by and with the advice and consent of the deputies of the freemen of this province and counties aforesaid in assembly met and by the authority of the same, that these following chapters and paragraphs shall be the laws of Pennsylvania and the territories thereof.

Chap. i. Almighty God, being only Lord of conscience, father of lights and spirits, and the author as well as object of all divine knowledge, faith, and worship, who can only enlighten the mind and persuade and convince the understandings of people, in due reverence to his sovereignty over the souls of mankind:

Be it enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that no person now or at any time hereafter living in this province, who shall confess and acknowledge one almighty God to be the creator, upholder, and ruler of the world, and who professes him or herself obliged in conscience to live peaceably and quietly under the civil government, shall in any case be molested or prejudiced for his or her conscientious persuasion or practice. Nor shall he or she at any time be compelled to frequent or maintain any religious worship, place, or ministry whatever contrary to his or her mind, but shall freely and fully enjoy his, or her, Christian liberty in that respect, without any interruption or reflection. And if any person shall abuse or deride any other for his or her different persuasion and practice in matters of religion, such person shall be looked upon as a disturber of the peace and be punished accordingly.

But to the end that looseness, irreligion, and atheism may not creep in under pretense of conscience in this province, be it further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that, according to the example of the primitive Christians and for the ease of the creation, every first day of the week, called the Lord’s day, people shall abstain from their usual and common toil and labor that, whether masters, parents, children, or servants, they may the better dispose themselves to read the scriptures of truth at home or frequent such meetings of religious worship abroad as may best suit their respective persuasions.

Chap. ii. And be it further enacted by, etc., that all officers and persons commissioned and employed in the service of the government in this province and all members and deputies elected to serve in the Assembly thereof and all that have a right to elect such deputies shall be such as profess and declare they believe in Jesus Christ to be the son of God, the savior of the world, and that are not convicted of ill-fame or unsober and dishonest conversation and that are of twenty-one years of age at least.

Chap. iii. And be it further enacted, etc., that whosoever shall swear in their common conversation by the name of God or Christ or Jesus, being legally convicted thereof, shall pay, for every such offense, five shillings or suffer five days imprisonment in the house of correction at hard labor to the behoove of the public and be fed with bread and water only during that time.

Chap. v. And be it further enacted, etc., for the better prevention of corrupt communication, that whosoever shall speak loosely and profanely of almighty God, Christ Jesus, the Holy Spirit, or the scriptures of truth, and is legally convicted thereof, shall pay, for every such offense, five shillings or suffer five days imprisonment in the house of correction at hard labor to the behoove of the public and be fed with bread and water only during that time.
Chap. vi. And be it further enacted, etc., that whosoever shall, in their conversation, at any time curse himself or any other and is legally convicted thereof shall pay for every such offense five shillings or suffer five days imprisonment as aforesaid.
KING JOHN OF ENGLAND

Magna Carta Libertatum

ROYAL CHARTER

June 15, 1215

The Meadow of Runnymede | Windsor, England

BACKGROUND

Following the loss of English territory in France, England was left weak and vulnerable. In order to regain power, King John attempted to assert total authority over all the barons of England. Stephen Langton, Archbishop of Canterbury, attempted to prevent the potential civil war by drafting the Magna Carta, which was signed by King John.

ANNOTATIONS

JOHN, by the grace of God King of England, Lord of Ireland, Duke of Normandy and Aquitaine, and Count of Anjou, to his archbishops, bishops, abbots, earls, barons, justices, foresters, sheriffs, stewards, servants, and to all his officials and loyal subjects, Greeting.

5 KNOW THAT BEFORE GOD, for the health of our soul and those of our ancestors and heirs, to the honour of God, the exaltation of the holy Church, and the better ordering of our kingdom, at the advice of our reverend fathers…and other loyal subjects:

(1) FIRST, THAT WE HAVE GRANTED TO GOD, and by this present charter have confirmed for us and our heirs in perpetuity, that the English Church shall be free, and shall have its rights undiminished, and its liberties unimpaired. That we wish this so to be observed, appears from the fact that of our own free will, before the outbreak of the

---

Copyright © 2022 Hillsdale College. All Rights Reserved.
present dispute between us and our barons, we granted and confirmed by charter the freedom of the Church’s elections – a right reckoned to be of the greatest necessity and importance to it – and caused this to be confirmed by Pope Innocent III. This freedom we shall observe ourselves, and desire to be observed in good faith by our heirs in perpetuity.

5 TO ALL FREE MEN OF OUR KINGDOM we have also granted, for us and our heirs for ever, all the liberties written out below, to have and to keep for them and their heirs, of us and our heirs: …

(4) The guardian of the land of an heir who is under age shall take from it only reasonable revenues, customary dues, and feudal services. He shall do this without destruction or damage to men or property. If we have given the guardianship of the land to a sheriff, or to any person answerable to us for the revenues, and he commits destruction or damage, we will exact compensation from him, and the land shall be entrusted to two worthy and prudent men of the same ‘fee’, who shall be answerable to us for the revenues, or to the person to whom we have assigned them. If we have given or sold to anyone the guardianship of such land, and he causes destruction or damage, he shall lose the guardianship of it, and it shall be handed over to two worthy and prudent men of the same ‘fee’, who shall be similarly answerable to us.

(5) For so long as a guardian has guardianship of such land, he shall maintain the houses, parks, fish preserves, ponds, mills, and everything else pertaining to it, from the revenues of the land itself. When the heir comes of age, he shall restore the whole land to him, stocked with plough teams and such implements of husbandry as the season demands and the revenues from the land can reasonably bear.

(6) Heirs may be given in marriage, but not to someone of lower social standing. Before a marriage takes place, it shall be made known to the heir’s next-of-kin.
(7) At her husband’s death, a widow may have her marriage portion and inheritance at once and without trouble. She shall pay nothing for her dower, marriage portion, or any inheritance that she and her husband held jointly on the day of his death…

(8) No widow shall be compelled to marry, so long as she wishes to remain without a husband. But she must give security that she will not marry without royal consent, if she holds her lands of the Crown, or without the consent of whatever other lord she may hold them of.

(9) Neither we nor our officials will seize any land or rent in payment of a debt, so long as the debtor has movable goods sufficient to discharge the debt…

(12) No ‘scutage’ or ‘aid’ may be levied in our kingdom without its general consent, unless it is for the ransom of our person, to make our eldest son a knight, and (once) to marry our eldest daughter. For these purposes only a reasonable ‘aid’ may be levied…

(13) The city of London shall enjoy all its ancient liberties and free customs, both by land and by water. We also will and grant that all other cities, boroughs, towns, and ports shall enjoy all their liberties and free customs.

(14) To obtain the general consent of the realm for the assessment of an ‘aid’ – except in the three cases specified above – or a ‘scutage’, we will cause the archbishops, bishops, abbots, earls, and greater barons to be summoned individually by letter…

(16) No man shall be forced to perform more service for a knight’s ‘fee’, or other free holding of land, than is due from it.

(17) Ordinary lawsuits shall not follow the royal court around, but shall be held in a fixed place…
(20) For a trivial offence, a free man shall be fined only in proportion to the degree of his offence, and for a serious offence correspondingly, but not so heavily as to deprive him of his livelihood. In the same way, a merchant shall be spared his merchandise, and a villein the implements of his husbandry, if they fall upon the mercy of a royal court. None of these fines shall be imposed except by the assessment on oath of reputable men of the neighbourhood.

(21) Earls and barons shall be fined only by their equals, and in proportion to the gravity of their offence.

(22) A fine imposed upon the lay property of a clerk in holy orders shall be assessed upon the same principles, without reference to the value of his ecclesiastical benefice…

(24) No sheriff, constable, coroners, or other royal officials are to hold lawsuits that should be held by the royal justices…

(30) No sheriff, royal official, or other person shall take horses or carts for transport from any free man, without his consent.

(31) Neither we nor any royal official will take wood for our castle, or for any other purpose, without the consent of the owner.

(32) We will not keep the lands of people convicted of felony in our hand for longer than a year and a day, after which they shall be returned to the lords of the ‘fees’ concerned…

(38) In future no official shall place a man on trial upon his own unsupported statement, without producing credible witnesses to the truth of it.

(39) No free man shall be seized or imprisoned, or stripped of his rights or possessions, or outlawed or exiled, or deprived of his standing in any way, nor will we proceed with force against him, or send others to do so, except by the lawful judgment of his equals or by the law of the land.

(40) To no one will we sell, to no one deny or delay right or justice…

(45) We will appoint as justices, constables, sheriffs, or other officials, only men that know the law of the realm and are minded to keep it well…

(51) As soon as peace is restored, we will remove from the kingdom all the foreign knights, bowmen, their attendants, and the mercenaries that have come to it, to its harm, with horses and arms.

(52) To any man whom we have deprived or dispossessed of lands, castles, liberties, or rights, without the lawful judgment of his equals, we will at once restore these. In cases of dispute the matter shall be resolved by the judgment of the twenty-five barons…

(55) All fines that have been given to us unjustly and against the law of the land, and all fines that we have exacted unjustly, shall be entirely remitted or the matter decided by a majority judgment of the twenty-five barons referred to below in the clause for securing the peace together with Stephen, archbishop of Canterbury, if he can be present…

(60) All these customs and liberties that we have granted shall be observed in our kingdom in so far as concerns our own relations with our subjects. Let all men of our kingdom, whether clergy or laymen, observe them similarly in their relations with their own men.

(61) SINCE WE HAVE GRANTED ALL THESE THINGS for God, for the better ordering of our kingdom, and to allay the discord that has arisen between us and our barons, and since we desire that they shall be enjoyed in their entirety, with lasting strength, for ever, we give and grant to the barons the following security:
The barons shall elect twenty-five of their number to keep, and cause to be observed with all their might, the peace and liberties granted and confirmed to them by this charter.

If we, our chief justice, our officials, or any of our servants offend in any respect against any man, or transgress any of the articles of the peace or of this security, and the offence is made known to four of the said twenty-five barons, they shall come to us — or in our absence from the kingdom to the chief justice — to declare it and claim immediate redress.

If we, or in our absence abroad the chief justice, make no redress within forty days, reckoning from the day on which the offence was declared to us or to him, the four barons shall refer the matter to the rest of the twenty-five barons, who may distrain upon and assail us in every way possible, with the support of the whole community of the land, by seizing our castles, lands, possessions, or anything else saving only our own person and those of the queen and our children, until they have secured such redress as they have determined upon. Having secured the redress, they may then resume their normal obedience to us…

If one of the twenty-five barons dies or leaves the country, or is prevented in any other way from discharging his duties, the rest of them shall choose another baron in his place, at their discretion, who shall be duly sworn in as they were.

In the event of disagreement among the twenty-five barons on any matter referred to them for decision, the verdict of the majority present shall have the same validity as a unanimous verdict of the whole twenty-five, whether these were all present or some of those summoned were unwilling or unable to appear.

The twenty-five barons shall swear to obey all the above articles faithfully, and shall cause them to be obeyed by others to the best of their power.

We will not seek to procure from anyone, either by our own efforts or those of a third party, anything by which any part of these concessions or liberties might be revoked or diminished. Should such a thing be procured, it shall be null and void and we will at no time make use of it, either ourselves or through a third party…

(63) IT IS ACCORDINGLY OUR WISH AND COMMAND that the English Church
shall be free, and that men in our kingdom shall have and keep all these liberties, rights,
and concessions, well and peaceably in their fullness and entirety for them and their heirs,
of us and our heirs, in all things and all places for ever.

Both we and the barons have sworn that all this shall be observed in good faith and without deceit. Witness the abovementioned people and many others.

Given by our hand in the meadow that is called Runnymede, between Windsor and Staines, on the fifteenth day of June in the seventeenth year of our reign.
GREAT AND GENERAL COURT OF MASSACHUSETTS BAY COLONY

An Act

LAW

June 10, 1661

The Colony of Massachusetts Bay

BACKGROUND

The colonial legislature in Massachusetts enacted this declaration in 1661 after the restoration of Charles II to the English throne.

ANNOTATIONS

Concerning our liberties

1. We conceive the patent (under God) to be the first and main foundation of our civil polity here, by a Governor and Company, according as is therein expressed.

2. The Governor and Company are, by the patent, a body politic, in fact and name.

3. This body politic is vested with power to make freemen.

4. These freemen have power to choose annually a governor, deputy governor, assistants, and their select representatives or deputies.

5. This government has power also to set up all sorts of officers, as well superior as inferior, and point out their power and places.

6. The governor, deputy governor, assistants, and select representatives or deputies have full power and authority, both legislative and executive, for the government of all the people here, whether inhabitants or strangers, both concerning ecclesiastics and in civils, without appeal, excepting law or laws repugnant to the laws of England.

7. The government is privileged by all fitting means (yea, if need be, by force of arms) to defend themselves, both by land and sea, against all such person or persons as shall at any time attempt or enterprise the destruction, invasion, detriment, or annoyance of this plantation, or the inhabitants therein, besides other privileges mentioned in the patent, not here expressed.

8. We conceive any imposition prejudicial to the country contrary to any just law of ours, not repugnant to the laws of England, to be an infringement of our right.

Concerning our duties of allegiance to our sovereign lord, the king

1. We ought to uphold and, to our power, maintain his place, as of right belonging to Our Sovereign Lord, The King, as holden of His Majesty’s manor of East Greenwich, and not to subject the same to any foreign prince or potentate whatsoever.

2. We ought to endeavor the preservation of His Majesty’s royal person, realms, and dominions, and so far as lies in us, to discover and prevent all plots and conspiracies against the same.

3. We ought to seek the peace and prosperity of Our King and nation by a faithful discharge in the governing of his people committed to our care.
First, by punishing all such crimes (being breaches of the First or Second Table) as are committed against the peace of Our Sovereign Lord, The King, his Royal Crown, and dignity.

Second, in propagating the Gospel, defending and upholding the true Christian or Protestant religion according to the faith given by our Lord Christ in His word; our dread sovereign being styled “defender of the faith.”

The premises considered, it may well stand with the loyalty and obedience of such subjects as are thus privileged by their rightful sovereign (for Himself, His Heirs, and Successors forever) as cause shall require, to plead with their prince against all such as shall at any time endeavor the violation of their privileges ... And, also, that the General Court may do safely to declare that in case (for the future) any legally obnoxious, and flying from the civil justice of the state of England, shall come over to these parts, they may not here expect shelter.
PARLIAMENT OF ENGLAND

An Act Declaring the Rights and Liberties of the Subject and Settling the Succession of the Crown

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW

February 13, 1689
Parliament | London, England

BACKGROUND

Following a civil war, revolution, the Cromwell Protectorate, and a second, bloodless revolution, the English Parliament enacted this law in 1689.

ANNOTATIONS

An Act Declaring the Rights and Liberties of the Subject and Settling the Succession of the Crown.

Whereas the Lords Spiritual and Temporal and Commons assembled at Westminster, lawfully, fully and freely representing all the estates of the people of this realm, did upon the thirteenth day of February in the year of our Lord one thousand six hundred eighty-eight present unto their Majesties, then called and known by the names and style of William and Mary, prince and princess of Orange, being present in their proper persons, a certain declaration in writing made by the said Lords and Commons in the words following, viz.:

Whereas the late King James the Second, by the assistance of diverse evil counsellors, judges and ministers employed by him, did endeavor to subvert and extirpate the Protestant religion and the laws and liberties of this kingdom;

By assuming and exercising a power of dispensing with and suspending of laws and the execution of laws without consent of Parliament…

By levying money for and to the use of the Crown by pretense of prerogative for other time and in other manner than the same was granted by Parliament;

By raising and keeping a standing army within this kingdom in time of peace without consent of Parliament, and quartering soldiers contrary to law;

By causing several good subjects being Protestants to be disarmed at the same time when papists were both armed and employed contrary to law;

By violating the freedom of election of members to serve in Parliament;

By prosecutions in the Court of King’s Bench for matters and causes cognizable only in Parliament, and by diverse other arbitrary and illegal courses;

And whereas of late years partial corrupt and unqualified persons have been returned and served on juries in trials, and particularly diverse jurors in trials for high treason which were not freeholders;

And excessive bail hath been required of persons committed in criminal cases to elude the benefit of the laws made for the liberty of the subjects;

And excessive fines have been imposed;

And illegal and cruel punishments inflicted;

And several grants and promises made of fines and forfeitures before any conviction or judgment against the persons upon whom the same were to be levied;

All which are utterly and directly contrary to the known laws and statutes and freedom of this realm;
And whereas the said late King James the Second having abdicated the government and the throne being thereby vacant, his Highness the prince of Orange (whom it hath pleased Almighty God to make the glorious instrument of delivering this kingdom from popery and arbitrary power) did (by the advice of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal and diverse principal persons of the Commons) cause letters to be written to the Lords Spiritual and Temporal being Protestants, and other letters to the several counties, cities, universities, boroughs and cinque ports, for the choosing of such persons to represent them as were of right to be sent to Parliament, to meet and sit at Westminster upon the two and twentieth day of January in this year one thousand six hundred eighty and eight \[old style date\], in order to such an establishment as that their religion, laws and liberties might not again be in danger of being subverted, upon which letters elections having been accordingly made;

And thereupon the said Lords Spiritual and Temporal and Commons, pursuant to their respective letters and elections, being now assembled in a full and free representative of this nation, taking into their most serious consideration the best means for attaining the ends aforesaid, do in the first place (as their ancestors in like case have usually done) for the vindicating and asserting their ancient rights and liberties declare

That the pretended power of suspending the laws or the execution of laws by regal authority without consent of Parliament is illegal;

That the pretended power of dispensing with laws or the execution of laws by regal authority, as it hath been assumed and exercised of late, is illegal…

That levying money for or to the use of the Crown by pretence of prerogative, without grant of Parliament, for longer time, or in other manner than the same is or shall be granted, is illegal;

That it is the right of the subjects to petition the king, and all commitments and prosecutions for such petitioning are illegal;
That the raising or keeping a standing army within the kingdom in time of peace, unless it be with consent of Parliament, is against law;

That the subjects which are Protestants may have arms for their defense suitable to their conditions and as allowed by law;

That election of members of Parliament ought to be free;

That the freedom of speech and debates or proceedings in Parliament ought not to be impeached or questioned in any court or place out of Parliament;

That excessive bail ought not to be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted;

That jurors ought to be duly impaneled and returned, and jurors which pass upon men in trials for high treason ought to be freeholders;

That all grants and promises of fines and forfeitures of particular persons before conviction are illegal and void;

And that for redress of all grievances, and for the amending, strengthening and preserving of the laws, Parliaments ought to be held frequently.

…Having therefore an entire confidence that his said Highness the prince of Orange will perfect the deliverance so far advanced by him, and will still preserve them from the violation of their rights which they have here asserted, and from all other attempts upon their religion, rights and liberties, the said Lords Spiritual and Temporal and Commons assembled at Westminster do resolve that William and Mary, prince and princess of Orange, be and be declared king and queen of England, France and Ireland and the dominions thereunto belonging, to hold the crown and royal dignity of the said kingdoms and dominions to them, the said prince and princess, during their lives and the life of the survivor to them, and that the sole and full exercise of the regal power be only in and executed by the said prince of Orange in the names of the said prince and princess during their joint lives, and after their deceases the said crown and royal dignity of the same kingdoms and dominions to be to the heirs of the body of the said princess, and for default of such issue to the Princess Anne of Denmark and the heirs of her body, and for default of such issue to the heirs of the body of the said prince of Orange. And the Lords Spiritual and Temporal and Commons do pray the said prince and princess to accept the same accordingly...

…Now in pursuance of the premises the said Lords Spiritual and Temporal and Commons in Parliament assembled, for the ratifying, confirming and establishing the said declaration and the articles, clauses, matters and things therein contained by the force of law made in due form by authority of Parliament, do pray that it may be declared and enacted that all and singular the rights and liberties asserted and claimed in the said declaration are the true, ancient and indubitable rights and liberties of the people of this kingdom, and so shall be esteemed, allowed, adjudged, deemed and taken to be; and that all and every the particulars aforesaid shall be firmly and strictly holden and observed as they are expressed in the said declaration, and all officers and ministers whatsoever shall serve their Majesties and their successors according to the same in all time to come…And for preventing all questions and divisions in this realm by reason of any pretended titles to the crown, and for preserving a certainty in the succession thereof, in and upon which the unity, peace, tranquility and safety of this nation doth under God wholly consist and depend, the said Lords Spiritual and Temporal and Commons do beseech their Majesties that it may be enacted, established and declared, that the crown and regal government of the said kingdoms and dominions, with all and singular the premises thereunto belonging and appertaining, shall be and continue to their said Majesties and the survivor of them during their lives and the life of the survivor of them, and that the entire, perfect and full exercise of the regal power and government be only in and executed by his Majesty in the names of both their Majesties during their joint lives; and after their deceases the said crown and premises shall be and remain to the heirs of the body of her Majesty…and thereunto the said Lords Spiritual and Temporal and Commons do in the name of all the people aforesaid most humbly and faithfully submit themselves, their heirs and posterities for ever, and do faithfully promise that they will stand to, maintain and defend their said Majesties, and also the limitation and succession of the crown herein specified and contained, to the utmost of their powers with their lives and estates against all persons whatsoever that shall attempt anything to the contrary. And whereas it hath been found by experience that it is inconsistent with the safety and welfare of this Protestant kingdom to be governed by a popish prince, or by any king or queen marrying a papist, the said Lords Spiritual and Temporal and Commons do further pray that it may be enacted, that all and every person and persons that is, are or shall be reconciled to or shall hold communion with the see or Church of Rome, or shall profess the popish religion, or shall marry a papist, shall be excluded and be for ever incapable to inherit, possess or enjoy the crown and government of this realm and Ireland and the dominions thereunto belonging or any part of the same, or to have, use or exercise any regal power, authority or jurisdiction within the same…

…Provided that no charter or grant or pardon granted before the three and twentieth day of October in the year of our Lord one thousand six hundred eighty-nine shall be any ways impeached or invalidated by this Act, but that the same shall be and remain of the same force and effect in law and no other than as if this Act had never been made.
Background

English doctor and political thinker John Locke published this work on government during the time of Glorious Revolution in England, which was read and influential among colonial leaders in the British North American colonies during the following century.

Guiding Questions

1. Why do men form political societies according to Locke?

2. What are the two powers man possesses in the state of nature?

---

123. If man in the state of nature be so free, as has been said; if he be absolute lord of his own person and possessions, equal to the greatest, and subject to nobody, why will he part with his freedom? Why will he give up his empire, and subject himself to the dominion and control of any other power? To which it is obvious to answer, that though in the state of nature he hath such a right, yet the enjoyment of it is very uncertain, and constantly exposed to the invasion of others; for all being kings as much as he, every man his equal, and the greater part no strict observers of equity and justice, the enjoyment of the property he has in this state is very unsafe, very unsecure. This makes him willing to quit a condition, which, however free, is full of fears and continual dangers: and it is not without reason, that he seeks out, and is willing to join in society with others, who are already united, or have a mind to unite, for the mutual preservation of their lives, liberties, and estates, which I call by the general name, property.

124. The great and chief end, therefore, of men’s uniting into commonwealths, and putting themselves under government, is the preservation of their property. To which in the state of nature there are many things wanting. First, There wants an established, settled, known law, received and allowed by common consent to be the standard of right and wrong, and the common measure to decide all controversies between them: for though the law of nature be plain and intelligible to all rational creatures; yet men being biased by their interest, as well as ignorant for want of studying it, are not apt to allow of it as a law binding to them in the application of it to their particular cases.

125. Secondly, In the state of nature there wants a known and indifferent judge, with authority to determine all differences according to the established law: for every one in that state being both judge and executioner of the law of nature, men being partial to themselves, passion and revenge is very apt to carry them too far, and with too much heat, in their own cases; as well as negligence, and unconcernedness, to make them too remiss in other men’s.
126. Thirdly, In the state of nature there often wants power to back and support the sentence when right, and to give it due execution. They who by any injustice offend, will seldom fail, where they are able, by force to make good their injustice; such resistance many times makes the punishment dangerous, and frequently destructive, to those who attempt it.

127. Thus mankind, notwithstanding all the privileges of the state of nature, being but in an ill condition, while they remain in it, are quickly driven into society. Hence it comes to pass that we seldom find any number of men live any time together in this state. The inconveniences that they are therein exposed to, by the irregular and uncertain exercise of the power every man has of punishing the transgressions of others, make them take sanctuary under the established laws of government, and therein seek the preservation of their property. It is this makes them so willingly give up every one his single power of punishing, to be exercised by such alone, as shall be appointed to it amongst them; and by such rules as the community, or those authorized by them to that purpose, shall agree on. And in this we have the original right of both the legislative and executive power, as well as of the governments and societies themselves.

128. For in the state of nature, to omit the liberty he has of innocent delights, a man has two powers. The first is to do whatsoever he thinks fit for the preservation of himself and others within the permission of the law of nature: by which law, common to them all, he and all the rest of mankind are one community, make up one society, distinct from all other creatures. And, were it not for the corruption and viciousness of degenerate men, there would be no need of any other; no necessity that men should separate from this great and natural community, and by positive agreements combine into smaller and divided associations. The other power a man has in the state of nature, is the power to punish the crimes committed against that law. Both these he gives up, when he joins in a private, if I may so call it, or particular politic society, and incorporates into any commonwealth, separate from the rest of mankind.
129. The first power, viz. “of doing whatsoever he thought fit for the preservation of himself,” and the rest of mankind, he gives up to be regulated by laws made by the society, so far forth as the preservation of himself and the rest of that society shall require; which laws of the society in many things confine the liberty he had by the law of nature.

130. Secondly, The power of punishing he wholly gives up, and engages his natural force, (which he might before employ in the execution of the law of nature, by his own single authority, as he thought fit) to assist the executive power of the society, as the law thereof shall require: for being now in a new state, wherein he is to enjoy many conveniencies, from the labor, assistance, and society of others in the same community, as well as protection from its whole strength; he is to part also, with as much of his natural liberty, in providing for himself, as the good, prosperity, and safety of the society shall require; which is not only necessary, but just, since the other members of the society do the like....
ALBANY CONGRESS

A Plan of Union

July 10, 1754

City Hall | Albany, Province of New York

BACKGROUND

The Albany Plan of Union was proposed by Pennsylvania delegate Benjamin Franklin to unify the thirteen colonies in common defense at the start of the French and Indian War. It was adopted and proposed to the colonial legislatures by the Albany Congress, which represented seven British colonies: Connecticut, Maryland, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New York, Pennsylvania, and Rhode Island.

ANNOTATIONS

It is proposed that humble application be made for an act of Parliament of Great Britain, by virtue of which one general government may be formed in America, including all the said colonies, within and under which government each colony may retain its present constitution, except in the particulars wherein a change may be directed by the said act, as hereafter follows.

1. That the said general government be administered by a President-General, to be appointed and supported by the crown; and a Grand Council, to be chosen by the representatives of the people of the several Colonies met in their respective assemblies.

2. That within -- months after the passing such act, the House of Representatives that happen to be sitting within that time, or that shall especially for that purpose convened, may and shall choose members for the Grand Council, in the following proportion, that is to say, Massachusetts Bay, 7; New Hampshire, 2; Connecticut, 5; Rhode Island, 2; New York, 4; New Jersey, 3; Pennsylvania, 6; Maryland, 4; Virginia, 7; North Carolina, 4; South Carolina, 4; 48

---

https://avalon.law.yale.edu/18th_century/albany.asp.
3. -- who shall meet for the first time at the city of Philadelphia, being called by the President-General as soon as conveniently may be after his appointment.

4. That there shall be a new election of the members of the Grand Council every three years; and, on the death or resignation of any member, his place should be supplied by a new choice at the next sitting of the Assembly of the Colony he represented.

5. That after the first three years, when the proportion of money arising out of each Colony to the general treasury can be known, the number of members to be chosen for each Colony shall, from time to time, in all ensuing elections, be regulated by that proportion, yet so as that the number to be chosen by any one Province be not more than seven, nor less than two.

6. That the Grand Council shall meet once in every year, and oftener if occasion require, at such time and place as they shall adjourn to at the last preceding meeting, or as they shall be called to meet at by the President-General on any emergency; he having first obtained in writing the consent of seven of the members to such call, and sent duly and timely notice to the whole.

7. That the Grand Council have power to choose their speaker; and shall neither be dissolved, prorogued, nor continued sitting longer than six weeks at one time, without their own consent or the special command of the crown.

8. That the members of the Grand Council shall be allowed for their service ten shillings sterling per diem, during their session and journey to and from the place of meeting; twenty miles to be reckoned a day's journey.

9. That the assent of the President-General be requisite to all acts of the Grand Council, and that it be his office and duty to cause them to be carried into execution.
10. That the President-General, with the advice of the Grand Council, hold or direct all Indian treaties, in which the general interest of the Colonies may be concerned; and make peace or declare war with Indian nations.

11. That they make such laws as they judge necessary for regulating all Indian trade.

12. That they make all purchases from Indians, for the crown, of lands not now within the bounds of particular Colonies, or that shall not be within their bounds when some of them are reduced to more convenient dimensions.

13. That they make new settlements on such purchases, by granting lands in the King's name, reserving a quitrent to the crown for the use of the general treasury.

14. That they make laws for regulating and governing such new settlements, till the crown shall think fit to form them into particular governments.

15. That they raise and pay soldiers and build forts for the defence of any of the Colonies, and equip vessels of force to guard the coasts and protect the trade on the ocean, lakes, or great rivers; but they shall not impress men in any Colony, without the consent of the Legislature.

16. That for these purposes they have power to make laws, and lay and levy such general duties, imposts, or taxes, as to them shall appear most equal and just (considering the ability and other circumstances of the inhabitants in the several Colonies), and such as may be collected with the least inconvenience to the people; rather discouraging luxury, than loading industry with unnecessary burdens.

17. That they may appoint a General Treasurer and Particular Treasurer in each government when necessary; and, from time to time, may order the sums in the treasuries of each government into the general treasury; or draw on them for special payments, as they find most convenient.
18. Yet no money to issue but by joint orders of the President-General and Grand Council; except where sums have been appropriated to particular purposes, and the President-General is previously empowered by an act to draw such sums.

19. That the general accounts shall be yearly settled and reported to the several Assemblies.

20. That a quorum of the Grand Council, empowered to act with the President-General, do consist of twenty-five members; among whom there shall be one or more from a majority of the Colonies.

21. That the laws made by them for the purposes aforesaid shall not be repugnant, but, as near as may be, agreeable to the laws of England, and shall be transmitted to the King in Council for approbation, as soon as may be after their passing; and if not disapproved within three years after presentation, to remain in force.

22. That, in case of the death of the President-General, the Speaker of the Grand Council for the time being shall succeed, and be vested with the same powers and authorities, to continue till the King's pleasure be known.

23. That all military commission officers, whether for land or sea service, to act under this general constitution, shall be nominated by the President-General; but the approbation of the Grand Council is to be obtained, before they receive their commissions. And all civil officers are to be nominated by the Grand Council, and to receive the President-General's approbation before they officiate.

24. But, in case of vacancy by death or removal of any officer, civil or military, under this constitution, the Governor of the Province in which such vacancy happens may appoint, till the pleasure of the President-General and Grand Council can be known.

25. That the particular military as well as civil establishments in each Colony remain in their present state, the general constitution notwithstanding; and that on sudden emergencies any Colony may defend itself, and lay the accounts of expense thence arising before the President-General and General Council, who may allow and order payment of the same, as far as they judge such accounts just and reasonable.
UNIT 2

The American Founding

1763–1789

45-50-minute classes | 15-19 classes

UNIT PREVIEW

Structure

LESSON 1
1763–1776
Self-Government or Tyranny
4-5 classes
p. 7

LESSON 2
1776
The Declaration of Independence
2-3 classes
p. 14

LESSON 3
1776–1783
The War of Independence
3-4 classes
p. 23

LESSON 4
1783–1789
The United States Constitution
4-5 classes
p. 29

APPENDIX A
Study Guide, Test, and Writing Assignment
p. 41

APPENDIX B
Primary Sources
p. 59

Why Teach the American Founding

The beginning is the most important part of any endeavor, for a small change at the beginning will result in a very different end. How much truer this is of the most expansive of human endeavors: founding and sustaining a free country. The United States of America has achieved the greatest degree of freedom and prosperity for the greatest proportion of any country’s population in the history of humankind. How is it that the common American’s pursuit of happiness has resulted in such exceptional outcomes over time? This phenomenon compels mindful young Americans to seek to understand how their nation has achieved such results. And America’s youth could find no greater source of understanding than the history of their country’s founding, starting with their forefathers’ ideas, words, and deeds.
Enduring Ideas from This Unit

1. The United States is unprecedented in establishing its existence not on grounds of racial origin nor family privilege but on ideas asserted to be true of all people at all times: namely, on the equal human dignity of each person.

2. America was founded on the view that government should be controlled by the people themselves and limited to the purpose of protecting each person’s natural rights and fostering the common good.

3. Regular, ordinary Americans of everyday means sacrificed their security and very lives to defend these truths about human beings and civic life against a tyranny of the most powerful nation of its day.

4. The United States Constitution’s chief quality is that it allows the people to govern themselves with respect for the dignity of each person while both channeling and restraining the natural ambition of human beings to gain power and recognition.

5. The Constitution is a carefully wrought and considered document, and its original intent and structure should be honored both for the sake of our forebears, to whom we and the world owe our freedom and prosperity, and because the events of the last two hundred years have proven the Constitution’s remarkable achievements time and time again.

What Teachers Should Consider

The United States of America is unprecedented in many ways in the course of human history, but most significantly in the opportunity all its citizens have to pursue unmatched conditions of freedom, security, and prosperity. The country owes its unprecedented success to an unprecedented founding, a beginning forged and canonized in the Declaration of Independence, the War of Independence, and the U.S. Constitution.

And yet, never have so many Americans known so little about this founding. As for love of country, one cannot love (or even consider loving) what one does not know.

The teaching of the American founding is perhaps the most necessary series of lessons a teacher can share with his or her students if those students intend to enjoy the benefits of living in America for the duration of their lives.

With this in mind, a teacher ought to take special care to learn the history and ideas of the American founding. Ambiguity in the teacher’s own understanding, or assumptions derived from anywhere but careful scholarship and a deep reading of America’s founding documents, will leave him or her unprepared to help students understand this history accurately.

The teacher might best open the unit with lessons aimed at understanding why the colonists declared independence in the first place. It was not to avoid paying taxes or about wanting to preserve slavery. (These are misconceptions at best, distortions at worst.) It was to choose—between liberty under self-government and servitude under tyranny. Class may proceed at a brisk pace through the years 1763–1776, touching on the many acts of the British and respective colonial responses to those acts. Spend time on the conflicts and battles; students should chart the gradual shift in public sentiment toward independence.
The Declaration of Independence itself deserves careful study. Such lessons may begin with stories of the writing of the Declaration. Students should read the whole document, and teachers can foster extensive conversations about what it says, what it means, and why it says it. The majority of the conversation should dwell on the first, second, and final paragraphs of the Declaration. Understanding what is meant by those words is pivotal to understanding American history, what makes America an exceptional nation, and the responsibilities every American citizen has. The list of grievances should be discussed in light of the previous history that led to the Declaration.

The American War of Independence should be taught so as to fill the moral imaginations of students with images of the heroic characters and actions of its American participants. Strategy, battles, and the general arc of the war should be taught in detail, punctuated with accounts of the key moments and figures who contributed to America’s ultimate victory. The ideas for which the War of Independence was fought are matched in the American memory only by the stories of those who fought for them.

When teaching the aftermath of the War of Independence up to the Constitutional Convention, teachers should make clear that America’s foray into governing itself entirely independent of Great Britain initially trended toward abject failure. The Articles of Confederation ordered public affairs in a reactionary rather than prudent manner. Students should understand that the Constitutional Convention, in many respects, saved the country from another sort of tyranny: majority tyranny.

Finally, the Constitutional Convention and the Constitution itself should be studied in tandem and in detail. A major aid in doing so is to read selections of the Federalist Papers. Students should consider carefully both the structure of the Constitution and the Framers’ intentions in so constructing it. Students should understand that nothing in the Constitution was haphazardly decided. Given the unprecedented long-term success of the Constitution, students should appreciate that any changes to the Constitution warrant careful and complete understanding of why the Framers crafted it the way they did, as explained in their own words.

How Teachers Can Learn More

TEXTS

The Creation of the American Republic, Gordon Wood
We Still Hold These Truths, Matthew Spalding
The Political Theory of the American Founding, Thomas West
The Constitutional Convention, James Madison
African Founders, David Hackett Fischer
No Property in Man, Sean Wilentz
The American Heritage: A Reader, ed. Hillsdale College History Faculty
The U.S. Constitution: A Reader, ed. Hillsdale College Politics Faculty (ConstitutionReader.com)

ONLINE COURSES | Online.Hillsdale.edu

The Great American Story  Civil Rights in American History
Introduction to the Constitution  Constitution 101
The Federalist Papers

Lesson Planning Resources

TEACHER RESOURCES

The Glorious Cause, Robert Middlekauff
A Teacher’s Guide to Land of Hope, Wilfred McClay and John McBride
A Student Workbook for Land of Hope, Wilfred McClay and John McBride
A Short History of the American Revolution, James Stokesbury

STUDENT RESOURCES

Land of Hope, Wilfred McClay

PRIMARY SOURCES

An Inquiry into the Rights of the British Colonies, Richard Bland
Letter to Lord Kaims, Benjamin Franklin
Virginia Resolves of 1769, Virginia House of Burgesses
A History of the Dispute with America, No. VII, John Adams
“Give Me Liberty or Give Me Death!,” Patrick Henry
Speech on Conciliation with the Colonies, Edmund Burke
Common Sense, Thomas Paine
Olive Branch Petition
Declaration of Independence, First Draft
Declaration of Independence
Orders of July 2, George Washington
Resignation Speech, George Washington
“Liberty and Peace,” Phillis Wheatley
The Northwest Ordinance of 1787, Article III
The Articles of Confederation
The United States Constitution
The Federalist, Nos. 9, 10, 51
The Bill of Rights
LESSON PLANS, ASSIGNMENTS, AND FORMATIVE QUIZ
Lesson 1 — Self-Government or Tyranny

1763–1776

LESSON OBJECTIVE

Students learn how new British exertions of authority over the colonists led to the Declaration of Independence.

TEACHER PREPARATION

Create a note outline based on the following:

Student Texts
- Land of Hope Pages 42–48
- Primary Sources See below.

Teacher Texts
- The Glorious Cause Pages 7–226
- A Teacher’s Guide to Land of Hope Pages 29–43
- A Student Workbook for Land of Hope Pages 20–22

Online.Hillsdale.edu
- The Great American Story Lecture 3

STUDENT PREPARATION

Assignment 1: Students read Land of Hope, pages 42–48, and either complete the reading questions handout in A Student Workbook for Land of Hope (pages 20–28) or prepare for a reading quiz (provided below).

Assignment 2: Students read and annotate excerpts from Paine’s Common Sense and answer guiding reading questions (provided in appendix).

CORE CONTENT IN THIS LESSON

Geography & Places
- Boston
- Philadelphia
- Independence Hall
- Lexington and Concord
- Lake Champlain
- Fort Ticonderoga

Persons
- King George III
- Charles Townshend
- George Washington
- John Hancock
- Lord North
- Crispus Attucks
Paul Revere
Samuel Adams
Thomas Gage
Benjamin Franklin
Patrick Henry

John Adams
Abigail Adams
Ethan Allen
Thomas Paine
Thomas Jefferson

Terms and Topics

- salutary neglect
- self-government
- representation
- consent
- French and Indian War
- Proclamation of 1763
- writs of assistance
- Sugar Act
- Stamp Act
- Sons of Liberty
- mob
- tar and feather
- Declaratory Act
- Townshend Acts
- nonimportation agreements

- Boston Massacre
- Committees of Correspondence
- Gaspee Affair
- Boston Tea Party
- Intolerable Acts
- Quartering of Soldiers
- First Continental Congress
- Minutemen
- Battles of Lexington & Concord
- Siege of Fort Ticonderoga
- Second Continental Congress
- Battle of Bunker Hill
- Olive Branch Petition
- Liberation of Boston

Primary Sources

- An Inquiry into the Rights of the British Colonies, Richard Bland
- Letter to Lord Kaims, Benjamin Franklin
- Virginia Resolves of 1769, Virginia House of Burgesses
- A History of the Dispute with America, No. VII, John Adams
- “Give Me Liberty or Give Me Death!” Patrick Henry
- Speech on Conciliation with the Colonies, Edmund Burke
- Common Sense, Thomas Paine
- Olive Branch Petition

To Know by Heart

- “Appeal to Heaven”
- “Don’t Tread On Me”
- “Join or Die”
- “Give me liberty or give me death!” —Patrick Henry
- “The shot heard round the world.”
- “Don’t fire till you see the whites of their eyes!” —Israel Putnam, William Prescott, or legend

Timeline

- 1754–1763  French and Indian War
- 1763  Proclamation Line
- 1770  Boston Massacre
1773  Boston Tea Party
1774  Intolerable Acts
1775  Lexington and Concord, Ticonderoga, Bunker Hill
July 4, 1776  Declaration of Independence signed

Images
- Historical figures and events
- Revolutionary-era flags
- Nonimportation agreement example
- Paul Revere’s Engraving of Boston Harbor under occupation
- Paul Revere’s Engraving of the Boston Massacre
- Independence Hall (exterior and interior)
- Battle maps and battle scene depictions
- Uniforms and arms of the Minutemen, the Continental Army soldiers, and the Redcoats
- Medical equipment

STORIES FOR THE AMERICAN HEART

- Biographies and the roles of George Washington, Benjamin Franklin, John Adams, Samuel Adams, Patrick Henry, Thomas Paine, and Thomas Jefferson up through 1776
- Francis Fauquier’s account of the mob and a stamp distributor
- Samuel Adams’s poem, “The Divine Source of Liberty”
- Boston Massacre
- John Adams fairly-mindedly representing the British soldiers after the Boston Massacre
- Boston Tea Party
- Patrick Henry’s “Give me liberty or give me death!” speech
- Paul Revere’s ride, especially Henry Wadsworth Longfellow’s poem of that name
- Jonas Clark’s and William Emerson’s accounts of minutemen at the Battles of Lexington and Concord
- Ethan Allen, Henry Knox, and the Green Mountain Boys capturing the guns from Fort Ticonderoga
- Letters of John and Abigail Adams
- John Adams’s nomination of George Washington to command the Continental Army
- Battle of Bunker Hill
- Liberation of Boston
- John Adams’s nomination of Thomas Jefferson to draft the Declaration of Independence

QUESTIONS FOR THE AMERICAN MIND

- Why had the colonies been left mostly to their own devices? Why was this “neglect” “salutary”?
- How had the French and Indian War contributed to the American sense of self and greater unity among the colonists?
- How did the British situation following the French and Indian War lead the British to exert more authority over the colonists?
- In what ways did the British begin to exert control over the colonists without their consent?
What did the Proclamation Act of 1763 attempt to do? What change did it reveal in the relationship between Parliament and the colonists? How did the colonists respond?

What was the British Constitution? To what extent did it extend to America? To what extent were colonial charters part of the British Constitution? To what extent were Americans justified in claiming the rights of Englishmen?

How did inhabitants of England view Parliament’s supremacy differently from the Americans? Which group had a more traditional/authentic understanding of the British Constitution? What are the reasons for the divergence in opinion?

What did the Stamp Act do? Why did this act in particular undermine the principle of self-government and consent? How did the colonists respond?

What is self-government? In what ways was the colonists’ freedom to govern themselves threatened and curtailed by the British between 1763 and 1776?

What is the relationship between this question of representative self-government and liberty? What is its relationship to tyranny?

In what ways did the colonies cooperate with one another in their resistance to writs of assistance, the Stamp Act, and the Townshend Duties?

What were the two oftentimes competing approaches the colonists took to addressing Parliament’s actions?

Why was legislative petition a failure in Massachusetts? Why did Bostonians resort to public protests and riots? How did John Adams and Samuel Adams differ in their views on legitimate forms of protest?

How did the Boston Massacre change public opinion among the colonists? How did John Adams successfully preserve the rule of law?

Why did Parliament pass the Intolerable Acts? What did the acts do (five actions)?

How did the Continental Congress respond to the Coercive (Intolerable) Acts?

Which offers of reconciliation did the colonists make to Parliament?

Was war inevitable? Was independence?

Why did Thomas Paine argue in Common Sense that the debate had changed regarding the relationship between the colonists and British? Why did he argue for war as the path toward independence?

In what ways did Thomas Paine’s Common Sense influence public opinion?

What actions by the British in the spring of 1776 prompted Richard Henry Lee of Virginia to introduce a motion for independence?

To what extent was the American Revolution not made but prevented? To what extent was it revolutionary?

What crucial strategic military decisions did local British officials make at the outset of the Revolutionary War?

Questions from the U.S. Civics Test:
- Question 77: Name one reason why the Americans declared independence from Britain.
- Question 85: Benjamin Franklin is famous for many things. Name one.
- Question 86: George Washington is famous for many things. Name one.
KEYS TO THE LESSON

For more than 150 years, the British colonists of North America rarely quarreled with their countrymen on the other side of the Atlantic. Then in 1763, the British began to claim new control over the colonists. What followed were thirteen years of increased tension and sometimes violent clashes leading to outright war in 1775 and, in 1776, the declaring of independence by the colonists and the formation of a new country separate from British power. This decade and a half gave birth to the nation each American citizen calls home. It is imperative that American students know the people, actions, and stories that led to the founding of their country. The chief aim of teaching these fourteen years, therefore, is to help students to understand the actions by both Great Britain and the colonists that compelled the Americans to such a separation and to found a new, unprecedented kind of country.

Teachers might best plan and teach Self-Government or Tyranny with emphasis on the following approaches:

- Have students consider the issues the British in North America faced following the French and Indian War (in Europe, the Seven Years’ War), namely, the risk of further conflict (and associated costs) with Native Americans as colonists moved westward, and the massive debt that Great Britain had accumulated in the late war.
- Show how Great Britain’s attempted solutions to these problems (prohibiting colonial expansion and the sudden enforcement of lax tax laws) marked the first shift in the relationship between Great Britain and the colonists and heralded the end of the period of “salutary neglect,” during which American colonists had grown accustomed to practicing self-government.
- Help students see the pattern that this initial shift would grow into: attempts by the British (Parliament and, to a certain extent, King George III) to exert more control, alternating with American resistance to what they argued were infringements on their rights as Englishmen.
- Teach about each of the British acts: what they were, why they were passed, how the colonists resisted, and what happened next as a consequence.
- Read aloud with students in class portions of the Virginia Resolves to gain insights into the leading colonists’ understanding of the situation at the time and to presage the same ideas later developed into the Declaration of Independence.
- Consider at length that self-government, or representative self-government, was at the heart of the issue. Emphasize that this was not merely a nice-sounding phrase. Instead, the colonists gradually came to recognize the following as a question of liberty or tyranny: whether they were self-governed through their elected representatives or were dictated to and controlled by a distant government in which they had no consent. Make clear that this was the question: not merely whether the colonists would have representation in Parliament (it was impractical) nor whether they had to pay taxes, but whether or not people must be controlled by the will of others in government without their free consent. Reading portions of Richard Bland’s An Inquiry into the Rights of the British Colonies, Benjamin Franklin’s letter to Lord Kaims, and John Adams’s A History of the Dispute with America, No. VII may best help students grasp these realities.
- Explain how the Americans organized themselves to engage with and resist the British, a capacity born of decades of practice in self-government and a trait of American citizens for subsequent generations. In due course, the Boston Massacre impressed on public opinion the British position’s semblance to tyranny.

- Emphasize for students how there were often two competing approaches to responding to British actions: one that attempted deliberation and petition, and another that resorted to destruction of property and even tarring and feathering. In the end, the former approach prevailed, resorting to arms only as necessary to defend their assertion of rights, self-government, and liberty.

- Highlight that it was the Boston Tea Party, however, that brought issues to a head, prompting the British to respond to various actions in Massachusetts with the Intolerable Acts. Help students to consider that in five separate, odious ways, these acts show how preventing a people from governing themselves in even something as simple as a tax on paper and tea can lead to tyranny if not effectively recognized and resisted.

- Spend time illustrating how it was really across 1774–75, in response to the execution of the Intolerable Acts, that specific Founding Fathers marshaled their talents and ideas, eventually leading to declaring independence and forming a new nation by summer 1776.

- Teach in some detail the open armed conflicts at Lexington and Concord, Fort Ticonderoga, and Bunker Hill. Students should learn how these battles bolstered the patriot cause and transformed public opinion in these final two years of British rule.

- Have students read as a preparatory homework assignment excerpts from Thomas Paine’s Common Sense. In class, have a seminar conversation on the text. Target questions at helping students to see how and why Paine’s pamphlet proved decisive in shifting public opinion at the start of 1776. Questions on pages 42–43 of A Teacher’s Guide to Land of Hope may be helpful.

- Finally, emphasize how the news in the spring of 1776—that the British had hired German mercenary soldiers to deploy against British-Americans, and were now selectively encouraging slave rebellions in the colonies, while the Continental Congress recommended that the colonies begin forming their own governments—were key factors in moving a majority of the state delegates at the Second Continental Congress to commission a committee to draft a potential declaration of independence.

STRENGTHENING UNDERSTANDING: POST-LESSON ASSIGNMENTS

